The UAW check for $5000 was accompanied by a letter from UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther expressing "support and solidarity" for the strikers and wishing the UFWA "complete success in this struggle."

THE STRIKERS were holding firm in the face of moves by the company to organize scabs in the plant, police intimidation of pickets and wide-open anti-picketing injunctions.

UFWA officials charged that the company still refuses to modify its "no wage increase" position in spite of the fact that other furniture workers in the state have been granted wage increases in recent months. Six months of negotiations preceeded the walkout which started Mar. 13.

The union has asked a cost-of-living increase for the Thomasville workers, who have received no wage boost since late in 1950.

ONE OF THE strikers, Fred King, swore out a warrant against a company scab who threatened him with a pistol while police officers stood by, refusing to interfere.

Union officials last week called another meeting with Thomasville city authorities in an effort to halt the continued intimidation by police of the strikers.

Strike contributions should be sent to: Thomasville Strike Relief Committee, CIO Furniture Workers, 101 Fifth Ave., New York 3, N. Y.

Strip Teaser Tries To Fan IBEW Drive

NOW WE'VE heard of everything—strip-teasers for union organizers.

Variety, the show business trade paper, reports that the AFL Electrical Workers are sending Gypsy Rose Lee and other burleycue veterans to Minneapolis and other Northwest cities in another effort to woo telephone workers.

The IBEW tried to challenge the CIO Communications Workers for bargaining rights at Northwestern Bell Telephone Co. a few months ago and got trounced.

Now IBEW is trying again with Gypsy's gyrations—instead of unionism.

As Variety reported, "telephone company workers are invited to attend the shows free. Purpose of the stunt is to try to woo them away from the CIO and into the AFL. Besides the shows, those who attend get a talk on alleged advantages of AFL membership."

Students 'Taking Lessons' From CIO Official

GRADUATE students at the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations are "taking lessons" from the CIO this spring.

Morris Iushewitz, secretary-treasurer of the New York City CIO Council, is teaching a graduate seminar in "Labor Union Administration" each week at the school, held at Cornell Univ. in Ithaca.

The seminar gets down to immediate, practical union problems.

For example, in discussing union political action, Iushewitz gave the story-behind-the-story of the anti-labor Travia-Erwin bills introduced in the recent session of the New York Legislature to prevent political action by labor. He told how CIO leaders from throughout the state came to Albany, helped convince the lawmakers to defeat the Travia-Erwin bills.

Iushewitz also outlined to the seminar the work of the New York CIO Council. And from his years of work in the New York Newspaper Guild, he discussed some of the practical day-by-day problems of union officials.

Several other union officials have joined in special sessions of the seminar, including Pres. Michael Quill of the CIO Transport Workers and Herman Cooper, general counsel for the CIO Maritime Union.

Fake Jobless Bill Vetoed

GOV. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan has vetoed an unemployment compensation bill passed by the Republican-big-business coalition in the legislature. The veto had been urged by a state-wide CIO-PAC meeting.

The Governor termed the measure a "cruel fraud upon the people."

Williams was especially critical of the proposed changes in the system of determining employer contributions to the unemployment compensation fund. He said the changes would reduce the reserve in the fund and might be illegal under the federal employment tax act.

CIO officials had charged previously that employers would save millions of dollars by the proposed changes in the contribution schedule.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE STEEL controversy continues. Recent court action overruling President Truman has helped destroy hope for an early settlement. We have a peculiar conception of justice in this great nation of ours. We call upon the youth, and others, to make every human sacrifice in the service of our Armed Forces in the interest of the nation's welfare. Yet a tremendous hue and cry is raised by certain people when the government, in the national interest, tries to take over property temporarily.

The "justice" of placing property rights over human rights is a condition the wealthy and their controlled press gloat over.

Our justice has famous instances of placing property rights over human rights—the Dred Scott case and the rejection of child labor legislation for so many years are but two infamous examples. As Colton so aptly expressed it, "In civil jurisprudence, it too often happens that there is so much law that there is no room for justice, and that the claimant expires, of wrong in the midst of right, as mariners die of thirst, in the midst of water."

★

THE INJUNCTION processes are growing. We of CIO must be alert to meet the challenges wherever they crop up. Unless we do, organized labor faces the possibility of going back to conditions existing before the Wagner Act. In the early history of our movement the courts declared it treasonable to organize labor unions.

It is the duty of each of us to protect the gains we fought for so long and so hard. We must continue to organize the unorganized and build our great union. The challenge of the captains of industry must be met squarely and the facts presented to the working people of our nation.

The United Steelworkers of America convene their annual convention on May 13, in Philadelphia, Pa. This will be a momentous convention and the eyes of the nation will be on the outcome.

REG. DIR. Charles Cowl reports that in a representation election at the Marden Manufacturing Co., Winter Haven, Fla., the workers favored the Steelworkers-CIO by a vote of 14 to 10 with 1 challenged ballot. Full credit for this win goes to Steel Reps. E. V. Riffe and W. B. Gravatt.

CIO Rep. David Sternback reports a representation election victory at the Pan American Craft Corp., San Juan, Puerto Rico, by the following vote: CIO 139, no union 7, void 2, challenged 21. Organizer Fernando Zeno was in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports that in a representation election at Gunnison Homes, Inc., New Albany, Ind., the workers favored the CIO Furniture Workers by a vote of 328 to 285 for the AFL, 3 no union, 5 challenged and 2 void. UFWA Rep. Doug MacMahon did a fine job in bringing about this win in a tough campaign with the AFL Carpenters & Joiners.

The Auto Workers polled 47 votes, AFL Molders 23, AFL Auto Workers 2. UAW Reps. D. C. Deason and James Harden, assisted by CIO Rep. Carl Holt, handled this campaign.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that the CIO Furniture Workers won a certification election at the Empire Furniture Co., New Haven, Conn., by the following vote: eligible 31, UFWA-CIO 27, no union 3. UFWA Reps. Charles Cina and John Sullivan conducted this drive.

Reg. Dir. "Sarge" Kinstley reports that the CIO Auto Workers won a representation election at the Spencer-Stafford Trailer Co., Augusts, Kan., by a vote of 47 to 14 for no union. The organizational work was done by UAW Reps. John Rinkenbaugh and Russell Roback.

Truman Flood Plea Ignored

THE FLOODS which devastated the Midwest for the second time in a year have receded so, Congress is currently busy pigeonholing bills for flood relief.

An urgent request from President Truman last week for a $1.5 billion government flood insurance program moved congressional leaders to declare that the proposal would have to wait its turn for a hearing before the Senate and House Banking Committees because of a legislative log jam.

Chairman Maybank (D. S.C.) of the Senate committee said he would introduce the flood insurance bill but promised no immediate hearing because the committee will be occupied for two weeks with housing and wage-price controls measures.

Rep. Deane (D. N.C.), a member of the House committee, predicted that Congress, when it gets around to it, will reject the program as it did last year when the President proposed a similar flood insurance plan.

Truman said the lack of an insurance system is "a major gap in the means by which a man can make his home, his farm, or his business secure against financial loss."

Court Backs Columbia In TWU Strike

THE NEW YORK State Supreme Court handed Columbia Univ. officials an assist in the school's union-busting activities recently when it rejected the CIO Transport Workers request for an order requiring recognition of the union.

The strike at the university's cafeteria continued into its fourth week. Only about 50 workers are involved in the dispute, but other members of TWU Local 241, including maintenance men, maids and elevator operators, have respected the picket lines. AFL Teamsters have also refused to make campus deliveries.

In his decision, Justice Bernard Botein upheld Columbia's position that as an educational institution it was exempted from state labor legislation.

The university has been using supervisors and 35 students to run elevators and the heating plant, paying them more than the rate paid the strikers.

TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill earlier had called on the 600,000 members of the New York City CIO Council, of which he is president, "to help win this battle." He also cabeled Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, on leave as the university's president, to instruct school officials to bargain with the union. Eisenhower was non-committal in his reply.

CIO Supports Ore Miners Out In Chile

THE CIO last week pledged moral support to 12,500 members of the Confederation of Copper Miners of Chile who have been on strike for higher wages and other benefits since Apr. 25.

Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee and president of the Clothing Workers, in a letter asked President Gabriel Gonzalez Videla of Chile to intervene in the strike. Explaining he is "convinced of the justice" of the workers' demands, Potofsky wrote:

"Your attitude in the present conflict may be decisive, and I would be obliged to you, therefore, if you could offer your good services in order to effectuate a settlement to the federation and the workers it represents."

Ernst Schwarz, executive secretary of the CIO committee on Latin-American Affairs, has protested to the Anaconda Copper Co., which employs many of the strikers, and asked it to work out an equitable settlement. The union's demands are fully justified by the high cost of living in Chile; wages are 10 to 12% of what is paid in the United States for comparable work.

The Confederation of Copper Miners is a free, democratic trade union which on the eve of its walkout rejected Communist overtures for a tie-in with the strike of 12,000 Red-dominated nitrate workers who already were out. The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has asked the Intl. Mineworkers Federation, the international trade secretariat in the industry, to support the copper strikers.

CIO Wins Right To Hearing On Segregated D. C. Playlots

THE CIO last week won a hearing for itself and other organizations opposed to segregation in Washington playgrounds.

The playgrounds are under the jurisdiction of the District of Columbia Recreation Board, which had refused the request of the D. C. CIO Council and the other groups to be heard.

Ben Segal, CIO assistant director of education, who appeared for the council, won the right to be heard from the board after a 20-minute heated exchange between him and Harry S. Wender, board chairman.

Wender said that the council had no right to be heard because it was not a neighborhood organization adjacent to playgrounds in dispute.

Segal insisted that he be heard because large numbers of CIO members live near the playgrounds. He was upheld when a motion to hear him and the others made by Mrs. Alice C. Hunter, Negro member and secretary of the board, was adopted three to one, with Wender alone being in opposition.

The board this year ended segregation on four playgrounds, and the council asked that similar action be taken on four other playgrounds.

"Three years after its official statement of policy of progressive integration, the recreation board has opened five playgrounds on lands under its jurisdiction," Segal told the board.

"In the summer of 1951, the recreation department issued a list of 132 recreation centers which today are officially segregated. At the present rate of integration it will take 78 years to remove racial designations from our recreation system."

WSB Okehs Vacation Plan

THE WAGE Stabilization Board has approved a vacation plan for employes of General Electric Co. and Westinghouse Electric Corp. whereby workers with 15 years or more years service will receive three weeks vacation. Both companies previously required 20 years service.

Board approval came with the usual industry members' dissent and was taken under General Wage Regulation 13.

In arriving at its decision, the board took into consideration prevailing practices in related industries such as auto, rubber and farm machinery, all of which give three weeks after 15 years.

The CIO Electrical Workers represent 70,000 workers at GE and 50,000 at Westinghouse.

Jersey CIO Asks Check Of Vote Fraud

THE NEW JERSEY CIO Council last week asked Gov. Driscoll to investigate possible frauds in voter registration.

Council Pres. Carl Holderman, in a letter to the Governor, said that Cape May County in November, 1951, had "approximately 326 more persons listed as registered . . . than there were persons who could legally be registered to vote."

He called on Gov. Driscoll for a "thorough, non-partisan investigation of the registration and election procedures in Cape May County to determine whether or not frauds have been committed."

Holderman wrote that "in the course of compiling statistics on the number of registered and non-registered voters in each county of our state for the use of the press and civic organizations in a non-partisan registration campaign, we came across some startling data regarding Cape May County."

He said that the county had 25,559 persons of voting age, according to the 1950 census. Approximately 600 of them were aliens and 138 disinfranchised exconvicts. The total eligible registration was about 24,821. Holdermann pointed out that 25,147 were actually registered last November.

"Not only does Cape May County lead all 21 counties in percentage of citizens registered," Holderman said, "but in the November, 1951, state elections it also led all other counties in percentage of potential voters who actually cast ballots. While in the state as a whole, only 42% of the potential voters were recorded as voting, in Cape May 63% of the population over 21 years of age cast ballots."

Oil Strike Solid As Wage Board Calls New Meet

THE WAGE Stabilization Board—which last month stepped out of the oil dispute when the companies boycotted its hearings—last week stepped back into it.

On the seventh day of the strike of 90,000 members of the CIO Oil Workers, AFL and independent unions, WSB Chairman Nathan Feinsinger on May 6 called for the end of the strike, continuance of collective bargaining and a "full report" by the unions and the industry to the board on May 13.

The unions refused to halt the strike, but agreed to attend the WSB hearing in Washington. OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight, who heads the union coalition, replied to Feinsinger:

"In the light of the history of the dispute and of WSB's apparent inability to affect industry participation in WSB hearings we have no alternative but to continue our strike."

He said that the WSB order to go back to work was responsible for the collapse of negotiations at the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana plant at Whiting, Ind.

And Knight warned that the WSB request "might cause an immediate breakdown in negotiations which have been progressing favorably in several areas. Developments since then bear out our concern."

"We have patiently attempted to achieve peaceful settlements, but to no avail," Knight said.

"We have cooperated with the board but to no avail. We have finally been forced to strike and we must continue striking until settlements are reached. We will report to the board . . . as you requested."

WSB STEPPED out of the dispute Apr. 16 after the oil companies refused to participate in "pilot case" hearings and to name representatives to sit on the hearing panel.

In a front page editorial, The Oil Worker, publication of the OWIU, charged the attitude of the oil companies is part of a campaign to destroy collective bargaining and free enterprise.

"The employers seem determined to destroy it (free enterprise) by establishing a corporate state—a nation in which government is operated by and for the corporations. Nazi Germany had that type of government."

The OWIU paper was highly critical of WSB.

"When the President of the United States asked the unions to delay the strike, the unions agreed," the paper said.

"When the President asked WSB to hear the dispute and recommend a settlement, the oil executives thumbed their noses at WSB, refusing to cooperate in any way with the government.

"And, to the eternal shame of the federal service, key people in the WSB let the companies scare the pants off them. When oil company executives told WSB they didn't want hearings, WSB caved in and agreed not to hold hearings.

"Obviously, the WSB had surrendered its jurisdiction over wage disputes. From now on, if it survives, WSB will serve only to deny wage increases, never to mediate wage disputes."

FOLLOWING the pattern set in the steel disputes, newspapers were whipping up hysteria against the strikers. Screaming headlines proclaimed that the strike was curtailing military flying, although the unions allowed production to continue in the California oil fields, so that U. S. forces in Korea would be assured of an ample supply of petroleum.

A definite procedure for processing of Army, Navy and Air Force requests for release of essential oil prdoducts from strikebound plants was set up by Mrs. Anna Rosenberg, assistant secretary of the Defense Dept., and Knight, the latter said. (Knight also is an assistant administrator of the National Production Authority.)

"Oil products will be released to the government," Knight said. "We made it clear when the nationwide oil strike began that we were not striking against the public and certainly not against our armed forces."

Feinsinger To Quit As WSB Chief

NATHAN P. Feinsinger, chairman of the Wage Stabilization Board said last week that he will resign his post by June 30.

On leave from the Univ. of Wisconsin Law School, Feinsinger declared in announcing his retirement, that "Washington is no health resort." He took over the position last Aug. 29.

On his appearance before a House committee investigating the WSB, Feinsinger said:

"In a political year you have to expect a certain amount of partisanship. I don't think it is an unfair procedure at all, even though one is likely to be caught in the middle of conflicts that have nothing to do with the subject of the investigation."

Earlier, Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers announced his resignation as a labor member of the WSB. His successor has yet to be named.

IUE Calls Emergency Meet; GE Talks Fail

THE CIO Electrical Workers last week broke off negotiations with the General Electric Co. and called the GE Conference Board into emergency session May 14 to determine the next course of action.

IUE Pres. James B. Carey denounced the company's ofler of a 1% cost-of-living increase as "miserable" and made in a "highly provocative manner." He said he would recommend strike action on a nationwide basis by the union's 70,000 GE members. The union had proposed a 12 to 15c an hour wage increase.

"The company demands as a condition of even giving this 1% increase that we accept it as a full settlement of our wage reopening," Carey said. "Furthermore, it proposes that the effective date be the date of acceptance instead of Mar. 15.

"In contrast, the company is giving its non-union employes an effective date of Mar. 6, and of course would give them any additional wage increase that we managed to negotiate."

Carey said the union has made two proposals at negotiating sessions May 5 which would wipe out a number of inequities. These were rejected, he said, because "GE doesn't want to admit that during the years of collusion with the United Electrical Workers all these inequities in wages kept accumulating."

He said IUE had presented two possible wage proposals which could be jointly submitted to the Wage Stabilization Board. The first called for the general 12-15c an hour wage increase if the company refused to move on other demands. The second could be submitted to take care of specific inequities.

Carey indicated the union was prepared to submit a third alternative dealing with revisions of the incentive system which would increase incentive earnings by about 5c hourly, equal to an overall increase of 3c an hour.

'Group Libel' Bill Presented To Congress

FOUR NEW YORK Congressmen have introduced a bill which would make it a federal offense to defame maliciously any racial or religious group.

The measure, which carries penalties of $1000 fine or one year in jail, bans from interstate commerce and the mails any material produced in multiple form which slanders any person or group because of race or religion or cause them to be "shunned, avoided or injured." The proposal is similar to an Illinois State law upheld by the U. S. Supreme Court.

Prosecutions would be supervised by the Attorney General but a person could not be convicted if the statements made were "true" or "honestly believed by him, upon reasonable grounds, to be true." Burden of proving the charges would be on the defendant.

New Anti-Labor Bill Approved

The Smith Receivership Bill—And You

What It Is

"As viciously anti-labor a bill as has ever been introduced in Congress" is now pending before the House Armed Services Committee.

This is the Smith Bill, H. R. 7647. Here's what it would do:

- Place labor under the draft act.
- Provide unlimited, permanent injunctions against the right to strike.
- Place unions under court receivership to bust them.
- Freeze wages and conditions.
- Prohibit strike relief and assistance.

Where It Is

The House Armed Services Committee held "rush act" hearings on the Smith Bill, adjourned them after receiving strong protests from CIO and AFL officials.

But the measure—described by CIO as "the most shackling restraints against labor proposed during the current wave of hysteria sweeping Congress"—could be voted out of committee and taken up in the House on little notice.

And Rep. Smith, member of the Rules Committee, is one of the most powerful members of the Dixiegop coalition running Congress.

What To Do

Your voice, and that of your union, your friends and your neighbors, can keep the Smith Bill in committee and stop congressional action on other anti-labor bills.

Write today to your congressman and to Armed Services Committee members, strongly urging defeat of the Smith Bill.

"The very existence of our unions," CIO warns, "and of free collective bargaining are definitely at stake in this fight."

Senate Unit Kills Powers Of WSB

THE FULL-SCALE campaign of big industrial groups and the Dixiegop coalition in Congress to fasten new legal chains on labor continued last week in the House and the Senate.

Major development was approval by the Senate Banking Committee of the Dirksen plan to scuttle the Wage Stabilization Board and deprive labor of any voice in that agency.

The banking group, in a preliminary vote for a nine-month extension of the Defense Production Act, voted to strip the WSB of its power to recommend wage settlements—as in the steel case.

Further, it would kill the present labor-public-industry composition of the WSB, substituting for it a supposedly "all-public" membership.

This scheme is a major goal of the National Association of Manufacturers, Chamber of Commerce, big steel firms and other industrial groups. Their purpose in an "all-public" WSB was revealed recently by Charles E. Wilson, ousted defense mobilizer, who said "public" members should be "men who had business contacts, business men."

Sens. Douglas (D. Ill.) and Moody (D. Mich.) said the Banking Committee bill favors "special interests" and doesn't contain "a single strengthening amendment favoring the consuming public."

The proposal to knife the WSB came from Sen. Dirksen (R. Ill.) and was approved by a 7 to 3 committee vote. Sens. Douglas, Moody and Benton (D., Conn.) opposed the move, while favoring it were Sens. Capehart (R. Ind.), Maybank (D. S.C.), Bricker (R., O.), Robertson (D. Va.), Ives (R. N.Y.), Schoeppel (R. Kan.) and Dirksen.

This action was only part of the plan of the NAM and C. of C. Their spokesmen told the House Labor Committee unions should be placed under the Sherman Anti-Trust Law and that industry-wide bargaining should be outlawed.

George W. Armstrong, president of the Texas Steel Co. in Fort Worth and an industry member of the WSB, gave the House group a long song-and-dance in favor of outlawing national unions and breaking them down into company units.

HIS spiel brought the comment from Rep. Wier (D. Minn.) that Armstrong would deprive unions "of the only weapon they have—the right to strike to their demands."

Earlier, the House Armed Services committee wound up hearings on the Smith Bill for permanent injunctions and receivership proceedings against unions. Committee members indicated they would not resume hearings until after the Supreme Court acts on the steel seizure case.

CIO Vice Pres. Joseph Curran condemned the Smith measure as "as viciously anti-labor a bill as has ever been introduced in Congress."

CIO councils and unions have been alerted by Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood to protest against the Smith Bill, which contains "the most shackling restraints against labor proposed during the current wage of hysteria sweeping Congress."

11c Hike Urged For Copper Workers

After a seven month delay, the Wage Stabilization Board has referred a copper dispute back to union and company negotiators, with a recommendation for an 11c-an-hour wage increase.

President Truman sent the case, involving 10 copper and brass companies in Connecticut, Illinois and Michigan, to the board last October.

The increase for more than 10,000 members of the CIO Auto Workers would be retroactive to the October date if the recommendations are accepted and put into new contracts.

High Court Hears Steel Seizure Argued; Early Decision Doubted

IN SESSIONS marked by frequent, critical questioning of government counsel, justices of the Supreme Court last week heard pro and con arguments of the steel seizure dispute.

With seizure continued in effect by one court decision and wage increases for 600,000 CIO Steelworkers by government action blocked by another, main points before the high court were:

- The legality of President Truman's steel seizure order of Apr. 8.
- The broader question of the President's powers under the Constitution.
- The power of the courts to enjoin the President, as in Judge David A. Pine's injunction against seizure.
- The propriety of the Supreme Court's action blocking the government from raising wages in the seized industry.

Main parties in the two days of court hearings—and in the voluminous legal briefs — were Solicitor General Philip Pearlman for the U. S. and John W. Davis (the Wall St. lawyer who was the Democratic candidate for President back in 1924) for the steel companies.

As a "friend of the court," the USA-CIO entered the case in support of the government's presentation and to argue for an early decision by the Supreme Court, which is scheduled to recess on June 2.

But this request by Arthur J. Goldberg, union general counsel, for "utmost speed" got a curt reception from Justice Robert Jackson.

"I think it is important that no false hopes be raised on that score," Jackson said. "I would oppose handing down any decisions on this case until the opinions are ready because the opinions are even more important than the decisions."

In oral argument and an accompanying brief, Goldberg struck at the main contention of the steel industry that Truman was under a mandate to use a Taft-Hartley 80-day anti-strike injunction against the steel workers.

By agreeing early last January to Wage Stabilization Board hearings on the steel contracts, Goldberg said, "every intent of Congress was complied with."

The union's brief also asked the Supreme Court to reverse its action banning any government wage increase move—a decision which broke up the most recent steel negotiations in the White House.

ALTHOUGH nominal seizure is in effect, the union brief said, "the heads of the companies are continuing to operate them precisely as they did before. The processes of procurement, production and sales are not being interfered with in the slightest. And the profits resulting from these operations continue to accrue to the private owners."

Goldberg also reminded the justices of the industry's long effort to gain an over-ceiling price increase larger than any wage increase costs, saying "this is not a labor dispute; this is a dispute as to the price regulations of the government."

NMU Asks 15c Increase

THE CIO National Maritime Union has proposed a 15c an hour increase for unlicensed seamen under a wage reopening clause with Atlantic and Gulf Coast shippers.

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran presented the union proposal in a meeting in New York with the Committee for the Companies and Agents, representing 42 ship operators.

In addition to the across-the-board increase, Curran said the union also asked wage adjustments for certain key men, and specified a $50 monthly increase for chief stewards on freighters.

The wage review is held under terms of existing agreements which run through June 15, 1953.

U.S. To Pay For Trucking Seizure

The U. S. got the bill last week for a World War II industry seizure.

The government agreed to pay $8.5 million in settlement of 91 claims by Midwest highway trucking concerns. Originally the truckers had asked for approximately $50 million.

The case has dragged through Congress and the courts eight years, since seizure of the firms in 1944 after the truckers had refused to grant a wage increase recommended by the War Labor Board.

Fifteen hundred members of UFWA Local 286—men and women, white and Negro furniture workers—have been out since mid-March in fight for cost-of-living wage boosts. They have stood up to police intimidation, sweeping injunctions, and threats by armed scabs. Many CIO international unions as well as locals have supported the strikers with donations. CIO Backs TWUA In Fight Against Splitters

CIO'S FULL "power and influence" were pledged by Pres. Philip Murray to the Textile Workers Union of America against threatened moves to "split and destroy" the union.

Murray, speaking at the CIO Steelworkers convention in Philadelphia, made the pledge amid reports that George Baldanzi, former TWUA executive vice president, was going to lead a secession move in favor of the AFL's dual textile outfit.

Murray urged Baldanzi supporters in TWUA not to "run away" and "split and destroy" their organization.

Baldanzi was defeated when he opposed TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve at the union's recent stormy convention in Cleveland. Rieve and a 26-man administration slate won the election. At that time, Baldanzi opposed rumored secession moves.

Last week, a spokesman for the AFL Textile Workers said it had hired Baldanzi as its chief organizer. Baldanzi said only that he was considering the switch.

Both Murray and Rieve, who also addressed the USA-CIO convention, said they had no official word that Baldanzi had switched to the AFL organization, of which he had been highly critical in the past.

A TWUA spokesman in New York said the union was making full efforts to defend itself, and had received assistance from Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president and director of organization, and John Riffe, CIO Southern Organizing Drive director, and their staffs.

Rieve said the Textile Workers will take legal action against any local or joint board that pulls out. He said a 5000-member local in Thompsonville, Conn., had voted to secede, while action was pending in a 3000-member joint board in the Leaksville, N. C., area. In Canada, four locals with 1500 members have voted to stay in TWUA.

"This is a fight between the CIO and the AFL," he said, "and we do not intend to let them break up our union."

Senate Votes T-H Change

AN AMENDMENT to the Taft-Hartley Act was passed unanimously by the Senate last week.

Now before the House, the bill, which had the support of Sen. Taft (R. O.), is intended to correct "hardships" to labor-management relations in the construction industry.

The measure would permit construction unions and contractors to make collective bargaining agreements before workers were hired for a particular job, and permit union shop clauses in which employes must join a union within seven days after being hired.

In addition, it would provide a "quickie" NLRB election process whereby employes could change their union before the completion of the job made such action meaningless.

The amendment would authorize the special union-shop agreements despite conflicting state, territorial or federal laws. It also would require the union—in such contracts — to comply with Taft-Hartley's requirement for filing non-Communist oaths and financial statements.

Oil Unions Okeh WSB Pattern Of 15c Boost To End Strike

IN THE national interest, leaders of 90,000 striking oil workers late last week accepted the 15c an hour basic wage increase recommended by the Wage Stabilization Board.

The recommendation also calls for increases in the second shift differential from 4c to 6c an hour, and the third shift differential from 6c to 12c.

The strike began Apr. 30, two weeks after the companies refused to participate in WSB "pilot case" hearing.

Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers, who led the oil unions in the first strike of the CIO, AFL and independent oil unions, emphasized that the leaders did not like the recommendations, but were "asking the men to go back to work."

"We think that we should have received more money, particularly in view of the astronomical profits of the oil companies," Knight said.

"But, nevertheless, we are asking the men to go back to work. We are doing this because we are American citizens interested in the welfare of the armed forces, particularly those in Korea. They stand in the need of the products of the petroleum industry.

"With proper cooperation by the companies there will be enough settlements by nightfall (of May 15) to start operation of sufficient facilities to alleviate the shortage of aviation gasoline.

Before making the announcement, Knight conducted a poll not only of OWIU's policy committee but also of the coordinating committee of all the unions involved.

He was confident that the industry would accept the recommendation because some of the companies had agreed to the same terms before WSB acted.

When the oil companies refused to participate in WSB "pilot case" hearings, WSB stepped out of the picture and turned the dispute back to the unions and the companies. It stepped back into the case when it called the disputants to Washington to give a "full report" last week.

Knight took the story of the union's acceptance of the WSB recommendations to the American people in a television appearance on the CBS network and 45 other stations.

Oil Firms Hit As 'Most Greedy In The World'

The CIO Electrical Workers have pledged "complete support" to the Oil Workers in their current dispute.

In a letter to OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight, IUE Pres. James B. Carey said the "clear cut justice" of OWIU's demands on an industry "that is now the most profitable and perhaps the most greedy in the world" gives IUE members additional reason "to do everything possible to insure your victory."

Carey said all IUE districts and locals have been asked to give support to the strike.

Another expression of support came from the New Jersey CIO Council. Pres. Carl Holderman said the council has protested to Atty. Gen. Theodore Parsons an attempt to bar OWIU members from picketing Cities Service gas stations along the New Jersey Turnpike.

TWUA Wins American Wool Pact

THE THREE-MONTH effort of the American Woolen Co. to break the CIO Textile Workers in its plants collapsed last week.

Failure of the union-busting efforts were signalized by the ratification of a two-year contract with the company by the union's woolen and worsted committee and the American Woolen advisory committee.

Local unions were arranging ratification meetings.

TWUA represents 20,000 employes in the firm's 21 mills, 18 of them in New England and others in Kentucky and New York.

The new contract retains the wage scale averaging $1.60½ an hour and provides a wage reopener next Mar. 15. The contract also carries over previous insurance, shift premium, workload, retirement and cost-of-living escalator provisions. The vacation and the holiday clauses were altered.

The dispute began when the company served notice that it did not intend to renew the master agreement, which expired Mar. 15. It subsequently insisted that negotiations be on a plant-by-plant basis.

The union threatened to strike, but the contract was extended three times during the dispute.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve said he "was gratified that we have been able to work out a satisfactory agreement with the American Woolen Co." He added he was particularly pleased by "the re-establishment of our collective bargaining relationship on the same level of mutual respect which prevailed before our current negotiations began."

TWUA faced a new threat last week when negotiations with three key producers in the carpet industry broke down.

Talks over a new contract with the three firms halted May 13. The old pact expires June 1. The three firms traditionally set the pattern for the industry. They are Alexander Smith, Inc.; A. M. Karagheusian and Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Co.

Union demands include a 15c an hour wage increase and a cost-of-living escalator clause. TWUA represents employes of 32 carpet producers in 35 plants.

IUE Protest Walkouts Set In GE Shops

SEVENTY THOUSAND members of the CIO Electrical Workers will join in protest demonstrations June 5 in General Electric Co. plants throughout the nation.

They'll back up demands for a decent wage proposal from GE.

Call for the nation-wide protest walkouts came last week from the IUE-CIO General Electric Conference Board, meeting in New York City.

IUE Pres. James B. Carey said the conference board rejected a "miserable" 1% cost-of-living increase which was GE's final offer before negotiations broke off 10 days ago. IUE seeks a 12c-to-15c increase.

Carey said the form of the demonstrations will be left to IUE locals in 34 GE plants represented by the CIO union.

The union's Westinghouse Conference Board was meeting in New York at the week end, and was expected to authorize similar protest demonstrations, according to press reports.

Reminder To The Senate

In the "know-nothing" atmosphere generally prevailing in Washington, the Senate last week began debating the 302-page omnibus immigration bill which Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) is trying desperately to ram through Congress.

This is the bill, already voted by the House, which would rewrite America's laws along Nuremberg racist lines, setting up race, religious and national quotas and striking both at native and naturalized citizens along with aliens.

The extreme provisions of the new McCarran Bill have been strongly protested by representatives of religious groups, the American Bar Association, Americans for Democratic Action and the CIO.

Yet in attempting to whip the bill through, Sens. McCarran and Mundt (R. S. D.) attempted to portray that only Communists oppose it.

The Senator from Nevada made no mention of his supporters—for example, Allen Zoll, once head of an outfit designated as Fascist by the U. S. government, and a long list of right-wing crackpot outfits.

We think Zoll and his pals have a right to lobby for McCarran—and that those who want a decent, democratic immigration law along lines of the Humphrey-Lehman bill have the same right.

Since Sen. McCarran questions the right of Americans to protest to Congress, he should take another look at Article I of the Bill of Rights—"the right of the people . . . to petition the Government for a redress of grievances"—and abide by it.

And the Senate should heed Sen. Lehman's warning that the McCarran immigration bill is "restrictionist, exclusionist, undemocratic and oppressive" and kill it.

Crowns Will Fall

An obscure story in the daily press records the closing of Garrards of Albermarle St., the London jewelers who have been making crowns and diamond gee-gaws for European royalty for 200 years.

"A slump in buying power"—that is, not many kings and princes—caused the firm to close down.

It's too bad; Garrards should have moved to Washington. They would feel right at home in the absolutist atmosphere of Congress.

Garrards was in business in the reign of George III, and his rule (according to our Declaration of Independence) was "a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute tyranny over these states."

That pretty well describes the Dixiegops in Congress. So we propose that Garrards be commissioned to deck out certain congressional leaders in appropriate attire.

Sen. Dirksen and Rep. Smith want to turn labor relations back to the indenture system of colonial days; they ought to get a diamond-encrusted velvet band as Knights of the Press Gang.

Sen. Taft is in line for at least a triple-decked crown, topped with the "Star of Ohio," the biggest jewel in captivity, as emperor of the land and sea and all the universe.

Sen. Byrd should get some platinum scissors as the Duke of Budget Cutters.

And Joe McCarthy needs a dunce cap—flaked with fool's gold. For sure, he's got that $10,000 from Lustron Corp. to pay for it.

Keep Our Democracy Strong

The American revolution "that began in 1775 is still going on in 1952," W. Averell Harriman said in an address on "Strengthening Democracy in the Free World." Highlights of the address of the Mutual Security director to the American Jewish Welfare Board in Detroit follow:

THERE WAS a time when we used to think that foreign policy and domestic policy were separate and distinct. Today, we know that our life is intimately and at times violently affected by our relations with the rest of the world.

It is just as clear that what we are and what we do here at home determine the strength and effectiveness of our foreign policy.

We have today a progressive and affirmative foreign policy. We cannot sustain it unless we sustain progressive and affirmative domestic policies.

We cannot safeguard democracy in the United States without strengthening it in the world. We cannot strengthen democracy in the world without strengthening it here in the United States.

This is not a dilemma. It is an opportunity to lead mankind away from fear, hatred and war toward a future of peace, abundance, and good will.

But there are those who shrink from these responsibilities, who have little confidence in what the American people can do. These men think in terms of a "Little America" at home, and a "Little America" in the world!

You and I think of America in bolder terms. We believe in a Big America—big in vision, big in heart, big in accomplishment.

We have learned the hard way that, rich and powerful as we are, we cannot "go it alone." We need well-equipped allies, willing and able to stand guard with us. That is what we are getting through the contributions we have been making to the strength of the free world.

What is the job we have to do?

First, we must look to our military defenses. But that is only part of the job. The threat is more than military. Our program must be more than military. That is why we strive to help build up the economic and social structure of our friends. That's why we had the Marshall Plan. That's why we have the Point Four program now.

Communism does not always conquer by the sword. We cannot fight communism by giving hungry men guns and telling them, "Here, go shoot that fellow who promises to feed you." We've got to show them their problems can be solved—our way; the way of freedom.

Engraved in our Constitution is the ideal that this land of ours is one which provides genuine equality of opportunity and citizenship. Our practices have fallen far below that ideal.

We must make sure that all our citizens—regardless of race, color, creed, or national origin—have an opportunity to participate fully in the life and work of our nation and to share the benefits as well as the responsibilities and burdens of full citizens of the United States. We will not convince the world that we fully believe in democracy until we fully practice it.

THERE is another right, imbedded in our Constitution and our way of life which we must fight to protect against those who would deny it. That is the right to think and speak as we like. There is a difference between disloyalty and the expression of unpopular ideas. Our democracy can be destroyed if we come to think they are the same.

We must keep our democracy strong in all ways if we are to continue to build strength at home and strength in the free world.

I like to think of the American Revolution as a continuing process that began in 1775 and is still going on in 1952. The American Revolution has never stopped. It goes on every day, overthrowing the old evils of inequality, injustice and intolerance.

This is no rear-guard action we are fighting in defense of the status quo. The essence of democracy is change. It is a dynamic system, meeting every new challenge, forever adapting itself to new conditions.

We must bring this aspect of democracy to free men everywhere. If we do, we can release the great potentialities of the free world. Together we can combat the forces of evil. We can move forward toward the goal of peace and toward an ever-increasing fullness of life.

PAC In Action—

N. California CIO Forms Joint Campaign Committee

FULL RESOURCES of CIO international and local unions and of city and county councils in Northern California will be used in a joint campaign in the state's primary and general elections.

Formation last week was announced of a Northern California CIO Campaign Committee, which will concentrate on supporting labor-backed candidates in the San Francisco Bay Area, Sacramento and Stockton.

Heading the joint body is Tim Flynn, CIO regional director, while Manuel Dias, State CIO Council president, is secretary of the campaign group. Other committee members are officers of the San Francisco, Alameda and Contra Costa CIO Councils and area directors of the CIO Steelworkers, Auto Workers and Communications Workers.

Number One goal of the committee is "to organized liberal and labor support for the senatorial candidacy of Clinton H. McKinon." McKinnon, now a congressman from San Diego, is opposing Sen. Knowland (R.). Flynn called McKinnon "a vigorous congressional fighter against communism, inflation, and for maintenance of the American standard of living and peace, freedom and democracy."

*

A similar Southern California CIO Campaign Committee has been formed in the Los Angeles-San Diego area to mobilize locals with 125,000 members in the campaigns.

Irwin L. DeShelter, CIO regional director, heads the committee, which also includes area officers and representatives of 20 international unions and the State, Los Angeles and San Diego CIO Councils.

Organizing of the campaign group followed a Los Angeles PAC conference in which more than 250 local union delegates participated.

A "favorite son" endorsement of Sen. Humphrey (D., Minn.) for the Democratic presidential nomination is pending before Minnesota CIO-PAC district conventions now under way.

Such action, according to Minnesota Labor, was favored by State CIO Council executive board members so that Humphrey can spearhead the battle for a liberal Democratic platform in Chicago—as he did on civil rights four years ago.

RODNEY C. Jacobson, State CIO secretary-treasurer, condemned rumors of a "compromise" between Southern and other sections of the Democratic party, warning:

"There can be no compromise on issues of civil rights, public power, health, Taft-Hartley Act repeal, firm price and rent controls or farm price supports."

*

"Every Shop Steward a Politician" is the slogan of the Iowa State CIO Council.

Throughout the state, a voter registration drive is being stepped up toward the June 2 deadline. Congressional district PAC committees are being organized, along with ward committees. And CIO-PAC workers are participating in county Republican and Democratic conventions.

CIO Housing Meet Asks Stronger Rent Controls

RALLYING against mounting real estate and landlord lobby assaults on rent control and public housing, the CIO National Housing Committee last week called CIO council and regional representatives to Washington for a two-day conference on housing legislation.

Delegates from all parts of the conutry met with congressmen and government housing, rent control and home finance officials to point out growing tenant hardships and intolerable living conditions cropping up throughout the nation in conjunction with the defense program.

Blame was placed directly upon both inadequate laws for rent control and defense housing and their lax application by big business-minded appointees to enforcement agencies. Congressmen were asked to support a five-point legislative program to correct these evils.

The delegates termed administration of the present rent control law by the Critical Defense Areas Advisory Committee "unrealistic" and destructive of effective rent controls. They assailed unreasonable delays and the committee's inexcusable failures to designate as areas eligible for rent control most of the large industrial areas of the nation.

NEARLY all the 150 areas certified for federal rent control are military camps or small town areas and only two large cities —Indianapolis and San Diego— are among them. CIO has asked for certification of many other cities, including Milwaukee, Pittsburgh and Tulsa, where rising rents make stronger controls needed badly.

Leo Goodman, secretary of the CIO National Housing Committee, who chaired the conference, pointed out that the Critical Areas Advisory Committee appointed by former Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson does not even include among its members a representative of the Rent Stabilization Agency.

He recalled that, when Rent Stabilizer Tighe E. Woods said the committee's failure to designate areas suffering from the defense impact was an example of bureaucracy at its worst, he had been deprived of powers still more urgently needed to do an effective rent control job.

"We must insist upon reform of committee practices in designating critical areas," Goodman said. "It is interesting to note that there are 50 more areas designated as critical for credit relaxation on home building, something sought by the real estate lobby, than have been designated critical for rent control purposes."

In addition to insisting that the method of designating critical areas be changed, the delegates cited as a fundamental roadblock to effective rent control the present provision in the rent law which allows local boards to vote decontrol in areas placed under control by ORS.

As a result CIO will redouble its efforts to secure an amendment to present rent control laws that would permit local decontrol of rents only when the vacancy ratio of low and middle income housing in the community amounts to 10% of the housing supply. At present, the vacancy ratio for the whole U. S. is only 1.3%.

—Herblock in The Washington Post

"Isn't That Kind Of a Low Ceiling?"

The conference decided to work to have the so-called Middle Income Housing Bill added to S. 3066, which provides for loans for defense housing, before its passage. It also assailed the recent House action cutting appropriations for the number of public housing units next year to 5000 and resolved to fight for the full 135,000 units authorized by law.

Delegates said that even this year's cutback to 50,000 units is seriously delaying the public housing program. They pointed out that 51,000 public housing units which have already been authorized could go under construction tomorrow if Congress lifted the present limit.

Government officials addressing the conference included Rent Stabilizer Woods and Neal Hardy, deputy administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

'Economy' Ax On Aid Bill Stopped By One-Vote Margin

A ONE-VOTE margin last week prevented "economy" bloc members of the Senate Military Affairs Committee from crippling the already badly-trimmed authorization for the Mutual Security Program.

The committee decided to report the bill back to the Senate floor in exactly the same form as it had been reported earlier by the Foreign Relations Committee. That calls for a slice of $1 billion off the $7.9 billion requested by the President.

Meanwhile, the House Rules Committee cleared for action a bill approved by the House Foreign Affairs Committee which makes a similar cut. Debate in both houses is expected to begin this week.

Defeated in the Senate committee was a Dixiegop move, led by Sen. Long (D. La.), to hack an additional $400,000. However, four members who opposed this cut were reported to have reserved the right to vote for further reductions on the Senate floor.

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, retiring commander of allied military forces in Europe, warned the committee that any cut beyond $1 billion would be "uneconomic."

After the "economy" blocs in both the House and Senate gets through with making cuts in the authorizing legislation, it will have still another opportunity to butcher the program when Congress takes up the appropriation bill providing funds to carry out the program authorized.

IN ANOTHER action the House, on a rollcall vote approved the "states rights" tidelands oil bill as reported by the House-Senate conferees. The count of 24 to 89 was 23 votes more than the two-thirds that would be required later to override an anticipated presidential veto.

Approval by the Senate followed on May 16, sending the bill to the White House. If enacted over the expected Truman veto, rich oil and other resources worth at least $40 billion would come under State control.

Steel Delegates Roar Defiance Of Industry

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

CIO STEELWORKERS, in convention duly assembled, last week served strong notice they would not permit the pigeonholing of their six-month struggle for wage improvements and the union shop.

It was an angry, determined group of 3000 delegates who went to Philadelphia for the biennial convention of their union. Delegate after delegate scored the "arrogant" attitude of the steel companies against the union and the government.

Pres. Philip Murray, rounding out 10 years as head of the union, charged that the companies have been trying to "take something away from you, and I say to them, 'Go to hell!'" The statement brought the delegates to their feet in a roar of shouted applause.

IN A LONG review of the six-month steel dispute, Murray boiled the issue down to this: that the companies are trying to force steel union members to work in 1952 at 1950 wages. And the union made clear it won't long tolerate that sort of "hardship gap" between outdated wages and present-day inflationary prices.

In one of its major resolutions, the union said:

"This convention of the United Steelworkers declares that the crisis in the steel industry must be promptly resolved.

"We cannot and will not continue indefinitely to work in 1952 for 1950 wages and working conditions. We cannot and will not continue indefinitely to work without satisfactory collective bargaining contracts."

That resolution brought forth a host of speeches from delegates from every section of the country. When, after three hours of discussion, the resolution came up to vote, it passed with a throaty roar.

Then delegates from all sections of the tremendous convention hall moved up the aisles and across the stage. They chanted "we want a contract"; "no contract—no work"; and "Phil Murray is our leader, we shall not be moved."

It was only after 10 minutes of repeated urging by Murray that the delegates finally returned to their seats.

He pointed out, for the benefit of editorial writers, that the convention's reactions offered proof that this is the "worker's dispute, not Phil Murray's dispute."

The 3000 delegates were pouring into the City of Brotherly Love as the Supreme Court in Washington was hearing hours of legal oratory about the constitutionality of the President's seizure of the steel mills last month. While the court considers the issues, it has issued a stay preventing the government from changing wage rates for the workers.

In his keynote speech, Murray took note of "the great deal of confusion . . . of misrepresentation . . . of scandal . . . of filth" in the papers and on radio and TV concerning the steel dispute.

He asserted that many people either misunderstand, or don't dare understand, the Wage Stabilization Board's jurisdiction in the case—and the fact that it had the right to consider every phase of the dispute, economic and non-economic.

The rules regulating the WSB were fair and they were known to the industry, Murray added.

"Why all this hysteria, then? The Steelworkers in this situation respected the rules adopted for their guidance by their government. The steel industry has not.

"The steel industry has arrogantly defied and wilfully violated not the rules of a game, but the rules of common decency . . . The people who violate those rules are not going to get away with it—we are not going to allow them to."

Murray charged that the companies have "resorted to the use of slander" to undermine the union's case, and he went on to assail the tremendous sums spent by the corporations for advertising their misrepresentations in the press.

He charged that the steel companies have used the taxpayers' money to deceive the American public about the issues in the case and on political issues.

Four times since 1942, Murray recalled, steel disputes have gone to government boards for recommendations. Four times the union has accepted those impartial recommendations—and three of those four times, the companies have turned the government down.

But despite this record, and the record in the 1952 case, Murray commented, "five congressional investigations are under way in Washington. All sorts of wild, unimaginable bills are being introduced, each one designed to beat labor down into the ground. All sorts of witnesses carrying briefcases from one end of the nation to the other are running hither and yon, mostly over to Washington, to educe evidence, purportedly of an expert nature, to congressional committees about the steel case."

SEN. Humphrey told the convention that the steel dispute is part of a "grand strategy" by big industry to kill the economic control program and "have its way in America."

The Minnesota Democrat charged that the steel operators' part in the contract battle is a "power play" to "kill once and for all the liberal gains of the past 20 years."

"We are witnessing," he said, "the fulfillment of a grand strategy to destroy price control, wage stabilization and the anti-inflation program of the nation.

"This represents placing greed above national need. It is a power play by big industry in collusion with the reactionary leaders in the American political scene to kill once and for all the liberal gains of the past 20 years."

(Details on the final day's proceedings, including action on dues and constitutional changes, will be reported in the next issue.)

ENTHUSIASTIC delegates at CIO Steelworkers convention, cheering and throwing confetti, swarm on stage in Philadelphia's Convention Hall to congratulate USA-CIO Pres. Philip Murray after parley adopts strongly-worded warning to steel barons to come to terms. Union said it won't work indefinitely for 1950 pay.

So Ma Bell Was Kept Busy

The familiar rattle of Western Union telegraph machines was absent from the Steelworkers convention press room.

The reason: AFL Telegraphers are on strike. So Vin Sweeney, publicity director for the CIO Steelworkers, refused to allow Western Union machines into the press room of the big Philadelphia convention hall.

Instead, American Tel & Tel did land office business in long distance calls from the host of reporters who covered the convention.

Steel Barons Put Goebbels In Shade

The steel industry "has been putting on a propaganda drive that even a Dr. Goebbels might envy," Economic Stabilizer Roger Putnam said last week.

Goebbels was the Nazi propaganda minister and advocate of "the big lie."

Putnam told the U.S. Conference of Mayors, meeting in New York, that the steel industry by its high-power propaganda campaign is trying to confuse the U.S. public so as to get unwarranted "special price treatment" and move "even higher into excess profits."

MAKING A POINT—Arrogant position of major steel firms in refusing to bargain was condemned time and again by Pres. Philip Murray at USA-CIO convention in Philadelphia.

Taft-Hartley Aided Stall Of Big Steel

THE STEELWORKERS convention pledged a renewed fight against the "evil and inequitable" Taft-Hartley Act — which has given aid and comfort to the steel barons in their six-month fight against a wage settlement.

Delegates demanded enactment of a new "sound and fair" industrial relations law based on the principles of the Wagner Act.

Pres. Philip Murray and other USA-CIO officers, in their report to the convention, pointed out that a "factor in the industry's refusal to bargain was the Taft-Hartley Act and its provisions for injunctions in 'national emergency' strikes. U.S. Steel and other companies were encouraged to stall in the negotiations because they felt that the President would be forced to invoke a Taft-Hartley injunction against the union and prevent the union from striking for 80 days.

"It is important to remember, however, that, even though it was not invoked, the possibility of a Taft-Hartley injunction played an important role in spurring on the steel companies to defy their legal obligation to bargain honestly with our Union," the report said.

Big Steel Chief Retires On Tidy $65,000 Pension

Irving S. Olds, chairman of the board of the US Steel Corp. since 1940, has retired at 65.

He will get a pension of $14,399 a year, and $50,000 more a year under a deferred salary contract. He will also pick up a few dollars for attending directors' meetings and as a member of the finance committee. And there is still his law firm, White & Case, for Olds intends to resume active practice of law.

The deferred salary contract is a gimmick, perfectly legal, which reduces the income tax of the boys in the top brackets. The firm sets your salary at so much, or gives you a hefty salary boost of so much, but agrees to pay off in future years. That cuts your present income taxes, still assures you of big income later. (LPA)

PANDEMONIUM at CIO Steelworkers' convention in Philadelphia is reflected in this scene of enthusiastic demonstrative delegates and cameramen.

Steelworkers Get 'Vote Of Confidence' From Veep

VICE PRESIDENT Alben Barkley—the grand old man of Kentucky—paid a "vote of confidence" to the United Steelworkers during an applause-interrupted speech to the convention.

The vote of confidence, Barkley said, is due the union "for your willingness to submit this particular phase of your welfare" to the government for consideration. He continued:

"I wish to congratulate you, and all those whom you represent upon your acquiesence in the request of your government to continue the production of that commodity so indispensable to the defense of our country and to the lives of many of those who are fighting to maintain our independence and our way of life."

The Veep's speech was compounded of the easy, genial humor and the sound common sense that have made him one of the nation's favorite speakers.

He said his appearance at the convention was as "an American talking to Americans." He quipped that if he had not been here four years ago (at the Democratic convention), he might not be here today.

But the Veep went on to speak of the "tragically low standard of life" among many peoples of the world, and of the responsibilities of democratic governments to meet these problems.

Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin brought the delegates to their feet when he said the time had past to be "impartial" in the steel dispute.

Noting that the Wage Stabilization Board held long hearings, Tobin said "that was the time for impartiality. That was the time for not taking sides.

"But when the Board proclaimed to the American people that the steel workers were entitled to improvements in wages and working conditions that would bring them in line with other workers in American industry, then the time for impartiality was over . . .

LABOR SEC. TOBIN

"Then it was proper for the American people to line up behind the recommendations of that Board and get both parties to accept them."

Tobin said it was "reasonable to ask" where the money is coming to pay the wage boosts recommended by the WSB.

"The answer is simple: they can be paid out of the fabulous profits that the steel industry has been earning and will continue to earn," he explained.

Tobin said he couldn't predict how the dispute would come out —"but I want to tell you this— that one of the fairest men in all this land of ours sits in the chair of the President of the United States. I know that he will continue to work for a settlement that is fair to the steel workers, to the steel industry and to the American people as well."

Joseph A. Beirne, president of the CIO Communications Workers and a former labor member of the Wage Stabilization Board, told the steel workers they presented the best case to the WSB —"That's why you got the decision you did."

Beirne denied that the board recommendations were "rash" and accused industry members of telling a "deliberate, premeditated, damnable lie" in charging labor and public members with collusion.

'Campaign Of Lies, Hysteria' In Press Condemned By USA

CIO STEELWORKERS, bitterly resenting a long campaign against them in almost all of the nation's newspapers, struck back with a strongly worded resolution on "Freedom of the Press."

With the 3000 delegates roaring out their "aye" votes, the convention expressed "its deep resentment against the unfair treatment which has been accorded to the wholly justified and moderate case of the Steelworkers in their current dispute with the steel companies."

The delegates "sharply condemned" those "publishers, editors and industrialists who have shamelessly seized the nation's press to conduct an assault against the Steelworkers and against public servants who have acted in the public interest instead of as puppets of the top executives of the steel industry."

The resolution, however, did offer words of praise for "those few newspapers and the radio and television stations which have held out against this anti-democratic domination of the means of public opinion."

And the delegates voiced "friendship" for reporters on the labor beat, "whom we know are not responsible for this campaign of lies, hysteria and misrepresentation."

In a companion resolution, the convention said that the "extreme bias" shown by most papers emphasizes the importance of support for the labor press.

"The members of organized labor and their families have been almost wholly dependent upon their own union newspapers for accurate information and for a fair presentation of the union's story in recent labor disputes," the steel union said.

IT praised the services being performed by the union's paper, Steel Labor; by The CIO News; and by Labor Press Associated, the union-owned news co-op which serves union papers across the nation.

The union also called for strong support by its locals for the project to establish the National Daily Reporter, a daily labor paper designed to "meet the urgent need for prompt, accurate and widely-circulated news of trade unions and related activities." Local unions were urged to "lend every cooperation" to the National Daily Reporter project.

Here's Exception To Press Attack

One exception to the daily press slander campaign against the CIO Steelworkers is the St. Charles, Mo., Daily Banner-News.

Under the headline "Are Profits More Important to Steel Industry Than Greater Production?", the St. Charles paper assailed Inland Steel Pres. Clarence Randall and the industry for refusing to accept the WSB recommendations.

"Randall did himself and the business he represents no good when he delivered his broadside" against President Truman, the paper said.

"The one bright spot in the whole picture has been the patient Murray. . . . Each time the President asked for his cooperation, he gave it. Today the men are working because Truman asked them to. No such willingness to cooperate has been shown by the steel operators."

PAC Drive Pledged Against Dixiegops

CIO STEELWORKERS moved last week to meet "a great opportunity and a great challenge" in the 1952 elections.

After considerable discussion, the delegates passed a PAC resolution which said:

"We have the opportunity of breaking the vicious and unprincipled coalition of Dixiecrats and reactionary Republicans which, for the past four years, has nullified every attempt to push forward the frontiers of social progress.

"We have the opportunity of electing a Congress and an Administration which will carry on the battle for human progress in the spirit of Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry S. Truman."

The convention, calling for PAC activity by every member and every local, reaffirmed "the principle of independent and non-partisan political action, giving support to the progressive forces in both major political parties . . ."

In passing the resolution, Pres. Murray reminded the delegates, their PAC work had only started. The question, after the resolution was passed, he said, is this: "Are you going to work— are you going to organize your communities politically?"

Candidates for office are "scouring the country" in search of delegates, Murray reminded the convention.

"Mr. Taft is frank, he is candid, he hides nothing. He is against you. He is quite open and frank about it.

". . . Other candidates in the offing, who, for purposes best known to themselves, have not expressed their convictions with respect to national matters, hover over the horizon here, carrying certain kinds of implications designed perhaps to deceive the people momentarily.

"But in the end the people will get to know where they stand, and on the basis of whatever their convictions may be at that time, their judgments will be determined. You have an awful lot at stake."

SEC.-TREAS. David J. McDonald who holds the same post with the CIO-PAC, reminded the convention that it was meeting in a hall where Roosevelt was nominated in '36, Willkie in '40, Truman in '48. He said:

"Each man sitting out here has a vote, which is just as good as the vote of a Ben Fairless or an A. B. Homer (of Bethlehem Steel) or a Clarence Randall or any of the other titans of the steel industry. Each one has a vote.

"Without question Fairless and Randall and Homer and these other fellows will vote. But will all the Steelworkers vote? Of course they won't all vote, they never have all voted. But the retention of our liberties, the beating back of reactionaries, is the concern of every steel worker."

ACWA Faces Up To Unemployment Problems

By FRED ROSS

UNEMPLOYMENT in the men's clothing industry was the ever-present but unwelcome guest at the 18th biennial convention of the CIO Clothing Workers at Atlantic City last week.

It was on the minds of Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum, Executive Vice Pres. Hyman Blumberg and the other general officers of the ACWA.

It was on the minds of the delegates from the central Pennsylvania shirt factory locals, which have been decimated by unemployment.

And it was on the minds of the other delegates -- for all segments of the clothing industry have been hard hit by unemployment.

But in the proud tradition that carried it through the great strikes in the industry and the struggle to build its union over the past four decades, the ACWA —which has grown to almost 400,000 members — faced the problem squarely.

Potofsky and Rosenblum both hit Defense Dept. procurement policies, which, they said, were in large measure responsible for turning workers onto the street.

The ACWA president called for the creation of a Civilian Procurement Agency to replace the Pentagon brass.

SUCH an agency should consist of government, labor and industry representatives which would award military contracts where plants, machinery and skilled labor are available, Potofsky said.

He charged that the military, through its procurement policies, was helping to create "ghost towns" in the men's apparel industry. The military, he said, was encouraging fly-by-night and "chiseling non-union manufacturers" and intensifying unemployment among skilled workers.

"What the most backward elements in private industry have been unable to achieve themselves," Potofsky declared, "they are now attempting to do with the aid of the Pentagon, namely, to destroy the wage and working standards built up over the years by the American trade unions.

"The Pentagon, with billions of dollars to spend, throws its weight behind exploiters in industry, supports them in their fight against union standards and the labor unions themselves."

Rosenblum attacked another cause of the economic plight of the clothing industry.

He said that mail order houses, department store chains, buying syndicates and other chains account for 25% of the total sales of men's apparel and furnishings.

And how these groups make their purchases, Rosenblum said, often determines whether a manufacturer remains in business, hundreds and thousands of workers remain employed and whether there will be a severe dislocation in any of the industries under Amalgamated jurisdiction.

"A shift in a million dollar order," Rosenblum told the delegates, "from a union to a non-union manufacturer may drive a firm out of business with whom we have had contractural relations for years. It throws our people on the unemployment heap."

He asked application of federal anti-trust laws to these groups.

In an interview, Vice Pres. David Monas, who is manager of the Pennsylvania Shirt Workers Joint Board, spelled out the details of the unemployment in central Pennsylvania shirt factories.

He rattled off a list of shirt factories that have closed down within the past year in Schuylkill, Carbon, Northampton, Lehigh, Berks, Mifflin, Cumberland and York counties, throwing an estimated 4000 members of the union out of work.

These plants, he said, were unable to meet the competition of non-union shops in the South and other parts of the country for Army shirt contracts and did not have sufficient other business to keep them going. He said that during World War II the military distributed its contracts on a geographical basis.

But under the present procurement policies, Monas said, the awards got to the lowest bidder irrespective of whether the plant is an established concern equipped to do the work.

Monas estimated that about half of the 4000 displaced workers had exhausted their unemployment benefits.

ACWA has been seeking for some months to have the Pentagon change its policies. As a result of the union's pressure a hearing will be held May 22 before a special panel of the Defense Manpower Committee at which Vice Pres. Gladys Dickason is scheduled to testify.

The officers' report, which was approved by the 1344 delegates and alternates representing 467 locals placed the blame for "our current economic conditions" on "the present Republican and Dixiecrat control of Congress" and called for full labor participation in the election this year.

The report held Congress responsible for failure to enact a strong price control law, and for the growth of "intolerance and hysteria."

UNEMPLOYMENT in the textile industry—which has been particularly hard hit in New England—was on the mind of Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers when he addressed the ACWA convention.

"I think that we—you in the clothing shops and we in the textile mills—have a right to ask: What's going on in this country?" he said.

"How are we supposed to live, to take care of our families, to educate our children when prices are going up—and our incomes are going down because we can't find work?

"We are paying the price for this 'cockeyed economy' — the kind of an economy where there are plenty of Cadillacs, but no customers for clothing.

"I don't have any objection to Cadillacs. I don't even have any great objection to people who own Cadillacs. But I do object when the whole country is operated for the benefit of the Cadillac class.

"There are a lot of subway riders in this country, and they are just as important as the Cadillac owners—in my opinion, more important."

Labor Sec. Maurice J. Tobin called the attention of the convention to three proposed amendments to wreck the Walsh-Healey Act, which allows the government to set wage and working standards on any federal contract for more than $10,000.

Potofsky assured him that ACWA would do everything in its power to halt the drive against the act.

USA Backed In Titanic Struggle

The ACWA convention in a message to the CIO Steelworkers hailed the latter's "titanic struggle" with the steel industry "on behalf of all workers throughout the land."

The Steelworkers were meeting in convention at the same time in Philadelphia. The ACWA message said:

"You stand as a shining crusader to keep our standards high, to keep our economy healthy, to keep our country's strength resolute and powerful, and to keep our flag of democracy and security and peace flying high. God speed your efforts."

'Ideas Will Win Where Guns, Dollars Fail,' Douglas Says

TWICE on the same day, a Supreme Court justice and a leading American educator told the ACWA convention that victory of the free world over communism depends on what happens to the colonial peoples of the world.

Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas was one speaker and Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard Univ., Washington, was the other.

"We have placed our reliance primarily upon guns and upon dollars," Douglas said, "and it is my deep conviction that the peoples of Asia cannot be won by guns or by dollars.

"The peoples of Asia must be won, if they are to be won, with ideas. What ideas? The same kind of ideas that ACWA stands for."

Douglas said that the Communists were posing as champions of people who are "on the move" in the Middle East against feudalism.

He charged that the United States, on the other hand, has "been supporting reactionary regimes, pouring monies behind governments that are vicious governments, reactionary governments, wasting the wealth of America, trying to underwrite the status quo, trying to equalize the situation, as our officials would say."

Douglas said that our opportunity lies in Asia and the Middle East where Russia "has been winning by default."

"My great plea to you is to carry into the field of international relations your ideas of social and economic justice," Douglas said.

Johnson not only pointed to Asia, but also to Africa, where he said our Western European allies were exploiting 250 million people. He said that we should put our own house in order in the field of race relations so that we have the moral courage to attack exploitation abroad.

He saw the forthcoming national election as a time to change the complexion of Congress and defeat the coalition of reactionaries who oppose the extension of civil rights.

"We must stimulate the South to come to the liberal side," Johnson said. "We must stimulate the rising leadership to break away from the slavery system and help the free people of the world."

Scroll Presented By Italian Union

Silvio Ascari and Fabio Tonolli brought greetings to the ACWA convention from Amalgamated's counterpart in Italy.

Ascari presented ACWA Pres. Jacob Potofsky with a scroll from their union, the Italian Federation of Garment Workers which is affiliated with the Italian CISL (Free Trade Union) and the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

UPWA Seeks Annual Wage, 30c Pay Hike

TALKING THINGS OVER: Minnesotans at UPWA convention discuss items on the agenda. Left to right, Dir. Glenn Chinander of District 2, Pres. Henry Giannini of Local 55, Newport; Mrs. Helen McDermott of Local 9, Austin, and Fin. Sec. Leonard La-Shomb and Kenneth Johnson, a trustee, of Local 167, South St. Paul.

MEN MEMBERS of Packinghouse Union were belabored by Delegate Elizabeth Mayo of Local 28, Chicago. They give "lip service" to needs of women members, she said. But the men had defenders, to, among the women.

By GERVASE N. LOVE

A FAR-REACHING program of contract demands, topped by a 30c an hour pay increase and a guaranteed annual wage, was hammered out last week by more than 600 delegates to the eighth constitutional convention of the CIO Packinghouse Workers in Denver.

The contract program was the high point of a week that left the union with a broad plan of action, covering many phases of activity, to guide the locals in the coming two years.

The guaranteed annual wage already has been secured by Local 9, of Austin, Minn., in its contracts with the Hormel Packing Co., so it is something close to the hearts of UPWA members who work for other employers.

The program adopted calls for a guarantee that each worker will be paid for 2080 hours a year—40 hours a week—at his regular rate of pay. It was subjected to considerable discussion from the floor.

OTHER proposals to be laid before the union's employers when present contracts expire—those with the big chains end in August—include an industry-wide health and welfare program, to be administered by the union, providing life insurance, hospitalization, and medical and surgical coverage for employes and their dependents.

The union also will seek time-and-a-half for Saturday work, with double time after eight hours, higher shift bonuses, establishment of labor grade and mechanical apprenticeship systems, double time for Sundays, two additional holidays for a total of 10, and vacations of two weeks after one year, three weeks after 10 years and four weeks after 15 years.

The convention started off with a warning from Pres. Ralph Helstein that tough times are ahead for all workers as the reactionaries press their fight for control of Congress and the country's economy—a warning that was echoed by CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda in his welcoming address.

"This convention meets," Helstein said in his keynote speech, "at a time when the forces of reaction, having marshaled their strength, are making an organized and concerted attack against the welfare of the people.

"The focal point in this attack is currently the steel dispute."

RALPH HELSTEIN
"We meet in . . . an atmosphere replete with challenge . . ."

He outlined the situation from the start of negotiations between the CIO Steelworkers and the steel barons to the present, and pointed out that despite the Wage Stabilization Board's recommendations, USA members "are still without their well-deserved improvements."

During the same period, he added, the Steelworkers and through them the entire labor movement, the Truman administration and the WSB itself have been "castigated and maligned."

"At no time," he continued, "have the corporations and the reactionary groups which support them accurately reflected the issues which gave rise to the dispute, which are (1) the steel companies' refusal to live up to the rules of the game, and (2) a strike by the companies against public policy for price increases beyond those allowable under the regulations—and this in spite of the fact that the profits of the steel industry exceed any known over the past years.

"The attempt appears clearly to be one designed to so mold public opinion as to turn its wrath against the American labor movement and at the same time assure a victory in the presidential elections this fall.

"The forces of the status quo have launched their attack, the objective being the destruction of the American labor movement and the election of a reactionary administration and Congress so that their victory may be consolidated."

HELSTEIN warned of a big business - military alliance which "seems ready to reach its climax and announce its completion" at the Republican national convention.

Its purpose, he said, is "to consolidate the position of the special interest groups, thereby guaranteeing excess profits for a few and reduced standards of living for the many." He said he was confident the American people would not place their destiny "in the hands of a big business-military alliance, even though represented by an apparently charming though silent man." He did not specifically mention Gen. Eisenhower.

He gave his personal endorsement to Gov. Adlai Stevenson (D.) of Illinois, who has said he is not a candidate. Helstein, making it clear he was not speaking for the union, maintained Stevenson would bring to the presidency "insight, understanding, experience, and a devotion to the best of American traditions—all attributes and talents which the nation sorely needs."

Prompted by this endorsement, Myles Horton, UPWA education director, summoned to the convention with Helstein's approval a fellow-Tennesseean Sen. Kefauver, who is campaigning for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Kefauver, who was in nearby Cheyenne, Wyo., flew into Denver to address the convention, but was held up and did not arrive until after the day's session had recessed. He strolled around the lobby of the Cosmopolitan Hotel, shaking hands with delegates, some of whom received him with enthusiasm, others with surprise.

Thurgood Marshall, general counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, a convention speaker, said that "no Negro is going to vote for any general, not even 'Gen.' Thurgood Marshall," nor for Sen. Taft (R. O.), because "we know where Taft stands."

Murray D. Lincoln, president of the Cooperative League of the U.S.A., of CARE and of the Farm Bureau Insurance Cos., in a speech read by A. G. Mezerik, called for a "new strong alliance" of all people who grow food, process or distribute it, or make the machinery and supplies needed to grow or process it.

GROVER R. Hathaway, Atlanta, Ga., regional director of the union's District 9, in the southeastern states, was elected secretary-treasurer to succeed Lewis J. Clark.

Hathaway defeated Norman Riches, of Moose Jaw, Sask., Canada, by 655.9 votes to 519.1. Clark had held top office in the union for nearly a decade. He served as president from 1943 to 1946, and as secretary-treasurer from 1946 until the election, in which he declined to run again.

Other officers, including Helstein, were re-elected without opposition except in District 9, where A. O. McKinney was named to succeed Hathaway.

Armando Sanchez, UPWA field representative in Cuba, where the union has approximately 44,000 members in the sugar industry, spoke to the convention in Spanish. His description of the plight of the island's sugar workers, and the improvements that have been made since the CIO stepped in there, were translated by David Sternback, CIO representative in Puerto Rico.

R. J. Thomas, CIO assistant director of organization, was the principal speaker at the convention banquet.

'The Battle Of The Sexes'

The most thunderous applause of the CIO Packinghouse Workers Denver convention went not to one of the officers, nor one of the speakers, but to Delegate Mary Parker of Local 400, Boston.

Mrs. Parker won acclaim that bordered on the spectacular when she staunchly defended the men in her local after other women delegates had raked the males over the coals. The ladies thumped the men roundly for what they described as "lip service" to the principle of eliminating wage differentials based on sex.

Strong Anti-Bias Program Voted

A STRONG human rights program, designed to implement more fully an already notably aggressive anti - discrimination policy, was unanimously adopted by the CIO Packinghouse Workers convention.

The more than 600 delegates approved an eight-point plan of operation which recognized "that repressive legislation now handicapping unions cannot be repealed in an atmosphere of terror and violence against the largest minority in America."

It also recognized that "in areas where widespread discrimination against racial minorities exists, the divisive effect upon working people is so great that it is almost impossible to organize and unite workers into unions for their own protection."

The program provides for establishment of an anti-discrimination or human rights committee in each of the 10 UPWA districts, to be responsible for a district-wide program to end discrimination in the union, the plants and the community.

EACH committee will undertake a campaign "to secure justice and safeguard civil rights" in areas where racial violence threatens or civil rights are under attack. They also will initiate in the main packing centers, in cooperation with the UPWA Anti-Discrimination Dept., campaigns for fair employment practices legislation at federal, state and local levels.

In addition, special training will be given members of local anti-discrimination and grievance committees to help in carrying out the program, with the aid of an enlarged UPWA Anti-Discrimination Dept.

The civil rights program adopted by the convention called for passage of FEPC measures and of federal anti-lynching and civil rights bills, with the poll tax and segregation outlawed; repeal of the Taft-Hartley, Smith and McCarran Acts; a defeat of the McCarran-Walter immigration bill and the Cox resolution to investigate education and welfare foundations such as the Rosenwald Foundation; and an end of segregated dressing rooms and other facilities in the plants.

Kill Control Gang Steps Up Attack

THE HOUSE Banking Committee might just as well have been listening to a broken record when spokesmen for big business pressure groups testified before it last week on the question of continuing price controls.

Over and over again the repeated refrain was virtually the same one that industry had used last year:

"Price controls aren't necessary; kill them."

So said Pres. William J. Grede of the National Association of Manufacturers and Chamber of Commerce Vice Pres. Clem D. Johnston, the week's biggest guns of the anti-controls brigade. Their stand was reiterated by all spokesmen for retailers and wholesalers, including representatives of the National Retail Dry Goods, National Retail Furniture and Retail Meat and Food Dealers Associations.

The American Farm Bureau Federation gave them an assist that retail food prices are continuing the steady climb begun in February, going up 1.1% last month.

The Retail Food Index on Apr. 28 was at 230.6% of the 1935-39 average.

On top of this, consumers were threatened with another huge jump in the cost of living by a decision of the Emergency Court of Appeals extending the application of the "terrible" Capehart Amendment to wholesalers and retailers, previously denied its inflationary privileges.

Although its author, Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) had himself declared that he intended it to apply only to manufacturers and processors, the court ruled that its language implied otherwise. It upheld the contention of Safeway Stores, Inc., a big food chain, and gave it the right to boost prices for even greater profits.

PRICE Stabilizer Ellis Arnall called the ruling "far reaching and disastrous to effective price stabilization." He said immediate change of the provision by Congress was "imperative" to prevent a "marked increase" in living costs.

Arnall said the court's ruling requires OPS to grant higher ceilings to the nation's 560,000 retail food stores—now taking $20 billion annually from consumers' pocketbooks—as well as to hundreds of thousands of clothing, furniture and other retailers and wholesalers.

Pointing out that retailers and wholesalers have already had benefits conferred on them by the Herlong Amendment, he declared that "to grant these sellers Capehart adjustments as well would be to give them a double opportunity to obtain increases in ceiling prices." He emphasized its "direct impact on the consumer."

OPS announced that it will be required under the law to increase ceilings soon on a long list of basic items, including frozen foods, cheese, cereals, and canned meats, fruits and vegetables. The hike, ranging from 1c to 7c a package, has no relation to the extension of the Capehart amendment, which will require still another increase, officials said.

Lobbyists Get 'Hot Potato' In Black Market Suit

DEMANDS of the National Potato Council before the House Banking Committee for an end to price controls on potatoes ran into a "hot potato" last week.

Ceilings on potatoes were imposed by OPS last January after their price had jumped 5% over parity. They are now one of the few farm products selling legally right at the peak level.

While NPC Vice Pres. Sol Lavitt was telling the committee that continued price controls on fresh vegetables aren't necessary, OPS filed its first treble damage suit for potato black marketeering in New York and and obtained temporary restraining orders against eight Columbus, O., merchants charged with 200 violations.

These involved overcharges said to total $1100 more than allowed by ceilings.

by making similar demand on the ground that "inflation psychology" has "subsided."

Former Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson, at a meeting of the Commerce Dept's. Business Advisory Council, also added support by declaring that most businessmen now regard controls as a "dead duck."

The fly in all this ointment, however, was that even if its "psychology" had subsided, inflation hasn't.

In pointing to the recent price lull to support their contention that inflationary pressures have ended, the business spokesmen ignored or conveniently overlooked price increases just announced by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Average wholesale prices, stagnant for six weeks, again moved upward in the week ended May 6 to a point 11.3% over the 1947-49 average. At the same time, the BLS revealed

Murray Gets Award From Union Group

CIO PRES. Philip Murray last week was awarded the Quadragesimo Anno Medal of the Association of Catholic Trade Unionists.

Presentation was made at the 15th anniversary communion breakfast of the Catholic union group in New York City.

The medal, an ACTU announcement said, "is awarded each year to the person who has contributed most to the furtherance of the principles contained in the Papal Encyclicals" on social and economic questions.

Because Murray was in Philadelphia for the CIO Steelworkers convention, the award was accepted by Harry Read. Read is executive assistant to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

Read told the ACTU meeting that survival of "collective bargaining in good faith" is the real issue in the six-month-long steel deadlock.

"At no time since talks began last November has the steel industry bargained in good faith," he said. "When we presented demands, instead of receiving a 'yes' or 'no,' the industry gave 'no comment.'"

Other speakers at the breakfast included Rev. John P. Monaghan, ACTU chaplain in New York City, and Martin Dunne, CIO Auto Workers education director in Pennsylvania.

CIO Rail Workers Win Union Shop On Pennsy

By ROY GRANATA

THE CIO Railroad Workers have scored another bargaining victory, winning the first union shop contract for equipment maintenance employes of a major railroad.

The new, system-wide union shop covers 45,000 workers on the Pennsylvania Railroad, the nation's largest.

Agreement on the contract was reached in bargaining sessions at Philadelphia, National Chairman John Green of the URRWA-CIO announced last week. Eugene Attreed was chairman of the negotiating committee.

THE UNION shop pact includes all employes in the labor, molder, boilermaker, carmen and electrician crafts in the Maintenance of Equipment Dept. of the Pennsylvania. These workers maintain and repair the company's rolling stock and construct new passenger and freight cars and locomotives.

Following last year's amendment of the Railway Labor Act to permit union shop agreements on railroads, negotiation proceedings were immediately begun by the URRWA.

Failure to reach an agreement caused the matter to be referred to the National Mediation Board. The board's recommendation that the union shop be incorporated in rail agreements resulted in resumption of negotiations and the recent settlement.

Green said a number of union shop agreements had previously been signed by the URRWA for smaller groups on other railroads, including the New York Central; Pittsburgh & Lake Erie; Donora & Southern; Delaware, Lackawanna & Western; Youngstown & Southern; and New York, New Haven & Hartford.

Wages and working conditions were not under consideration since they are covered in another contract.

Representing the URRWA, with Green and Attreed, were Thomas A. Bloom, system director and secretary of the negotiating committee; Robert Tanis, regional director, western region; E. W. Smith, regional director, central region; C. A. Quigley, regional director, eastern region; John F. McGonagle, national representative; George Green, Jr., Wilmington, Dela.; E. Cavanaugh, Terre Haute, Ind.; M. C. Lococo, Pitcairn, Pa.; and M. F. Bartley, Altoona, Pa.

Pennington, Veteran Of USA, Dies

GEORGE PENNINGTON, for 16 years a popular member of the staff of the United Steelworkers, died May 11, four days after a serious auto crash.

The car in which Pennington was riding with a sister-in-law and a friend, crashed into a trailer truck on the Pennsylvania Turnpike. His companions were injured but will survive.

Pennington, 39, was born at Sugar Creek, Ky. A coal miner, he worked in the mines of "bloody" Harlan County during the 1930's, when the United Mine Workers were organizing the miners in the face of violent opposition from operators and local government.

Employed as an organizer for the UMW, he shifted to the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in 1936. In recent years he had been an international representative for the steel union and had filled assignments in New York, eastern Pennsylvania and other union centers.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Ann Pennington, and by three children—George Jr., 11; Patrick, 9; and Carol 2.

A large number of steel workers attended final rites for Pennington at Darby, Pa., near Philadelphia, during the USA-CIO convention.

WSB Labor Members Hit Stalling

LABOR MEMBERS of the Stabilization Board last week sharply critized industry and public members for failing to write a rule permitting productivity pay increases for all workers.

Declaring that their action in joining with industry and public members in approving productivity agreements signed before January 1951 "should not be interpreted as condoning the policy of procrastination followed by WSB in getting out the long-overdue general policy on productivity" the labor members said they "have had enough of 'interim' action."

"We now have had four 'interim' resolutions dealing with this subject," they said. "We are, and have, for the past year, been ready for the board policy on productivity. We impatiently await the pleasure of our industry and public colleagues in fulfilling the board's obligations in this vital policy matter."

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers hailed the board's action in declaring all annual improvement factor increases paid in 1951 also approved for this year. He said the ruling gives an increase in real wages of better than $80 million yearly for UAW members.

He pointed out that the increase means an actual boost in purchasing power for the union's one million members and their families. Figured at a minimum of 4c per hour, the boost comes to over $80 a year per member.

The board approved all UAW contracts with improvement clauses except a few negotiated after Jan. 25, 1951. Reuther said the union is prepared to "take whatever steps are necessary" to protect the interests of the workers involved in those few cases so that they may receive the increases when they become due.

Reuther said the UAW "joined with the labor members of WSB" in their criticism of the public and industry members for their long delay in processing the cases and for their continued timidity in adopting a general policy covering existing contracts.

"The WSB has acknowledged that since improvement factor increases are based on increased productivity, they are non-inflationary," he said. "With that principle established, the board should adopt a general policy approving all such provisions without further delay."

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE WRITER, along with Sec.-Treas. Richard Leonard, of the Insurance & Allied Workers, the IAWOC-CIO Negotiating Committee and CIO Natl. Rep. Irving Abramson appeared at the offices of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. and signed a contract for the agents in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York City.

Brother Leonard and the Negotiating Committee are to be congratulated for negotiating a fine contract, the best ever written with Metropolitan. The IAWOC plans to continue its drive to bring all insurance agents under the banner of the CIO so that more and better gains can be obtained for all agents.

Chairman John Green, United Railroad Workers, reports a significant victory for the workers in the maintenance of equipment section of the Pennsylvania Railroad. An agreement was signed that established the union shop for the first time on a major railroad.

The pact is systemwide, covering approximately 45,000 workers. The agreement includes workers in the labor, molder, boilermaker, carmen and electrical crafts.

THE CIO Steelworkers are holding their historic convention in Philadelphia. I just returned from the convention, and what a convention! Pres. Phillip Murray is to be commended for the fine manner in which he presented the steel controversy to the delegates. He and his associate officers did a magnificent job in presenting their demands.

The delegates overwhelmingly voiced their support of Pres. Murray and his associates in seeking some immediate action on their just demands and of action to stop steel profiteers from their foul refusal to comply with the decisions arrived at by the tribunal set up by the government.

★

WHILE THE steel issue remains unsettled, the tory, reactionary Howard Smith, Congressman from Virginia, seeks passage of a vicious anti-labor bill that would enable the courts to seize unions under almost any pretext. Mr. Smith has shown in the past, as well as the present, that he is a far cry from the calibre of men representing the Old Dominion State in the past. Washington, Jefferson, Henry and many others have expressed views entirely opposite to his. Thomas Jefferson, in a letter to one William Charles Jarvis in December 1820, expressed the following view on the judiciary:

"You seem to consider the judges as the ultimate arbiters of all constitutional questions; a very dangerous doctrine, indeed, and one which would place us under the despotism of an oligarchy.

"Our judges are as honest as other men, and not more so. They have, with others, the same passions for party, for power, and the privilege of their corps. Their power is the more dangerous as they are in office for life, and not responsible as the other functionaries are, to the elective control.

"The Constitution has erected no such single tribunal, knowing that to whatever hands confided, with the corruption of time and party, its members would become despots. It has more wisely made all the departments co-equal and co-sovereign within themselves."

REG. DIR. CHARLES COWL reports that the CIO Steelworkers won a representation election by a unanimous vote at the American Can Co. warehouse, Auburndale, Fla. Credit for the win goes to Estes Riffe and W. B. Gravatt of the USA-CIO staff.

Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes reports that in a representation election at the Chrysler tank engine plant, New Orleans, La., the total vote overwhelmingly favored the CIO Auto Workers by a tally of 589 to 35 against. Involved was one over-all production unit and five craft unions. UAW won everything except a unit of 16 carpenters.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that in a representation election at the Walters Brewing Co., Pueblo, Colo., among engineers, firemen and maintenance crews, the vote favored the CIO Brewery Workers by a large margin over the AFL. This makes the brewery 100% for CIO.

Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner reports that in a representation election at the Conmar Products Corp., Newark, N. J., the technical employes favored the CIO by a vote of 16 to 4 for no union. CIO Rep. Jack Rosen was in charge of this campaign.

Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett of the IUE-CIO reports the following election victories: National Seating Co., Mansfield, O., IUE-CIO 111, no union 8; Reliance Electric Co., Cleveland and Ashtabula, O., IUE-CIO 1016, no union 157; RCA cafeteria workers, Camden, N. J., IUE-CIO 51, no union 1; Wagner Electric Co., St. Louis, Mo., IUE-CIO 309, no union 15, AFL 76; Richardson-Allen, New York, N. Tobin Fights New Attack On Wage Law

SEC. OF LABOR Maurice J. Tobin squared off last week in defense of the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act against a move by Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.) to kill its protective minimum wage provisions through a rider to the Defense Production Act.

Testifying before the Senate Banking Committee, Tobin said that Fulbright's proposal would keep high-paying industries from getting government contracts and tend to lower wage rates generally. Under it, he said, the government would have to award contracts "to the lowest paying communities in the United States."

CIO representatives are scheduled to testify against the amendment on May 19, following a protest lodged with the committee last week by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

In a letter to Chairman Maybank (D., S. C.), Carey said that members of CIO unions "will suffer substantial loss in both wages and in employment if the Walsh-Healey Public Contract Act is in effect repealed by the Fulbright amendments." He questioned the committee's jurisdiction in view of the Reorganization Act provision assigning exclusive jurisdiction over labor legislation to the Senate Labor Committee.

MAYBANK agreed to let the committee vote the first thing at its next meeting on a motion by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) to transfer the amendmends to the Labor Committee.

The Walsh-Healey Act, passed in 1936, prohibits convict labor, exploitation of children and sets health and safety standards for work on U. S. government contracts amounting to more than $10,000. It also requires the Secretary of Labor to determine the prevailing minimum wage in a particular industry and then to fix that amount as the lowest rate to be paid to labor employed on these contracts.

Fulbright's amendment would require the Labor Dept. to determine prevailing minimum for an industry in each locality, instead of on a nationwide basis. It would thus nullify the clear intent of the act by giving competitive advantages to the worst sweatshop operators and even to fly-by-night concerns created just to grab fat government contracts.

Copper Tieup Ends In Chile

CHILEAN ore miners last week ended a two-week strike against two big copper mines owned by the U. S. Anaconda Copper Co.

With intervention of Pres. Gabriel Gonzales Videla, the 12,500 members of the Confederation of Copper Miners of Chile got a wage increase of about 27c a day and an increase in family benefits of $2.34 monthly.

The Chilean president's intervention had been suggested by Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee and president of the Clothing Workers.

Labor Overseas—

Phony 'Christian Unions' In Germany Exposed

THE EXECUTIVE board of the Intl. Federation of Christian Trade Unions at a recent meeting in Paris disclaimed any connection with the extreme right wing union movement in Germany calling itself the Confederation of Christian Trade Unions.

Some German union members and leaders have described the so-called Christian movement in their country as the spearhead of a campaign for company unions masquerading under a legitimate name.

The IFCTU executive board recalled that last July it had referred to certain groupings in Germany "which pretend to be the successors to the Christian trade union organizations which were dissolved by the Nazis."

Only two German labor groups are affiliated to the IFCTU, both through its associated body, the Intl. Federation of Christian Unions of Salaried Employes. These are the German Union of Salaried Employes (DHV) and the Union of Women Office Workers (VWA).

NO OTHER German organizations have established links with the IFCTU or can claim to be supported by it, the executive board said. It added:

"The executive board points out once more that the restoration of the Christian trade union movement in Germany is a decision of extreme importance which lies with the German Christian workers and their leaders in the first place.

"The executive board regrets certain fictitious reports which have been spread in German trade union circles with regard to the IFCTU's activities in Western Germany; it points out that these reports have done a bad service to the cause of trade unions."

MANY AMERICAN workers have been wondering if the money the U. S. has spent to increase production in other countries has actually boosted the amount of goods available—for either civilian or military consumption.

Evidence that it has been well spent in at least some cases is offered in stories coming from Europe.

In Austria, for instance, the U.S.A.-aided Farm Youth organization and 4-H Clubs—the latter modeled after their U. S. counterpart—have increased production of some crops so impressively that they have converted their traditionally conservative elders. Figures on last year's production shows that in hybrid corn and a superior quality alfalfa their harvests were 50% above the national average.

In England, the Mutual Security Agency provided $2 million worth of machine tools to the Rolls Royce and De Haviland motor plants. Production jumped 125% at the former and 60% at the latter. Between them they are now turning out an additional $60 million worth of jet engines a year.

The MSA provided $15,000 worth of American radio tubes that enabled Norway to make 5000 walkie-talkie radio sets for its armed forces. The finished products are worth $500,000. Five thousand similar radios made in the U. S. would have cost from $1 to $3 million to import.

Authorization of a $3.4 million investment in a power plant in the highly industrialized North Brabant section of the Netherlands in 1949 is paying off in defense production now, though but half the facilities are installed.

Despite the improvement in production, the problem of getting the workers a share in the increased income still remains. It is one in which MSA officials are increasingly interesting themselves thanks to the prodding of the CIO and other Americans who are convinced that Europeans must have something to defend before they will go to war, if necessary, to defend it. —G. McCarthy's $10,000 Lustron Deal Told

THE KING of Swat, as Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) has come to be called for his indiscriminate smearing, got swatted back last week.

Public opinion, which McCarthy had so long ignored, swung even more sharply against the Wisconsin senator as the result of facts brought out in testimony before the Senate Elections subcommittee on the first of 10 charges of Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) asking his expulsion from the Senate.

The committee heard lengthy testimony on McCarthy's dealings with Lustron Corp., a government financed prefabricated housing outfit, at a time that he was a member of the Senate Banking Committee (which was investigating the RFC's deals with Lustron) and was acting chairman of a joint congressional housing committee.

Highlights of the testimony:

1. McCarthy was in debt to an Appleton, Wis., bank for $72,943.96 when he received $10,000 from the Lustron Corp. in 1948 for a pamphlet on housing. Bank examiners called it a "weak loan" and McCarthy was under pressure for payment in lieu of foreclosure.

2. As part of his $58,869 worth of collateral on this loan, McCarthy put up $23,452 of the assets of Ray Kiermas, one of his employes. Committee Counsel John P. Moore pointed out that use of Kiermas' assets was "a thing of value" and suggested that the committee decide if this violated the Federal kickback laws.

3. McCarthy tried to manipulate reports on the $10,000 Lustron payment and his own payments on his loan to escape federal income tax obligations. The Internal Revenue Bureau refused to let him save $3975 by listing as 1949 income the $10,000 received in 1948.

4. Actually, the $10,000 McCarthy received came from the pockets of American taxpayers. Lustron went bankrupt in 1950 after receiving $37½ million in RFC loans, and it was losing more than $½ million monthly at the time of the McCarthy check, testimony disclosed.

5. Despite McCarthy's assertion that Lustron made $46,000 on the sale of the book, questioning of the corporation's former president by Sen. Monroney (D. Okla.) brought out that the firm lost at least $11,497 on the deal.

The story of the McCarthy-Lustron payment was first disclosed in The CIO News in June, 1950. Leo Goodman, secretary of the CIO National Housing Committee, then charged that the pamphlet McCarthy sold as his was largely prepared by the press section of the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

Benton declared that McCarthy "violated the most elementary code of conduct" in accepting $10,000 from Lustron. Carl Strandlund, former head of Lustron, said that he was "sure" that the proposal for the deal had come from McCarthy.

The McCarthy manuscript was published in a 96-page pamphlet which sold for 35c. McCarthy's contribution, however, was only 37 pages long. The $10,000 he received, Sen. Monroney pointed out, amounted to 70c a word.

Although McCarthy was invited to appear before the committee and present his side of the case, he announced that he will boycott all hearings. He has been issuing a series of letters denouncing the subcommittee for its investigation and charging that it is carrying out the work of the Communist Party.

Chairman Gillette (D. Ia.) opened the hearings by declaring this action "regrettable." He said that despite McCarthy's charges against the committee, it "is going to go ahead and do its duty."

THE SENATE recently gave the group a unanimous vote of confidence after McCarthy had earlier leveled similar charges against it.

Although the Wisconsin Senator-author was getting more attention for his booklet published as a housing expert, McCarthy last week was happier to pose as a military authority and Far Eastern expert.

A group of 150 sixth-grade children from Wisconsin visiting Washington on a sightseeing trip were interrupted by McCarthy when they were having lunch in the Supreme Court Building. He lugged in a box of books and gave them each an autographed copy of his recent outburst, "The Story of General George Marshall."

Phone Union Wins Tieup In West Virginia

"PUSHING AROUND" telephone workers doesn't pay, the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. of West Virginia decided last week.

After a month-long strike by 2500 members of the CIO Communications Workers, the Bell System subsidiary agreed to end petty tyranny, unjustified firings and stallings on grievances.

A strike-settlement contract, with provisions that grievances will be handled "promptly and in good faith," was agreed to by C & P management and ratified by a big majority of the West Virginia phone workers.

Glenn E. Watts, CWA District 2 director, said the union had won its "basic objective" of stronger grievance machinery.

"We are convinced," he said, "that the company will think twice before again pushing our members around, using arbitrary and unreasonable supervisory practices and indulging in coercive and unreasonable tactics."

The strike began Apr. 7 when C & P fired a woman operator for petty reasons, accusing her of making a personal phone call. Under the settlement, she got a termination allowance.

Watts praised the determination of the West Virginia CWA strikers, saying: "it was their battle. They fought it through to a finish. They won the victory."

CIO Again Protests McCarran Bill

WARNING against "precipitate action" in a matter "affecting the welfare and future happiness of millions of citizens and future citizens," the CIO last week again called upon the Senate to send the McCarran-Walter Immigration Bill back to committee for adequate hearings.

Nathan E. Cowan, director of the CIO Legislative Dept., made the request in a letter to each Senator. He said the CIO was "greatly concerned" over the present move to railroad the bill.

"The CIO objects strongly to provisions of the McCarran-Walter Bill which perpetuate racial discrimination, create many unreasonable and unnecessary new grounds for exclusion, deportation and loss of citizenship, and emasculate judicial review while authorizing arbitrary administrative practices," Cowan wrote.

He pointed out that the CIO, "which has a deep interest in immigration matters," has been denied an opportunity to testify on the measure before the drafting committees of either house.

"In these crucial times when the attitudes of this nation toward persons of foreign birth take on new significance in view of their implications and effects in the cold war, the responsibility of Congress to exercise caution and judgment in its action on immigration and naturalization matters is obvious," Cowan declared.

Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) opened debate, however, by attacking his opponents.

ALTHOUGH his bill is being lobbied for by Allen Zoll and other native fascists and former Nazi sympathizers, McCarran tried to hoodwink the Senate into thinking that "subversive organizations" are trying to "sabotage" it. He charged that criticisms of his measure originated with the Communists.

Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) called this a "dastardly" attempt to impugn the loyalty and patriotism of the 13 Senators who are supporting the rival Humphrey-Lehman Bill which McCarran, as chairman, has kept buried in his Judiciary Committee without a hearing.

McCarran later accused his opponents, who have introduced about 200 amendments, of filibustering. Lehman answered that he and his associates "hate a filibuster" and wouldn't engage in one.

"But we are going to insist on sufficient time to present our case to the Senate and to the American people," he said.

Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) added that the immigration bill is the worst "by a wide margin" in his experience in the Senate and that if more Senators had read it "there would be a thousand amendments" instead of the present total.

Sneak Move To Knife Fair Wage Law Fails After CIO Protest

STORIES OF DISTRESS in the men's clothing industry are told by officers and rank-and-file members of the CIO Clothing Workers. They told a Surplus Manpower Committee panel that there is more unemployment in the industry than any time since 1938 because of defense contract policies. From left: ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky; Harvey Vernon, Eldon, Mo.; ACWA Vice Pres. Gladys Dickason; Edward Gursky, St. Clair, Pa. Vernon and Gursky related the hardship faced by jobless workers in their communities. (See Page 2.)

ACW Demands U.S. Aid Jobless

PRES. JACOB S. POTOFSKY of the CIO Clothing Workers last week told a Surplus Manpower Committee panel how to cure the "paradox" of widespread unemployment in the men's clothing industry amidst a prosperous defense economy.

It is the committee's job to recommend steps to remedy the industry's unemployment crisis.

Potofsky said that unemployment in the industry is the greatest since 1938. He called for:

- Declaring the entire industry a "distressed industry."
- Creating a committee composed of representatives of three government agencies — Labor, Commerce and the Army Quartermaster General's office—and of labor and management.
- Placing government contracts for clothing with firms making civilian apparel instead of with firms "outside the industry," as has often been the case.
- Awarding contracts on a negotiated basis—instead of to the lowest bidder—in areas where experienced manpower and facilities are available.
- Letting pants and coat contracts to the same manufacturer with a consequent saving in fabric.

Potofsky struck hard at Defense Dept. contract awards to low bidders who were "often chislers and fly-by-nights."

He said that bids often were awarded to firms with insufficient capacity to produce the garments. These outfits, Potofsky said, "farmed out the bids and were interested only in getting the rake-off."

"In the long run," he said, "it is cheaper to give the contracts to responsible bidders."

In arguing for the awarding of bids on a negotiated basis, Potofsky said that the Army Quartermaster follows that procedure in contracts for airplanes and food.

The Amalgamated's case was buttressed by facts and figures presented by Miss Gladys Dickason, the union's vice president and research director, and by the stories of the blighted areas as told by two ACWA members.

MISS Dickasen said average employment in the men's and boys' suit and coat branch of the industry declined from 15 to 25% in the first quarter of this year compared to the same quarter in 1951. There was a decline of 12.5% in dress shirt industry jobs.

Edward Gursky, St. Clair, Pa., who was thrown out of work when the Pottsville shirt factory was closed, pleaded with the panel to send "a little more work to the people out our way." He said that none of the 65 shirt shops in Central Pennsylvania area had been able to get any contracts for Army shirts.

Gursky, who is a cutter, was able—after three idle months—to get a job in another shirt factory 33 miles from his home, but he said that most of the 450 who lost their jobs when the Pottsville plant closed were not so fortunate.

A similar story of unemployed skilled workers was told by Harvey Vernon, Eldon, Mo., pants factory employe, who said that because his factory was unsuccessful in getting Army contracts, 60 of the 200 workers were laid off.

DON'T BUY STRUCK WORK!—Striking CIO Furniture Workers picket the High Point, N. C., furniture show to protest against scrab-built goods. They came from Thomasville Chair Co., where 1500 UFWA members have been out since Mar. 13, and from Elkin Furniture Co. whose 145 employes have been out for four months. UFWA asks that contributions be sent to the Thomasville Strike Relief Fund, 101 Fifth Ave., New York 3. Now the buyers can't plead ignorance.

CIO Supports Veto Due On Oil Lands Bill

THE CIO has called upon all of its affiliates to immediately write Congressmen and Senators urging them to uphold President Truman's expected veto of the "States' rights" tidelands oil bill.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, and Nathan E. Cowan, director of the CIO Legislative Dept., joined in making the request last week.

Calling the measure "robbery in broad daylight—and on a colossal scale," the President made his intentions known in his address to the Americans for Democratic Action convention. He successfully vetoed a similar measure in 1947.

The bill, approved by both houses and waiting the President's action, would give the seacoast states title to submerged lands off their coasts, including the rich oil deposits and other natural resources.

The President told ADA that the Supreme Court has "affirmed and reaffirmed" that the wealth that lies off the coasts of the country belong to the Federal Government—"that is, to all the people of this country."

"If we back down now on our determination to hold these rights for the people we will act to rob them of this great national asset," Truman said. "This is just what the oil lobby wants. They want us to turn that vast treasure over to a handful of states, where the powerful private oil interests hope to exploit it to suit themselves."

"As far as I am concerned," he said, "I intend to stand up and fight to protect the people's interest in this matter."

The Senate vote on passage of the bill was 50 to 35, or 7 votes short of the two-thirds majority needed to override a Presidential veto.

Allis-Chalmers Strike Backed

Six locals of the CIO Auto Workers, representing workers at Allis-Chalmers plants throughout the country, have condemned the strike breaking tactics of AFL craft unions at the Terre Haute, Ind., plant of the company.

Clyde Wheatfill, president of UAW local 1164 at Terre Haute, charged members of the AFL Teamsters and building trades unions have failed to respect UAW picket lines during the strike, which began May 7.

The UAW Allis-Chalmers Intra-Corporation Council has asked support of all CIO locals and councils in seeking to stop the AFL scabbing.

'Keep WSB With Present Powers,' Childs Tells House

A TRIPARTITE board with disputes authority is "absolutely necessary" to the success of the wage stabilization program, Joseph W. Childs, CIO member of the Wage Stabilization Board, told the House Labor Committee last week.

"That's the kind of a board we have now and that's the kind of a board we should continue to have," he said, "if we are really interested in fighting inflation and maintaining industrial peace during the current mobilization periods."

Childs, vice president of the CIO Rubber Workers, testified during the House committee's investigation into the WSB's handling of the steel dispute and its recommendation of a union shop for the CIO Steelworkers.

Childs derided some of the testimony former Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson gave the committee. Wilson, calling WSB public members biased in favor of labor, suggested a board of public member only chosen from among "businessmen" or those with "business contacts" rather than experienced arbitrators.

"I might suggest that if we are to adopt this approach," Childs said, "we need go no further than the present WSB for our six 'businessmen' public members.

"The industry members of the present board represent as good a cross-section of American business as any group I know. But they hardly qualify as impartial representatives of the general public . . .

"Now, I may be somewhat dense when it comes to throwing around words, but all this suggestion adds up to, as far as I am concerned, is a Wage Stabilization Board composed only of industry representatives.

"I wonder whether anyone would seriously expect workers to accept the recommendations of any such board or any other kind of all-public board."

Childs recalled that the WSB was set up on May 8, 1951. From that date through February 1952, he went on, 11,820 labor disputes were referred to the U. S. Mediation and Conciliation Service. During the same period, the WSB got but 34 disputes under its "very limited" authority over them, 22 of these voluntarily. Only 21 were actually handled.

"EVERY one of these cases (which came before the board) was considered a threat to the defense program" he said.

"Every one contained economic issues which could be settled only subject to the regulations and policies of the Wage Stabilization Board. Every case involved differences of opinion among the parties as to what increases in wages or fringe benefits were permissible under WSB policies.

"Obviously, the only agency which is in a position to make recommendations in these cases which are fair and equitable and, at the same time, rule as to their permissibility under regulations and policies of the Wage Stabilization Board is the board itself."

Childs also defended public members of the WSB against charges they are "labor-orientated." They vote with industry as often as labor, he said.

Vice Pres. Elmer E. Walker of the AFL Machinists, another WSB labor member, told the committee that current "vile and slanderous" attacks on the board are only a "cover-up" for the National Association of Manufacturers' goal of destroying unions.

Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin suggested to the Senate subcommittee on Labor - Management Relations considering the Morse bill that Congress not act now on a comprehensive bill dealing with labor disputes of a national emergency nature. A better bill can be passed when current political tensions die down, he said.

Perrone, Pals Fined $4000 In Anti-Union Conspiracy

A DETROIT recorders court judge has written finis to the union-busting history of the Detroit-Michigan Stove Co.

Judge Joseph A. Gillis wound up the smelly affair exposed by the CIO Auto Workers before the Kefauver Crime Investigating Committee last year by fining five gangsters a total of $4000.

Santo (Sam) Perrone, his brother-in-law, Augustine Orlando, and Nono Minaudo were fined the maximum $1000 each, and Willie Warford and Harry (Papa Dee) Johnson $500 each. All were put on probation for two years.

The judge noted that the company "had somehow" escaped prosecution for its part in the hiring of the thugs to break up UAW organizing drives by campaigns of terrorism.

The five pleaded guilty to three counts: interfering with the formation of a labor union, conspiracy to bribe employes and interfering with workers in their employment, including threats.

The Kefauver hearings brought out the fact that back in 1934, the company brought in Santo and a group of thugs to break a strike by starting trouble on the picket line.

The strike was short and bloody and it was lost. Perrone came out of it with a contract to handle all the firm's scrap metal and another to do its hauling.

The UAW claims that as late as 1946, a "master plan" was available to paralyze unions in Detroit.

Executed by Perrone and his father-in-law, Carl Renda, the formula was designed to "pick off" the top leaders of the union and then attempt to corrupt the secondary leadership.

The union has since organized the plant.

CIO Defeats Sneak Play To Help Runaway Shops

A SNEAK MOVE by big business to nullify the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act and also to turn it into a protective device for runaway shops was defeated by CIO action last week.

The victory came in the form of an 8 to 5 decision by the Senate Banking Committee to reject the first of three Walsh-Healey amendments sponsored by Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.) as riders to the Defense Production Act. The rejection followed vigorous CIO testimony against all three proposals.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and six other spokesmen for CIO international unions told the committee that adoption of the amendments would threaten American wage standards and bring back a widespread return to sweatshop conditions.

The amendments were part of a big business plot to kill the Walsh-Healy Act "by indirection and subterfuge," Carey and the other CIO spokesman charged.

An identical viewpoint was expressed by the AFL. Both CIO and AFL were limited to one day of testimony, and even this would not have been granted if Carey had not earlier protested the committee's intention to railroad the amendments through after limiting CIO testimony to one witness.

Before hearing CIO spokesmen, the committee turned down by a 7 to 6 vote a motion by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) to refer the Fulbright Amendments to the Senate Labor Committee. Voting "wrong" against referral were Sens. Fulbright (D. Ark.), Robertson (D. Va.), Frear (D. Del.), Bricker (R. O.), Schoeppel (R. Kans.), Maybank (D. S. C.) and Dirksen (R. Ill.).

CIO protested against consideration of the amendments by the Banking Committee on grounds that it lacked adequate jurisdiction.

"The impact of the Walsh-Healey Act upon wage and price stabilization is extremely minor and remote, and the claim that it does have a serious impact on wage and price stabilization is nothing but a subterfuge intended to prevent full consideration of the matter by the committee best qualified to examine it," Carey said.

GRIMNESS OF THE FIGHT to prevent knifing of Walsh-Healey Act is reflected in the faces (l. to r.) of Nat Weinberg, CIO Auto Workers research director, Paul Sifton, UAW legislative representative, and Vice Pres. Gladys Dickason of CIO Textile Workers, at Senate Banking Committee hearing.

He pointed out that the Legislative Reorganization Act gives the Labor Committee jurisdiction over "all" proposed legislation dealing with labor, wages and hours, child labor and labor standards, and that the Walsh-Healey Act, which deals with these matters in government contracts, has been in effect for 16 years.

"The proposed amendments literally cut the heart out of the Act and nullify its purposes," Carey said. "If that is the desire of Congress, it should at least be effectuated in a direct and forthright fashion by regular procedures rather than by the kangeroo fashion in which these amendments are being rushed through."

CAREY charged the amendments would "achieve the intent of a Chamber of Commerce blitz against the measure" and that arguments supporting them "are nothing more than a front for the unrestrained greed of big business which sells in the national market, but wants to buy its labor in the cheapest market it can find."

After hearing testimony, the committee killed the most dangerous of Fulbright's proposals which would have required the determination of prevailing wage standards on the minimum in a "city, town, village or other civil subdivision" instead of on the present industrywide or area-wide basis. CIO warned that this alone would completely "nullify" the Walsh-Healey Act.

Sens. Fulbright, Robertson, Schoeppel, Bricker and Dirksen were the only committee members holding firm to their support of this proposal on the final ballot.

SERIOUS damage to the Public Contracts Act is still threatened, however, by the committee's approval of two other Fulbright amendments which would (1) exempt from coverage products of a standard type sold on the open market and (2) cripple administration of the act by permitting individual appeals against "all orders, determinations, rules and interpretations."

Paul Sifton, CIO Auto Workers legislative representative, told the committee that the Fulbright proposals were a move to "hitch amendments making permanent change in labor legislation onto an emergency bill extending temporary economic controls." His statement was borne out when the committee rejected 7 to 6 a motion by Douglas that would have limited the effect of the amendments to the life of the Defense Production Act.

TWUA Tightens Lines To Defeat AFL Attack

THE CIO Textile Workers last week were drawing tight battle lines to beat off an attempted membership raid by the United Textile Workers, AFL.

Pledged full CIO support by Pres. Philip Murray, TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve prepared to go all-out in combatting secession moves wherever they developed.

He predicted that more than 90% of the union's 400,000 members would reject an effort by George Baldanzi to lead them into the AFL. Baldanzi, former TWUA executive vice president, was named organizational director for the AFL union last week.

"The record and history of our union will be the prevailing factor in smashing the bare-faced attempt of Baldanzi to destroy the first successful union in the textile inudstry," Rieve said.

"By the same token," he added, "the reputation and record of the AFL Textile Workers is so bad that the addition of a group of unsuccessful and disgruntled job-seekers will not make it any more palatable to textile workers—organized or unorganized."

He said that a survey, conducted on a regional basis, showed the following:

In the New England states of Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont not a single secession movement has taken place. In Massachusetts and Rhode Island only two trouble spots have developed.

At Paterson, N. J., a major center of the textile industry, officers of 10 TWUA dyers' locals voted unanimously to stay with CIO and to condemn any move to the AFL. They pledged full support "in this fight for the preservation of our TWUA-CIO."

CHARLES LAZZIO, head of Local 1733, and a Baldanzi supporter at the recent TWUA convention, said the attempted AFL split threatens forthcoming wage negotiations and past benefits "which our CIO union has won for us."

Rieve said the upper South—Virginia, West Virginia and Maryland—remain intact with the exception of a lone local at Danville,

In North Carolina, locals representing fewer than 7000 members have moved to secede. Six locals, however, have reported votes of confidence in TWUA and others are expected to follow. No action has been taken in South Carolina to date, Rieve said.

The only Canadian unit considering breaking away is the Hamiliton, Ontario, joint board.

WSB Rejects One Pact For Borg-Warner

MORE THAN six months after the CIO Auto Workers held a three-week strike to back their demands for a company-wide contract with Borg-Warner, the Wage Stabilization Board last week ruled it had no authority to order bargaining for such an agreement.

The labor members of WSB dissented, but the public and industry members joined in saying that such a board recommendation as UAW sought would be "inconsistent" with the Taft-Hartley Act.

UAW members at 10 Borg-Warner plants in Illinois, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio and Tennessee struck last October to back their demand for a single contract. The company insisted on continuing negotiations on a plant-by-plant basis.

GE Shakes Fist And Keens Loudly On Union Shop

THE GENERAL Electric Co. has been shaking an iron fist in Uncle Sam's face again, threatening him with all sorts of dire things if the unions insist on a union shop in its Lockland, O., jet engine plant.

The threat came in the form of full-page newspaper advertisements, semi-hysterical in tone, announcing it will take a strike rather than grant the CIO Auto Workers and the AFL Machinists the union shop they are seeking.

In spite of the company's loud protest about "compulsory unionism," the U. S. Mediation & Conciliation Service is still trying to bring about a settlement.

The implication of the ad, of course, is that the Conciliation Service is going to force the union shop on the company. How it would do this is a bit puzzling, as it has no authority to impose anything on anyone.

THE GE newspaper screams were echoed before a four-man Conciliation Service team by L. R. Boulware, vice president in charge of industrial relations.

"We are not here," he bawled, "to make a deal that will bargain our employes into compulsory unionism. We will take a strike rather than grant a union shop."

The newspaper ad professes a greater concern for GE employes than the employes themselves have ever been able to notice in actual practice. GE believes, said the ad, that "every employe should have the right to decide for himself" whether or not he should join a union or pay dues.

THE UAW represents production and maintenance employes at the plant in Lockland, which is near Cincinnati, and the Machinists bargain for craft employes. Representation rights were won in the fall of 1949, and the current negotiations are for the second renewal contract.

General Electric might have been able to stir up a little more sympathy for its position were it not for the fact that in the General Motors' Allison jet engine plant in Indianapolis, Ind., a little more than 100 miles away, the UAW-CIO has a union shop agreement.

Another thing that might have helped would be comparable wage rates in the two plants. The Indianapolis workers average about 15c an hour more than those in Lockland.

The ad quotes the "liberal and venerable" late Supreme Court Justice Brandeis as saying that "the ideal condition is for a union to be strong and stable, and yet to have in the trade outside its own ranks an appreciable number of men who are non-unionists."

What the ad doesn't say is that Justice Brandeis made the observation in 1905—nearly 50 years ago.

It also doesn't say that six years later, in 1911, when he was serving as an arbitrator in the garment industry, he recommended a union shop for the workers.

Disruption In Textile

No group of workers in the United States is faced with more difficult problems—economic problems and organizational problems—than the hundreds of thousands of men and women in the textile industry.

Low wages, insecurity—and, in parts of the South, anti-union violence—have been the lot of most textile employes for many years. In southern textiles, American labor has had its best chance to see how Taft-Hartley is a tailor-made weapon for smashing unions or preventing their organization.

Through the years, the CIO Textile Workers Union under the leadership of Pres. Emil Rieve has made steady progress against the anti-social employers who dominate a large section of the industry. It has been clear to every observer that the CIO offers the greatest hope to the textile workers for freedom from chaos, from exploitation and from deprivation of democratic rights.

Now a defeated officer of the TWUA, George Baldanzi, has deserted his union and made a deal with the unsavory leadership of the United Textile Workers. He has made great claims of a mass walkout from the CIO union—claims that we doubt will stand much testing.

As CIO Pres. Murray has pointed out, the TWUA solved its internal problems democratically, in a secret ballot conducted by the Honest Ballot Association at the recent TWUA convention. The disruptive dual-union activities of Baldanzi and his cohorts will be fought by the CIO at every step. Most textile workers know, and others will soon find out, that the AFL union can offer them nothing but 'deals and disillusion.'

Textile workers will know that their lasting victories will come only under the banner of the CIO, and through the Textile Workers Union of America.

The Sweatshop Drive

For some 16 years the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act, which brought an end to sweatshops on a national scale by requiring minimum wage and working standards for work done under government contracts, has been the unchallenged law of the land.

Because it protects decent employers from cut-throat competition, it has had the general support of most fair-minded businessmen as well as labor.

The present assaults upon the act by Big Business are stemming from greedy monopoly interests rather than from most businessmen. The attempt by Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.) to kill the act by subterfuge is nothing more than a move to promote the runaway shop movement still further at the nation's expense.

Big corporations who have just had billions of dollars in new plants, largely paid for by American taxpayers, handed to them as part of the mobilization program, now seek to use those plants to wreck the wage structure of the country, and take even greater profits from their fat government contracts. They would freeze out all small business in doing so.

The Senate should throw out of the Defense Production Act the two damaging Walsh-Healey provisions which remain. Provisions making a permanent change in our labor laws have no place in temporary, emergency legislation.

The Power Of Ideas

The United States has a unique opportunity to stop Russian designs by exporting democratic ideals to the Middle East and Asia, Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas told the CIO Clothing Workers recent convention. Excerpts from his speech follow:

THE BATTLE for Asia is at the political level, and in that sense, I think we in America have misinterpreted the signs of the times.

So much depends on our own attitudes. We have to date gone to the world largely with the great wealth of America, billions upon billions of dollars and with the great military strength of America.

We have placed our reliance primarily upon guns and upon dollars, and, it is my deep conviction that Asia, the peoples of Asia must be won, if they are won, with ideas. What ideas? The same kind of ideas that the Amalgamated Clothing Workers stand for . . .

If you practice in your union racial discrimination, if you do not believe that a man is entitled to the same opportunities, whatever his race, whatever his creed—when you turn to the colored people of Asia, you will be confused and in trouble, because you who are not able to recognize equality at home will not be able to recognize equality abroad . . .

The most powerful things in the world are ideas, more powerful than all the atomic bombs, all of the big guns, all of the airplanes.

The most powerful things in the world are ideas. They are the most dangerous things in the world, too. What is this hold that communism has on people? Most of these things are ideas, and rather shabby ideas, borrowed from the West.

What is the great powerful thing of which we are proud in America? What is it that you represent of which you are proud? It is the standards of the Christian faith, the standards of democracy and brotherhood that have come down to us in the channels of literature and religion? These are the things that make America great and strong.

It is our Declaration of Independence, it is our Constitution, it is our Bill of Rights. These are the things, ladies and gentlemen, not our television sets, not our motor cars, not our buildings and paved streets, because when the atomic dust settles, if it ever does, we will still have the ideas of brotherhood and freedom and justice and we will go on from there and not turn back . . .

What was it that begot communism in Russia? Feudalism. It is feudalism that is feeding the fires of communism in the Middle East and Asia.

When I say feudalism, I mean a system of economic organization whereby a few men own the wealth of the country, where a few men run the politics of the country and where you have a government of the landlords, by the landlords and for the landlords . . .

We do not have that in America. We have in America a broad base for participation in all affairs of everyone.

I do not think we have any idea of the extent to which the feudal system has fastened itself upon that part of the world (Asia and the Middle East). It is about the way Europe was before 1018. I met men out there who owned farming land greater in acreage than all of Switzerland. One man owned 1600 villages lock, stock and barrel.

GO TO THESE villages with your Point Four program and increase the production of the land and if it takes 95%, what have you gained in the struggle against communism? . . .

Those who know the Middle East and Asia are filled with great concern to hear people talk glibly in Washington, in New York and other places where plans are being formulated about industrializing that part of the world. It cannot be done quickly.

It cannot be done in the typical American way of doing things. It must be slow. One of the things that must be imported along with capital and the kind of skills that you people have is the organization of unions for the protection of the rights of labor.

What the Middle East and Asia need is union know-how.

There are some union men out there. They need more working men. I hope that some day this great union will have many out there, showing the peoples of Asia and the Middle East the democratic way of organizing.

'Big Steal Is No Substitute For The Fair Deal'

"THE BIG STEAL is no substitute for a Fair Deal."

That's what the CIO Political Action Committee says in a new pamphlet titled "Corruption," latest of the "'52 Facts" series on issues in the presidential campaign.

"Graft in the government, generally speaking, results from the impact of ordinary business morals upon a weak or corrupt official," the PAC pamphlet points out.

And, with a look at the corruption-ridden records of the Republican-big business domination of the federal government in the Harding-Coolidge-Hoover era, the booklet warns:

"The worst thing that could happen to the American people would be an administration under which power could again be seized by businessmen.

"The big stealers are still with us."

The answer to the question of corruption in government—as with the answer to the questions of stopping inflation, protecting civil liberties and enacting fair labor laws in place of Taft-Hartley—rests with the people, the pamphlet says, in "millions of voters determined to insist on reforms."

Corruption has a bi-partisan label, says the PAC booklet. Congressmen of both parties, it points out, "regularly wangle favors for businessmen and well-to-do voters back home" while defeated congressmen "set themselves up as high-priced lobbyists and use their former associations to wangle favors for clients."

The tradition that "petty crooks are usually caught and punished" while "big crooks, smart enough to operate legally, go free" hasn't changed.

"Get a high tariff passed to keep out foreign goods and force your fellow citizens to pay higher prices for your goods," the PAC pamphlet says, "and that is 'smart business.'

"But let an RFC examiner take a 13-pound ham from a prospective borrower and he is hounded by many of the same congressmen who vote for high tariffs and sock-the-poor tax laws."

PAC reports "the vast majority of government officials are honest and faithful" and those who aren't should be fired and tried.

So should those who offer "deals" and bribes, since "you can't have a corruptionist in government without someone outside paying money to corrupt him. The briber is the man who begins the chain of events that leads to corruption of public office. Any campaign against corruption must start with a campaign against the corrupters."

The fact that corruption in government begins with corruption by business—which is just practicing its proclaimed "dog-eat-dog" method of operations—is demonstrated by the "corruption on a massive scale" by Harding and the Ohio Gang.

There was Albert B. Fall, Harding's Secretary of Interior. He took a $304,000 bribe for Navy oil reserve leases at Teapot Dome from Harry Sinclair. Both of 'em landed in jail.

Then there was the Elks Hill case: another bribe of $100,000 to Fall from Edward L. Doheney for California Navy oil reserves.

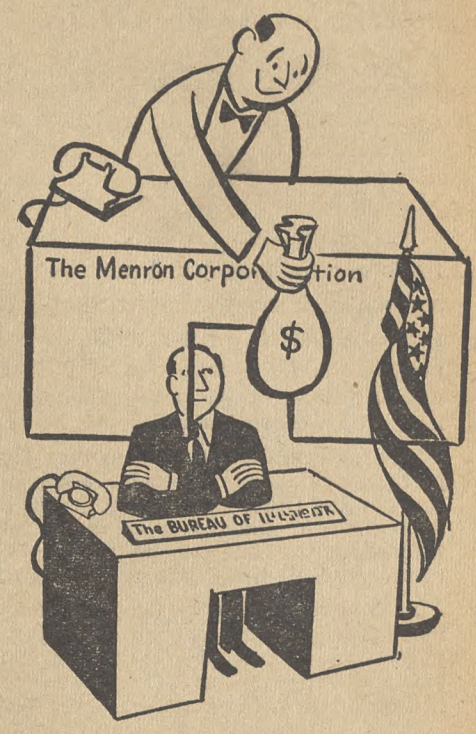
The Republican party "got part of the swag" of this wholesale looting; Sinclair gave the G.O.P. $260,000 in bonds.

The Justice Dept. under Harding was known as the Dept. of Easy Virtue. Atty. Gen. Daugherty was indicted, and so was the alien property custodian, in a $224,000 bribery case, while the grafting head of the Veterans Bureau, Charles R. Forbes, "held his job for less than two years before running away to Europe."

Andy Mellon, Harding's Secretary of the Treasury, "corrupted the Bureau of Internal Revenue as is was never corrupted before or since," the PAC report says.

Both Mellon and Daugherty tried to silence critical Senators—Walsh, Wheeler, LaFollette and Couzens—by sending FBI agents to shadow them, and rigging up indictments which quickly collapsed.

What happened under Harding, PAC points out, reflected "the business climate of the 1920s (which) allowed the robber barons to steal from anybody—the government or their own stockholders—and if the steal was big enough everything was all right."



And "the business climate" of the 1950s is not much different—as indicated by the tidelands oil steal just voted by Congress, the "millionaire's tax amendment," rate robbery by private utilities, bilking of consumers, insurance company bribery and defrauding of the government by war contractors.

"Put the interests in power again and they will steal the people blind," the PAC booklet concludes.

"The voters can make sure the country is not given a new one-class government whose interest is to give aid and comfort to big stealers.

"The big steal is no substitute for a Fair Deal."

'Phony Left,' Big Business Condemned By Vic Reuther

THE "PHONY LEFT" of communism and "irresponsible capital" were held out as twin enemies of the worker in a speech by Victor Reuther, CIO European representative, to 47 French metal workers graduating from the union training school at La Breviere, France.

To defeat them, Reuther said, free trade unionists of all countries must combine their forces and wage a stern fight.

The metal workers are the French Force Ouvriere counterparts of members of such American unions as the CIO Steelworkers, Auto Workers and Electrical Workers. The training school from which they were recently graduated is run by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions with the financial support of workers in many countries.

The graduates will go back to their own communities and local unions prepared to organize, conduct negotiations, administer unions and do the thousand and one additional things a union organizer must do.

Reuther described the metal industry as the most strategic and powerful in modern society.

"A victory for you in metal," he told the graduates, "will give new life and vitality, will guarantee the success of the free trade union forces in France, and when that victory is won in France, it will give new spirit to the whole free trade union movement of the world."

The problems of French metal workers, he said, are essentially the same as those of auto workers and steel workers in the United States. He said:

"The margin of profit that your employer takes in the automobile industry is far greater than that which American automobile manufacturers get. He will continue to reap that tremendous profit and will continue to exert an irresponsible pressure on price levels until there is a strong enough democratic force at the workshop level to call a halt to that scandalous situation."

CAPITAL is international, Reuther said, citing large American companies that operate in France. Some French workers, he recalled, claim that "nice collective bargaining agreements" in the United States are won by unions because employers are "more socially responsible" than those in Europe.

"If they have social responsibility,' he said, "they got it from the picket line and the solidarity of our workers who battled in order to re-educate American employers. The American employers in France will learn when you and we educate them.

"Employers become educated very rapidly when the workers in their factories are organized in democratic trade unions and have the economic power not only to demand but to win concession."

Press Guilty Of Bias, Subservience, Slanting Of News, Survey Finds

FORTY-FOUR out of 100 prominent Americans believe the nation's press is not doing the job they think it should.

In reply to a secret questionnaire, they found it guilty of political bias, failure to perform public services, slanting the news, subservience to economic pressures and sensationalism.

The results of the survey were disclosed at the recent convention of the National Newspaper Promotion Association in Louisville, Ky., by Edward L. Bernays, noted public relations counsellor, who conducted it.

The study also showed, Bernays said, that journalistic ideals of independence, crusading and news coverage voiced by three outstanding publishers in the 19th century are regarded as valid as they ever were.

The questionnaire was distributed to a group of opinion moulders selected at random from Who's Who in America and representing thought ranging from left to right, and the publishers of the nation's 1773 daily newspapers.

They were asked if the press meets "the ideals set forth for it."

Forty-four per cent of the group leaders answered the question "with an unequivocal no," Bernays said.

"Less than half—47%—answered with an unequivocal yes," he added. "Nine per cent said yes or no with qualifications."

One out of four publishers—213 responded—agreed with the opinion leaders. Only 68% answered with an "unequivocal yes," while 7% "said yes or no with qualifications," Bernays said.

The questionnaire also asked that deviations from the ideals be listed in order of prevalence. The answers, Bernays told the convention, ranged "over the entire field," with no "outstanding concentration on any one departure."

Most common: political bias, failure to perform public services, slanting the news, response to economic pressures, bias and self-interest of the publisher, pressure groups, sensationalism, and miscellaneous (chiefly inaccuracy an incompetence).

The publishers listed political bias, failure to perform public service, and response to economic pressure more often than the opinion leaders, Bernays said an analysis disclosed.

But the opinion leaders saw slanted news and sensationalism much more often than the publishers—in fact, not a single publisher mentioned sensationalism, whereas 12% of the laymen listed this as a departure from ideal journalism.

Twenty per cent of the publishers—one in five—accused the American press of slanting the news. Thirty-three per cent of the opinion leaders—practically one in three—cited the same fault.

Organized labor has suffered from slanted news for a long time. The current dispute in the steel industry is an outstanding example. With a few notable exceptions, daily newspapers have ganged up to give every news break and stress to the industry, while the union position—and usually the facts—has been played down, glossed over or covered up.

Bernays' speech to the promotion men was reprinted in Editor & Publisher, the industry trade publication. He said:

"These criticisms say in effect that the deviating press is neither free nor responsible."

The questionnaire set forth journalistic ideals expressed in the salutatory of Thomas Gibson in the Rocky Mountain Herald of Denver in 1860, stressing independence; that of Joseph Putlizer in the New York World in 1883, emphasizing crusading; that of Adolph S. Ochs when he assumed control of the New York Times in 1896, stressing news coverage.

Of the publishers who answered, 95% thought the ideals still hold. Ninety-four per cent of the laymen gave the same answer.

Uncle Sam Is A Tough Employer

'Jim Crow' Bias On Pay Fought

(First article of a series.)

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

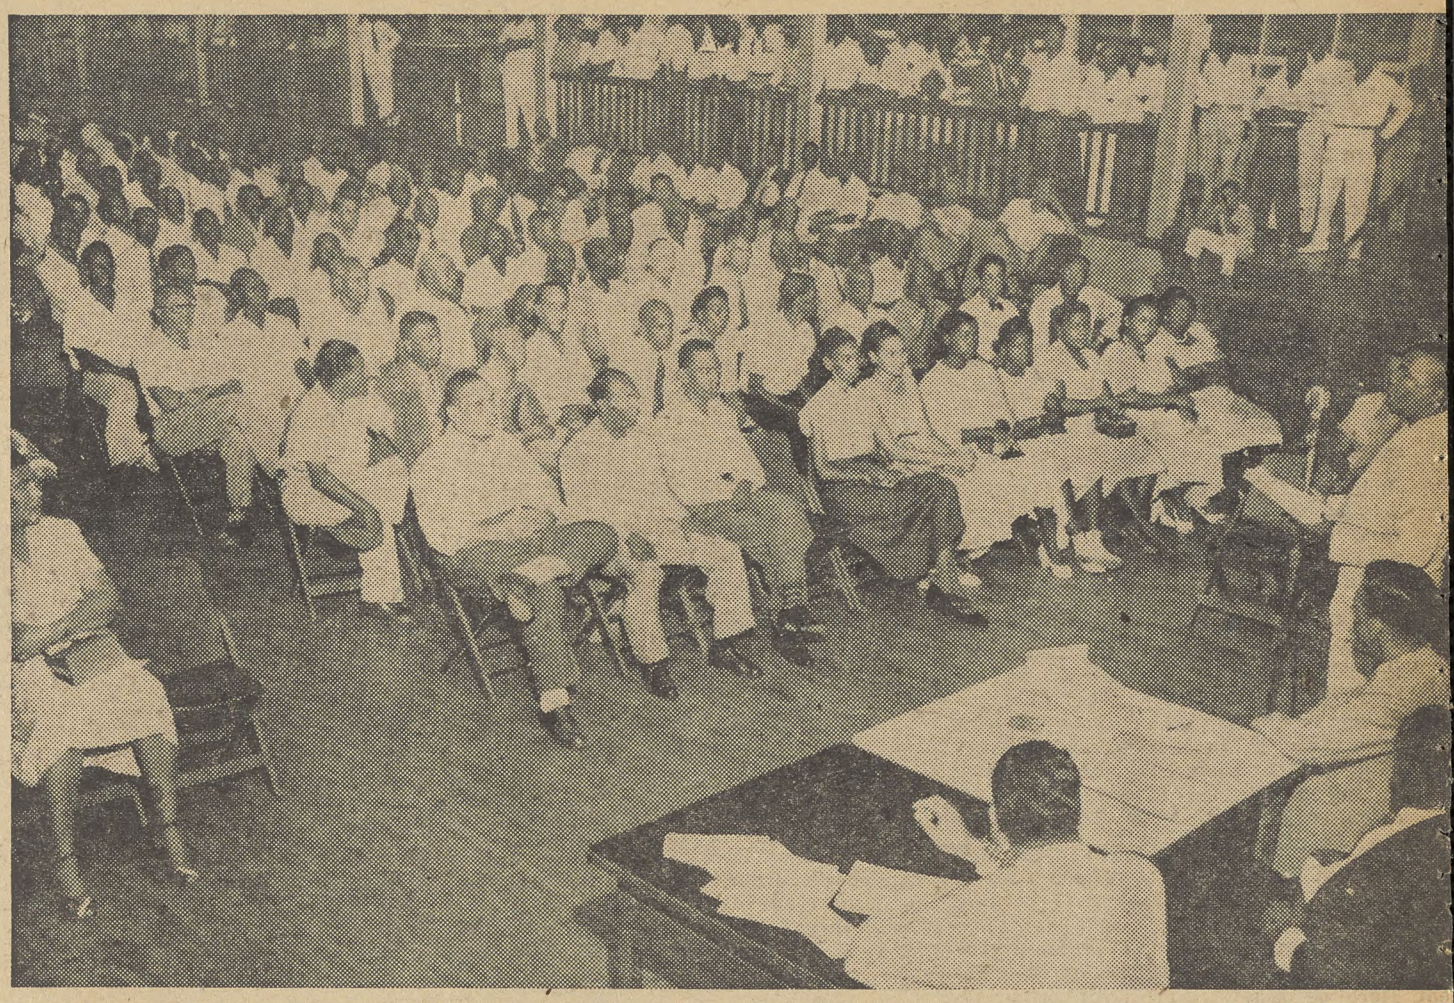
AT LA BOCA, within sight of the channel where ships of all nations steam southward on the final stretch of their journey through the Panama Canal to the Pacific, or head northward on the first step of their 50-mile trip toward the Atlantic, stands a long gray wooden barracks.

This ugly military-type structure looks pretty much like innumerable other barracks in the Canal Zone, but it stands out among all of them and is well known throughout the zone for this reason: It is the Canal Zone headquarters of the CIO.

In Panama, the CIO hold a place of much prestige and importance, though you might not suspect it if you judged its standing only by its humble basement headquarters in the barracks at La Boca.

The union—it's Local 900 of the Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee—rents the space from Uncle Sam, sole landlord in the zone, and pays quite a high rent, union officials said. The two upper floors are occupied by other tenants.

It was a typical hot tropic day in April when I paid my first visit to the CIO's La Boca offices. Frank Thompson, chairman of Local 900's big Balboa chapter called me for me on this occasion in the union's station wagon.



A NEW BRAND of unionism has been brought to the Panama Canal Zone by CIO's Government & Civil Employees Organizing Committee. Here's part of audience at big Balboa union meeting, showing Local 900 Pres. E Gaskin speaking. Balboa Chairman Frank Thompson seated at table in foreground.

Wife A 'Union Widow'

Thompson who was born in Barbados, makes his living working in the Panama Canal's dredging division at El Diablo, but practically all the rest of his waking hours are spent on union activity. He doesn't often get home before midnight and admits that his wife is a "union widow."

Sometimes Thompson is called upon to rush the union's loud speaker equipment to various places where it is needed for meetings throughout the 50-mile length of the zone; or to act as "barker" while driving the union car through the winding roads of a town announcing union affairs; or to attend, as a member of the negotiating committee, lengthy U. S. Government —union conferences.

Then when the big Balboa chapter holds its mass meetings, Thompson can be seen, looking slim and neat in his dark suit and white shirt, chairing the affair in a cool, collected manner, as though he had nothing else to do.

On other trips to union offices or meetings, I sometimes was driven by William Sinclair, one of the union's two paid organizers on the staff of Ed Welsh, CIO international representative in the zone. I met Fitzhugh Evering, organizer on the Atlantic side, only once, for his activities kept him on the other side of the zone.

Sinclair is a broad-shouldered, good-looking six-footer with curly black hair and mustache, a red sunburnt face and a beaming smile. Nothing seemed to ruffle his good humour. Upsets in schedules, endless tiring questions, stifling heat, wrong directions, delays—all of which he was often subjected to while touring me around —never faded his smile.

Sinclair speaks both Spanish and English with equal fluency, a big asset, especially at union meetings, where speeches are made in both languages, and he can interpret either way.

Asking CIO members where they were born is always an interesting question in the Canal Zone for the answers show what a mixture of nationalities work there. Sinclair, for instance, said he was born in Nicaragua—his father British and his mother Nicaraguan.

One of the strange things about this CIO union of some 5000 members in the Canal Zone is that it is made up almost exclusively of foreigners of Negro blood. The majority of them are now citizens of the Republic of Panama, either by birth or by taking out citizenship papers, for foreigners (non-U. S. citizens) living in the zone are eligible for Panamanian citizenship if they fulfill certain requirements.

(They can't become U. S. citizens for technically the Canal Zone is leased to the U.S.A. by Panama, albeit "in perpetuity.")

Many Nationalities

"Besides Panamians, the CIO has among its membership, canal workers born in Barbados, Trinidad, Santa Lucia, Guadaloupe, Martinique and other British and French West Indian islands, as well as natives from various Central and South American countries. Only a few scattered Virgin Islanders can claim American citizenship.

Altogether the number of foreign (or Local Rate) workers employed both on the canal and the Panama Railroad, and eligible for CIO membership, are estimated to total about 14,000 at present. (Employment has been falling in recent years from a peak of 19,000 in 1943.) Total U. S. Rate workers, who have come from the States to take jobs in the zone, number about 4000.

On my first trip to CIO headquarters, we wound through the narrow, winding streets of Panama City, where small shops and one-story houses swarming with people are crowded together, the building fronts open to the sidewalks. You can look right in on family life as you pass, and see people cooking, eating, sleeping, washing clothes, bathing the kids, sewing, mending shoes or just plain talking.

In spite of their evident poverty, on the whole the people look healthy and good-natured. They moved leisurely, laughed easily, and on the surface at least, seemed to lead a care-free and fairly happy existence. The warm climate simplifies the hea ing and clothing problems that makes li so difficult for low income people in co weather countries.

Crossing the tracks of the Panama Rai road Co. (like the canal, U.S.-owned) w turned left after a few blocks, onto Tivo St. Here we had Panama City on our lef and just across the street on the right, th Ancon section of Balboa, main city on th Pacific side of the Canal Zone.

In Balboa, as in the other towns, store offices, homes, the big Tivoli Hotel an all other enterprises are run by and fo employes of Uncle Sam exclusively—a modified type of "state socialism" in mini ture.

In Panama City and the rest of the Re public, private enterprise carries on i the usual way—both aided and hand capped by the activities of the 10-mi wide U. S. Zone (five miles on each sid of the canal) which slices the Republi neatly through its 50-mile-wide middle.

In a few minutes we were passing Ba boa Heights, where the Governor of th

Canal Workers Join In GCEOC

Parent body of Local 900 in the Cana Zone is the CIO's Government & Civ Employees Organizing Committee.

GCEOC was set up in March, 1950, afte the United Public Workers was expelle from the CIO on charges of Communis domination.

GCEOC's national headquarters are a 805 G St., N. W., Washington, D.C. An thony J. Federoff is chairman, John T Yancey, assistant chairman, and Milto Murray, secretary-treasurer. The union jurisdiction covers federal workers em ployed in the U. For CIO Members In Canal Zone anal Zone presides in the big impressive-oking Administration building high on a ll overlooking Roosevelt Blvd. It was alled to my attention because it is where IO representatives go to "bargain collectively" with the Governor and his aides n wages and working conditions for their embers.

Sorrow Shows On Their Faces

We sped by rows and clusters of gray rracks, most of them built on stilts, here canal workers live. We also passed ttractive residential sections for higher aid employes of the zone, as well as varus installations connected with canal ork, and finally drew up at one of a roup of barracks on Santa Domingo St., a Boca.

Behind us a ferry like those in New ork harbor was chugging across the annel, headed toward one of the main ghways leading into the interior of Panaa, and up the channel lay the Miraflores cks, the first ones that ships heading tlantic-ward pass through.

It was plain to see that we had reached r destination, for a white sign with IO" printed on it in big black letters ung on the arm of an iron rod beside e auto road. You couldn't miss it.

The sun glared down on us unmercifully we climbed out of the car and hurried ward the steps leading into the baseent. Here we passed under another sign retching clear across the right side of e building—"Local 900—G C E O C— I O" and entered with relief the dim ol offices of the CIO's Canal Zone union.

Local 900, affiliate of the CIO's Governent & Civic Employees Organizing Comittee, bargains for the foreign workers mployed in the whole zone, both on the anal and on the Panama Railroad. Its inuence is much wider than its actual dues aying membership, which fluctuates round 5500. Wages of these workers are low (minimum 37c an hour, with an verage of 55.8c an hour) that CIO mems find it hard to keep up the modest a month union dues.

Prices Are High

Many of them pay irregularly when they an spare it, some manage to keep paid , and others who consider themselves ro-union scarcely ever can manage to ay. Prices in the zone stores are as high nd in some instances, higher than in e U. S.

Local 900 is divided into six chapters ocated in the main communities along e canal where the union's members live work. A number of members live in anama City, where rents are high, beuse of the shortage of cheaper housing the zone.

The largest chapter of Local 900 is on e Atlantic side at Cristobal, and inludes among its members, workers who ve in the colored communities of Chagres, amp Bierd, Camp Coiner and Silver City or Rainbow City, as it was recently reamed by vote of the workers who live ere.)

Cristobal is the main Canal Zone city the Atlantic and adjoins Colon, in the epublic of Panama. As in Panama City d Balboa, on the Pacific side, all you ave to do is cross a street and you step t once from Cristobal in the zone to olon, the Republic's second largest city.

Balboa which includes La Boca has the econd largest chapter. The four other aller chapters are at Paraiso and at ed Tank, near the Pedro Miguel locks, the Pacific side; at Gamboa, where the hagres river flows into the canal and xtensive dredging goes on and at Gatun the Atlantic side.

Total estimated population of the Canal one in 1951 was 45,000, composed mostly colored West Indians, native Panamanns and their families; plus a much smaller number of civilian employes from the States.

CIO SIGN is out in front at GCEOC Local 900's headquarters at La Boca.

As we entered the Local 900 office, Welsh, a handsome and distinguished-looking man, heaved his big frame out of the chair at the desk to greet us. Light from the screened wall behind him filtered through his slightly graying hair and mustache and fell brightly on his spotless white shirt.

Welsh was born in New York City and has lived there most of his life. CIO Exec. Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood, who directs CIO organizing from his Washington headquarters, sent Welsh to the Canal Zone in October, 1950, as the CIO's international representative there.

During the year and a half he has been in the zone, Welsh has won quite a reputation for being an outspoken and militant labor official, as had Ed Gaskin during his much longer career as Local 900 leader. The two head up the negotiating committee which has conferred frequently with Gov. Francis K. Newcomer and his aides on Balboa Heights, in the course of trying to get higher wages and improved conditions for the colored workers.

Welsh said you could scarcely call these conferences "collective bargaining," for the Governor can always pass the buck to Congress and the numerous measures passed by it to control zone affairs. One of the stock replies the Governor gives to the union demands is that Congress has placed on him the duty to operate the canal as efficiently and economically as possible.

That's why the union presses for stronger legislative action as a necessity in improving zone working conditions. Within certain limits, however, the Governor does have power to grant pay increases and change burdensome regulations.

Some hot arguments have taken place on Balboa Heights. At a conference held a little over a year ago, the Governor got fighting mad over a statement that appeared in the press quoting Welsh as saying that the Governor's reply to union requests was "lacking in human sympathy and justice," and showed "a complete negation of the fundamental principles of democratic thought and action."

When Gaskin and the committee backed this statement up, the Governor angrily accused Welsh of stirring up discontent among the workers. Later during a visit to the States, Newcomer was reported to have tried unsuccessfully to get Welsh fired. Upon his return, at any rate, the Governor had cooled down and some small wage increases and a few concessions to the union came through.

During 1951, pay increases totaling 7c an hour—5c in April, plus 2c in November —were granted, the largest boost ever given the local rate workers. But there has been no increase since then.

Welsh referred lightly to the set-to with the Governor—now a historic union event —in a speech at the big monthly meeting of the Balboa chapter I attended at the Pacific Clubhouse in Ancon. The resignation of Newcomer in May, at the end of his four-year term, and the nomination of Gen. John State Seybold to succeed him had just been announced in the press.

"Gov. Newcomer is leaving," commented Welsh ironically, "but I'm still here." The big audience roared with laughter.

Audiences at the two large union meetings I attended in the zone—one on the Atlantic, the other on the Pacific side—are something to remember. They were a paradise for speakers, for the members sat silent and listened with absorbed attention. Even the children, quite a few of whom came with their parents, kept so quiet you'd never know they were there.

An almost religious atmosphere seemed to pervade the meetings. The people were dressed in their Sunday best, the women in fresh cotton dresses and the men in white or light-colored shirts. In spite of the tropic heat some of the men wore their suit coats, as they might in church.

Dramatic Sight

It was a dramatic sight to look out across the long rows of hundreds of intent dark faces, noting the wide variety of types present. It made you wonder how many different migrations from the past they represented—what tragedies and disappointments had fallen upon them or their parents and other relatives during those harsh early years when the canal was being constructed, and yellow fever, malaria, cave-ins, explosions and other accidents took such a heavy toll of life.

The disease scourge has been practically wiped out now—few die of fever or malaria these days. Some still are killed or maimed in accidents but fatality figures are low.

There is no doubt that life is easier and more pleasant for canal workers under present conditions, and yet they still have serious troubles which arise mostly now from the low wages they get and the high prices they have to pay at the commissaries where they shop. Their chief grievance, however, is the discrimination, particularly on the job, and in housing—for the white U. S. workers get much higher wages and live in better homes.

The Negroes have been quick to pick up the democratic ideals and American standards taught to them in the U. S. schools in the zone, and they find it bitterly ironic that they themselves are subjected to undemocratic treatment. It does seem a pity that the U. S. administration of the Canal Zone does not practice what our country preaches to its own citizens and the rest of the world.

(Next: A look at the segregated Local Rate towns where CIO workers in the Canal Zone live and work.)

Pay Discrimination By U.S. Still Prevails

THERE ARE two main groups of workers employed by the U. S. Government in the Canal Zone. Local Rate employes who are mostly Panamanians and West Indian Negroes, number at present about 14,000.

These workers are paid under what the union calls the "Caribbean wage scale," a system instituted nearly 50 years ago and based on the idea that pay for foreign workers should be governed by the wage standards in the areas from which the workers came originally, so as not to compete on the labor markets with employers in Panama, the West Indies and Central and South American countries.

CIO members in the Zone are all Local Rate Workers.

In the second group are about 4000 U. S. Rate workers, American citizens who have come from the States to work in the zone. Trade unionists among them belong mostly to AFL unions. They are nominally the skilled workers, but many Local Raters also do skilled jobs of the same type and often get only half as much pay. For U. S. workers are paid according to the prevailing wage rate for their particular job in the U. S.—plus 25% additional for away-from-home service.

Until recent years, Local Raters were called "silver workers" and the U. S. Raters, "gold workers"—terms derived originally from the early days of canal construction when American employes were actually paid in gold and foreign workers in silver.

In the early 1900's, a special railroad coach equipped with a teller's cage rolled from town to town disbursing (in 1908) 1600 pounds of gold to U. S. citizens, and 24 tons of silver to non-citizens.

Segregation was practiced—and still is—not only in the manner of paying but also in clubhouses, waiting rooms, schools, residental areas, etc. Rest rooms, for instance had signs designating them for the use of "Gold" or Silver" workers only. The signs were ordered abolished in 1946, but a rigid policy of discrimination still exists.

In the buildings connected with the Pedro Miguel locks, there's a water fountain with one side for use of colored workers painted a dark color.

McCarran Immigration Bill Passed By Senate

ANOTHER McCarran law has passed Congress.

The sweeping McCarran immigration bill—assailed by opponents as filled with "prejudice and discrimination"—was finally voted by the Senate in a night session late last week.

Adoption of the bill, by voice vote without a roll call record, came after three days of debate filled with appeals to race hatred.

Such arguments were climaxed by "Anglo-Saxon" racial boasts by Dixiecrat Sen. George (D., Ga.).

The McCarran bill, similar to a measure voted some weeks ago by the house, now goes to a conference of the two branches of Congress.

Opponents of the McCarran bill are counting on President Truman to veto it. Sen. McMahon (D. Conn.) said "no self-respecting President could sign a bill with such outlandish provisions in it."

They believe that they have the votes to prevent over-riding.

Earlier, supporters of democratic immigration and naturalization laws took two sharp setbacks. The first came when the Senate voted 44 to 28 against a motion by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) to require further hearings by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Then, by a vote of 51 to 27, the Senate voted down the liberal substitute measure drafted by Humphrey and Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.).

The substitute, supported by the CIO, would have set up a statutory board of immigration appeals, eliminated racial and sex restrictions in present laws, provided for a pooling of unused quotas and established more categories of non-quota immigrants.

McCarran fought the Humphrey-Lehman measure on openly racist lines. He called the much more humane substitute measure "so fantastic, so drastic and so unrealistic" that it would subject this country to "a flood of orientals," and said that it would "poison the bloodstream of the country."

The American Civil Liberties Union, in calling for rejection of McCarran's bill, pointed out that it created "a new racial discrimination which is morally indefensible, undemocratic in character and harmful."

McCarran also dismissed charges that his bill discriminates against the peoples of southern and eastern Europe by accusing his critics of launching into an "emotionally charged description of the virtues of those noble people."

SEN. DOUGLAS (D. Ill.) pointed out that backers of the measure go on the assumption that the peoples of northern and western Europe are superior to those in other European areas. He conceded that the peoples of southern and eastern Europe are "poorer economically," but warned that "we must not mistake differences with inferiority."

Humphrey issued a blunt warning that constitutents of foreign ancestry would not like the failures of Congress to allow their parents to enter this country for their declining years.

These people, he said, "are begging for a chance for their mothers to come here for the last couple of years of their lives, but S. 2550 (the McCarran bill) says, 'You stay back there and suffer.'"

When the people discover this, he added, "there are going to be some changes around the American government."

Lehman told the Senate that he doesn't believe five Senators know what is in the 302-page, complex McCarran Bill. He called the measure "dangerous to the security of the country and to its civil rights."

The Senate, he warned, will be "doing a grave disservice to the country and to the peace of the world" if it adopts the measure.

Humphrey's and Lehman's debate was praised by Sen. Morse (R. Ore.) who called it a "great record in the history of the Senate." He criticized Senate "apathy" on the immigration bill and begged the Senators not to "antagonize millions of people around the world whose support and alliance we need in the century ahead."

U. S. Liberalism Still Strong, ADA Parley Demonstrates

AMERICAN liberalism spoke out clearly at the fifth annual convention of Americans for Democratic Action.

Joining in its voice were the three leading candidates for the Democratic nomination for President, as well as President Truman.

The President almost stole the show in his address to 1000 ADA members at the convention banquet, with a fighting reaffirmation of the Fair Deal program.

"Last year was not a year of progress for our side," former Atty. Gen. Francis Biddle, national ADA chairman, told the delegates. He warned reactionary politicians, however, that the swing to a conservative outlook was entirely "false" and that America remains fundamentally a liberal nation.

Delegates supported this view by drafting broad statements on domestic, foreign and political policy calling for an even stronger liberal position. Resolutions condemned Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) and asked Wisconsin voters to retire him from the Senate, called for a still stronger civil rights platform, and gave full support to the CIO Steelworkers in their fight for pay increases.

Speaker after speaker condemned McCarthyism without exception. Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) said "we must meet this issue of political smear head on" and Mutual Security Administrator W. Averell Harriman said "McCarthyism is neo-fascism and must be stamped out."

SEN. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) hit the McCarran Immigration Bill, along with McCarthyism, as a measure which "would pervert the humane and liberal foundations on which this country was built." He said, "we must not only preserve but carry forward the liberal policies" of the New and Fair Deals.

The convention decided not to endorse any presidential candidate at this time.

It was the man who is "not a candidate," however, who hit reaction hardest.

President Truman lambasted "the dinosaur wing of the Republican Party — which unfortunately seems to be in control" but thanked them for the way they help the Democrats win elections.

"You can always count on them to make it clear before the campaign is over that the Republican Party is the party of big business and that they would like to turn the country back to the big corporations and the big bankers to run as they see fit," he said.

He said that they "scare the daylights" out of the average American citizen by their actions such as those in the 80th Congress which "went after organized labor with their Taft-Hartley law . . . after all wage earners by their attacks on the social security program . . . after the farmer by tampering with price supports and by failing to provide grain storage."

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers was re-elected a national vice-chairman, and CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers were re-elected members of the ADA national board.

Strike Voted At North American

CIO Auto Workers employed at two plants of the North American Aviation Corp. have voted "overwhelmingly" to strike unless the company boosts its "totally inadequate" wage offer.

Paul Schrade, president of UAW Local 887 at Torrance, Calif., said 95% of the local's 10,000 members approved walkout plans while at Columbus, O., 94% of the 8000 workers voted to strike.

Pizer Urges Defeat Of Smith Bill

PRES. MORRIS PIZER of the CIO Furniture Workers has joined in the chorus of protests against the Smith union injunction receivership bill.

Terming the proposed bill the "most shackling restraint against labor yet devised," Pizer compared its seizure provision with the practices in totalitarian countries.

He charged that no employer would have an incentive to settle a dispute "because he would know that a strike would be enjoined and that none of the union's demands would be realized."

"Free collective bargaining and the right to strike—labor's sole weapon in an otherwise unequal conflict between management and labor—are at stake," he said.

Pizer, in a letter to members of the House Armed Services Committee, urged rejection of the proposal as "harmful to our democracy."

Factory Pay Up

The average pay of the nation's 13 million factory workers last month was 5% more than in the same month of 1951, the Labor Dept. reported last week. The new average pay figure was $1.66 an hour.

House Votes New Fund For Flood Relief

THE HOUSE last week approved a CIO-supported $55 million emergency appropriation for repairing flood control works damaged in the recent Midwest floods. The bill now goes to the Senate.

President Truman had asked a $45 million grant, but the House Appropriations Committee upped the figure by $10 million to permit Army engineers to continue flood repair operations in Kansas City.

THE CIO meanwhile called for support of a commission, to be appointed by the President, to study the comparative costs of establishing a program of watershed rehabilitation plus supplemental reservoirs for hydropower and additional flood water storage.

In a letter to all CIO councils, Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation, stresses the importance of a balanced program if watershed rehabilitation is to be successful.

He called for support of a bill introduced by Sen. Monroney (D. Okla.) which would set up the commission to study the value of work on the upper watersheds and works on the main river systems.

Read 'Em And Weep—

Here's What It Costs To Keep Ahead Of Sheriff

HOW FAR are you running behind the high-cost-of-living? If you failed to earn between $73.30 and $85.63 a week and lived in one of 34 large cities last October, you could not maintain a "modest, but adequate" standard of living, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last week.

The bureau came up with the annual revision of its City Workers' Family Budget, showing the costs of the goods and services required in each of the 34 cities examined for a family consisting of a working father, non-working mother and two children under 15.

The survey showed that it costs more to live in Washington—which has less industry than any large city in the United States—than in any of the other 33 cities.

The "modest but adequate" standard could be maintained in the nation's Capital for $4454 a year, or $85.63 a week, the figures showed. At the other end of the scale stood New Orleans, where the same level of living required $3812 a year, or $73.30 a week.

A year prior, in October, 1950, Washington stood in second place with $3926 a year, or $75.50 a week, needed for the same set of goods and services. In first place was Milwaukee, where $3933 a year, or $75.69 a week, was required. Last October Milwaukee was in second place with $4387 a year, or $84.36 a week, needed.

The budget figures beat down even further the old gag about it being cheaper to live in the South than in the North. Three of the six most expensive cities were in the South—Richmond, Atlanta, Los Angeles and Houston following Washington and Milwaukee in that order.

It cost more to live in Birmingham than in Boston or Buffalo. Memphis at $4790 was more expensive than Minneapolis at $4161. On the other hand four of the six lowest-cost cities were in the North.

The BLS found that the cost of food differed little from city to city. But housing costs varied sharply, the study showed, and had increased sharply in the previous year. They ranged from $581 in New Orleans to $1034 in Washington. In Houston, one of the warmest cities, they cost as much as in Milwaukee, one of the coldest, and were exceeded only by Washington and Richmond.

The budget figures for the 34 cities studied were:

Atlanta	$4315	Jacksonville	$4202	Philadelphia	$4078
Baltimore	4217	Kansas City	3960	Pittsburgh	4203
Birmingham	4252	Los Angeles	4311	Portland, Ore.	4153
Boston	4217	Manchester	4090	Portland, Me.	4021
Buffalo	4127	Memphis	4190	Richmond	4338
Chicago	4185	Milwaukee	4387	St. Louis	4112
Cincinnati	4208	Minneapolis	4161	San Francisco	4263
Cleveland	4103	Mobile	3969	Savannah	4067
Denver	4199	New Orleans	3812	Scranton	4002

Oil Workers Get 15c Pact At Sinclair

THE NATION'S oil workers last week were ending their strike as fast as companies agreed to contracts based on Wage Stabilization Board recommendations for 15c hourly wage increases.

By midweek approximately one-third of the 90,000 strikers had returned to work following the signing of contracts, and thousands more returned to work later in the week as additional agreements were reached.

End of the nationwide strike was speeded when 10,000 CIO Oil Workers ratified a contract with the Sinclair Oil Co., the only firm which negotiates with the CIO union on a company-wide basis. Fifty-eight per cent favored it.

THERE WERE several hitches in negotiations, notably with Standard Oil of Indiana where 7000 members of the independent Central States Petroleum Union voted against the firm's 15c offer because it contained contract "encroachments."

The end of the strike was indicated when Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers and other leaders of the striking CIO, AFL and independent oil workers on May 15 announced that top leaders of the unions had reluctantly accepted the WSB recommendations.

WSB called for a 15c hourly wage increase and increasing the differential of the second shift to 6c an hour and of the third shift to 12c an hour.

KNIGHT SAID the "greatest handicap to rapid settlement now is the insistence by many companies that the duration of the wage agreements be changed."

"It has been customary for many years," he continued, "to write contracts so as to permit a review of wages at six month intervals.

"In spite of this long established tradition, many companies now are insisting on the removal of six month wage reopening clauses and on the freezing of wages for at least a year."

BLS Index Inches Up As Food Prices Jump

JUST as it has done in 11 of the last 15 months, the cost of living went up again in the 30-day period ending Apr. 15, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last week.

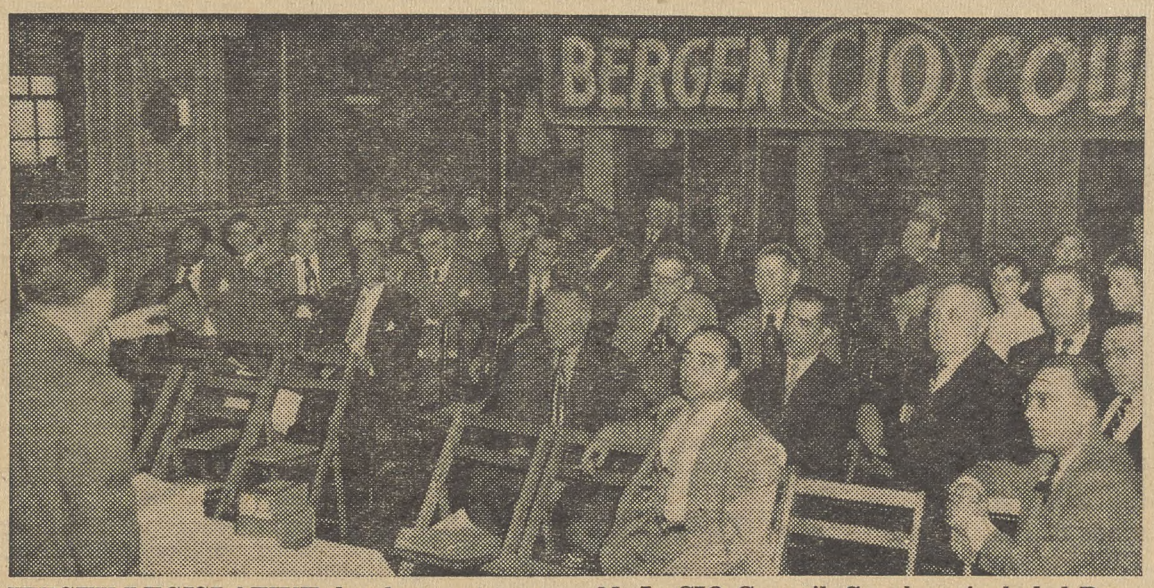
But despite that fact—and the additional fact that the Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index jumped 10c in the week ending May 20, the sharpest advance in 21 months—business representatives persisted in urging Congress to end price controls.

The rise in the BLS Consumers Price Index was from 188 to 188.7, and represented an increase in the cost of living of four-tenths of one per cent. This was not enough fully to offset the drop between January and February, and means that about one million CIO Auto Workers will suffer a 1c an hour cost-of-living wage cut at the forthcoming quarterly adjustment.

However, many UAW-CIO members, including 302,000 General Motors employes, will receive a productivity increase of 4c an hour on June 1 and thus will have a net boost of 3c. At the end of the first two years of the current five-year GM contract, the workers have received 23c an hour in cost of living increases, including the 1c they now lose.

Here are the cumulative figures for the "new" BLS Index:

Period	Index	Period	Index
1939 monthly average	99.4	1950: June 15	170.2
1943 monthly average	123.6	1951: June 15	185.2
1944 monthly average	125.5	1952: Jan. 15	189.1
1945 monthly average	128.4	Feb. 15	187.9
1946 monthly average	139.3	Mar. 15	188.0
1947 monthly average	159.2	Apr. 15	188.7
1948 monthly average	171.2
1949 monthly average	169.1
1950 monthly average	171.9
1951 monthly average	185.6
1952 monthly average	188.4



JERSEY LEGISLATIVE developments, political action problems and changes in unemployment and workmen compensation laws by the Legislature were reviewed at a recent conference of the Bergen County, N. J., CIO Council. Speakers included Pres. Carl Holderman of the State CIO Council, Jack Leonard of the council's legal staff, and Harry Krantz, state legislative director. The session aroused widespread interest.

Price Lids Slashed In New Senate Bill

WAGE AND PRICE controls — slashed even more than they were last year—would be continued only until next March under a bill approved by the Senate Banking Committee last week.

All other provisions of the Defense Production Act, including rent control, would be continued for one year. The present law expires June 30.

Like the present law, it is another congressional invitation to more inflation.

The most drastic revision of present control provisions is a section abolishing the present Wage Stabilization Board. This would be replaced with a new board without labor representation, which would have no power to recommend settlements of labor disputes.

The bill also would permanently exempt from the minimum wage provisions of the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act goods which can be bought on the open market. (See Page 3.)

President Truman last February asked Congress to extend the law for two years and abolish the Capehart and Herlong Amendments and the ban on livestock slaughter quotas, which were written into the measure last session. The committee not only kept all these inflationary provisions but opened the way for still further price hikes under the Herlong Amendment.

This new provision would require OPS to set price ceilings so as to allow all retailers and wholesalers their pre-Korea percentage markups.

The bill also contains a policy statement that would make mandatory still further decontrol, and increase pressures for such action from industry.

Other inflationary gimmicks written into the bill include:

1. A requirement for public hearings before rent controls could be reimposed in any decontrolled community.

2. A ban against the setting of any OPS ceiling prices which are lower than minimum prices fixed by state law.

3. Elimination of price controls on rates and fees charged by federal, state or local governments for any goods or services, such as municipal terminal fees and liquor sold by state or city-owned stores.

The committee's action after a warning by Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall that there are "widespread" signs that prices are stiffening.

"It is no exaggeration to say that this country can't stand further increases in prices on top of the already steep price increases we have had since Korea," Arnall said. "And yet there is no doubt that if price controls were removed these price increases would occur."

A new order by OPS boosted ceilings on canned fruits and vegetables one to two cents a can, and price stabilization officials said further increases in a wide range of food items also could be expected soon.

In another action, OPS removed price controls from raw cotton and virtually all textiles.

Steel Union Parley Stick By Its Guns

CIO STEELWORKERS wound up their sixth convention with a roaring determination to win a new contract for wage improvements and the union shop.

As the four-day meeting drew to a close in Philadelphia's Convention Hall, Pres. Philip Murray of the USA-CIO told the 3000 delegates:

"If the industry is foolish enough to believe that they can bargain this union down below the compromise recommendations of the Wage Stabilization Board, then they are very, very foolish—because we are in no mood to do that and we are not going to do it."

Much—but by no means all of the biennial session—was devoted to issues in the steel dispute, during which the union has been seeking catch-up improvements in both economic and non-economic matters.

In other actions, the union:

1. Voted to raise dues from $2 to $3 a month, and initiation fees from $3 to $5.

2. Provided that the Honest Ballot Association or a similar non-partisan organization will handle the counting of votes in future elections for national and district officers.

3. Clarified certain administrative authority in the secretary-treasurer's office, and lifted the number of nominations necessary for candidates for national and district posts.

4. Set the next USA-CIO convention for the third Tuesday of September, 1954.

Murray took occasion to voice some sharp criticism of Sec. of Commerce Charles Sawyer, who runs the steel industry for the government.

Sawyer had written a letter of complaint that steel workers—in walking out for three days when Judge Pine's decision temporarily gave the mills back to private owners—had not taken all necessary steps in some plants to protect equipment.

Murray said the actual facts showed the workers had found great difficulty in many plants in getting management assent to stand-by maintenance agreements.

The union president said that Sawyer is "no friend of yours" and charged that he has shown an "almost unthinkable degree of bias."

Murray said that Roger Putnam, Economic Stabilization Agency head, had been 100% correct when he recently accused the industry of "putting on a propaganda drive that even a Dr. Goebbels (Hitler's propaganda chief) might envy."

He also quoted a Putnam statement that the dispute reached the WSB "only because the steel industry had failed to bargain on a single one of something like 100 different demands of the union for changes in their contract."

The convention heard stirring pledges of support from four CIO union leaders—Pres. Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers; Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers; Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers; and Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers.

The Steel Issue In A Nutshell:

The issues in the government's seizure of steel, as related in capsule form to the CIO Steelworkers' convention by UAW Pres. Walter Reuther:

"It's a funny thing, but when the government intervenes to protect the people, that is 'socialism.'

"When the government intervenes to help little people feed their kids and pay the rent and pay doctor bills, that is a foreign 'ism' being introduced into American life.

"But when the government intervenes to give the United States Steel Corp. $600 million in tax amortization, that is the American system working in high gear."

WSB Sets Parley On Productivity Pay Boost Policy

CIO Pres. Philip Murray and four other officials representing the Government, industry and labor have been invited to a two-day session with the Wage Stabilization Board in Washington this week.

The meetings were scheduled by the WSB to determine policy on special productivity wage increases.

Labor members of WSB have demanded that the board take action on the matter since some unions have already been granted the increases.

In addition to Murray, others invited are AFL Pres. William Green; Jules Bachman, professor at New York Univ. and industry economic consultant; Pres. Reuben Robertson, Jr., of the Champion Paper Co., former WSB industry member, and Ewan Clague, Commissioner of Labor Statistics.

Steel Backed By UPWA

THE FULL resources, influence and manpower of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, "in the courts, in Congress and on the picket line," were pledged to the embattled CIO Steelworkers in a resolution passed on the final day of the UPWA convention in Denver.

The resolution condemned government and legislative "tools" of the steel industry and called on the Office of Price Stabilization to block the employers' efforts "to extort" improper price increases. It also supported the CIO Oil Workers in their strike.

Another resolution set forth the UPWA's "opposition to all forms of totalitarianism including fascism, communism and any other authoritarian group." It also pledged opposition to "any activity within our organization on the part of the Communists, fascists or any other groups designed to destroy our democratic purposes to further our objectives."

Several thousand Puerto Rican sugar workers who recently joined the union were given a formal welcome and assured of support in their fight for a 75c an hour minimum under the Wage-Hour Act.

N.Y. Furniture Workers Hit Defense Contract Policy

ANOTHER union complaint was lodged in Washington last week against Defense Dept. procurement policies.

The latest group to protest the policies is the CIO Furniture Workers in New York City.

Accompanied by Sec.-Treas. Morris Iushewitz of the New York City CIO Council, UFWA and management representatives came to Washington to tell Sens. Lehman (D.) and Ives (R.), both of New York, of the plight of the workers and industry.

The union spokesmen told the senators that the policy of the Defense Dept. of awarding contracts to low bidders, irrespective of their qualification for doing the work, caused a third of the 15,000 members of the UFWA in the city to be idle. They said that the contracts were going to non-union furniture factories in the South.

The Senators were urged to transmit the protest to the Pentagon. Iushewitz said that the Senators were "most friendly and anxious to help."

The CIO Clothing Workers, the CIO Textile Workers and other CIO unions have protested the Pentagon procurement policies. At their recent convention at Atlantic City, ACWA called for a civilian procurement agency to replace Pentagon purchasers.

Unemployment also resulted in New York City shoe, clothing, lithography and electrical appliance industries from government procurement policies, Iushewitz said. He declared that a third of the CIO Lithographers in the nation's largest city also are jobless, because the Government Printing Office is awarding jobs to non-union shops in the Middle West and South.

CIO Urges OK Of P.R. Constitution

Prompt action on the new constitution of Puerto Rico by the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee and speedy approval by the Senate itself were urged last week by Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Committee.

In a letter to Chairman O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.) of the Senate group, Potofsky described the constitution as "a truly democratic document and tribute to Gov. Nunoz Marin and his associates." He wrote:

"Guaranteeing, in the best American tradition, full human, civil, and labor rights, including the right to organize, picket and strike, it shows that Puerto Rico is in the best sense a part of the United States and that it shares our cherished heritage and faith."

Sitdown Foils Back-To-Work At Sylvania

THE CIO Electrical Workers last week used the sitdown strike technique of the early days of CIO to disrupt a back-to-work movement at the Sylvania Electric radio tube plant at Shawnee, Okla.

In cooperation with county officials, back-to-work leaders had set up a booth in the lobby of the courthouse at Shawnee to hire scabs. IUE members, who have been on strike since Mar. 17, are seeking a contract in line with agreements at other Sylvania plants.

BACK-to-work leaders and the company were all set for a showdown with the strikers last week. The leaders of the back-to-work movement, Mrs. Katie Quinn, boasted that 120 scabs would go through the picket line.

Escorted by state and county officers, 31 scabs went through the picket line, whose ranks gave way to let them enter as the 100 pickets expressed their displeasure with shouts, jeers and catcalls.

The pickets continued their activity peacefully, and the police, having done their "job," left the scene. They had hardly disappeared when the pickets, moving like one body, entered the plant cafeteria.

The scabs gathered at one end of the cafeteria, the strikers at the other where they sang union songs and shouted, "We want a contract."

The scabs produced nary a radio tube, and Sylvania officials hurriedly summoned IUE Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett, to their New York City offices to resume negotiations which broke down almost a month ago.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE WRITER attended three conventions. At the United Steelworkers convention in Philadelphia, the workers demonstrated unity and showed they were ready to fight when necessary for their just demands. The delegates knew all the issues and are ready to follow their leadership.

From there, the writer went to Atlantic City for the convention of another great affiliate, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. This organization has led in all matters of human welfare through the years. The same confidence and unity prevailed. The convention adopted a resolution in support of the Steelworkers. Brothers Potofsky, Rosenblum and their members have done a great job.

The writer then attended the convention of the Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers International Union. This organization, under its new president, Alex Bail, is in full accord with CIO policies on all questions. The delegates demonstrated that they will support Pres. Bail fully and carry the policies of the organization forward.

The CIO stands firmly behind the elected officers of the Textile Workers Union of America. This position would have been taken, whoever would have been elected in the democratic way. There will be more on this situation as developments occur. Stand with your Union!

This drive was conducted by Glenn McQueen, who did a good job in view of the anti-labor attitude of this firm.

Reg. Dir. Lee Tucker reports that the CIO Auto Workers won a representation election at the Arkansas Foundry Co., Little Rock, Ark., by the following vote: Eligible 128, UAW-CIO 71, no union 43, challenged 10. UAW-CIO Reps. Jack Crump and William Kimberling were in charge.

TWUA Asks New Pay Base

AN INCREASE in the hourly minimum wage paid under the Walsh-Healey Act in the woolen industry from $1.05 to $1.26 was urged recently by the CIO Textile Workers at a Labor Dept. hearing.

The act provides that the Labor Dept may set the standards for wages in government contracts of more than $10,000.

TWUA Research Dir. Solomon Barkin said that the proposed new rate was exceeded by a large part of the industry, particularly in New England. Barkin also asked for higher rates for the second and third shifts, six paid holidays, graduated vacation periods, and health and welfare benefits.

22,000 Glass Workers Get Pay Hikes In 2 Big Pacts

TWENTY-TWO thousand CIO Glass Workers have won immediate pay increases ranging from 8c to 16c an hour from the two largest firms in the glass industry.

The pay boosts are contained in a contract of the union with Libby-Owens-Ford Glass Co. and the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. Announcement of the terms of the contract was made by the union and the companies May 15, following the conclusion of negotiations at Miami Beach, Fla.

The new two-year pact provides an across-the-board increase of 8c an hour and an additional boost of 8c an hour for maintenance and non-bonus workers.

The agreement also provides a cost-of-living escalator clause governed by Labor Dept. consumer price index. The clause says that the hourly rate cannot be reduced by more than 8c an hour, if BLS figures should decline.

BY Nov. 15, 1953, production workers will receive an increase totaling 14c an hour—establishing a new minimum hourly rate of $1.62 an hour—and maintenance and non-bonus workers will receive 22c an hour.

Several fringe benefits also were won by the Glass Workers. These include three weeks vacation with pay for employes with 15 years' service or more, with liberalization of eligibility dates; an increase in night shift differentials to 6c and 9c an hour, and three additional paid holidays.

Covered by the agreement are the workers in Libby-Owens-Ford plants at Ottawa, Ill., Shreveport, La., Charleston, W. Va., and Toledo, O., and Pittsburgh Plate Glass plants at Crystal City, Mo., Creighton and Ford City, Pa.; Mt. Vernon, O.; Henryetta, Okla., and Clarksburg, W. Va.

The union was represented by Pres. Burl W. Phares, First Vice Pres. Leland Beard, Sec.-Treas. Lewis McCracken and wage committeemen from the 10 plants.

Rail Unions Okeh Pact

THREE railway brotherhoods last week accepted "reluctantly" a peace proposal by President Truman, thereby ending a three-year dispute.

Settlement foreshadowed a quick return of the seized roads to private ownership after 21 months under nominal Government control.

More than 150,000 engineers will get an immediate 37c an hour wage increase and lump sum payments of $600 to $1100 for back pay to October, 1950. The new pact runs to October 1953.

The roads were seized in August 1950, to avert a nationwide strike.

The new contract contains one change which the unions called a "major improvement" over a proposal turned down in 1950. This gives the unions the right to reject carrier demands for extending the runs of train crews beyond the terminal point.

News Unions In 17 Nations Join In New World Group

A NEW world organization of newspaper unions, long the goal of the CIO Newspaper Guild, came into being at a recent conference in Brussels.

Fifty-seven delegates from 17 nations joined in establishing and drafting a constitution for the new International Federation of Journalists from the Free World.

Clement J. Bundock, past secretary of the British National Union of Journalists, was nominated as the first chairman.

Goals of the new federation are to safeguard freedom of the press, act against threats to the rights of journalists, collect information on employment conditions and contracts, consider questions regarding relations between journalists of the world, and establish close relations with the United Nations.

The federation was established to replace the old International Organization of Journalists, which had become communist-dominated.

The new organization was planned by Pres. Harry Martin of the CIO Newspaper Guild, who is information officer for the U. S. Mutual Security Agency, assisted by representatives from the other nations. Martin presided at the opening sessions. Also attending was Ralph B. Novak, ANG executive vice-president.

Delegates were present from Belgium, Denmark, France, Britain, Japan, Norway, the Netherlands, Sweden, Switzerland, Cuba, Austria, the Saar, Canada, Greece, Mexico, Western Germany and the U. S. (LPA)

Elections Set In Local 600

THE BOARD of administration of big Ford Local 600 of the CIO Auto Workers in Detroit last week announced the schedule of elections in five units of the local.

Following charges that the local was Communist dominated, the international union a few months ago named the board to supervise Local 600's affairs temporarily.

The five elections will be held from June 10 to 20. Election dates in 13 other local units will be announced later. These elections will be followed by balloting on local-wide officers, and the lifting of the administratorship.

TWU Warns N.Y. Officials On Bus Deal

A WARNING was sounded last week by the Transport Workers that the proposed transfer of New York City bus lines to private ownership would precipitate "a first-class transit crisis" unless job security of bus employes is protected.

TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill and Pres. Matthew Guinan of TWU Local 100 wrote Chairman Sidney H. Bingham of the city Board of Transportation that the "horse-trading" between private bus companies and the city over the five or more bus lines has "caused great unrest among (TWU) officers and members."

The employes of the city transit system and the private companies are covered by TWU agreements.

"We do not intend to permit anybody to make gypsies of our members in the transit system or force them to become journeymen bus workers begging for part-time work from line to line," the union leaders said.

The union leaders also charged that the Consolidated Edison Co. was moving to "grab the subway power plants, a plan it has cherished for the last 11 years."

Dixiegops Bow To AMA, Kill Social Security Boost

HOUSE DIXIEGOPS last week turned down a small increase in benefits to the 4.5 million Americans now drawing old age and survivors insurance and to the 60 million others eligible for future benefits.

Social security payments now range from a minimum of $20 a month for an individual to a top of $168 for a large family.

But the House—under last-minute lobbying pressure from the American Medical Association—turned down a proposal to up the benefits by 12.5% or not less than $5 a month.

The increase would have given pension recipients a little more leeway in meeting high living costs, and it would be financed out of a present surplus in social security funds.

Until AMA came out against the measure, there was overwhelming support for its passage. Just before the vote, however, the doctors' lobby telegraphed members a phony charge that the bill, which makes no provision whatever for medical care, meant "socialized medicine."

Ninety-nine Republicans, representing the extreme right wing of the party, and 51 Democrats, chiefly Southerners, gave way before the pressure and voted to kill the bill; 98 Democrats, 51 Republicans and 1 Independent voted for it.

Although 10 more voted for passage than against it, the measure was defeated because it had reached the floor under a gag rule requiring a two-thirds vote for passage.

Leading supporter of the AMA viewpoint in the floor fight was Rep. Reed (R. N. Y.). He called it a "political bill" and shouted, "if you vote for this bill you are voting for socialized medicine."

THE ONLY basis for the AMA misrepresentation is a clause in the bill that "an individual shall not be considered to be under a disability unless he furnishes such proof of the existence thereof as may be required by regulations of the (Federal Security) Administrator," who was empowered to designate private physicians to determine disability examinations.

Without such a provision, there would be no way of preventing chiselers from applying for disability benefits. In fact, right-wing Republicans attacking this provision were somewhat embarrassed when Rep. Kean (R. N. J.) took full responsibility for the section under attack.

He said he thought it the best part of the bill and that "the medical associations are seeing burglars under the bed. This bill has nothing to do with socialized medicine."

Vainly warning his GOP colleagues that their opposition was "a mistake," Kean pointed out that the provision contested was almost identical with standard Veterans Administration procedures for medical examinations.

A move to allow the bill to be passed by a majority vote was also opposed by most Republicans, led by Rep. Halleck (R. Ind.), assistant minority leader.

Majority Leader McCormack (D. Mass.) called this "most unfortunate," adding:

"It was a most meritorious bill, but all one has to do these days is to holler 'socialism' and a lot of hysteria sets in upon situations that do not exist."

Rep. Yorty (D. Calif.) summed up the probable political effects of the Dixiegops' action by calling it "rather shocking to most people because there exists widespread support for Social Security improvements. The fact that the bill was opposed by so many Republicans indicates their growing willingness to openly fight all measures calculated to improve the economic security of wage earners."

He was supported in this view by at least one Republican. Kean said that "now, Mr. Truman can get up and yell that a vast majority of House Republicans voted against giving $5 to everybody."

President Truman first proposed the increased benefits in his State-of-the-Union message last January.

IWA Ends Solid Front, Gets Hike For 5000

THE SOLID FRONT of the logging and sawmill operators in five Pacific Northwest states against the striking CIO Woodworkers has begun to break.

Agreements have sent about 5000 of the 40,000 IWA members back to work in the walkout that began Apr. 29.

Approximately 1300 of those who have returned to their jobs are employed at the Simpson Logging Co., Shelton, Wash. The firm pulled out of the Lumbermen's Industrial Relations Committee to come to terms with the union.

IWA won an hourly wage increase of 7.5c, retroactive to Apr. 1; three additional holidays, an additional 2c an hour for the second shift, and a 6c an hour differential for the third shift, and two-week vacations after three years' service, instead of the previous five years.

The company agreed to continue to pay 7.5c an hour to the health and welfare fund, but the payment will no longer be subject to income tax, social security, workmen's compensation or unemployment compensation deductions.

The terms are substantially similar to those reached with the big Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. before the strike began. This firm employs 8000 workers.

THE Woodworkers are fighting another battle in the South, with 150 IWA members standing firm despite wholesale arrest of strikers.

Nine IWA strikers at the Snively Grove Co., Waycross, Ga., have been arrested. Seven of this group were arrested twice, first on disorderly practice charges and again on misdemeanor charges.

On the first charge each striker was fined $27.50, and trial on the second charge is pending. The union paid the fines on the first charges and posted $300 bond for each on the second charges.

Last Name Is Only Resemblance

Stalin, of all people, has been beaten up by the Communists.

His first name is not Joseph, but Bernard. He's not Russian, but French. He's not a dictator, but a dock worker. And he's not a Communist, but a member of the anti-Communist Force Ouvriere.

It was the fact that he isn't a Communist, of course, that won him the beating at the hands of the Red goons. But Stalin, who lives in Rouen and was left with a badly scarred face, sued the Red-dominated General Confederation of Labor for damages and was awarded 15,000 francs, or about $45.

URW Opens Wage Parleys At Goodrich

THE CIO Rubber Workers will kick off negotiations with the Big Four rubber companies June 9, when contract talks begin at Cincinnati with B. F. Goodrich Co.

URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster last week said the demands will be based on the union's economic program for 1952, adopted in Cleveland on Mar. 18.

The program calls for an "equitable" wage increase to "preserve and improve living standards and to give workers a share in the rising productivity and prosperity of the rubber and allied industries."

Other demands are full union shop contracts, extension and improvement of pension and insurance benefits, a 30-day wage reopening provision and improvement of various "fringe" benefits.

Goodrich and Firestone are the only Big Four firms whose contracts with the union do not provide for a full union shop. The present pacts with the two firms authorize modified union shops.

Full union shop clauses are in practically all other contracts with URW, including the other two of the Big Four, Goodyear Tire and Rubber, and U. S. Rubber.

URW represents 17,000 workers at Goodrich plants at Akron, O.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Cadillac, Mich.; Clarksville, Tenn.; Oaks, Pa.; Miami, Okla., and Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Arbiters' Group Restates Neutral Position On WSB

THE AMERICAN Arbitration Association—under CIO criticism last month for criticism of the Wage Stabilization Board—has reaffirmed its "neutral and impartial position" and expressed regrets over misunderstanding.

In late April, CIO Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg rapped the association—which provides neutral arbitrators and tribunals for labor-management disputes and commercial work—for "biased and unfair" criticism of the WSB.

The AAA's editorial had suggested that an all-public board, rather than one on which labor, management and the public were equally represented, might have done better in the steel dispute.

J. Noble Braden, executive vice-president of the AAA, wrote to Goldberg last week that the "Association deeply regrets that any comment was made on the WSB recommendation in the steel dispute." He added that the editorial was intended solely as a discussion of tripartite arbitration, without reference to the steel case.

Lest We Forget . . . Little Steel Strike Massacre, Memorial Day, 1937.

10 Cops For Every Picket—That's Life In Newark

FOR TWO YEARS, the Essex-West Hudson (N.J.) CIO Council went to the Newark City Commission's public hearing on the budget and told the city fathers that by comparison with other cities of the same size, they were spending too much money.

It didn't work.

So this year Joel R. Jacobson, executive secretary of the CIO Council, which represents 35,000 Newark members, tried another tack. He produced a set of 15 tables, based on U. S. Census Bureau statistics, showing that it costs too much to run Newark even when compared with the 20 largest cities in the country. Newark had a 1950 population of 438,776.

"Newark is now very definitely in the big leagues," he testified. "There is no longer any point in studying Newark's problems with cities of comparable size.

"There is no point, because in every single major category of taxation and expenditures, Newark has far exceeded all cities in its own class.

"The CIO has therefore made an adaptation for this big-league status of our community. We're not going to bother with the little fish. We are going to concern ourselves solely with those communities in the United States which are larger than Newark . . ."

Jacobson's figures showed that Newark was right up there with the big boys in every classification but one. That was the amount of money spent for recreation. In this classification it ranked 20th—only Houston, Tex., spent less.

Jacobson discussed each table in detail but reserved his finest fire for the Police Dept. Newark has 1395 police employes and stands 14th among the top 21 cities—with more cops than Buffalo, Kansas City, Minneapolis and other larger communities.

It has one police department employe for every 315 residents. The proportion is exceeded only by Boston and is far more than the country's four largest cities—New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Los Angeles.

"From this record," said Jacobson, "one would assume that there were sufficient cops on the payroll to perform their legitimate functions.

"Our experience with the Newark Police Dept. seems to substantiate an entirely opposite view. If you were to approach any CIO member at random and ask when he last saw a Newark cop, the odds are excellent he would tell you it was the last time he was on strike.

"I remember one particular evening last winter, when Newark was at a complete standstill for four or five hours because of an eighth of an inch of ice. There wasn't a cop to be seen.

"The Director of Public Safety himself was at the corner of Washington and Spruce sts., trying to untangle an awful mess, but it seems to me that the Director is not required to direct traffic, but that the policemen assigned to work under him are.

"Where were the cops then? I'm sure they must have been congregating on some picket line somewhere, because when a strike situation arises, the picture is quite different."

Jacobson cited two specific cases.

"On four successive mornings during the recent telephone strike," he said sarcastically, "the number of cops assigned to the picket line in front of the main office of the N. J. Bell Telephone Co. outnumbered the pickets by as much as 10 to 1.

"Well, it is well-known that N. J. Bell employs nothing but vicious female anarchists and the two girls who were on the picket line certainly presented a clear and present danger to the welfare of the City of Newark. So the riot squad was on hand to 'protect' us.

"There is further evidence that better planning of assignments is required. Just two weeks ago, the CIO picket lines in front of the Anheuser-Busch plant consisted of four pickets. I, personally, counted 28 police officers, four horses, one police car and one inspector.

"However, the week previous when over 100 goons were heckling and abusing the CIO pickets—at the behest of the company, of course—and conducting one of the most massive scabbing operations this city has ever seen, and when the patience of the pickets was being sorely tried, there were two cops on the picket line. To this day, I don't understand how a major riot was averted.

"It is very difficult for the CIO to understand why the Newark Police Dept. pushes and shoves pickets around unnecessarily on peaceful picket lines, but permits company-inspired goons to harass and abuse pickets."

Morse Seizure Proposal Hit By Carey At Senate Hearing

THE MORSE BILL authorizing seizures in case of management-labor disputes threatening national emergencies has more bad points than good, the CIO told the Senate Labor Committee last week.

"To sum up our general position with regard to this bill," CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey told the committee, "we think its disadvantages outweigh by far its desirable provisions."

The bill provides that if the President proclaims that a national emergency is threatened because of a work stoppage in "a vital industry which seriously affects the security" of the country, a strike may be halted by an injunction and the government may seize and operate the enterprise.

SUCH a seizure could not last more than 60 days after an emergency board reports, unless Congress so provides; or Congress could cancel seizure within 10 days.

An emergency board named by the President would make findings and recommendations consistent with wage stabilization policies. During the period of seizure the government could negotiate a settlement on the basis of such recommendations. The remedies provided are in addition to those in the Taft-Hartley Act.

Carey cited four general principles that should guide Congress in seeking a solution for the "so-called national emergency strike problem."

He said the government should stay out of the picture if possible, and that if it has to get in, it should not get in any deeper than it has to; government intervention should be fair to both sides; the process should not be so rigid that either side could tell which would gain by its operation, and the Wage Stabilization Board should be the "emergency board."

"As to the first of these," he said, "it does seem to me that the test set out in the bill of a 'national emergency' threatened by a work stoppage 'in a vital industry which seriously affects the security of the United States' is about as tight a formula as could be used, supposing that some national emergency procedure of some sort is to be established.

"I am sure we are all aware, however, that no matter how restrictive the statutory formula may be, there will always be a tendency toward utilization of the procedure in cases which are not really within the formula . . .

"Let us now look at the second branch of this question, that is, at whether the extent of the government intervention would be held to the minimum . . .

"Far from restricting the scope of government intervention to a minimum, it seems to me that the proposed bill would expand it to a maximum . . .

"I come now to the question of the relative fairness of the proposed procedure to union and employer.

"It seems to me that the bill would in this regard be some improvement over Taft-Hartley, in that it would provide procedures which could be used to bring pressure for a settlement to bear upon either the union or the employer or both, instead of only on the union as under Taft-Hartley.

"Even under this bill, however, the cards would still be stacked prettly heavily against the union . . .

"WE COME now to the third general principle, that is that any national emergency strike remedy should be sufficiently flexible so that neither party to a dispute can be sure in advance that the remedy will in any given case work to that party's advantage.

"I believe that the bill does satisfy this criterion to a substanial degree. However, while I agree that this bill's remedies are flexible, I also think, as I have indicated, that its remedies are stacked rather against labor, so that it would put labor under greater pressure than it would the employer to bargain collectively and to reach agreement . . .

"My fourth and final prescription . . . was that the government should employ a board with power to make recommendations for settlement. I added that during any period of wage stabilization this board should be the same body as that which handles wage stabilization.

"This bill would utilize emergency boards with power to recommend settlements in disputes. However, while this bill is not absolutely clear on the point, it seems to me to contemplate the use of ad hoc boards rather than of a permanent board or, in particular, of the Wage Stabilization Board.

"In that respect, we regard this bill as unsatisfactory."

New Injunction Bill In Hopper

Sen. O'Conor (D. Md.) thinks unions should have the right to strike, but shouldn't be allowed to use it.

He introduced an amendment to the Taft-Hartley Act which would require, rather than permit, the President to invoke its anti-union injunction proviso in the steel management strike and in future major disputes. And like T-H, the amendment "recognizes" a union's "right to strike"—at least in words.

CIO Urges WSB Act On Productivity Boosts

THREE CIO spokesmen urged the Wage Stabilization Board last week to issue a general regulation on productivity wage increases.

Pres. James B. Carey of the CIO Electrical Workers told the board that action on productivity wage increases is "long overdue" and that the long delay has created "only confusion."

Carey, who is also secretary-treasurer of the CIO, declared that the 18-month delay is "giving employers an excuse to refuse to bargain on wage increases because they claim they are not approvable under WSB regulations." His statement was presented by David Lasser, IUE research director.

Productivity improvements "cannot be segregated into air-tight industry compartments," Carey said. He outlined four major reasons for a board decision.

1. To continue the improvements in our national standards of living.

2. To enable workers to share in improvements in technology.

3. To provide workers with a sense of justice and equity in the distribution of the products they produce.

4. To provide workers with the purchasing power to buy back the goods they produce.

Nathaniel Goldfinger, CIO associate director of research, also called for prompt WSB action on the regulation.

He said a policy should be formulated against the background of rapidly rising productivity and widespread public recognition that workers have a right to share in the fruits of increasing productivity.

"Workers and their unions have negotiated productivity wage increases of one type or another in the past," he said. "A WSB regulation to make approvable wage adjustments based on the economy's rising output per manhour will merely give formal recognition to a widespread practice.

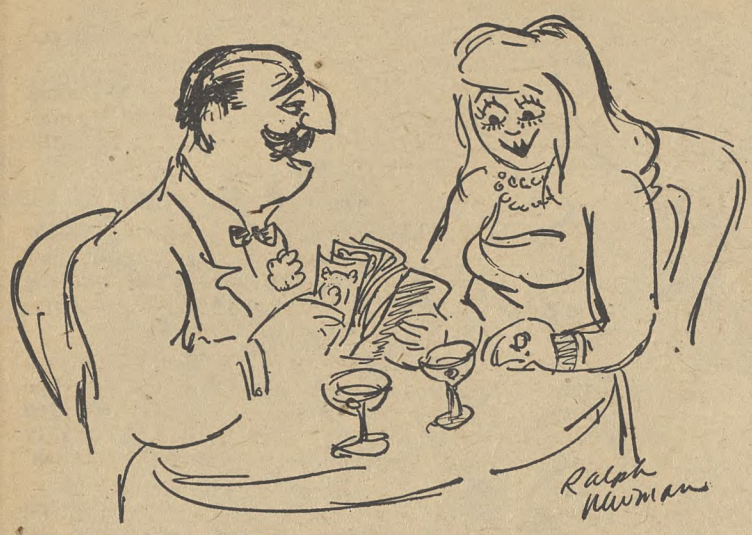
"It would be a permissive regulation, not a mandatory one. But it would give workers and their unions an opportunity to negotiate and obtain board approval of productivity wage adjustment provisions in collective bargaining contracts."

Vice Pres. John W. Livingston of the CIO Auto Workers urged WSB to institute immediately a wage increase policy "as a realistic and necessary part" of its program.

Livingston, who formerly was a labor member of WSB, said that "nearly every major management" in the auto industry has gone on record with WSB for approving payment for better productivity.

'Horsemeat' Congress Axes Price Curb Law

HOLD ON to your hats! Living costs of American families—which for months have been close to an all-time high—will go "still higher" if plans of the Dixiegop majority to butcher the Defense Production Act are pushed through Congress. And the cost of higher prices to each family, Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall warned last week, will be $300 a year.



"Unfortunately, all this money hasn't much buying power these days."

The legislative threat to wage and living standards now is a major issue in Congress.

With the present weak anti-inflation law expiring on June 30, the Senate late last week began considering a bill approved by its Banking Committee which weakens it still further.

The scales being used by the 82nd "Horsemeat" Congress are heavily weighted against consumers, and it is clear that only drastic revision—which appears doubtful—could prevent a new round of price boosts.

As its first order of business, the Senate was to vote on a motion by Sen. Dirkson (R. Ill.) to kill both price and wage controls entirely.

This vote was scheduled out of its usual order so that, if Dirksen's move succeeds, the Senate won't have to consider the many weakening amendments to the economic control sections of the Defense Production Act tacked on to the continuing legislation.

The House Banking Committee was told by Arnall that if price controls are allowed to die, prices will soar "still higher" for the housewife, the farmer and the armed services.

"I tell you right now that if you do not extend controls you will have higher prices for milk, for bread, the popular cuts of meats, for potatoes, for cigarets, and for a large number of other grocery items," Arnall declared.

He warned that if controls are lifted "prices of farm machinery and fertilizer will go up" and "the armed services will have to pay more for the things they buy." Since OPS suspended ceilings on 16 commodities last month, he said, 15 of them have jumped 20 to 30%.

Arnall urged rejection of the "dangerously crippling" amendments proposed by lobbies for the oil, fresh fruit, vegetable and other industries. He assailed as "unrealistic" the eight-month extension of wage-price controls approved by the Senate Banking Committee, saying that would not give the new Congress time next year for adequate consideration of a further extension.

Arnall also warned that the amendment which would require ceiling prices to be raised to the levels prescribed by state minimum price laws "would raise ceiling prices substantially and unnecessarily" and have "very serious consequences."

Here are some important developments in the price situation:

1. New food prices are coming because of requirements of the present loophole-ridden law. OPS was scheduled to issue a new regulation, effective this week, boosting retail prices of canned meats and vegetables and frozen foods by several cents on each item. The boosts will increase the margin of grocers' markups.

2. The present figures of the Bureau of Labor Statistics cost-of-living index, according to Arnall, are at the highest post-war peak. The last BLS index figures was 188.7, a shade under the previous record, but that figure for Apr. 15 has been outdistanced by subsequent price increases.

3. The index of prices paid by farmers has reached a new record high.

4. A recent study by the BLS showed that 86% of all items on the consumers' price list were selling within 5% of their all-time high, with 58% actually at the point and 80% within 2% of that peak. Only 8% were 10% or more below the high mark.

5. The peak of defense spending has not yet been reached, and there will probably be increased pressures on prices when this point comes.

6. Widespread cases of violations of price ceilings and black market operations are pending in the courts.

In the last week alone, 35 injunctive and treble damage actions were filed in U. S. courts by the Justice Dept. for OPS. A total of $330,873 was sought in the seven damage cases involved.

West Coast fruit growers and canners were reported to be planning a "destroy-food strike" to keep prices up. Asparagus is selling below last year's level, so the plan is to cut production by halting the season a month early.

Auto insurance rates are scheduled to go up roughly 20%, freight rates have gone up 16%, and the price of copper has been boosted 6c a pound on the world market. Utility rates also have risen, and the oil industry is actively working for an amendment to the controls act that would take all petroleum products out from under price ceilings.

These are some of the reasons behind Arnall's flat prediction to the committee that living costs for the average American family probably will increase another $300 this coming year.

CIO Tells Crippling Danger In Fulbright Amendment

BILLIONS of dollars of government contracts would be excluded from the fair labor protections of the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act each year if the Fulbright "Open Market" Amendment to the Defense Production Act should win Senate approval.

This is indicated by a tabulation just completed by the CIO Committee on Fair Labor Standards, which estimates that in about half of the contracts awarded, the extent of open-market purchases of any commodity amounts to 70%. In nearly all other cases, the amount of such purchases is estimated to be somewhere between 30% and 70%.

Only 5316 of the 57,493 contracts totalling more than $10 billion which were awarded in fiscal 1951, for example, involved less than 30% open-market purchases, the committee said.

The amendment sponsored by Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.) as a rider to the Defense Production Act has already been approved by the Senate Banking Committee. Although attached to a temporary bill, it would make this drastic abridgement of the coverage of the Walsh-Healey Act a permanent law, and seriously threaten minimum wage and labor standards throughout the country.

Runaway Rents Peril Defense, CIO Warns

THE EFFECTIVENESS of the real estate and landlord lobbies in wrecking real rent controls and public housing programs was named last week by the CIO National Housing Committee as "the greatest single inflationary pressure in our economy."

Testifying before the House Banking Committee on the need for stronger rent control provisions in the Defense Production Act extension, Leo Goodman, committee secretary, hit particularly at the Critical Areas Advisory Committee for its failure to carry out the will of Congress on rent controls.

"The committee has proved itself a complete bottleneck to the successful operation of Public Law 96 which Congress passed last year," Goodman said.

Goodman cited a large number of individual cases to show that most of the vital defense production areas which needed rent controls and sought the "critical area" designation from the critical areas committee have been ignored. He reminded the Banking Committee that this was a denial of protection which Congress had clearly intended in passing the legislation.

READING from a report of the Aircraft Production Council showing that the failure to meet housing needs was one of the underlying reasons for World War II production failures, Goodman laid present failures to meet production schedules at the critical areas committee doorstep. The committee was appointed by former Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson.

He suggested that Congress should name a new committee composed of the Defense Mobilizer, the Secretary of Defense and the Rent Stabilizer to be responsible for "critical area" designations.

Such a designation is needed before federal rent controls can be established in a community. The present committee has denied such a designation to almost all large industrial cities, Goodman pointed out.

Strong support for Goodman's proposal was indicated in the committee. Rep. Cole (R. Kans.) told Goodman that he agreed completely with him about the failure of the critical areas committee.

Meanwhile, the Conference on Discrimination in Housing recognized CIO leadership in the fight against housing segregation at its fourth annual meeting in New York.

The CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination and the CIO National Housing Committee participated in the conference, which was marked by the first affiliation of a CIO international union, the American Newspaper Guild.

Housing Unit Total Upped

THE SENATE Appropriations Committee last week increased the number of new dwelling units that can be started next year under the public housing program from the 5000 limit set by the House to 45,000. The President had asked for 135,000 units.

Following the committee's action, the CIO National Housing Committee protested that even 45,000 units are inadequate to take care of projects already approved but unable to be built because of the 50,000 limit set last year.

Safeway Swatted By FTC For Price Shenanigans

SAFEWAY STORES, which went to court recently to win the right to boost food prices still higher for consumers, has been manipulating illegal price cuts from the producers of groceries it buys.

That is the charge lodged against Safeway, and also the Kroger Co., another big chain, by the Federal Trade Commission last week. The FTC said that the two food chains, second and third largest in the country, are guilty of violating the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, by finagling illegal and unfair price cuts and discounts from their suppliers.

The lower prices charged Safeway and Kroger provide "substantial competitive advantages" over other food chains and stores, the commission pointed out. It is probable that these price cuts enable the two recipients to increase their relative volume of sales or profits, or both, the complaint said.

According to the FTC, the chains have used their purchasing agents to obtain knowledge of sellers' prices in grocery products markets. The price discriminations in their favor, the commission charges, are unlawful because Safeway and Kroger undertook the transactions with knowledge that the prices were lower than those paid by their competitors.

The products on which the chains are accused of taking favorable price differentials include canned goods, fruit juices, bakery products, dairy products, spices, condiments and sugar. The discriminations were said to range up to about 15% or more of the higher prices paid by competitors.

THE complaint said the lower prices which producers gave them enabled Safeway and Kroger to spend more on advertising, fixtures, displays and other services and facilities to promote sales. This tends to create a monopoly and kill free competition, the commission believes.

It noted that each chain has about 2000 retail outlets throughout the country and said each does a business of a billion dollars a year.

After a long fight with the Office of Price Stabilization on its demand for higher price ceilings, Safeway recently won a U.S. court decision permitting it to raise food prices under the Capehart Amendment. The effect was to extend the inflationary effects of this section of the price law to all retailers and wholesalers.

Safeway's ability to hike prices under the judgment may, however, be shortlived. The Senate Banking Committee has written a provision into legislation extending the Defense Production Act which would specifically limit the application of the Capehart Amendment to manufacturers only.

Big Money's Lobby

When a visitor points to a palatial home in Washington and asks one of the natives, "Who lives there?", the answer is apt to be: "Oh, some rich lobbyist, probably."

Like many wisecracks, it has more than a grain of truth—sobering truth.

For lobbying is big business—financed mostly by Big Business for Big Business. Last year, at least $9 million—and probably a great deal more—was spent to influence the members of Congress.

Leading the list of spenders, according to Congressional Quarterly—a non-partisan publication—was the American Farm Bureau Federation. It spent $1,595,000. The AFBF is largely dominated by rich farmers and the proprietors of "factory farms." When it talks, it sounds just like the National Association of Manufacturers of the Chamber of Commerce.

The Committee for Constitutional Government—which hates labor and the Fair Deal—spent $773,000 for lobbying purposes last year. CCG's executive secretary has refused to tell Congressional inquirers the names of many corporations and rich individuals who bought large amounts of "literature" from the Committee for wide-scale distribution.

Third place spending honors went to the American Medical Association, which laid out $450,000 to lobby against such measures as health insurance.

These are the free-spending leaders of a great number of corporation and special interest lobbies that have helped to kill practically every forward-looking social and economic measure in recent years.

They provide good reasons why every CIO member should give a buck—and some of his time—to PAC, to help elect a Congress that will ignore the pressures of the tremendously well-heeled special interest lobbies.

Helping Our Neighbors

A majority of the House of Representatives seems to have become infatuated with the sound of its own words. That's about the only reasonable explanation for the whopping slash in the appropriation for mutual security help to other nations that has been voted by the House. In the Senate, wiser heads prevailed, and the fund cuts will be much less.

The net effect of these cuts of well over a $1.5 billion is to imperil the job of building military defenses and improving living standards in Europe and non-Communist Asia. That's a difficult job, and a delicate one. The meat-ax approach of the Congressional "economy" bloc is not the way to handle it.

Trade union and government observers who have been studying the economic health of Europe have been warning us for months that the economic help started under the Marshall Plan cannot be abandoned, or sacrificed to the compelling needs of military preparation.

A slashing cut in foreign aid is not the way to buck up our friends and neighbors overseas.

The economy bloc may well ask itself: is it better to save a billion dollars, or to have reliable friends in other democracies prepared to resist aggression? The American people, we think, have a better answer than the wasteful economizers in Congress.

Capital Conga Line

Making Sure Of Our Jobs

By Dewey Anderson and Associates, Public Affairs Institute

CURRENT DEFENSE plans provide that by the end of 1954, our mobilization base will have been built. Thereafter we can expect defense outlays to be substantially reduced.

This welcome prospect ushers in other problems, some of which may require early action. Private business has estimated that expenditures for fixed capital in the form of plant and equipment will drop by $7 billions by the time the defense buildup is completed. Government defense expenditures are expected to be reduced by $20 billions. Together, public and private expenditures may drop more than $25 billions between 1952 and 1955.

We do not predict that such a drop in demand will inevitably lead to serious dislocations or depression. We have the brains and the will to make the transition from a defense-weighted economy to one underpinning peace and continued prosperity. Here are some specific suggestions for doing so:

1. Tax Reduction. We have willingly paid tremendously high taxes to provide the costs of defense on a "pay as we go basis" to prevent runaway inflation and the pile-up of our national debt. When these conditions no longer prevail taxes should be reduced to provide a source of additional purchasing power.

The first tax cuts should come in the levies on the masses of people in the $5000 and under income group. Here are located the largest bloc of potential purchasers whose lack of income is the only deterrent to their immediately going into the market to buy and here is the mass of people who have been hardest hit by the imposition of the combined defense income and excise tax levies.

The same good case for early tax relief cannot be made for established and larger corporations and upper income groups. Even the taxes required by the defense expenditure program have not prevented their accumulation of large volumes of savings and the maintenance of record levels of investment. In 1951, total corporate securities offerings were 10% higher than in the lower-taxed peacetime year 1948; proceeds from the sales of common stocks were 97% above 1948; while preferred stock proceeds rose 72%.

2. Extension of Unemployment Compensation. In any drop of economic activity that may follow curtailment of defense expenditures, increased unemployment benefits takes a high priority as a means of supporting purchasing power.

How many Americans know the low level of such benefits today? Workers rendered jobless receive on the average less than one-third their weekly pay for periods ranging from as low as 12 weeks in some states up to 26 weeks in the highest states. After they exhaust their benefits, they have only home relief to look forward to. It is essential to provide for increasing the benefits paid and the length of the benefit period.

3. Public Works. Many people think the primary way to cushion any post-defense slump should be through the expansion of needed public works.

The big problem here is to have enough economically justifiable projects ready to go as required to maintain employment when needed. The Bureau of the Budget reports that the reserve of public works authorized to be undertaken after 1953 amounts only to $16 billions. To be sufficiently forehanded, action to enlarge this reserve should be started now.

4. Wage-Price-Profit Adjustments. Something more has to be added to the preceding list of measures to spark the economy in a post-defense emergency. The relationships between wages, prices and profits have to be examined constantly and adjustments made whenever such action is required.

It appears, at present, that profit margins have been widened while "real" wages fall. In June, 1950, the average gross weekly pay for a factory worker was $58.85. In December, 1951, it was $67.40. Higher prices and two tax increases more than wiped out the purchasing power of the $8.55 weekly wage increase. The unmarried worker was left with 77c less purchasing power per week, and the married worker with three dependents no better off, as compared with June, 1950.

On the other hand business profit margins have risen considerably since June, 1950. The corporate profit rate from current operations (before taxes), increased 14.9% per unit of industrial output between the first half of 1950 and the second half of 1951. "Real" after tax profits from total current operations rose 10.5% over the same period.

The Steel Case—

Morse Gives Facts On How Press Slants News

THE U. S. PRESS has engaged in "very slanted reporting" on the steel dispute, says Sen. Morse (R. Ore.).

And he has the facts and figures to back up his claim.

Morse said the daily press accounts of the six-month steel deadlock are, with few exceptions "one of the saddest failures of American journalism in my recollection."

He told a recent hearing of the Senate Labor Committee that "the press, radio and television failed to meet their public trust. They are all tarred with the same brush."

The Oregon Senator, long a liberal Republican, specifically charged the press, radio and TV news reports with ignoring "the seriousness of the situation" which prompted President Truman to order U. S. seizure of the steel mills as a defense-vital industry. Instead, said Morse, their accounts concentrated on "the political overtones."

Morse's brief remarks at the committee hearing brought loud protests from Wright Bryan, head of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, and "we-didn't-do-it" editors on several of the big dailies.

Morse bided his time, asked Library of Congress staff members to check five of the nation's biggest dailies. Then he presented to the Senate his figures—and they showed press slanting of the news in black and white.

Three major news developments in the steel situation were checked. They were Judge David Pine's lower court decision that seizure was unconstitutional and illegal, the U. S. Appeals Court ruling staying Pine's decision, and the congressional testimony of Defense Sec. Robert Lovett on the urgency of steel production.

The representative papers surveyed were the New York Times, Herald Tribune and World Telegram & Sun, and the Washington Star and Post.

Here are the figures:

- The Pine decision—which upheld the big steel companies all the way—got a total of 979 column inches of news stories in the five dailies.
- The Appeals Court ruling—which cast some doubts on Pine's opinion—got a total of 462½ inches, about half that of the lower court's ruling.
- But when Sec. Lovett testified before the Senate Labor Committee, the five big dailies (one of which boasts "All The News That's Fit To Print") gave him the brushoff, for a total of exactly five column inches. That included a paragraph or two in three of the dailies, none in the other two.

Yet Lovett's testimony, as Morse told the Senate, was that a loss of steel production now, "in case of a war with Russia within the next year, would have been translated into a loss of thousands of American lives."

"That was the emergency which faced the President of the U. S. at the eleventh hour of the steel crisis," Morse pointed out.

"When the American people understand the real situation, then their attitude will be quite different as to the nature of the emergency. Then they will come to understand that the President sought to protect the security of this nation . . ."

(Not mentioned by Morse was the fact that when Charles E. Wilson, deposed head of defense mobilization, blasted the steel union and government stabilization policies, it received page one treatment in the New York Times.

(When Roger Putnam and Ellis Arnall, stabilization director and price control director respectively, answered Wilson with an array of facts at the same hearings during the next two days, their testimony was printed on pages 46 and 47 of the bulky New York Times.)

The Oregonian said the defense offered by various editors was another indication that the press has "a psychological complex of infallibility."

Apart from the news columns, Morse added, "much of the newspaper comment seemed to follow remarkably the content of full-page ads paid for by the steel companies."

(And those full-page ads can be written off as "business expenses," deducted from their corporation income taxes by the big steel firms. That means the U.S. public generally, including members of the CIO Steelworkers, will have to make up the difference.)

Race Bias Violence Gains, 3 Groups Say

THREE NATIONAL organizations which make civil rights their business reported last week that there was a marked increase last year in violence caused by racial and religious bias.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the American Jewish Congress, in their fourth annual joint report on civil rights, said that there was a steady increase in 1951 of "violence designed to maintain intergroup inequity."

And the Anti-Defamation League of B'Nai B'rith found that violence springing from racial and religious bias was worse last year than at anytime since 1941.

"Too many in positions of power and authority refuse to recognize—or fear the implications of the recognition—that our ability to inspire the friendship of millions throughout the world is inseparably linked to our capacity to demonstrate unceasing progress in human relations," said Dr. David W. Petegorsky, AJC executive director, and Walter White, NAACP executive secretary.

The report cited as examples of racial and religious violence riots in Cicero, Ill.; the bombings, killings and vandalism in Florida, and police brutality and slayings in New York, Birmingham and other cities.

The survey found several reasons for the lack of civil rights progress.

It said "some in positions of influence and leadership felt sincerely that to press controversial issues of a domestic character would jeopardize the achievement of unity on international policy."

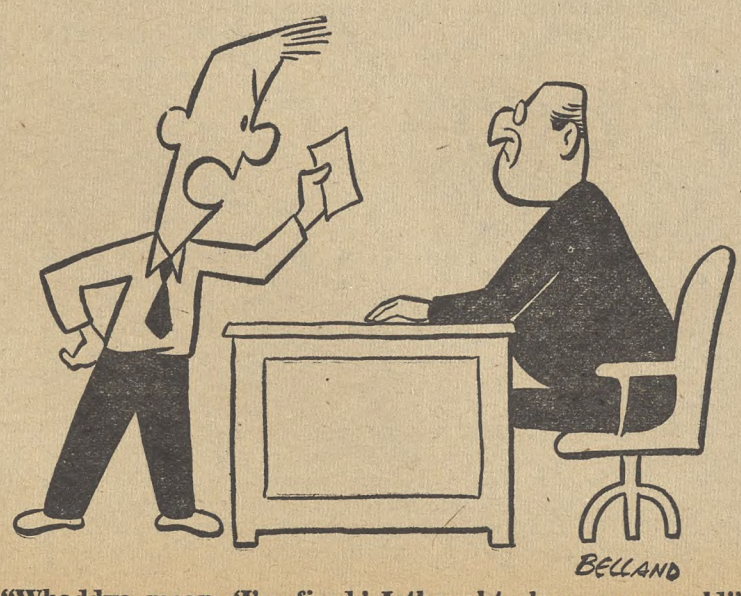
Many other persons "traditionally hostile to the extension of full equality seized that argument as a pretext for evading decisions on vital issues" in the area of civil rights, it stated.

The survey found "excesses in many loyalty investigations and the unreasonable character of gress, governorships and state legislation . . . have intensified the tendency to identify support of unpopular or controversial issues with subversion."

The failure to enact civil rights legislation was attributed to the defeat of many supporters of anti-discrimination bills in the 1950 elections for the Congress, governorships and state legislatures, and to changes in the personnel of the U. S. Supreme Court.

The survey noted "the Court has evaded or rejected many opportunities to give new and deepened vitality to the constitutional requirements of equal protection of the laws."

The Anti-Defamation League report, prepared by Benjamin Epstein, director, and Arnold Forster, chief counsel, warned that injection of racial and religious issues may make the 1952 presidential campaign the dirtiest since the 1928 Smith-Hoover contest.



"Whaddya mean, 'I'm fired,' I thought slaves were sold!"

30 Pro-Baldanzi Locals Support TWUA, Reject AFL Split Move

THE SECESSION movement in the CIO Textile Workers led by George Baldanzi, former executive vice president, appeared to be losing steam last week.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve said that more than 30 affiliates who had opposed the administration at the recent TWUA Cleveland convention now have decided to remain in TWUA.

He said not a single move has been made in recent days to follow Baldanzi into the AFL Textile Workers and added that "perhaps we were overgenerous when we conceded earlier that 25,000 members might follow him."

In the key textile state of New Jersey, textile workers are standing firm with the CIO Textile Workers.

Carl Holderman, New Jersey CIO Council president and TWUA temporary state director, reported that less than 7% of TWUA's membership in New Jersey has voted to follow Baldanzi.

The 2000-member Botany Mills local and the 600-member Flintkote local in the Passaic area were the latest Jersey locals to back TWUA.

In other states, these were the latest developments among TWUA affiliates which previously supported Baldanzi:

Two locals and a joint board in Rhode Island voted to stay in TWUA.

In New York state, where not a single secession movement has developed, delegates to a TWUA national carpet conference reaffirmed their support of Rieve and issued an appeal to the only two carpet locals which have moved to secede.

Five locals in Pennsylvania voted unanimously to remain loyal to the CIO, and workers in five shops under jurisdiction of the Philadelphia Joint Board, reversed the latter's decision and voted to stay in TWUA.

In North Carolina, pledges of loyalty were received from eight locals which had previously supported Baldanzi. In South Carolina, the sole local to vote on secession decided to stay in TWUA.

The American Thread local in Dalton, Ga. voted to remain and unseated all pro-Baldanzi officers. Two other locals in the state gave assurances of loyalty to Rieve.

In Alabama, pledges of support were received from three big locals, Rieve said.

At Lawrence, Mass., the largest unit in the Greater Lawrence Joint Board, Local 227, unanimously voted condemnation at Baldanzi's efforts to split TWUA.

The current issue of TWUA's Textile Labor documented instances where the AFL union has thrown road blocks in the path of organized and unorganized textile workers.

CITING A four-week walkout last spring of woolen-worsted workers, Textile Labor charges that UTW, instead of helping the strikers "spent its time knifing them in the back."

At Morristown, Tenn., the paper said, the AFL group "practiced union-busting side by side with state police, the national guard and the American Enka Co." during the strike there in 1950.

The paper quotes Baldanzi as making the statement that "UTW is an inconsequential organization." On another occasion he declared:

"The record of UTW-AFL is well known to all. That organization never functioned in the interests of the workers, who never knew what democratic participation in the affairs of their organization meant until they joined the Textile Workers Union-CIO.

"TWUA gave the union back to the workers—there it belongs and there it will stay—a democratic organization in a democratic America."

Workers Pay For Open Shops

Here's why southern textile mill owners are fighting union organization:

A U. S. Labor Dept. report shows that cotton textile workers' wages in New England range from 18 to 34c an hour higher than in the southeastern states, where the mills are largely unorganized.

The differential was revealed in a survey of wages paid the industry's 391,000 workers, 85% of whom are employed in six southeastern states.

CIO In Panama: The Town's Name

Workers Bitter On Discrimination

(Second article of a series.)

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

PARAISO is a little town on the banks of the Panama Canal where several hundred of the CIO's five thousand members in the U. S. Zone live. The name means Paradise.

It was a warm but beautiful evening in late April when I visited the town with Local 900 Pres. Ed. Gaskin and other officials of the CIO union in the zone. The moon hung over the canal turning it into a huge band of antique silver, and beyond in the soft light, I could see the outline of lovely rolling hills etched against the sky.

Electric lights lit up rows of palms and some big mango trees growing along winding dirt roads that led to rambling wooden structures on stilts on the hillsides. The weird buildings looked like huge centipedes crawling across the slopes on their wooden legs.

A movie in the clubhouse theater was being shown and music floated through the open doors. A group of workers stood on the porch laughing and talking quietly. It was a peaceful and romantic scene, and that night Paraiso seemed to deserve its name.

But there are snakes in that paradise, as I found out every time I talked with the workers. Not that there need to be. A fraction of the zeal used in wiping out yellow jack and malaria in the early years when the canal was being built could get rid of them.

WHAT IS needed is a generous application of the principles of democracy. For it is racial discrimination and the indecently low wages based on it which poisons the lives of the Local Rate colored workers in the zone. Bitterness over this eats into their very marrow. It crops out whenever you talk to them about their jobs or their homes.

They are obsessed by it, they can't forget it. They run into it every time they turn around—when they shop, in segregated stores; when they go home, to segregated houses; when their children go to school, in segrated buildings; even when they die and are buried in segregated cemeteries.

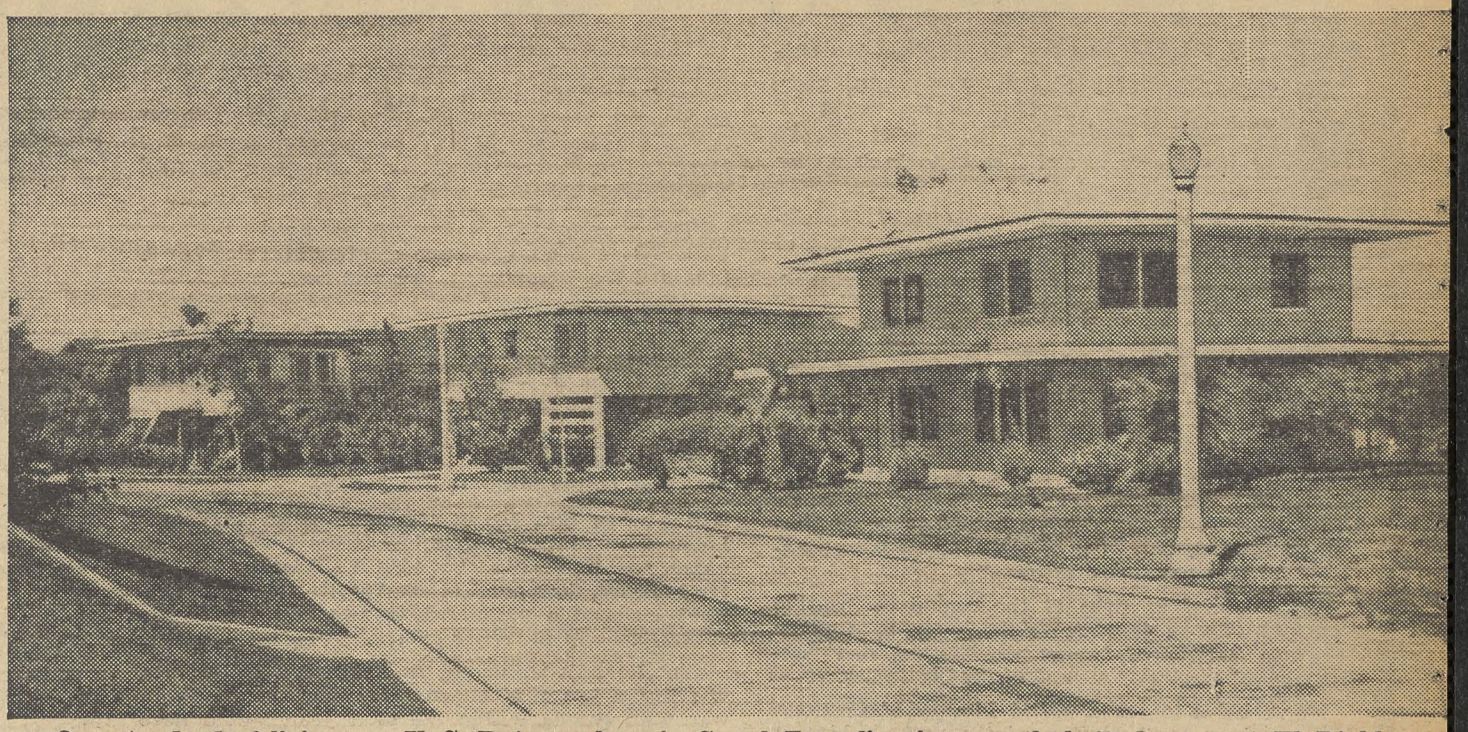
Bitterest of all, is the discrimination in pay. Their wages are far below the standard paid the white U. S. Rate workers in the zone, even when they do the same or similar job, or hold positions of responsibility as some of them do. The one job preference Local Rate workers get is employment on the dirtiest and most unpleasant work.

THE ONLY place discrimination does not apply is in prices. Local Raters will pay just as much for food and clothes they buy—in government-owned stores—as the U. S. Rate workers. Local Rate rents are cheaper, but that's because the majority of these workers live in crowded barrack apartments of slum quality that the U. S. workers would scorn.

Some new houses are being built for Local Raters—one of these developments was going up on a hillside at Paraiso—but they too are much inferior to those being built for the U. S. workers. Some of the CIO members I visited in their apartments spoke of this with mixed wistfulness and resentment. They take great pride in their homes, and would have enjoyed and appreciated, so much, some of the improvements and better fixtures that went into U. S. Rate houses only.

Sharper than a serpent's tooth are the stings to the pride and dignity of those in the undercrust of a caste system. The colored Canal Zone workers are a proud, sensitive and dignified people on the whole, noted for their dependability and strong sense of job responsibility.

I met and talked with scores of them, in their homes, at union meetings, at CIO headquarters—school teachers, commissary clerks, clubhouse manager, workers on the canal and the Panama Railroad—and one of the things that impressed me most was their fine sense of courtesy. I blushed to think how rudely Americans in the zone often treat them in return, how little appreciation they get for their outstanding services.



One standard of living . . . U. S. Rate workers in Canal Zone live in recently-built houses at El Diablo.

Here's a story I happened upon that night at Paraiso which was told me casually. I was talking to Hylton Drew, steward at the Paraiso clubhouse about the club activities. There used to be more of them, he said, but a good part of the club employes had been put on an part-time and library hours had to be cut, and other club services curtailed—to reduce expenses, the Administration said.

THE CLUB sells refreshments, magazines, cigarettes, etc., has game tables, and an adjoining movie theater—admission charge 15c for adults, 10c for children. All clubhouse receipts go into Uncle Sam's coffer, as does the money from all other enterprises in the zone.

While talking to Drew, I happened to notice that he was missing a finger, and I asked if he had lost it in some machine on an earlier canal job. No, he said, he'd lost the finger about a year or more ago when the clubhouse was held up by three masked bandits. One of the robbers had a gun and it went off in the scuffle, Drew said. He didn't go into particulars.

Later I learned some of the facts Drew modestly neglected to mention. E. A. Robertson, Local Rate manager at the Paraiso clubhouse since 1944, told them. Born in St. Vincent, British West Indies, Robertson came to the zone in 1916 and has had continuous service with the clubhouse division.

It was Robertson who was held up that night—Feb. 9, 1951, he said it was. He was alone in the office when the bandits appeared and demanded the clubhouse receipts. When Robertson refused to hand them over, one of the men struck him with a gat or weapon of some kind, dislocating his shoulder and injuring his arm.

At that moment, Drew, who was passing on the outside of the screened front of the clubhouse on his way home, saw what was happening and rushed inside to the manager's aid, grappling with the thief who held a gun. When the gun went off, the bandits fled—without the receipts. (Two of them were caught later and are now serving long terms in the zone prison at Gamboa.)

Drew and Robertson risked their lives to save the clubhouse money—all in the line of duty. What was their reward? Robertson spent three weeks in the hospital—on three-fourth's pay, under the standard injury compensation provision—and stayed home a few weeks more convalescing.

WHEN HE returned to work, he was advanced to the next grade in pay—$10 a month more—an increase that he was entitled to automatically in a short time. His pay now is $1.44 an hour, Robertson said. (A clubhouse manager is in one of the limited number of higher paid groups.)

Drew also got three-fourth's pay, injury compensation, for 45 weeks—no promotion, not even a premature automatic one.

Oh yes, the men did get a letter from the Zone Governor commending them for their bravery and loyalty to duty.

Neither of the two men said a word to indicate that they thought they should have been more generously rewarded. The implication is mine. They merely answered the questions I asked them, courteously and with calmness and dignity. It was only in the overtones of their replies that I could detect some irony.

Children from Red Tank school have some fun at Saturday games.

Schools One Of Better Features

GAMBOA is another one of the Canal Zone towns that has a very pleasing location. CIO members think it is the prettiest and best of all the colored centers. There are two towns here, as a matter of fact, side by side, the smaller one for the U. S. Rate workers, the other for Local Raters. As usual in the zone, there are two sets of everything—stores, schools, clubhouses, homes.

The zone Administration does not mention the big added expense this double system costs in its diatribes about the drastic need for economy. But arguments in defense of segregation emphasize that the Administration is following the social pattern of the Americans in the zone, maintaining that this is better for both groups.

The Local Rate town at Gamboa is in a huge green meadow, near the canal, with rolling hills, luxuriant tropical growth in the background. A big sports field lies in back of the clubhouse, and boys and girls were playing there the Saturday afternoon I visited the place.

Gaskin introduced me to the mild-mannered, kindly school principal—I didn't get his name—and we were shown through the school building. The rooms had all just been freshly painted and were clean and cheerful. The windows looked out on pleasant views. It seemed quite a nice place to go to school, with no overcrowding and plenty of space outside to play.

The schools are certainly one of the better features of the Zone Administration at present, if you overlook the fact that they are segregated, and that those for the white children are better.

But it does seem ironic that it is in the schools, where U. S. textbooks and methods are used, that the pupils learn about American standards of living and democratic ideals which are so badly violated in the zone.

Gamboa may have pleasant schoolrooms and look like a peaceful little town to live in, but everything is not as tranquil as it looks, the principal said. For one thing job opportunities for young people when they finish school are few and getting fewer as employment continues to drop in the zone.

Job tenure is long and there's a low ra

d 'Paradise'—But It's Far From That

And another standard . . . Typical of housing for Local Rate workers are these old barracks at Red Tank.

·labor turnover. Zone employes hang to their jobs, usually until they are re-ed on "disability relief," the only pen-n system the zone has at present.

Even the Administration admits that e monthly $10 minimum, $25 maximum nthly benefit is totally inadequate. It uld take an act of Congress to improve

Death or retirement of the old workers es not open up enough jobs to fill the nployment needs of the young people owing up. After they finish school, many them continue to live at home with eir families, but having no money and ttle to do, they grow restless and some-mes get into trouble.

It was at the outwardly peaceful, love-looking Gamboa where I was given a rsonal demonstration of the humiliating attern" of segregation some white U. S. ite workers follow in the zone.

Gaskin was showing me through the cal Rate commissary, which resembled combination chain grocery store and a ars Roebuck retail outlet. I had jotted wn some prices of staple food articles, d of men's, women's and children's thes to compare them with prices in e States. I'd also talked to a number of e colored clerks and section supervisors d was just on the point of leaving when was accosted by a sharp-faced little ite lady—the commissary manager—ho told me bruskly that I was not al-wed in the Local Rate store—I'd have go to the adjoining U. S. Rate store or white people).

T MADE no difference when Gaskin said I was not shopping but was merely visitor from the States looking around. e said sternly it was a violation of gulations for me to be in the Local Rate ore—I'd have to go to the U. S. Rate mmissary if I wanted to visit.

You can't shop in either a Local or U. S. te store without showing a card identi-ing you as a zone employe, so her only int in ordering me out must have been at I was violating the racial barrier, ough she did not admit it.

It was also at Gamboa that I had a dis-rbing talk with a CIO member employed a guard at the zone penitentiary nearby. B. Warner, who is treasurer of the ion's Gamboa chapter, has been a guard the zone prison for 27 years. He is a g, serious-faced man with a manner both gnified and friendly. (Gaskin said that arner was nicknamed "Shakespeare" be-use he was always quoting the bard.)

Warner told me that for years U. S. ite and Local Rate guards at the prison rked side by side in friendly association. hen, around 1942, the work week in the e was reduced from 48 to 40 hours—th no cut in take-home pay—but the dministration held that it did not apply to guards. Five years later, however, a court ruling on the case declared that guards were covered.

Whereupon the U. S. Rate guards were given five years' retroactive pay for the extra eight hours a week they had been working. But the Local Rate guards were not included and received no back pay.

"I'll never forget this injustice as long as I live," Warner said, his voice vibrating with bitter sadness, "never to my dying day."

House Needs More Than Pastel Paint

SATURDAY was the time that the CIO union's president, Gaskin, who is principal of the Local Rate elementary school at La Boca, was free. So it was another bright Saturday when he took me on one of my most interesting trips—across the isthmus 50 miles away to the Atlantic side of the zone.

Frank Thompson, ever busy chairman of Local 900's chapter at Balboa, drove us in the union's station wagon to see some Local Rate housing centers near Gatun and Colon—both new and old type.

Battleship gray is the prevailing color for houses in zone towns. The rows and rows of long, two-story gray buildings on stilts is one of the distinctive sights of the area. So it was a pleasant surprise to see the pastel colors of the houses curving along a circular paved road as we approached the newly built Rainbow City houses.

At first sight, the small one-story, two-family homes painted light green, pink, yellow and other shades resembled a "Levittown" or similar housing development in the States. Apparently something in the way of attractive modern housing for Local Rate workers was being done in the zone, I thought as we drew up in front and climbed out of the car.

Gaskin and Thompson knew some CIO members living in the new Rainbow houses, and we were courteously shown through their homes. The rooms were very tiny, as though every inch of space must be saved. The floors were cement. There was no glass in the rows of windows, which were merely screened.

A short distance away was the Atlantic, and we were told how storms from the ocean blew the rain inside the houses, ran down the walls and flooded the floor. Some of the tenants had improvised windows out of waterproof material to provide some kind of protection from the worst of the wind and water.

THE WALLS were rough, the outline of cement blocks showed through. The bedrooms were so small there wasn't room for much more than a bed. Everything was of the cheapest, shoddiest construction.

"Built like stalls for animals," said one tenant sourly.

Of course Rainbow City is a vast improvement over the old firetrap frame barracks but the point is it could easily have been so much better. It takes more than pastel-tinted paint to make good houses.

Rents are low—if you don't count the cost of electricity. This may run to $6 or $8 monthly if the tenant has an electric stove. (These can be rented from Uncle Sam for $1.30 a month—there is no gas—oil cooking stoves are used mostly.)

One worker who said he had six children and lived in one of the houses with two or three bedrooms, reported he paid $17 a month rent, plus $6 average electric bill, plus rent for electric stove and a few other extras. Another with a smaller place said he paid $13.75 plus utilities.

If Rainbow City turned out to be a sad disappointment, the home of Harold Rerrie, second vice-president of Local 900, who lives in one of the better old-type barrack-houses built on stilts, was a pleasant surprise. Rerrie, who was born in Jamaica, has been in the zone for 25 years. He is a clerk at the Commissary Division headquarters in New Hope, and makes 84c an hour.

Rerrie lives in one part of a two-family house with his wife, daughter and a grandmother. They pay $19.75 rent plus about $8 for electricity, and have their own electric stove. The fact that the Rerrie home was so spotlessly clean and comfortably furnished undoubtedly made it seem more attractive than it might have been otherwise.

EVEN THE open space under the house, with flowers growing in pots and comfortable chairs, looked cozy. These open basement-like spaces underneath the barrack-type houses on stilts are a common feature of zone housing. Here, in the shade, women wash their clothes, kids play and families sit and relax in the cool of the evening.

We visited a number of other barrack-type apartments that Saturday, the kind much more common in the zone—old frame structures put up during the early years of canal construction, some of them now in a sad state of deterioration. Families of nine or more were packed into three small dark rooms in some of the apartments we saw.

It isn't possible in such cramped quarters to keep sleeping and eating facilities separate. Every foot of available space must necessarily be used for sleeping. In one apartment I saw an ice box standing close beside a bed. Most of the homes we visited had a number of religious pictures hanging on the walls or standing on tables.

The marvel is that so many of these dark, jammed, tiny apartments are neat and clean. It's hard to see how the women manage it, especially in the midst of their endless clothes washing. Women scrubbing over washtubs is another very common sight in the zone.

FOR THESE old-type apartments, Local Rate workers pay rents ranging from around $7.50 to about $16 plus electricity costs. There are also "bachelors' quarters" as they are called, for single zone workers, some of which rent for $5.85 a month—or less with a room-mate.

In startling contrast to these rambling dilapidated old barracks are the neat middle-class apartment buildings and individual homes where the U.S. Rate workers live. There are some of the old-type buildings for the U.S. Raters but they are in much better condition than those the colored people live in.

Of course the U.S. Raters, or Zonites, as they are sometimes called, pay higher rents than the Local Rate workers, but they are not as much higher proportionately as their wages are in comparison to Local Rate pay. And in terms of rents in the States, theirs are very low indeed.

(Next: A look into the matter of how much income the Canal, the Panama Railroad and other government-owned facilities bring into the U.S. Treasury—and why they don't pay the zone workers better wages.)

Debate On McCarran Bill—

'A Great Record In The History Of The Senate'

ALTHOUGH the McCarran "Iron Curtain" Immigration bill was adopted by the Senate, the fight made against it by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) and Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) has been characterized by Sen. Morse (R. Ore.) as a "great record in the history of the Senate."

LEHMAN

We have opposed the McCarran bill because we believe it incorporates in the immigration, naturalization, and denaturalization policy of the United States certain factors which are dangerous not only to the security of our country but to the entire field of civil rights and the rights of citizens and aliens in our country.

The McCarran bill adds a host of new and arbitrary grounds for deportation. It permits the deportation of an alien convicted of even minor criminal offenses no matter how long he may have lived in the United States. An alien who had lived here for 20 years could be deported for a traffic violation, if in the judgment of the Attorney General he is undesirable. It is highly dangerous to grant such arbitrary power to any individual.

Under the McCarran bill the Attorney General would be given the right to exclude anyone for almost any cause, if in his opinion, the alien might commit some act 20 years hence which would be prejudicial. No legal appeal of any real consequence is provided.

The McCarran bill requires the Attorney General to deport any alien—and I emphasize this point—even though he had led a model life here for many years, should it be discovered that at the time of entry he was actually in an excludable class. Thus, had he entered the country in violation of a minor technicality, deportation would be mandatory even if the violation were due to error.

When the Filipinos were fighting nobly and bravely, and were dying by the scores of thousands under the United States flag on Bataan in 1942, we had passed a bill granting them the right to be naturalized, and abolishing race discrimination against them.

What would those noble heroes have thought if they had known that in this year of 1952 we here in the Senate, the greatest deliberative body in the world, a body that should be an example of democratic opinion, should be considering and debating for the first time new discriminations against them?

I shudder to think what those people, and others like them in the Orient, must be thinking about our action in even considering such a bill as this.

HUMPHREY

The subject matter involved in Senate Bill 2550 relates to the lives of people; it relates to their happiness, their security, and their freedom. I remind my colleagues that we are debating an issue and we are discussing a subject which has been of the very fabric and life of the American political system. The United States is known for the welcome it has extended to immigrants, it is a living testimonial to the value of immigration.

Senate Bill 2550 is being presented to us by Senator McCarran as an omnibus immigration bill codifying existing immigration law. It is, however, more than that. In my judgment, it is, in fact, not an immigration bill alone; but, more than that, it is an exclusion and deportation bill. Furthermore, it does more than codify the existing law. It seriously changes the existing law.

I ask my colleagues in all good conscience and good faith whether they are prepared to rewrite the entire immigration policy of the United States on the basis of Senate Bill 2550, after we have pointed out the many errors in that bill, the many liabilities it creates and the many potentialities for administrative abuse.

I submit that if the Senate passes Senate bill 2550 without a careful scrutiny of every line and every page, and the bill becomes a law we shall live to rue that day. We shall be placing upon the statute books of the country legislation which is more arbitrary in granting broad powers to the executive branch and more discriminatory than any bill which has ever passed the Congress. I do not feel that it is right to parade before the Senate an immigration bill on the representation that it is a modification, liberalization, and recodification, when in fact it represents a complete rewriting of immigration law.

I plead with my colleagues to give very careful consideration to this measure.

It is strange to me that those who prefer a bill giving a decided and exclusive preference to Anglo-Saxons do, in fact, not pay due deference to one of the finest Anglo-Saxon contributions to our world's civilization, namely, the Anglo-Saxon system of justice.

Under Anglo-Saxon law restraints are imposed on the exercise of arbitrary authority by the executive and the power of judicial review is given to the courts. That is what we mean by due process of law.

I regret to say that this fine tradition is seriously impaired in the McCarran bill, where a man's fate as to entry, deportation, or naturalization will depend on "the opinion of the Attorney General" rather than a judicial proceeding under due process of law.

The only real asset this bill seems to offer is a full-employment program for immigration attorneys. It would undoubtedly give them a sufficient number of cases and details to work on for years.

I am not unaccustomed to viewing empty seats in the Senate; but let us be very candid about it. Unless we can have Senators present who are interested in the bill we are not going to get the action we want. I say there are Americans who are going to be very unhappy when they find out that only a few Senators were on the floor to enter into a discussion of the substitute proposal.

Mr. President, we are not talking about sheep; we are not talking about fence posts, or about steel; we are talking about human beings and lives.

The McCarran bill is heavy laden with booby traps. Those booby traps had to be unearthed, understood, and brought into the open. We did so. In doing so, I believe, we have performed a service for the Senate. Had we not made our study and introduced our legislation, members of the Senate would be, today, voting on a bill which they did not understand and which they would not be able to explain to their constituents.

CIO, AFL Urge Joint Italian Labor Action

THE TWO MAIN non-Communist trade union groups of Italy were urged to work together in good faith in a joint statement issued last week by the CIO and the AFL.

At the same time, the American labor organizations pledged support to their efforts to improve the lot of the Italian worker.

The statement was addressed to the Italian Confederation of Trade Unions (CISL) and the Union of Italian Workers (UIL). Both are affiliated with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, as are the CIO and AFL.

It recalled that since the end of World War II, American labor has followed with close interest and sympathy the efforts of Italian workers to build a free, democratic and united union movement "that will represent, defend and advance the interests of Italian labor."

The difficulties the Italian workers face, including Communist seizure of substantial sections of the labor movement through the General Federation of Italian Labor (CGIL), were recounted. The regret of the CIO and AFL at the failure of efforts to merge the CISL and UIL, after they broke away from the Stalinist-dominated body, was expressed.

"The CIO and AFL call on these two organizations to work together in good faith on the basis of unity of action so as to hasten the day when organic unity will be achieved," the statement continued.

"The CIO and AFL call on these two organizations to enter into an honorable agreement in accordance with proposals made by the ICFTU to respect and refrain from attacks on each other, to avoid encroaching on each other's membership, to abstain from any cooperation with the CGIL, and to work together in good faith in the interests of the Italian working class.

"The CIO and AFL are disturbed by the activities of certain persons and groups in and out of the CISL and the UIL which seek to use these trade unions as mere appendages of political parties.

"THE CIO and AFL believe that trade unions should take an active interest in politics and political development.

"But the trade union movement, in the realm of political action, must jealously preserve its independence, retain its freedom of action and criticism, and stand out against any political, denominational or outside force which seeks to use the trade union movement to further their own organizational interests.

"The CIO and AFL call on the CISL and the UIL to enter into a compact of friendship to work together for the common good of the Italian trade union movement.

"We look forward to the time when Italian labor will be served by a single, powerful, democratic trade union movement which will play a decisive role in strengthening democracy in Italy, which is now being threatened by Communist and neo-fascist forces."

'India Needs Aid, But Understanding Comes First,' Gandhi 'Apprentice' Says

A GRAPHIC description of India's effort to build itself into a bulwark of democracy was painted for a group of CIO national officials last week by a leader in the drive who served an "apprenticeship" under Mahatma Gandhi.

He is Sudhir L. Ghosh, who is spending several weeks in this country under a Point Four leader grant. He spoke briefly, and convincingly, at a luncheon the CIO gave in his honor in Washington.

India badly needs aid from the United States in raising the incredibly low living standards of her people, he said.

"But more important than aid," he added, "is mutual understanding and respect.

"If they come, they will bring us closer together, as we have been growing, and they will enable India and the United States together to make a great contribution to the peace of the world."

Ghosh was associated with Gandhi from 1936 until the latter's death. He was one of the great Indian's private secretaries, and was closely involved with him in the negotiations with the British Labor government that led to the country's independence.

Since then he has been high in the Nehru government despite his relative youth—he is 36—and for the last two years has been administrator of the Faribadad Development Project.

This involved putting 30,000 homeless and penniless refugees from Pakistan to work building what is now a modern urban community still incomplete, surrounded by a growing rural hinterland where 200,000 peasants are learning to grow more food from the same acreage with the aid of additional irrigation and better seeds and fertilizers.

THE FACT that 66% of 180 million eligible voters cast ballots in the last election offers "the hope of a good chance that India will make a success of democracy," Ghosh said.

"Nehru has all the political power he needs," he added, "but political power is only a means to an end, a tool. We have to use it to demonstrate to the people that democracy can deliver the goods.

"Speeches mean nothing to the Indian peasant. If democracy can deliver the goods in terms of more food, better health facilities, improved education, etc.,—then those 350 million people will have something to live for.

"If democracy can deliver in India, it may well turn the tide of the world toward democracy. Failure would be disastrous to us, and I believe to the world . . .

"If we can show the Indians that the job can be done and has been done, they'll give their lives for democracy, because they'll have something to live for."

HOW INDIA is trying to lift itself by its own bootstraps is explained to CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood (left) and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey (right) by Sudhir L. Ghosh (center). Plat shows planned rural area about new city of Faribadad, which is being completed by 30,000 refugees. Ghosh has directed the project.

CIO Playthings Union Strikes At Rackets

STRONG ACTION against any attempts of racketeers to infiltrate its ranks was taken by the CIO Playthings Jewelry & Novelty Workers at its 7th biennial convention in Atlantic City.

In his opening address, Alex Bail, who was reelected president by acclamation, told the 250 delegates:

"The increase in infiltration of characters who are interested in turning over a 'fast buck' in the labor movement is part and parcel of the growing decline in morality which we are witnessing in all phases of our culture."

Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, scored the attempt to revive dual unionism against the CIO Textile Workers. He recalled that the CIO had arisen out of the AFL's failure to achieve industrial organization, and warned that no good purpose would be served by a return of textile workers to the AFL.

The PJNW delegates instructed the union's executive board to make "corruption and dishonesty an automatic disqualification for any person or organization seeking affiliation."

They also pledged support to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and urged a federal minimum wage of $1.25 an hour, a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission, higher tariffs to protect American industries against the importation of cheap labor products, and increased government protection against the exploitation of Puerto Rican immigrants.

The convention, which represented approximately 30,000 workers in the toy and jewelry industries, elected by acclamation C. Dale Buckius of Wyandotte, Mich. as secretary-treasurer and Dominic Tripode of Newark, N. J., as director of organization.

Elected to the executive board were Joseph Boulanger of Springfield, Mass., Theodor Bowman of New York City, Alfred Bregnard of Attleboro, Mass., Anthony Cavallaro of New Haven, Conn., Martin Freer of Lockport, N. Y., Charles Hess of Glendale, W. Va., Thomas Leone and Louis Marrone of Leominster, Mass., Frank Mita of Irvington, N. J., James Wolfram of Cincinnati, O., and Larney Worrill and Nick Zarra of Newark, N. J.

Getting-Out-The-Vote Tops Utah CIO Parley Agenda

POLITICAL ACTION took first place on the agenda at the recent 16th annual convention of the Utah CIO Council at Salt Lake City.

The 100 delegates heard Adolph Germer, CIO national representative, voice criticism of union members who fail to exercise their voting rights.

"If the working man would become a thinking man, Sen. Taft wouldn't dare run for the presidential nomination," he declared. "If the working man would think, that 'yappity, yappity' fellow (J. Braken Lee) wouldn't be governor of Utah and Sen. Watkins wouldn't be a U. S. Senator."

Germer said union members and their families who fail to take an interest in political action betray themselves and their fellow men.

Clarence J. Palmer, State CIO president, said in his opening address that if the Taft-Hartley Act is retained on the books, it should include what he called "disguised but airtight unions" such as the American Medical Association.

He charged the AMA is a "union" that collected forced contributions of $25 each from the nation's doctors in the last election "to defeat such liberal men as Sen. Thomas," former Utah lawmaker.

The convention passed a resolution condemning the editorial policies of the Salt Lake City Deseret News as "detrimental to organized labor." The paper is fighting organization by the CIO Newspaper Guild.

Lobbyists In The Chips, With Farm Bureau Tops

ANTI-LABOR lobbying is a multimillion dollar business. Of the $9,488,000 spent for lobbying last year, business groups alone accounted for $3,089,000.

Not all of the organizations that are generally opposed to labors' aims—and to liberal legislation list themselves as business groups.

The American Farm Bureau Federation topped all others in 1951 expenditures with $1,595,000.

The second largest spender in 1951 was the violently anti-labor and anti-Fair Deal organization, the Committee for Constitutional Government, which spent $773,000 but which was listed as a "citizens" group.

The American Medical Association, which led the field in 1950, dropped to third place last year, listing expenditures of $450,000.

In 1950, AMA—which is violently opposed to the health insurance bill—led the pack with $1,326,000. That was the year AMA knifed the health insurance bill.

The lobbyists reported spending less last year than in 1950, when a record of $10.3 million was spent.

That does not necessarily mean that there was less lobbying.

The Congressional Quarterly, which gave a detailed analysis of the lobbying expenditures in a copyrighted story, reported:

"There are several reasons for the trend reversing decline during 1951. One is that fewer groups filed financial reports. Some 295 submitted reports in 1951 compared with 340 groups reporting a record of $10,303,204 spent the preceding year.

"Not all of the 295 submitted reports for each quarter of 1951, and 26 that reported did not include figures.

"Other possible reasons for the lower 1951 figures:

"Less money (reported or otherwise) was spent in lobbying activities.

"Less money spent for lobbying was reported.

"Reporting methods changed to more nearly reflect money actually spent for lobbying purposes (rather than spent for all purposes).

"Fewer bills of the type that stimulated spending were considered by Congress."

Don't get the idea that lobbying—much of its anti-labor and anti-Fair Deal—is dying on the vine. The Congressional Quarterly further reported:

"Enough lobbyists to populate a small town have been plying their trade at one time or another since the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act was enacted in 1946." The number registered through Dec. 31, 1951, was approximately 2035.

The CIO was not among the big spenders. It reported spending $30,000 for 1951.

CIO Urges Civilian O.K. On Reserves

CIVILIAN control over any recall of reservists to active duty with the armed forces was urged by William Lavelle, assistant director of the CIO Legislative Dept., in testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee last week.

He asked that the new Armed Forces Reserve Bill, already passed by the House, be amended to include a provision that would "guarantee" that a civilian agency, such as Selective Service, would have "key responsibility" over any recall of reservists.

"Unless this bill is properly amended," he said, "it will mark a departure from the time-honored American tradition of civilion selection of men for the armed forces in a period of emergency."

Lavelle pointed out under the bill about five million young men will "spill over into the reserves" by the late '50s, after completing their two-year draft stints or universal military training, if the latter were enacted in the future.

"It would be intolerable in many respects to have this vast section of our labor force immediately subject to mere military beck and call," he said. "A strong, well-organized reserve can be a vital link of our national security, but it is only one such link, and has to be fitted into the entire chain of security and welfare."

Here Are Big Spenders In Washington Lobbies

Here are the lobbying groups that reported spending more than $100,000 in 1951 as tabulated by the Congressional Quarterly. Where an organization made it clear that the money was spent for other than lobbying purposes it is noted:

'Forced Listening' On Capital Trolleys Upheld By Court

THE U. S. SUPREME Court last week ruled that one type of "forced listening" is legal.

The court upheld the right of the Capital Transit Co., Washington, D. C., to force its passengers to listen to radio programs— laden with commercials. The court in a 7-to-1 decision reversed an appellate court ruling against the practice.

Justice William O. Douglas in a dissenting opinion said:

"When we force people to listen to another's ideas, we give the propagandists a powerful weapon. Today it is a business enterprise working out a radio program under the auspices of the government. Tomorrow it may be a dominent political or religious group.

"Today the purpose is benign; there is no insidious cast to the programs. But the vice is inherent in the system. Once privacy is invaded, privacy is gone."

Justice Harold H. Burton in the majority opinion said that the lower court's ruling "wrongly assumes that the Fifth Amendment secures to each passenger on a public vehicles a right of privacy substantially equal to the privacy he is entitled to in his owen home." He contended that right is "limited by the rights of others" when traveling on a public thoroughfare or in a public conveyance.

House Approves Puerto Rico Bill

The House of Representatives last week approved, with minor amendments, Puerto Rico's new commonwealth constitution. Action was by voice vote.

Approval of a similar constitution bill was recommended earlier by the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee.

Proposal To Congress—

IUE Asks Inquiry On GE-UE Deals

THE CIO Electrical Workers' Executive Board last week called for a congressional investigation of General Electric's relations with the Communist-controlled United Electrical Workers. IUE Pres. James B. Carey said at a Chicago meeting of the board:

"GE has deliberately served communism's purpose by undermining the public's faith and labor's faith in administrative agencies dealing in labor matters, and by giving active encouragement in the GE chain to the Communist-controlled United Electrical Workers."

Carey charged that the steel dispute is being used by two dominant corporations in the electrical appliance industry to stall negotiations with IUE. He said:

"We see General Electric not only jumping into the steel situation but egging on the steel companies to have a strike. In full page ads GE has attacked the U. S. Conciliation Service and its director, Cyrus Ching, as being virtually stooges of the unions in spite of the fact that Ching himself is an ex-big businessman, a former president of U. S. Rubber."

Carey declared that L. R. Boulware, GE vice president, "is attempting a rear guard, but bitter fight against the union shop which he knows is inevitable in the GE plants we represent."

CAREY, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, said Westinghouse's refusal to honor its contract with IUE for a union shop is a "reflection of this big business offensive."

GE and Westinghouse have refused to grant IUE proposals, and instead have offered a 1% wage increase which IUE has rejected.

The IUE Executive Board endorsed the "contract demands advanced by our union's General Electric and Westinghouse Conference Boards," pledged the union's full support and stood ready to tell the entire labor movement of the two corporations' attitude.

(IUE Local 601 on May 24 launched a three-day work stoppage at Westinghouse's big East Pittsburgh plant, where there is a dispute over a number of issues, including overtime, seniority and disciplinary furloughs. Earlier, the union's GE Conference Board announced that 70,000 IUE members will stage demonstrations at 34 GE plants on June 5 in support of the union's proposals.)

He called for a congressional investigation of GE.

The IUE Executive Board also called for congressional and administrative action against runaway plants and called on other CIO unions and the national CIO to join in this action.

The board also condemned the Smith bill (H. R. 7647), which would place striking unions in receivership under permanent injunctions.

Another resolution urged President Truman to veto the McCarran-Walter immigration bill, which "perpetuates and extends the discriminatory practices of our immigration quotas which CIO has long fought."

New Research Proposed On Color Video

THE CIO Electrical Workers is urging "intensive research" to develop better and cheaper TV color receivers and cheaper color adapters for present TV sets.

In his report to the IUE executive board, the need for research was set forth by IUE Pres. James B. Carey. He also called for awaiting "the passing of the peak of defense production before production begin in this field."

Carey also pointed to a slump in the production of radio and TV sets as he warned of unemployment in the industry.

"There is no doubt that the threat of a steel strike, the oil strike and other uncertainties have caused workers to stop buying many things," Carey said. "But in addition it is the clear and simple fact that there is not enough puchasing power left over.

"No doubt the building of stations in new areas later in the year will help out considerably. But we are likely to witness a bad summer, as bad as last summer."

Carey pointed out that both he and the union's research director, David Lasser, helped block the production ban on the production of TV color receivers.

Murray Talks With Truman

CIO PRESIDENT Philip Murray and AFL Pres. William Green met jointly with President Truman at the White House last week.

For 15 minutes, they talked politics and the '52 presidential campaign. No commitments were asked, they said, and none were made.

"The President," Murray said, "called us over for the purpose of going into the general political situation.

"No specific matters were discussed and no names were mentioned."

Murray said they may have a similar meeting with Truman later.

30 Lawmakers Ask U.S. Jobless Aid

Led by Rep. Celler (D., N.Y.), 30 congressmen from five northeastern states last week urged the government to grant a bigger share of defense contracts to northern textile mills.

Celler said too many contracts are "going southward" to low-bidding open shops, and that contracts should be negotiated with "experienced," large-volume mills. He assailed contracts with low-wage, fly-by-night operators.

FIRST CONTRACT. — CIO representative T. J. McCarthy (left center), looks over precedent-making contract signed with Joseph Wyatt, owner of Washington, D.C.'s newest office building, is negotiating committee members look on. The pact, covering 40 members of the CIO United Service Employees, Local 377, is the first building service contract won by the CIO group in the nation's capital.

Service Union Gets D.C. Contract

THE CIO has won bargaining rights for the employes of Washington, D. C's., newest and most modern office building.

As a result of a National Labor Relations Board election, maintenance workers in the Wyatt Bldg. are now members of Local 377 of the CIO United Service Employees. USE is a unit of the CIO Retail, Wholesale Department Store Union.

CIO Rep. T. J. McCarthy, who headed the organizing campaign, has already laid plans for other membership drives in a score of Washington office buildings.

"We intend to put on an intensive campaign among building service workers in Washington," he said.

Pointing to the fact that the CIO union defeated the AFL Building Service Employees by better than two to one in the Wyatt Bldg. election, McCarthy predicted other victories in the future.

He said the reason the majority of the workers there voted for the CIO was that many of them were former members of other CIO unions and knew what the CIO could do for them.

The contract, signed by RWDSU Rep. Ernest Dumas, features among other benefits a union shop, checkoff of union dues and welfare benefits paid for by the employer.

'State Taxes Unfair,' Outlook Says

THE STATES and smaller communities are shifting more and more of their tax burden to the backs of those least able to pay, the CIO Economic Outlook says in its new issue.

Taxpayers, the Outlook says, are so concerned with federal levies that they may fail to examine the tax policies of state and local governments as well—a "grave oversight."

"Over $20 billion will be received and spent by these smaller tax-collecting units during fiscal 1953," the economic bulletin, which is published by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, continues.

"Even should the international crisis subside and our federal tax needs go down, state and local revenue requirements will continue to rise as the demands for schools, highways, hospitals and other services increase.

"But there is an even more important reason for scrutinizing our local tax systems!

"In spite of the clamor against corruption in Washington, the federal government has, in the main, faced up to its revenue needs in an equitable manner.

"Whereas, there is overwhelming evidence that it is the state governments, so often dominated by special privilege groups, which have deliberately corrupted their revenue systems in order to shift the heaviest tax burden on low and middle income families."

The only fair basis for taxation is "ability to pay," the Outlook says. Under this "progressive" system, a higher share of taxes is levied as incomes or profits rise. A "regressive" tax, on the other hand, "takes proportionately more from those who have the least."

"Progressive taxes, that is, graduated individual and corporate income taxes, are the backbone of the federal tax system," the Outlook says.

"In most of the states and cities, however, the opposite is true; it is here that unfair tax policies are severely penalizing the families who are least able to shoulder the load.

"IN THE states, the regressive sales tax, which eats into the living standards of the poorest without impairing the luxury standards of those who have the most, is the major source of tax revenue.

"To make matters worse, more and more local municipalities are imposing sales taxes on top of their existing property taxes, which are also regressive."

Seventy-nine per cent of federal tax revenue last year came from progressive taxes on individual incomes, corporate profits and estate and gift taxes, the Outlook recalls, adding that these taxes are largely based on the principle of ability to pay.

"Last year," it went on, "the states collected only 19% of their revenue from individual and corporate income taxes and levies on estates and gifts. The bulk of their income—fully 59%—came from sales taxes, a levy on consumers regardless of their income."

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE SUPREME COURT has not as yet made a decision in the seizure of the steel industry by President Truman. The Steelworkers are still marking time. The reactionaries, in some cases, are still continuing their unwarranted attacks. One can sense a clearer understanding gradually being obtained by the public.

Never have such vast amounts of money been used to poison the minds of the public as has been used in this case. It is seemingly all right for Congress to pass a law permitting the President, theoretically, to take over the railroad industry when a strike was threatened. But when the President in an international crisis took over the steel industry, that became "socialist." Consistency, thou art a jewel!

The writer and other CIO groups met with Sudhir L. Ghosh from India. Mr. Ghosh was associated with Mahatma Gandhi from 1936 until Gandhi's death. A program is being developed in India to encourage their people to help themselves in this country of millions where many die daily from famine and malnutrition.

They are desirous of showing their people that democracy can work by bringing up the standard of living. This would be the best weapon against Communism in that part of the world. Mr. Ghosh is seeking help from the United States on a practical basis. He told a very graphic story and the audience was impressed with his program. CIO will render every support possible to assist in strengthening their democracy.

AN ORGANIZING COMMITTEE was set up last week under the direction of CIO National Rep. Walter Harris, to be known as the United Shoe Workers of America, CIO, Pennsylvania Organizing Committee. Complete report on this appears elsewhere in this issue of the CIO News.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports the following representation elections: Stanolind Oil & Gas Co., Powell Wyo., 53 eligible, 33 for OWIU, 22 no union; Continental Oil Co., Frame, Wyo., 13 for OWIU, 7 no union, 1 void. OWIU Dist. Dir. B. J. Rickey and Intl. Rep. Jenkins were in charge.

Chairman John Green of the United Railroad Workers reports a victory on the Donora Southern Railroad, Donora, Pa. Of the eligible 22 voters, 15 voted for URWA and 7 for no union.

Shoe Union Drives To Organize 25,000 In Pennsylvania Plants

A MAJOR union organizing drive among Pennsylvania shoe workers was announced last week by Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice-president and director of organization.

Goal of the campaign is to bring CIO unionism to some 25,000 non-union shoe workers in the Keystone State, particularly in shoe centers throughout the eastern and northeastern regions of Pennsylvania.

In opening the drive, Haywood announced the creation of a United Shoe Workers of America, CIO, Pennsylvania Organizing Committee, of which he is chairman.

Walter Harris, formerly CIO regional director in New York City and now a CIO national representative, will serve as director of the committee, and union organizers will work under his direction.

Members of the Organizing Committee, in addition to Haywood, are R. J. Thomas, and R. T. Leonard, assistant directors of organization for the CIO, Pres. Russell Taylor of the CIO Shoe Workers, Sec.-Treas. James Mitchell of the USWA, and I. Rosenberg, regional representative of the USWA.

The committee, organizers and local union representatives will meet in Wilkes Barre, Pa., this week.

In announcing the CIO organizing plans, Haywood and Taylor declared:

"No group of industrial workers in the nation is in greater need of union protection and union benefits than the shoe workers—employed as they are at low wage rates and without adequate job security.

"Through this organizing campaign, the CIO is determined to help the shoe workers of Pennsylvania win better living standards for themselves and their families."

The committee headquarters will be at Harrisburg, Pa.

Guild Asks U.S. To Fight Paper Hike Periling Jobs

THE CIO Newspaper Guild last week called for concerted action in demanding that the Canadian government rescind its authorization of a $10-a-ton increase in newsprint sold in the U. S.

The Guild's Executive Board, meeting in New York City, adopted a resolution calling on the government, the American Newspaper Publishers Association and other newspaper unions to join in protests to the Canadian government.

The ANG pointed out that this is the second $10-a-ton increase in less than a year and brings the cost of newsprint to $126 a ton, an all-time high.

The Guild said that the increase was authorized despite "continuing high profits" of the newsprint industry. At the same time, permission to raise the price of newsprint in Canada was denied, the resolution said.

The Guild cited studies made by Editor & Publisher, trade publication of the newspaper industry, to show that the cost of newsprint typically is the largest single cost of item in the publication of a newspaper and has increased out of all proportion to other costs in recent years. It also was pointed out that the "steadily rising price of newsprint is contributing directly" to:

- The alarming decline in the number of daily newspapers.
- Jeopardizing of the jobs, wages and working conditions of newspaper workers.
- Encouraging publishers to devote an increasing proportion of their columns to advertising at the expense of news and editorial comment.

The Guild said "most U. S. publishers themselves persistently have refused to live up to their responsibilities to both their employes and their country and to take concerted action to remedy this situation."

The Guild called on the government to develop immediately the newsprint resources of Alaska, a proposal first made two years ago to Congress by Sam Eubanks, then executive vice president of the Guild.

Weiss Named CIO Aide In U. S. Civil Defense Agency

APPOINTMENT of William W. Weiss to a post with the Federal Civil Defense Administration in Washington was announced last week by Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president.

Weiss, an assistant editor of The CIO News, this week will become a CIO representative in the FCDA's Volunteer Manpower Division.

In that capacity, his duties will be to keep CIO members informed of Civil Defense activities through the medium of CIO newspapers and periodicals and to interest CIO people in Civil Defense participation.

Weiss has been with The CIO News for the past 2½ years. Previous to that he was an organizer and public relations representative with the CIO Southern Drive in North Carolina for four years. He is a member of the CIO Newspaper Guild and a native of Pittsburgh. Weiss will be on leave of absence from his CIO News post.

Oil Workers Returning

"FINIS" WAS being written last week to the first successful joint nationwide strike of CIO, AFL and independent oil workers.

OWIU-CIO Pres. O. A. Knight, who led the coalition of unions that struck Apr. 30, said at midweek that only about 11% of the nation's refinery production was shut down, compared to 35% at the height of the strike.

Settlements were being made on the basis of the 15c an hour increase recommended by the Wage Stabilization Board.

The Oil Worker, OWIU's semimonthly publication, criticized WSB for "yielding to intense pressure from oil companies and industrialists" and chopping off wage increases at 15c.

Power Lobby 'Poison' Scotched By Truman

A "GIVE 'EM HELL" attack on the private power industry was fired last week by President Truman, with more to come during the election campaign.

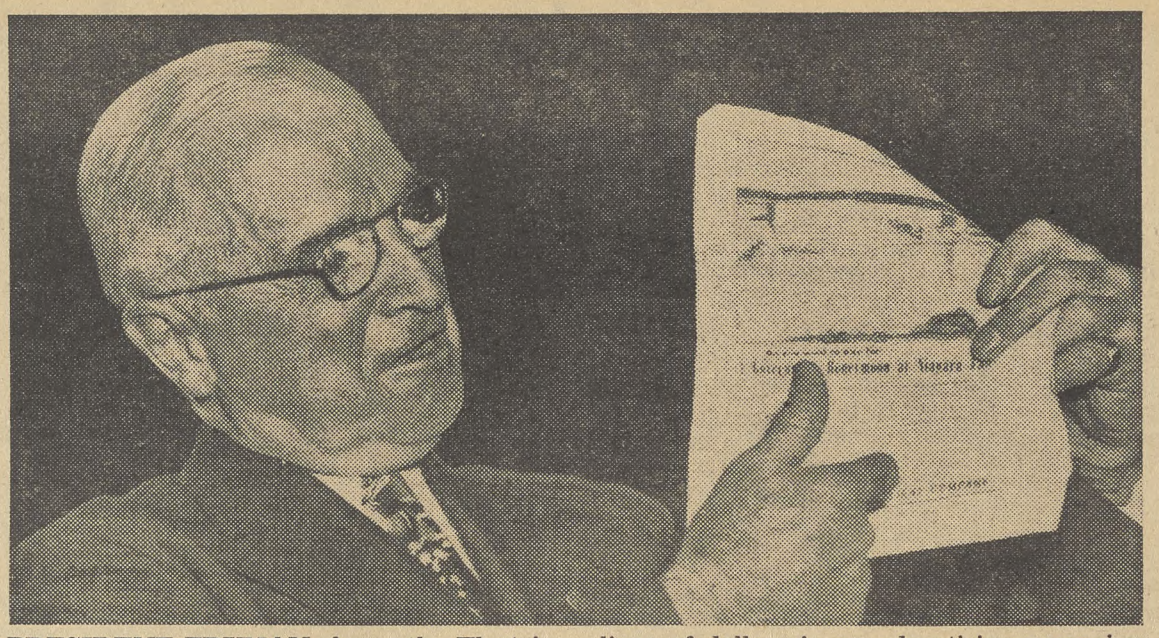
He denounced the utilities' big-spending advertising campaign against public power development as "setting out to poison the minds of the people."

Truman addressed the Electric Consumers Conference at Washington.

The conference, which represented 10 million electric consumers belonging to union, farm and other groups, urged an investigation of private power lobbying and political advertising.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers called for enlisting labor, farmers and consumers in a fight at the polls for public power. CIO and five of its affiliates—the Steelworkers, Textile Workers, Communications Workers, Electrical Workers and UAW—were among the 16 groups sponsoring the conference.

Truman's ire was aroused by the private utilities' advertising campaign which portrays public power projects as "socialistic." He told a cheering audience:



PRESIDENT TRUMAN shows the Electric Consumers Conference at Washington how the electric power industry is spending millions of dollars in an advertising campaign against federal public power. He said that the money thus spent is tax deductible.

"When the whistle-stop campaign starts, I am going to go out and give you facts with regard to this power situation.

"WHAT these private power companies are actually doing is deliberately and in cold blood setting out to poison the minds of the people. They make no bones about it.

The President threatened to seek legal action against the private utility companies, saying:

"I think there may be something going wrong under the Corrupt Practices Act. To the rates that these companies charge, you are paying for that (advertising costs). And the tax collections of the government are not so great because they charge these off at expenses of operation."

UAW Pres. Reuther characterized both the power and steel industries as apostles of "the economy of scarcity," who were opposed to giving the people more products at cheaper prices.

The UAW president ridiculed the charge of "socialism" which the private power companies level at public power. He said:

"Private power is government protected. Its profits are guaranteed and it is the nearest thing to a state-controlled industry we have in America. It is not free and it's not enterprising. If ever the dead hand of monopoly was on an industry, it was on the power industry before public power made it get off its backside."

"We have public power because the power companies refused to meet the needs of their day," Reuther continued. "The only way they can buck public power is to do a better job. They can't because they are interested in profits; the public power groups are interested in people."

He urged the 494 conference delegates to take the issue back to the people for action at the polls.

"Let's learn to work together as farmers, workers and consumers," the UAW president said. "If we do, we can't be stopped. Let's make this the beginning and not the end of the mobilization of a free people and see that our economy is harnessed for the total good."

MEANTIME, Rep. George Dondero (R. Mich.) filed a resolution calling for a House probe of the Electric Consumers Conference. He described it as a "publicity stunt and not a true expression of the farmers and the workers which the so-called sponsoring organizations are alleged to represent . . ."

Dondero charged that consumers of public power and members of rural electric cooperatives are benefitting from the tax-free status of those projects, and described the consumers of those sources of power as "persons who wish to preserve these special privileges . . ."

Dondero placed in the record a convention resolution from the CIO Utility Workers, which opposed "any further government encroachment into the electric utility industry" and called on the union's national officers to prevent further "nationalization" of the industry.

'Tax Bonanza' Gravy Nears $20 Billion

THE "TAX BONANZA" continues to grow, rivaling the fabulous Comstock Lode.

More than $19 billion in special tax privileges for 10,300 new or expanded facilities were approved through May 15, it was announced last week by the Defense Production Administration.

"Tax bonanza" — technically known as certificates of necessity—are issued by DPA allowing corporations to write off various percentages of new plants in five years instead of the usual 25 years. Individual income taxpayers must make up the resulting loss of revenue.

In the four-week period ending May 15, special tax privileges were granted on more than $1.6 billion.

Electric power companies continued to get sizable shares of the rapid tax write-offs. From May 2 to May 15, the two largest certificates of necessity went to the Philadelphia Electric Co., $30 million, and the California-Oregon Power Co., $30 million.

The third largest certificate issued during that period went to the Pennsylvania Railroad to the tune of $29 million.

Pipe lines also got three big bowls of gravy: U. S. Pipe Line Co., $68 million; West Coast Pipeline Co., $60 million, and the Sinclair Pipe Line Co., $27 million.

HST's Foreign Aid Bill Cut Again

THE DIXIEGOP drive to whittle away U. S. economic-defense aid to friends abroad was halted in the Senate last week.

Four moves by the self-styled "economy' group to cut the $6.7 billion foreign aid bill—beyond the $1 billion already trimmed in committee—were defeated in close votes on the Senate floor. The Senate agreed to only an additional $200 million reduction.

Final passage, by a 64 to 10 vote, sent the aid measure to conference of the two houses.

The Senate beat back moves by Sen. Welker (R. Ida.) and 10 other Republicans to slash the program by a total of $2 billion and $1½ billion, and then defeated by a three-vote margin an amendment by Sen. Long (D. La.) that would have cut $1.4 billion.

Earlier, however, the same coalition of reactionary Republicans and some Southern Democrats succeeded in hacking $1,737,400,000 off President Truman's original $7.9 billion request before the foreign aid bill was passed by the House.

Gen. Eisenhower has cabled from Europe that any slash of more than $1 billion would be "uneconomic if we are to carry on to the reasonable level of collective security that our own safety demands." The reactionary wing of the Republican Party led by Sen. Taft (R. O.) split sharply with the general on this issue and led the drive for bigger slashes.

Taft threw his weight behind a move to cut the program to $6 billion, but did not vote when the Welker amendment to effect this was voted upon. Taft's fellow Republican from Ohio, Rep. Vorys, successfully led the House attacks.

Action in both Senate and House was along party lines, with high absenteeism among liberal Democratic representatives one of the chief reasons why the Dixiegop slashes carried in the lower chamber.

While some Eisenhower Republicans and a number of Dixiecrats, including Sens. Connally and George (D. Ga), fought cuts above the $1 billion made in committee, most Republicans were behind butchering the move. Their isolationist stand is certain to become a key issue in the Presidential campaign.

Vorys' cuts in the House bill came in the form of two amendments.

The first cut more than $615 million from defense support funds for Europe and was upheld when 161 Republicans and 61 Democrats voted for it. Only 10 Republicans and 127 Democrats opposed the slash.

The second Vorys motion—ironic in view of the fact that Republicans have charged the loudest that China was lost to communism because it got too little U. S. aid —took more than $111 million from economic aid and Point Four funds for Asia. Sixty Democrats joined 132 Republicans in its support, and only 36 Republicans and 129 Democrats opposed the cut.

'Messenger Boy Concept'—

The Final Word On Steel Seizure Is 'No'

PRESIDENT Truman exceeded powers given by the Constitution when he seized the steel mills, the U. S. Supreme Court decided last week.

The 6 to 3 majority upheld the restraining order granted by Judge David A. Pine in U. S. District Court in Washington. The majority agreed that when the President seized the mills, he in effect acted as a maker of law, and hence had invaded the domain of Congress.

Voting with the majority were Justices Hugo L. Black, who wrote the opinion; Felix S. Frankfurter, William O. Douglas, Robert H. Jackson, Harold H. Burton and Tom Clark.

Dissenting were Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson and Justices Stanley Reed and Sherman Minton.

Opinions Galore

That the majority was less solidly agreed than was apparent was indicated by the fact that the five justices who agreed in the majority opinion wrote concurring opinions of their own.

The minority agreed on an opinion written by Vinson in which the Chief Justice, with considerable gentle irony for the majority, accused it of taking a "messenger-boy concept" of the Presidency.

Vinson also asserted that the different views expressed in the majority opinions demonstrated "how far afield one must go to affirm the order of the District Court."

The majority opinion was based on the thesis, grounded in the Constitution, of the separation of powers among the executive, legislative and judicial branches of the government. Congress alone has the authority to pass laws to meet such a crisis as that created by a steel strike, the majority said.

Black pointed out that when it was considering the Taft-Hartley Act, Congress rejected an amendment which would have authorized government seizures of industry in labor disputes. This was taken to indicate that Congress chose to withhold the weapon of seizure.

"The contention is," wrote Black, "that presidential power should be implied from the aggregate of his powers under Article II of the Constitution.

"Particular reliance is placed on the provisions which say that 'the executive power shall be vested in the President . . .'; that 'he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed'; and that he 'shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States.'

"The order cannot properly be sustained as an exercise of the President's military power as Commander in Chief of the armed forces. The government attempts to do so by citing a number of cases upholding broad powers in military commanders engaged in day-to-day fighting in a theatre of war.

"Such cases need not concern us here. Even though 'theatre of war' be an expanding concept, we cannot with faithfulness to our constitutional system hold that the Commander in Chief of the armed forces has the ultimate power as such to take possession of private property in order to keep strikes from stopping production.

"This is a job for the nation's lawmakers, not for its military authorities.

"Nor can the seizure order be sustained because of the several constitutional provisions that grant executive powers to the President.

"In the framework of our Constitution, the President's power to see that the laws are faithfully executed refutes the idea that he is to be a lawmaker . . .

"The founders of this nation entrusted the law-making power to the Congress alone in both good and bad times. It would do no good to recall the historical events, the fears of powers and the hopes for freedom that lay behind their choice.

"Such a review would but confirm our holding that this seizure order cannot stand."

Vinson wrote that Truman was performing his duty of seeing that the laws were faithfully executed.

"Much of the argument in this case has been directed at straw men," he added.

"We do not have before us the case of a President acting solely on the basis of his own notions of the public welfare. Nor is there any question of unlimited executive power in this case.

"The President himself closed the door to any such claim when he sent his message to Congress stating his purpose to abide by any action of Congress, whether approving or disapproving his seizure action . . .

"Absence of a specific statute authorizing seizure of the steel mills as a mode of executing the laws—both the military procurement program and the anti-inflation program—has not until today been thought to prevent the President from executing the laws . . .

"Flexibility as to mode of execution to meet critical situations is a matter of practical necessity . . .

'No Cause To Fear'

"The Constitution was itself 'adopted in a period of grave emergency . . .'

"The framers knew, as we should know in these times of peril, that there is real danger in executive weakness. There is no cause to fear executive tyranny so long as the laws of Congress are faithfully executed.

"Certainly there is no basis for fear of dictatorship when the executive acts, as he did in this case, only to save the situation until Congress could act . . .

"The diversity of views expressed in the six opinions of the majority, the lack of reference to authoritative precedent, the repeated reliance upon prior dissenting opinions, the complete disregard of the uncontroverted facts showing the gravity of the emergency and the temporary nature of the taking, all serve to demonstrate how far afield one must go to affirm the order of the District Court.

"The broad executive power granted by Article II to an officer on duty 365 days a year cannot, it is said, be invoked to avert disaster . . .

"Under this messenger-boy concept of the office, the President cannot even act to preserve legislative programs from destruction so that Congress will have something left to act upon . . .

"Presidents have been in the past, and any man worthy of the office should be in the future, free to take at least interim action necessary to execute legislative programs essential to survival of the nation.

"A sturdy judiciary should not be swayed by the unpleasantness or unpopularity of necessary executive action, but must independently determine for itself whether the President was acting, as required by the Constitution, 'to take care that the laws be faithfully executed.'

"As the district judge stated, this is no time for 'timorous' judicial action. But neither is it a time for timorous executive action."

Big Steel's Plea For T-H Failed

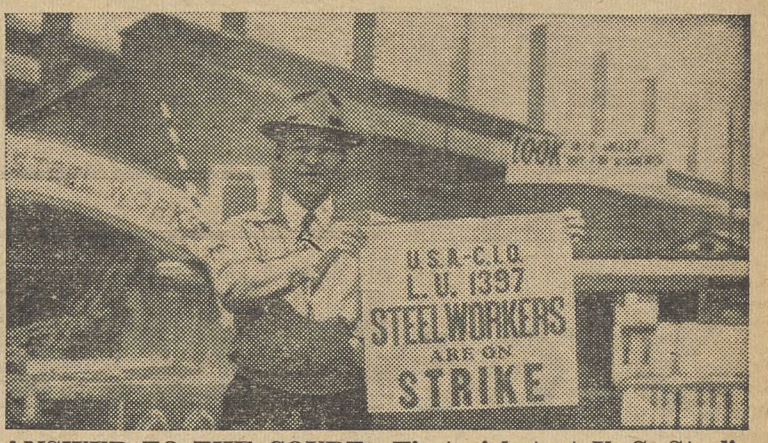
In commenting on the Supreme Court's steel decision, General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg of the CIO Steelworkers said:

It is important for the public to know what the Supreme Court actually decided and what it did not decide in the steel case.

The Court decided that the President's seizure of the steel mills on Apr. 8 was unconstitutional. On this seizure issue, the Union took no position in its brief and argument before the Supreme Court.

The Court did not decide, as the steel companies had urged it to do, that the President should have used a Taft-Hartley injunction against the Union.

The United Steelworkers of America believes that the Union's contention before the Court and the public that the President should not use a Taft-Hartley injunction in this situation has been vindicated by the failure of any one of the justices of the Supreme Court to accept the companies' Taft-Hartley argument.



ANSWER TO THE COURT—First picket at U. S. Steel's Homestead Works near Pittsburgh was CIO Steelworker A. J. Marjie, a plant electrician. Picketing began within minutes after Supreme Court ruled out seizure.

Here Are Past Developments Leading To Steel Walkout

THE CIO Steelworkers struck last week after nearly seven months of collective bargaining, Wage Stabilization Board and White House sessions, court arguments and a three-day walkout. Here's a summary of developments:

Nov. 27—Negotiations began.

Dec. 17—Union set Dec. 31 as strike deadline.

Dec. 27—After President Truman's appeal to postpone strike pending WSB hearings, the union delayed the walkout until a special convention could act.

Jan. 4—Convention postponed strike 45 days.

Feb. 21—Union set strike deadline for midnight, Mar. 23, to allow WSB time to make recommendations — the third strike postponement.

Mar. 20-21 — The union accepted WSB recommendations.

Mar. 30 — Defense Mobilizer Wilson resigned after trying to undermine WSB recommendations.

Apr. 8 — Truman seized the steel mills to avert a strike set for Apr. 9 after negotiations collapsed.

Apr. 29—Judge Pine ruled seizure illegal and strike—postponed five times—began.

May 2 — After appeals court stayed seizure ruling, Union called off strike on request of the President, who called new White House session.

May 3-4—Truman asked both sides for "action," said U. S. would raise wages if no settlement was reached. Within a few hours, Supreme Court agreed to review case, forbade pay hikes. Meanwhile White House talks failed.

May 12-13—Supreme Court heard arguments.

June 2—Supreme Court ruled seizure unconstitutional. Strike followed immediately.

June 5—New parley in Washington begins.

14,000 Strike Big Carpet Plants

FOURTEEN thousand CIO carpet workers struck last week for a 25c hourly wage increase to allow them to catch up with the cost of living.

The workers, members of the CIO Textile Workers, have received no pay boost since the fall of 1950, when they received a 10c an hour increase. Even under Wage Stabilization Board formulas, the carpet workers are entitled to a 17.5c an hour increase, according to TWUA.

Most of the strikers are employed at Big Four plants—Alexander Smith, Inc., Yonkers, N. Y.; Bigelow-Sanford and Mohawk, Amsterdam, N. Y., and A. M. Karagheusian, Roselle Park, N. J.

The largest carpet plant in the world—the Smith concern at Yonkers—was shut down when 4500 workers struck.

The Yonkers plant local remained loyal to TWUA, although it is headed by Charles Hughes, who had supported the secessionist George Baldanzi for the presidency at the recent TWUA convention. Hughes broke with Baldanzi over the latter's efforts to take TWUA locals into the AFL textile union.

The secession attack kept some 3500 carpet workers from striking at the Bigelow-Sanford plant at Thompsonville, Conn., and the Freehold, N. J. plant of A. and M. Karagheusian.

THE FREEHOLD operation eventually will have to close because it is a weaving plant supplied by the Roselle Park spinning mill, which is strike-bound.

Best offer received by the union up until last week was a 7c hourly increase offered by the Highstown (N. J.) Rug Co. The Big Four offered only 5c on condition that "efficiency" clauses be included in the contracts.

"If the Big Four are really interested in improving the pay of their employes, the so-called efficiency issues can be worked out in 15 minutes," said Jack Rubenstein, TWUA's carpet director.

Rubenstein said that most smaller plants in the industry are operating with TWUA's consent on a day-to-day basis while negotiations with their management continues, because the pattern is historically set by the Big Four.

The Canadian Congress of Labor—to which CIO unions belong—is standing solidly behind TWUA, CCL Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald said last week.

"Regardless of the internal differences within an affiliated union, we believe that these questions should be, and can be, settled within the ranks of the membership through frank discussions and democratic decisions," MacDonald said. "Certainly an attack from without cannot be tolerated if the best interests of the members of the union are to be protected."

'Down She Goes'—Steel Plants Shut

"Down she goes. Down she goes."

That's what the men of steel shouted as they marched down the streets of Aliquippa, Pa., from the CIO Steelworkers local hall to the gates of the Jones & Laughlin mill.

"Let's get going. Give us the signs. What are we waiting for?"

That was the cry at Homestead, Pa., with its five U. S. Steel Corp. plants. On Pittsburgh's South Side, a steel warehouse worker said:

"This time we're going to get it settled once and for all.'

That's the way it was last Monday afternoon in the steel centers from coast to coast.

A decision by the U. S. Supreme Court set the steel strike rolling again.

The court—by a 6 to 3 ruling in which the majority required six separate opinions to present its case—gave a final ruling that seizure of the steel industry was unconstitutional. The seizure, said the court, was illegal infringement by President Truman on law-making powers belonging to Congress.

EVEN before the justices finished reading their opinions, the CIO Steelworkers—650,000 men and women producing more than 90% of the nation's steel—were going on strike.

With the mills returned to private management by the court (an act quickly confirmed by Sec. of Commerce Charles Sawyer), the steel workers once again were "without the benefit of a collective bargaining agreement."

Said USA-CIO Pres. Philip Murray at Pittsburgh:

"In the absence of a wage agreement, our members have no alternative other than to cease work."

That's what happened after the court decision, as steel workers by the hundreds of thousands walked out, giving full meaning to the declaration of the recent USA-CIO convention:

"The crisis in the steel industry must be promptly resolved. We cannot and will not continue indefinitely to work in 1952 for

1950 wages and working conditions."

In issuing the strike call, Murray once again urged the various steel firms to resume collective bargaining "looking toward the perfection of a contract firmly based upon the recommendations" of the Wage Stabilization Board.

Those recommendations, announced Mar. 20 (some two and one-half months ago), were highlighted by a three-installment wage increase totalling 17.5c an hour, the union shop, six paid holidays, three-week vacations after 15 years, time and a quarter for Sunday work, increased shift differentials, and reduction of the Southern wage differential.

MURRAY'S bid for resumption of bargaining, in an effort to settle the steel deadlock which now is seven months' old, and agreement by management to talk was followed by new Washington bargaining sessions called by the government.

The sessions, called on Truman's request by John R. Steelman, a presidential assistant and acting defense mobilizer, began on June 5 in the ornate old State Dept. building across from the White House.

After a brief session in which Steelman urged "a quick settlement," the White House-sponsored meeting broke down into a meeting of three-man union and management groups. Participating for the union were Murray, Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald and General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg.

The companies talked of bargaining on a "give and take" basis.

Apparently the steel executives still take the stand that all of the "giving" should be by the USA-CIO, which is standing fast for the WSB contract proposals, while all the "taking" should be by steel management in the form of a hijacked price increase far beyond any and all new wage costs.

The steel industry, although it lately has attempted to crawl off the limb, has said a wage increase for steel workers would cost a total of $12 a ton—directly and indirectly—and it wants that much in a price boost.

Actually, the Office of Price Stabilization estimates that the total cost of the WSB proposals over the suggested 18-month-long contract would average out at $3.97 a ton.

So the steel industry is following the policy set in earlier negotiations, of seeking to earn a profit on each concession it finally is forced to make to steel workers, and then trying to pin the blame on its workers.

Result of this policy has been a steady boost in steel profits, which have increased from $9 a ton in 1947 to more than $20 a ton in 1951, according to OPS estimates.

In past Washington sessions, the government has offered the steel industry $3 a ton in Capehart Amendment price increases, and once talked of going to $4 or $4.50 a ton. But the industry refused to budge, and the management-created price deadlock—which is the keystone of the long steel deadlock—hasn't been broken.

The Supreme Court's decision finally outlawing Truman's seizure action brought another anti-labor flood tide in Congress.

The Senate was in the midst of a series of roll call votes on extension of the Defense Production Act, including the Dirksen Amendment which would kill the present WSB, deny labor representation on it and strip it of disputes settling powers. CIO, Murray warned, would not "willingly submit to or cooperate with" the stabilization program if denied voice in it. (Details on anti-labor legislation, Page 12; details on price controls, Page 5.)

One test of congressional opinion came on the Ives Amendment, adopted 42 to 41 with Vice Pres. Barkley casting the deciding ballot. This rider, while keeping a tripartite labor-management - public WSB, would strip it of its disputes-settling power as in the steel case.

What amounted to compulsory arbitration under congressional direction was proposed by Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.), the Banking Committee chairman who had fought all previous efforts to put any backbone into price control sections of the Defense Production Act.

Sen. Taft (R. O.), who ought to know, said "the proposed amendment would be infinitely more tough on labor than is the Taft-Hartley Act" because "it would add an indefinite seizure feature (under which) the government could not change wages by one cent."

Sen. Byrd (D., Va.), with the backing of other Dixiecrats, presented a rider to the Defense Production Act demanding Truman invoke the T-H injunction clause.

Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) said it would be "unfair" to the steel workers to "superimpose another 80 days delay" while Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) warned that an anti-strike injunction now would "thwart, impede and impair collective bargaining" now under way.

In the House, Michigan's hidebound Rep. Hoffman (R.) presented a resolution to direct the President to use T-H and to call out troops against striking workers. (The present steel strike, like the April walkout, has been quiet, orderly and complete.)

THERE WERE a few members of the House and Senate who took a level-headed view, and acted on Truman's challenge of many weeks ago that Congress should provide a workable legislative alternative to the now-revoked seizure action.

"Congress," said Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.), "must act without a moment's delay to give the President the power he needs. This is no time for politics. This is a time for action."

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) presented two proposals: a resolution urging steel management and labor to make an "interim" agreement to end the strike, and a long-range proposal for creation of a joint labor-management relations commission for a "more permanent and lasting" consideration of industrial relations.

Humphrey struck at attempts to ram through new anti-labor bills, warning:

"Labor-management relations are so closely woven in the fabric of our national government and democratic institutions that it can not be dealt with hastily."

Steel Stockholder Raps Management

Mrs. Wilma Soss, the lady who tried in vain to inject a note of sweet reason into the annual meeting of U. S. Steel stockholders, took another sock at the industry in which she owns shares after the Supreme Court voided its seizure by President Truman.

Management's failure to adopt democratic practices in its relations with stockholders is responsible for the crisis, said Mrs. Soss, who is president of the Federation of Women Shareholders in American Business.

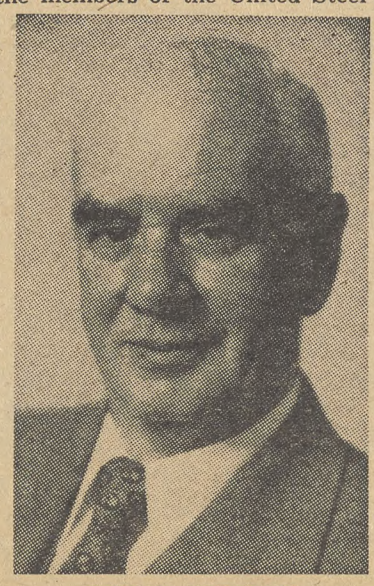
"The Supreme Court decision," she said, "focuses responsibility at long last where it belongs—on management. Industrial statesmanship and progressive modern management, not Congress, are needed to open the steel mills."

'We Have No Alternative Than To Cease Work'

Here is the text of the strike call statement issued by Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO Steelworkers immediately after the Supreme Court ended government seizure of the industry:

The Supreme Court of the United States, in its opinion on the steel seizure, has upheld the decision of Judge Pine.

The act of the Court leaves the members of the United Steelworkers of America without the benefit of a collective bargaining agreement.



PHILIP MURRAY

In the absence of a wage agreement, our members have no alternative other than to cease work.

This notice is accordingly directed to all of our local unions and their members directly affected by the decision of the Supreme Court.

At the same time, I call upon the various steel companies to participate in collective bargaining conferences with the representatives of the United Steelworkers of America, looking toward the perfection of a contract firmly based upon the recommendations of the Wage Stabilization Board.

All local union officers are authorized to make satisfactory arrangements for standby employes to protect the properties of the various companies during the period of the work stoppage.

Justices Were Late For Lunch

The Supreme Court decision tossing out seizure of the steel industry was announced last Monday noon.

Within 40 minutes, a strike call to CIO Steelworkers was issued by Philip Murray, union president. And, almost simultaneously, the first report of picketing came from U. S. Steel Corp.'s plant at Gary, Ind.—the world's largest steel mill.

All the while, the high court justices were reading their seven separate opinions, a task that took two hours and 35 minutes. And the judges were 35 minutes late for lunch that day.

Failure Of A Congress

The 82nd "Horsemeat" Congress is still falling down on the job.

Its reactionary majority is in the process of turning the Defense Production Act into a measure that is as weak as possible in stopping inflation and as strong as possible in cracking down on American working men and women.

That about describes what happened in the Senate last week after the steel workers went on strike.

Consider: So far as controlling inflation on a fair and effective basis is concerned, the present Defense Production Act is a weak reed, ridden by the Capehart, Herlong and other amendments. The new bill, reported out by Sen. Maybank's (D. S.C.) Banking Committee, is even worst.

But when it came up on the floor, the Dixiegop hatchet gang went to work.

On the one hand, the Senate voted to cut off all rent ceilings early next year.

On the other, it moved to whittle down the Wage Stabilization Board by stripping it of powers to recommend disputes settlements. This was the Ives Amendment, adopted by a 42 to 41 vote.

And then Maybank came up with another non-stop injunction plan against striking workers.

What's happening in Congress on the Ives, Dirksen and other proposals makes clear, as CIO Pres. Philip Murray said, that the steel barons and other big business groups are trying to turn defense stabilization into an "anti-labor, pro-industry program."

And "neither the CIO nor any other respectable labor organization," Murray warned, "will willingly submit to or cooperate with a stabilization program so designed."

Taft Looks Ahead

There's a slight amount of disagreement between Sens. Taft and Maybank on just how sharp an ax they'll try to toss in our necks this pre-election session.

But Taft's not at all uncertain what he'll do—IF he can finagle the Republican nomination for the President, and IF the GOP wins.

Recently, in the columns of the Wall Street Journal, Taft unveiled the labor bill he'll push if he goes to the White House. What he calls it is "an anti-labor-monopoly bill" and what it would do is destroy national unions and chop labor up into isolated plant-by-plant units.

Sen. Taft's latest indication of President Taft's program is fair notice. It should be fair warning.

Not On Their Jobs

One of the reasons why this is a "do-nothing" Congress is the shocking absenteeism of many members on important roll calls.

That was a factor in approval of the race-baiting McCarran immigration bill a few weeks ago, and the degree of absenteeism may determine the outcome of the pending vote on President Truman's veto of the tideland oil grab.

In a few more weeks, the lawmakers will be going home for the campaigns. A good many of them should be asked:

Where were you when the roll was called?

The Freak

The Most Powerful Lobby

Letters are the voice of the most powerful lobby in the country—the people back home—Rep. Javits (R.-Lib. N. Y.) says in an article in the June issue of the American Magazine. A digest of the article follows:

SOME CONGRESSMEN are so anxious to know what their constituents think that they have not waited for them to write. They have initiated the correspondence themselves. I am one of them.

I write two letters a year to each of my constituents, reviewing what has been done and soliciting his opinion. This amounts to 180,000 letters a year. I know of at least 20 legislators who go to the expense of conducting public-opinion polls among the registered voters of their area.

They do this because they consider it vital to know what their people feel concerning the important issues of the moment . . .

Letters can accomplish more than you think. Even single letters. A woman recently wrote me, "I never write my congressman. It wouldn't do any good. He probably wouldn't even read the letter."

Such a statement amazed me. I know of single letters that by themselves have saved millions of dollars, sent high officials to jail, changed the thinking of key congressmen, and resulted in legislation affecting the lives of hundreds of thousands of people . . .

One of my constituents, who was stricken with polio as a child but who is now working and has a family, wrote in to say he thought legislation should be introduced which would give the physically disabled some sort of dispensation in their income taxes.

He pointed out that it is almost impossible for such persons to get insurance, and argued that the money saved on taxes would enable disabled people to build up a fund to help them when they are old or if they should become sick.

I read the letter, felt the arguments valid and accordingly introduced legislation during the last session of Congress. The bill called for the same $600 additional exemption now granted to the blind, and was passed. A total of 100,000 persons are now benefiting as a result of a single letter!

Many congressmen have told me that letters have caused them to change their position on specific bills. Most members insist, however, that "pressure mail" has less weight with them than spontaneous mail. Sen. Lehman of New York recently said on the floor of Congress that he has "always been affected by letters and telegrams from people I thought were serious and sincere," but that the mere volume of mail has never influenced him.

It would be impolite to question the assertion that members of Congress are not influenced by the volume of mail. I do not think they like to admit it, but my own opinion is that they are a lot more influenced by weight than they will say.

I PERSONALLY pay real attention to so-called "pressure mail." It represents a person's opinion even though the opinion has been organized and directed. Otherwise, the person would not write. It is true, however, that most of us are more influenced by a letter that seems to be a spontaneous expression of an individual voter's wishes or beliefs.

Javits gave 10 rules governing writing letters to congressmen:

1. Write legibly.

2. Don't write more than one page unless absolutely necessary.

3. List the subject at the top of the page.

4. Don't write a congressman who isn't yours. It's waste of time. If you don't know who your congressman is, call your local newspaper.

5. Put your name and address at the top of your letter. Don't feel it necessary to threaten him with your vote. He's aware of that power as soon as he sees the address.

6. Don't scold and don't be abusive. A congressman wants to be persuaded, not dictated to.

7. Telegrams are not more effective than letters, unless there's a real need for speed.

8. Phone calls are useless. Congressmen are too busy to spend much time in their offices.

9. Write your representative and your two senators. If you have the time for only one letter, write your representative.

10. If your congressman deserves a pat on the back, give it to him. It may sweeten his outlook on humanity and make him all the more determined to fight for it.

Another Teapot Dome—But Legal

Absentees In Power—

Senate Sets Vote On Truman Oil Land Veto

ALTHOUGH national resources worth at least $40 billion are at stake, the fate of the Dixiegop move to override President Truman's veto of the "states' rights" tidelands oil bill is likely to be settled solely in terms of Senate absenteeism.

A two-thirds vote is required to override, and while the House passed the bill by more than that margin, the Senate vote for passage was 50 to 35—insufficient to set aside the veto. Even supporters of the measure concede that if all Senate opponents are present at the vote there is no chance for enactment.

The 82nd Congress, however, has run up one of the worst records for absenteeism in history. The Dixiegops are trying to maneuver a vote at a time when an adequate number of Administration supporters won't be around.

ON the other hand, since many many Republican Senators were whooping it up last week at the homecoming for Gen. Eisenhower in Abilene, Kans., the GOP leaders managed to postpone the vote, originally tentatively set for last Thursday, until after their return.

That gave Sens. Nixon (R. Calif.), Connally (D. Tex.) and Long (D. La.), spokesmen for the three states that would get nearly all of the $40 billion in tidelands oil as a gift at the expense of the people of all the other 48 states, more time to assail the President for his veto.

In vetoing the bill, Truman pointed out that it ignored the rights of the nation and its whole population by making "a free gift of immensely valuable resources, which belong to the entire nation, to the states which happened to be located nearest to them."

Truman reviewed the long history of the tidelands dispute and recalled that the Supreme Court on three separate occasions has ruled that the federal government has "paramount rights" to oil in submerged lands of the marginal seas.

"The vast quantities of oil and gas in the submerged ocean lands belong to the people of all the states. They represent part of a priceless national heritage. This national wealth should be used for the welfare and security of the nation as a whole. Its future revenues should be applied to relieve the tax burden of the people of all the states and not just a few states," his message declared.

The President also stressed the importance to national defense of keeping the tidelands oil under federal jurisdiction in view of the recent rapid drop in oil reserves. He endorsed the proposal of Sen. Hill (D. Ala.), which the Senate rejected earlier this year, to use the revenue from tidelands oil to aid education throughout the nation.

8c Hike Urged For Ore Miners

A general wage increase of 8c an hour was recommended to the Wage Stabilization Board last week by a special panel which heard evidence in disputes between the CIO Steelworkers and three Utah lead and zinc mining companies.

The panel also suggested changes in the job classification programs and proposed the parties be given 30 days to negotiate on them, with jurisdiction retained in case of failure to agree. Covered by the recommendations are about 1000 USA-CIO members employed by the U. S. Smelting, Refining & Mining Co., Combined Metals Reduction Co. and New Park Mining Co., all of Salt Lake City.

WSB Loses Powers—

Price Law Pending But Senate Whacks Labor

STRIKING multiple blows at a fair and effective stabilization program, the Senate late last week was moving toward passage of a new Defense Production Act even weaker than the present law.

Although the Senators supposedly were debating price controls, most of the fury centered on legislative moves to hamstring labor. And one key vote cut the powers of the Wage Stabilization Board.

Vote on the bill was held up by (1.) Sen. Byrd's (D. Va.) so far unsuccessful move to write in "instructions" to President Truman to obtain a Taft-Hartley injunction against the striking CIO Steelworkers, and (2.) Sen. Maybank's (D. S.C.) new long-term anti-strike injunction bill (See Page 3).

Capitol Hill reports said most of the debate centered on these anti-labor moves, with comparatively little attention being paid to the anti-inflation sections of the law.

The temper of the Congress was reflected in these votes:

1. Adoption by a 42 to 41 vote —with Vice President Barkley breaking the tie—of a rider stripping the Wage Stabilization Board of its disputes settling powers, which would greatly reduce effectiveness of that agency.

2. Adoption of a move cutting off all federal rent ceilings next Feb. 28, an eight-month extension instead of the requested one year.

3. Adoption of a move to kill price ceilings on potatoes—which have been held off the market in a price-boosting drive —and other perishable vegetables and fruits.

The latter action brought an order from Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall lifting ceilings on white potatoes.

Major labor provision acted upon in the Senate concerned the WSB.

Originally Sen. Dirksen (R. Ill.) got committee approval for an amendment killing off the present three-party WSB of labor, industry and public members, setting up a new board of supposedly "all public" members and denying that board disputes-settling powers.

On the floor, Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) proposed a substitute, keeping the present WSB and its powers intact. This was defeated.

Then Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.) presented an amendment to keep the three-party WCB but strip it of its disputes powers, which was adopted by the one-vote margin.

A vote was still pending on the more stringent Dirksen proposal.

Adoption of this amendment, CIO Pres. Philip Murray warned earlier, would cause CIO to refuse to participate in a stabilization program in which it was denied any voice (see Page 12).

Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.) last week backed down more than halfway in his attempts to rewrite the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act by amendments to the Defense Production Act.

After vigorous protests from the CIO had been supported by a large number of industrial firms, Fulbright withdrew his proposal to exempt from the Walsh-Healey Act government purchases of goods sold on the open market.

By a voice vote, however, the Senate adopted the third and least harmful of Fulbright's three proposed amendments. This would provide for judicial review of the Labor Dept.'s interpretation of the law.

Fulbright previously withdrew a third amendment which would have required prevailing wage standards to be set on the basis of city, town or other local limits, rather than regionally or by industry as at present.

Senate Cuts Housing Fund, Rent Controls

WHILE the Senate last week bowed before the real estate and landlord lobbies on two fronts, CIO units across the nation were fighting back hard to save rent controls and low-rent public housing.

In a two-pronged assault on low-income families, the Senate first cut the number of public housing units to be built in 1953 to 45,000 units. At least 125,000 units would be needed to bring the program up to schedule.

Then, having thus contributed to a continuance of the acute housing shortage, it voted to end federal rent controls Feb. 28.

The Senate's figure for public housing was nine times that approved by the House, but it wasn't big enough even to take care of the 50,500 units in critical defense areas alone that have been authorized but held up because of a 50,000 limitation this year. Efforts by Sens. Moody (D. Mich.), Kefauver (D. Tenn.) and Lehman (D. N.Y.) to up the total were beaten back.

Meanwhile CIO locals and councils were fighting the powerful real estate interests in local engagements from coast to coast.

IN THE East, the Essex-West Hudson County CIO Council led in fighting against a move to decontrol rents in Rutherford, N. J., the wealthiest suburb of Newark and home of many Wall Street bankers. The attack followed the pattern used by the real estate lobby working for decontrol of suburbs around large cities before concentrating on the metropolis itself.

Exec. Sec. Joel R. Jacobson of the Essex-West Hudson IUC protested to the City Council against decontrol of Rutherford because of the possible consequences to Newark, where the 1950 census shows the vacancy rate to be only 1%. In Rutherford itself, the vacancy ratio is two-thirds of 1%.

In Richmond, Calif., the only city of more than 100,000 in the U. S. where half the population is still living in temporary war housing, CIO Auto Workers Local 560 and the Contra Costa County IUC joined to organize the East Bay Committee for Better Housing. Over 40 organizations are already represented in the group.

The committee's first action was to file a protest with the Housing and Home Finance Agency against plans to tear down a number of war housing units as part of the city's redevelopment program. It pointed out that about 12,000 persons would be made homeless, since no plan has been made to rehouse them in the already badly overcrowded area.

Fair Trade Is Quack Plan, UAW's Montgomery Says

THE FAIR Trade Bill legalizing setting of minimum prices is "bad medicine for consumers and a quack remedy for the economic ills it is aimed at," according to Donald Montgomery, director of the Washington office of the CIO Auto Workers.

Montgomery testified last week before the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The bill has already passed the House.

"While forcing consumers to pay high fixed prices," Montgomery told the Senate group. "It will not solve the competitive problems of small retailers. It will only make them worse.

"Its alleged purpose is to protect small retailers against big retailers. It proposes to do that by making big and little retailers alike sell as the same high prices. It can't even accomplish that purpose completely."

In the long run, Montgomery said, the net effect of price fixing "will be to wake consumers up to the fact that when they blindly buy the big names of national advertising they are being taken for a ride."

Proponents of the bill, he added, count on consumers paying "high fixed prices for glamour and guff" until the time comes when experience forces them to realize they can buy just as good or better merchandise at lower prices than nationally advertised brands.

Montgomery also urged repeal of the Miller-Tydings Act. The U. S. Supreme Court ruled unconstitutional its authority for manufacturers to enter into price-fixing agreements with retailers.

CIO And World Affairs—

'In Helping Others, We Are Helping Our America'

THE REVISED third annual edition of the pamphlet, The CIO and World Affairs, made its bow last week.

A summary of CIO policy statements on labor's position and role in international affairs, it is published by the CIO International Committee, which is headed by Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers.

It stresses the basic CIO position that military preparations alone "make up only a part of the answer to Soviet Communist aggression."

"Totalitarian aggression against freedom," it points out, "seeks to ally itself with the revolutionary and progressive ferment which is stirring two-thirds of the world's population —the underprivileged two-thirds who are hungry, ill and oppressed."

Instead of denouncing these national movements as "Communist," the pamphlet holds, Americans should realize that "even when misguided, they spring from a wholesome desire for individual betterment, national independence and the attainment of human dignity."

The pamphlet discusses such problems as the future of the free world, the United Nations, mutual security, Latin America, labor participation in government agencies dealing with international matters, and the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Women seek security.

In an introduction, CIO Pres. Philip Murray tells CIO members why they should be concerned about the lot of workers in other countries.

"Unionism cannot stop at national boundaries," Murray wrote.

"A drop in wages in Paris can mean unemployment in Pittsburgh or Detroit. Anti-labor activities in Buenos Aires can cause chain-reaction effects throughout the hemisphere that could involve all the American people.

"And, of course, Communist infiltration or aggression — which always has the trade unions as a first objective — can at any moment cause a world crisis."

He pointed out that CIO members "know that Communism and dictatorship flourish in the swamps of economic stagnation."

"Devoted as we are to our American democracy," he added, "we have no desire to see the further spread of wicked cynical Communist totalitarianism.

"By helping build the union movements of other lands, by helping their members enjoy a better life, we show that democracy does work. And we prove that Kremlin propaganda — which portrays America as a land of Wall Street imperialism and exploited serfs—is a fabric of Communist lies and slander.

"In helping others, we are helping our America."

The pamphlet emphasizes the CIO's determination to continue the collective struggle for enduring peace.

"We believe that the enormous strength and industrial power of our nation," it says, "should be used in a great mutual effort with the rest of the free world to promote economic prosperity, to extend democratic freedoms, and to ensure a lasting peace."

It reiterated the CIO belief that other nations must be allowed "to work for their own improvement in accordance with their own ideals."

"But that improvement cannot be achieved while workers' organizations and other free institutions are suppressed," it continues.

The pamphlet reflects the CIO's endorsement of the United Nations and the various mutual security and aid programs.

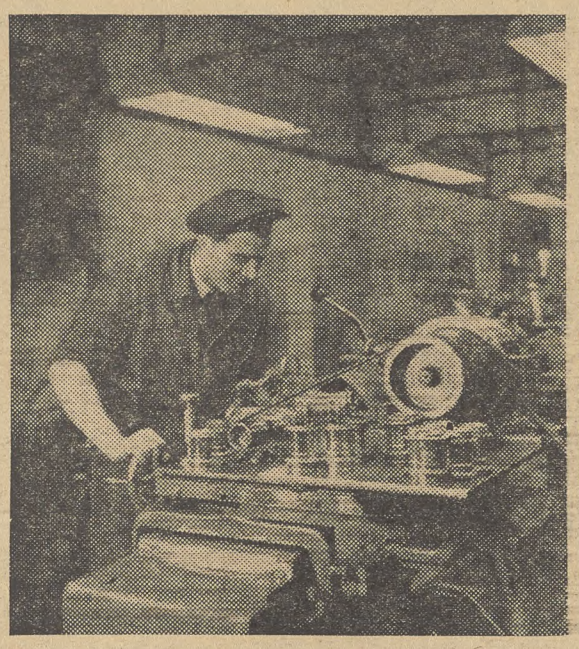
It repeats the CIO's frequent demand that the great mass of people in the countries the United States helps be assured of a share in the prosperity we are trying to build up, so that their standards of living may be improved.

In discussing Latin America, it takes to task "some American corporations" which have been "slow to understand the need to revise out-of-date methods and to recognize the basic justice of much of the prevailing dissatisfaction with the status quo."

"Here, as in other parts of the world," it points out, "our national interests now coincide with the economic, political and social betterment of all the people."

The pamphlet discusses in detail the ICFTU, in the founding and continuance of which the CIO played an important role.

(This pamphlet is an excellent guide for CIO local union and council education classes. Copies are available at 10c each, 50 for $4.50 from the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.)



Sturdy unionist: Austrian auto worker.

Free unions are stronger.

The CIO Is For:

1. Strengthening of democratic institutions throughout the world.

2. Improvement in the living standards of people in every land.

3. Support of the United Nations as the best means of assuring world peace.

4. Continuance of the Mutual Security Program, with sufficient funds to make it truly effective.

5. Vast expansion of the Point Four program for aid to backward areas.

6. Assistance to democratic free unions throughout the world, as a bulwark of economic progress and liberty.

7. Labor participation in government agencies dealing with international affairs.

8. Expansion of the influence and effectiveness of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The CIO Is Against:

1. Reactionary imperialism.

2. Communist imperialism, infiltration and aggression.

3. Fascist imperialism, infiltration and aggression.

4. Financial aid to reactionary dictatorships.

5. Suppression of democratic, bona fide trade unions.

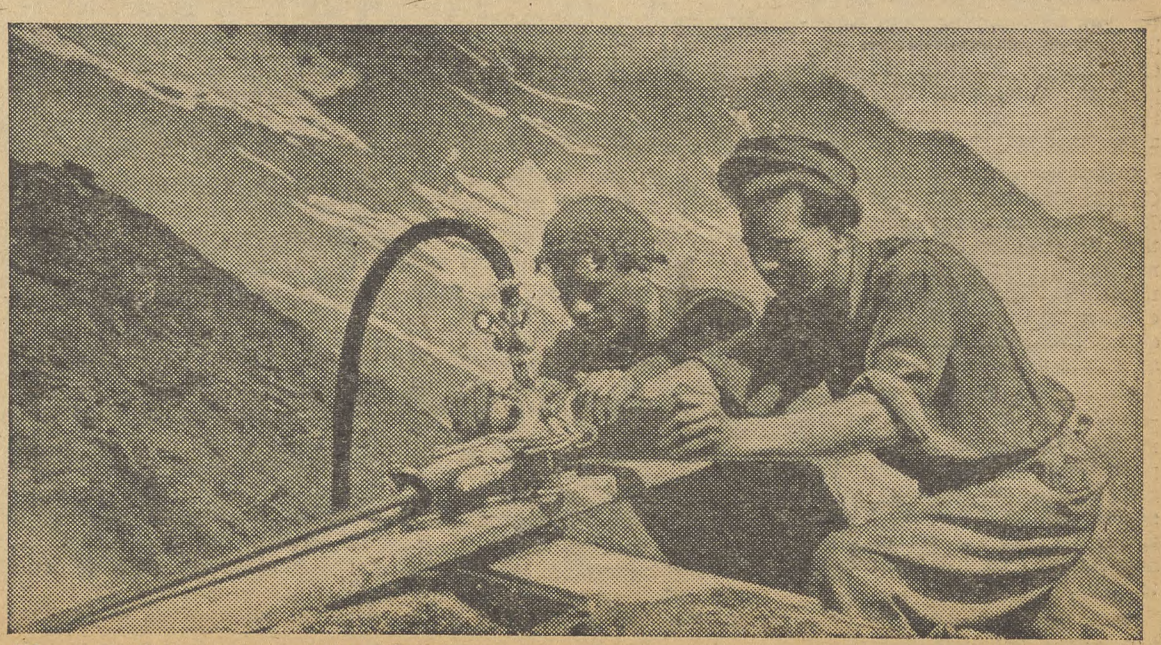
6. False economy in foreign assistance programs.

7. Continuation of international cartels which threaten the peace of the world, restrict production or exploit consumers.

8. Exploitation of peoples at starvation levels by foreign capital.

Proud of his union.

The security is mutual . . .



Through their vigor, a better Europe.

CIO In Panama—

Canal Zone Is Ready-Made For Real Democracy

(Last article of a series.)

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

LIFE could be very pleasant for the colored workers in the U. S. Canal Zone in Panama. Right at our back door lies a wonderful—and easy—chance to show the world that we can practice the democracy we preach.

The Canal Zone is just a tiny 10-mile-wide strip of the earth's surface, only 50 miles in length, but it is ready-made for a laboratory experiment in real democracy. We could make it a show place—a sample paradise even—for the workers who live there. And the costs would be paid out of their wages.

The workers pay now, of course, for what they get, but there is no sensible reason why they couldn't have attractive homes, good nourishing food without penny-pinching; higher education for their children who want it, and above all the right to hold their heads up and be treated as though they were just as good as anybody. Now they feel they are Uncle Sam's step-children.

It's hot in the zone, but the tropical climate does simplify some phases of living. Warm clothes and fuel eat up a good-sized chunk of the average worker's wage during the winter months in the States. If the under-paid zone employes had to buy heavy coats, sweaters, coal, etc., they'd never be able to squeeze out a living under present day conditions.

Nature Helps

Many of them have a hard enough time as it is. Those with large families might be even worse off, if it weren't for another advantage of the tropics—the mango, papaya, banana and coconut trees. The nourishing mango particularly, which grows abundantly in Panama, can be given credit for saving some children from actual starvation in hard times, a CIO union official told me.

Compared to a crowded industrial city, the zone certainly has quite a few advantages as a place for workers to live. It is an attractive country with its sunshine, rolling hills, abundant tropical growth, fine paved roads and picturesque canal cutting through its length from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

It's quite exciting to catch a glimpse of a ship from some faraway country—Australia or Sweden or Canada or the South Pacific—being pulled through a lock by small electric "mules" or locomotives. Zone workers are proud to be living in what tourist brochures call "the crossroads of the world."

Not too many people are needed to run the canal and the facilities connected with it. The zone is not an overcrowded area. In spite of its small size, you get the impression of spaciousness. There's plenty of ground for roomy homes, gardens, parks, recreation centers, and schools with big playgrounds, tennis courts and baseball fields.

The crowded barracks houses, of course, are a hangover from the early days, but it does strike you as another of the oddities of human behavior to see people packed like sardines into these dark, box-like structures, with so much ground all around unused.

LIVING is still very primitive in the interior of the Republic of Panama, which is cut in half by the Canal Zone. These thatched huts are typical of the homes of thousands of natives who eke out an existence on small farms.

A housing program is under way to get rid of the most ramshackle of the barracks, but it is being done piecemeal with no overall plan to make living in the zone as pleasant as it could be made. The only basic principle evident in this present housing development seems to be a shortsighted "economy," featuring cheap and often shoddy construction, rather than decent living.

This is particularly sad when you think that most of the Local Rate canal workers live all their lives in the zone. They can't buy their own homes, as the U. S. controls the whole area and private ownership is forbidden. Their living conditions are entirely at the mercy of the government. Most of the wages they make go right back into the zone funds, for rent, food and clothes.

You'd think that for the essential work the Local Rate workers do in the zone, the least that the U. S. could do would be to give them as decent a break as possible.

We've spent billions in experiments to discover appalling means for destruction in war. An experiment in human relations among the colored workers in the Canal Zone would be a tiny cost in comparison, and could even be considered of military benefit. For the U. S. regards the Panama Canal as a strategic part of the nation's defenses and in time of crisis would have to rely heavily upon colored as well as U. S. workers there.

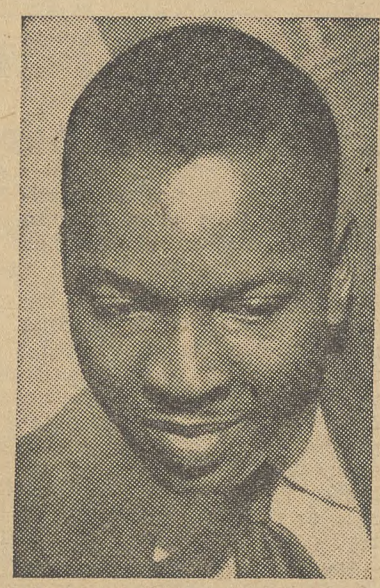
Such an experiment might show that fair and intelligent treatment of the Negro workers would bring out skills and ability among them now being wasted. Furthermore it could pay for itself, for this huge government-owned enterprise is a profitable business. Capital assets of the Panama Canal Co. as of June 30, 1950, totaled more than $724 million.

The Canal Zone Governor's annual report for the fiscal year 1950, the latest published report available, states that toll receipts for that year came to $24.5 million. Nearly 7700 ships of 28 different nationalities used the canal in 1950—those of U. S. registry leading with 51.5% of the total tonnage.

Of these, about a thousand were exempt from tolls—vessels owned and operated by the U. S. and the Republic of Panama, and warships belonging to Colombia—which once owned the zone—are entitled to free passage. Another thousand or so were small vessels under 300 tons, mostly banana boats operating in local waters, which paid lower tolls.

The main part of the traffic, however, was big ocean-going ships, nearly 5500 of which went through the canal in 1950. It cost a tanker (these made up 12% of the transits) with an average tonnage of around 7000 net tons, more than $6000 to go through the canal, at an average rate of 87c a net ton.

Toll receipts for 1950 were the highest on record. They dropped slightly in 1951, but for the first seven months of 1952, they were nearly $1 million over what they were for the same period in 1951.



VOLUNTEER.—A 16-hour day is what Pres. Ed Gaskin of Local 900, CIO Government & Civic Employees, often puts in as a school principal and after hours on union work.

The average daily transits in January, 1952, was 16.68, with an average of 500 for the month. If this high level continues, the Canal Administration said, the total for the fiscal year 1952 will reach another record.

Business Is Good

Apparently the high rate has continued, for a U. S. Civil Service man on duty at the Pedro Miguel locks told me when I was there at the end of April that an average of 22.7 ships a day went through the canal that month. He said that a big ship's transit cost from $7000 to $8000.

In short, Uncle Sam's Panama Canal business is good.

Besides the canal, the U. S. government operates many other facilities in the zone usually carried on by private enterprise. These include the supply of fuel, provisions, ship chandlery and repairs to vessels; handling of cargo and allied operations; and the operation and management of a telephone system, a railroad, steamship line between New York and Panama (net profit, in 1950, $90,963), two hotels—the Tivoli and Washington—(gross revenue for both about $858,000).

It is the Commissary Division, however, which concerns the zone employees most, for it operates the food, clothing and household goods stores, where the workers, both Local Rate and U. S. Rate, do their shopping. In 1950, employes spent more than $19.5 million in the stores.

Since there were 14,500 Local Rate workers, and only 4000 U. S. Raters, far the larger part of this came from the low-paid colored employes, who paid right back to Uncle Sam most of what they made. In 1950, when prices in U. S.-owned zone stores, approximating those in the States, were soaring, the minimum hourly wage of Local Rate workers was 26c. The maximum which few received was $1.40, and the average was 50c. (Since then hourly wages have been increased only 7c.)

The pay of U. S. Rate workers, however, based on rates equivalent or closely similar to those prevailing in federal service in the States, was of course much higher, and they were in a better position to meet the higher prices.

The Governor's 1950 annual report mentions that in July, 1949, 13 Local Rate workers in six occupations were transferred to the U. S. Rate of pay. As far as I could discover, they are the only Local Raters who ever received this concession.

Much has been made of the case of these 13 lucky people. The publicity given to the action has made them quite famous among CIO members in the zone who are pressing for a more wide-spread application of such advancement.

I talked with one of the 13 at the monthly meeting of Local 900's Balboa chapter held Apr. 29. He is manager of the Pacific Clubhouse where the meeting was held. S. D. Callender is an intelligent and nice-looking man with a courteous and friendly manner like so many of those I talked to in the zone. He said he's been manager since the clubhouse opened as a Local Rate center in 1948.

The account Callender gave me of his rise from Local Rate worker to U. S. Rate employe was the only "success story" I came across in the zone. He said he started as a soda fountain attendant in 1926 with $40 a month pay. He now makes $2.22 an hour as manager of the Pacific Clubhouse. At first he also received the 25% additional pay that U. S. Raters get, but this was shortly taken away.

That a few Local Rate workers have been, at least partly, brought up to the pay standards of the favored U. S. Rate workers in the zone seems little to point to, where there must be so many others who deserve similar advancement—accepting for the time conditions as they are at present.

But what about general working conditions in the zone? Aside from the low pay, poor housing, lack of a decent pension system, and the discrimination in favor of the white U. S. workers—are there other serious grievances?

As a whole, the zone's Negro workers have at least been included in the enlightened working conditions such as unions in this country have struggled long years to get. They have a 40-hour, five-day week; paid holidays and vacations; union recognition; some seniority rights; bonus pay for dangerous work; a four-step grievance procedure; and hospital and medical care, with costs checked off the worker's pay.

In some important respects, certainly, democracy in the zone has a real start. It wouldn't be too hard a job to carry through and wipe out discrimination completely—starting with payment of higher wages and construction of good housing.

The zone would then really be a pleasant place to live and to work, and we could repay in part the debt we owe to the fine type colored workers whose lives are given to the service of America in a strategic defense area.

IUE Demonstrates At GE Plants

GENERAL ELECTRIC last week stepped up its campaign of intimidation in an effort to halt demonstrations by 71,000 members of the CIO Electrical Workers against its "chiseling" wage offer.

GE's "offer" of 1c an hour has been rejected by the IUE's GE Conference board.

In at least one case, GE's efforts to intimidate IUE members backfired on June 5. When the union members at the Pittsfield, Mass., plant were told that if they held the demonstration they would be "docked" for the entire day, most of them walked out for the rest of the day.

At the Trenton, N. J., plant the IUE members were threatened with the closing of the plant for two days following the demonstration.

At Syracuse, N. Y., where the workers were laid off a week ago because of surplus inventory, GE management said that if the demonstration were held, they would not be paid for the Memorial Day holiday and that the plant would be closed three weeks in July, instead of the two weeks required for vacation.

Early reports showed that these threats did not halt the demonstrations at the 53 GE plants throughout the country.

"Since the rejection of the company's offer, GE has conducted a campaign of intimidation against its employes," IUE Pres. James B. Carey charged.

"Officials of the company have threatened that the miserable 1c offer will not be retroactive while pointing out that the non-union employes are already receiving the 8c a day wage raise."

"GE Vice Pres. Lem Boulware has hypocritically said that the 1c an hour offer is all that GE should give or is allowed to give under the regulations of the Wage Stabilization Board.

"IUE-CIO's demands recognize the urgent need of the workers at GE for a substantial and decent wage increase. All the demands IUE-CIO has made are completely within the spirit and the letter of the WSB regulations."

INTER-RACIAL leadership training school for CIO members was a little startling to the folks around Tallageda, Ala., in what is regarded as a strong Ku Klux Klan area. But it proved immensely popular with the workers themselves, and turned out to be the largest ever held in the South. Worker-students in group above came from a half-dozen CIO international unions ranging from the largest to the smallest.

GE, Westinghouse Fined $30,000 In Monopoly Case

GENERAL ELECTRIC, Westinghouse and two other firms charged with hogging the country's street lighting equipment business were fined a total of $48,000 in Federal District Court in Cleveland for criminal violation of the anti-trust laws.

The two big firms and the Union Metal Manufacturing Co. of Canton, O., were assessed $15,000 each. The Pacific Union Metal Co. of Los Angeles was fined $3000. Six of their officers were fined from $1000 to $5000 to raise the over-all total to $69,000.

The companies and their officers were accused of agreeing to eliminate competition among themselves and to prevent all other firms from competing in the business of making equipment for street lighting.

THE government charged them with buying up some competitors and refusing to sell parts to others, with allocating sales territories and with fixing prices.

Not only were the companies accused in the criminal action, but with the Holophane Co. of New York were charged in a civil suit which they did not fight. All five consented to a decree prohibiting them from indulging in the same unfair practices in the future.

General Electric is one of the country's industrial behemoths and formerly was headed by Charles E. Wilson, who quit as defense mobilization chief during the steel dispute. Westinghouse isn't quite as large, but the day after the criminal action in Cleveland revealed it had edged into the exclusive billion dollar class.

Another industrial giant, General Motors, came under fire when the Justice Dept. filed suit in Wilmington, Del., for $404,973.

The amount sought represents three times what GE thought it had "saved" when it got a big kickback from the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad in a land deal. GE wanted property for an assembly plant at Wilmington, according to the charges; the railroad bought a 128-acre site for $285,000 and sold it to GE for a mere $150,000.

The government is suing under the Elkins Act, which prohibits a customer from getting any kind of rebate, kickback or price concession from a railroad and allows the government to collect triple the amount of any concession.

Ohio CIO Meets On World Affairs

An international affairs institute will be held June 11-13 on the campus of Ohio State Univ. in Columbus under the joint sponsorship of the Ohio CIO Council and the American Labor Education Service.

Problems in foreign policy will be discussed by speakers from the CIO, government agencies and the field of education.

In Klan Country—

Bias Tossed Out As Workers From 7 States Attend Alabama CIO School

THE CIO has just chalked up another pioneering advance in interracial relations.

In the heart of what is regarded as Alabama's Ku Klux Klan country—a boys' camp a dozen miles from Talladega—it successfully and uneventfully held the state's first training school on record for both white and Negro workers.

Not only was it the first, but it was the largest CIO institute ever held in the South. More than 75 students spent a solid week preparing themselves for leadership in their unions, working morning, afternoon and evening.

The school was sponsored by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research in cooperation with the Alabama, Georgia and Florida State CIO Councils and the CIO Communications Workers.

It drew worker-students from Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana, South Carolina and Tennessee. They came from the Textile Workers, Shipbuilding Workers, Communications Workers, Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee, Auto Workers, Packinghouse Workers, Glass Workers, Steelworkers, Clothing Workers, and Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union, and the Alabama, Florida and Birmingham, Ala., CIO councils.

The seed for it was sown when the Div. of Vocational Education of the Alabama State Dept. of Education announced what it called a week-long workers' education program. It was to be for white workers only, and the faculty was picked without consultation with the National CIO or the Alabama State CIO Council. One week was designated for the CIO locals, and another for the AFL.

WHEN word got to National CIO headquarters, Anthony W. Smith, assistant director of councils, asked Sec.-Treas. Eugene M. Wells of the Alabama CIO Council to notify affiliated unions that the State's proposed school "does not have the endorsement of the National CIO or the Alabama State Industrial Union Council."

The fact that it was to be segregated, of course, meant it was not in accord with CIO policy.

George T. Guernsey, a CIO associate director of education, sent similar word to the education directors of CIO international unions, asking them to advise their locals of the situation.

Ben Segal, also CIO associate director of education, made a flying trip to Alabama and quickly made arrangements for a school that would be run in line with the principles set forth in the CIO Constitution and reiterated in each national convention.

And in came the students. They spent their mornings during the school week on such things as the problems facing labor during mobilization, international affairs, building stronger unions and labor history.

In the afternoons they divided into workshop groups that tackled such jobs as development of education committees, political action training, parliamentary procedure and public speaking. In the evening they listened to guest speakers and saw movies, then took a little recreation before going to bed.

More Schools Set By CIO

The successful workers' school at Talladega, Ala., is only one of a number planned for this year by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research in cooperation with various state and local CIO councils.

Others scheduled include one for the Upper South at the Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn., June 22-28; Indiana, Aug. 3-9; Oregon-Washington, Reed College, Portland, Ore., Aug. 10-16; Rocky Mountain School, Estes Park, Col., Aug. 17-24; California, Montecito School for Girls, Santa Barbara, Aug. 24-31; and Pennsylvania (with CIO Textile Workers co-sponsoring), Byndenwood, near Reading, Sept. 14-20.

CCL Charges Growing Employer Bias

CANADIAN employers are discriminating against applicants for employment on racial and religious grounds, the Canadian Congress of Labor told the Canadian government last week.

The position of the CCL was made known to Minister of Labor Milton F. Gregg by its National Committee on Racial Tolerance. At a meeting in Ottawa, the CCL group strongly urged adoption by the government of a Fair Employment Practices Act and a fair employment policy.

"Notwithstanding the healthy degree of political democracy which exists in Canada," the committee told Gregg, "there is serious grounds for complaint regarding the treatment accorded to Canadians who belong to racial or religious minorities, or who are foreign-born.

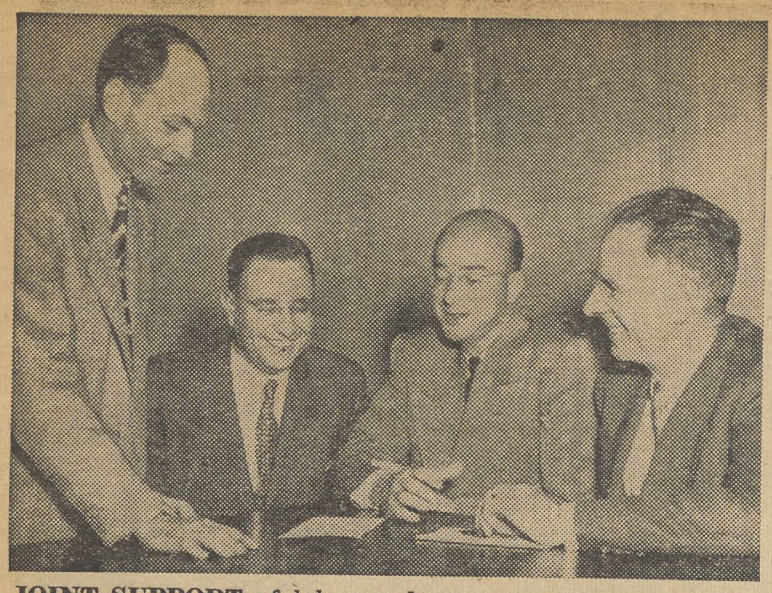
"As a labor organization, the CCL has particularly in mind the difficulties encountered by members of such minority groups in obtaining employment. It is well known that many employers engage in a deliberate policy of discrimination, screening applicants on the basis of race or religion rather than of training or aptitude."

Evidence of descrimination placed before the Senate Committee on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the CCL said, has never been refuted.

Such discrimination has the effect of sapping morale and destroying faith in Canadian democracy of thousands of people who have seen themselves treated as second-class citizens, the CCL continued.

The CCL, with which CIO unions in Canada are affiliated, proposed that a fair employment policy supplement the government's Fair Wage Policy and assure protection against discrimination by employers with government contracts.

The CCL group was headed by Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald and R. J. Lamoureux, committee chairman. Included were A. Andras, committee secretary; Sec.-Treas. Don Secord of the Brotherhood of Railway Employees and Other Transport Workers; Bert Hepworth, of the same union, and Kalman Kaplansky, director of the Jewish Labor Committee.



JOINT SUPPORT of labor and management for the East Bay United Fund for 90 community agencies has been pledged in the Oakland, Calif., area. From left: CIO Council Sec. S. M. Pratt, Edward H. Siems, campaign chairman; Dr. Clark Kerr, Labor-Management Committee chairman; and AFL Council Sec. Robert S. Ash.

MEBA Backs Pay Goal With $5 Strike Levy

THE SEVENTH-SIXTH national convention of the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association—the CIO's oldest union—pounded out a hard-hitting contract program calling for a "substantial" general wage increase and elimination of a series of inequities.

Meeting in Tampa, Fla., the delegates also demonstrated their determination to fight through strikes against the Isthmian and Pure Oil lines by voting unanimously for a flat $5 strike assessment.

The general increase to be demanded of employers on the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific coasts is intended to cover monthly wages, extra compensation for chief engineers and assistants who do not stand watches, overtime, penalty rates, hourly rates for relief engineers and for performing the work of unlicensed personnel.

ON THE Pacific Coast, the union will demand an additional payment for the establishment of a pension fund.

The convention instructed the East and West Coast negotiating committees, in the interest of maximum efficiency and coordination, to work for uniform contract expiration dates in all agreements, to seek language uniformity in all contracts when practical, to establish uniformity of demands prior to opening negotiations, and to synchronize all efforts to obtain contracts.

The convention adopted a strongly-worded resolution attacking the widespread transfer of dry cargo ships to registry under non-U. S. flags—a practice that has cost American seamen of all ratings hundreds of jobs.

IT CALLED government approval of the transfer of some such ships on the promise of their operators to build new tankers "the most beautiful swindle ever perpetrated on the American public, "and ordered a protest to the Maritime Administrator.

A sharp increase in organizing activity was expected to follow the convention decision to launch a membership drive among eligible workers on river craft.

The Smith Bill, which would put unions and employers in a receivership should a labor dispute threaten during a period of national emergency, was roundly condemned. The MEBA voted to join forces with all labor to defeat it.

In his report to the convention, Pres. H. L. Daggett referred to a long list of gains made during the previous year, including establishment of the 40-hour week at sea and the principle of time and a half for overtime.

He lauded the establishment of the MEBA welfare plans as "one of the most constructive gains made," and called for further improvements. He said:

"It has given to our membership and their dependents a sense of security. It has eased the burdens of the widows of many of our members who have been suddenly taken away by untimely death.

"The strengthening of the plans and the extension of benefits available should not be a major objective of the association."

U. S. To Speed Contracts For Textile, Shoe Plants

THE GOVERNMENT last week took steps to ease the unemployment crisis in the textile and shoe industries.

John R. Steelman, acting defense mobilizer, took the action in orders issued to the Defense Dept. and the General Services Administration — and he told these military and civilian procurement agencies to let him know in 30 days how they carried out his directives.

Steelman said that preferential treatment will be given to depressed textile firms no matter where they are located, whereas the shoe order will affect the New England area primarily.

His orders were based on recommendations of the Surplus Manpower Committee, which acted after receiving reports from panels which it set up to get the facts from the two CIO unions involved—the Textile Workers and the Shoe Workers —and the industry.

REP. LANE (D. Mass.) said Steelman's orders "should do much to relieve the suffering and distress in the manufacturing areas of New England."

"It is only fair and just that the government let contracts in areas that are suffering from unemployment," he said. "I feel that this action will be of great benefit to the people of New England."

Steelman ordered that preference be given "in awarding contracts to firms working not more than 80 hours a week in their spinning and weaving operations."

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve and the union's research director, Solomon Barkin, had emphasized to the manpower panel that the government should stop awarding contracts to mills already working two 40-hour shifts.

However, the SMC recommendations approved by Steelman stated that no preference should be given to the industry on the basis of geographic location and that no price differential should be given to any company.

But the Defense Dept. was ordered specifically to step up buying under appropriations available for the remainder of fiscal year 1952 and during the first half of the fiscal year 1953 —which begins July 1—as soon as funds become available.

Steelman's orders for the shoe industry were more far reaching. He said that Defense Manpower Policy Four should be applied to the shoe industry—from which both the shoe and the textile industry had been exempted.

Policy Four provides steps for awarding contracts on a negotiated basis in areas of unemployment.

The SMC recommendations called for "vigorous application of those procurement procedures which contemplate and permit negotiated contracts with firms located in surplus labor areas."

The procurement agencies also were told to help the shoe industry "during periods of normal seasonal lulls and to spread contracts "as widely as possible, among the firms in the men's shoe industry."

Celler Bill To Admit DPs Gets Full Backing Of CIO

THE CELLER bill authorizing the admission of 300,000 displaced persons to the United States as non-quota immigrants during the next three years last week had the full support of CIO.

In a letter to Chairman Cellar (D. N.Y.) of the House Judiciary Committee, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said the CIO not only favors passage of the bill, but for its broadening to include the admission of displaced persons not covered under the present language.

Murray described the current Displaced Persons Act, due to expire soon, as a "wise and humane measure." Under it, he added:

"The nation has been enriched by the addition of thousands of farm and factory workers, engineers, doctors, technicians and other persons possessing needed and valuable skills. They have fully assumed their obligations as American workers and are rapidly assuming the obligations and securing the rights of American citizenship."

"By the admission of these displaced persons," Murray wrote, "the United States has not only strengthened itself, but has won friends abroad.

"The displaced persons program was incontrovertible evidence that the United States, as a leader of the free world, was willing to do herself what she asked other free nations to do—admit refugees to her shores.

"These considerations apply with equal force to the Celler Bill. Passage of this bill would be proof that we in America are willing to work with other free nations for the solution of the common problems of humanity. It would be yet another resounding example of the type of leadership which the world has come to expect of the U. S. and which we must give."

PAC In Action—

New Jersey CIO Takes Lead In 'Register And Vote' Drive

CIO in New Jersey is putting some meaning behind the PAC slogan: "Your Vote Is the One That Counts."

The Jersey CIO Council has joined with leaders of 14 other important, state-wide organizations in opening a non-partisan "register and vote" campaign.

The registration group, which will be formally organized at a state conference this month, will push voter sign-up and seek liberalization of registration procedures.

Harry Krantz, CIO state legislative representative, is temporary secretary of the voter campaign committee.

Among organizations participating with CIO are the New Jersey Education Association, Americans for Democratic Action, Consumers League, Tenants Council, Urban League, State Council of Negro Women, League of Women Voters, CIO Women's League of New Jersey, State Council of Churches, and representatives of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the American Legion.

★

ONE OF CIO's newest affiliates, the Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee, is giving the PAC Dollar drive a push in New Jersey. One-hundred per cent PAC contributions were made by IAWOC Metropolitan agents in Rutherford and Hancock agents in Hackensack.

★

Some 100 Jersey CIO officials will hold a three-day conference this week at Unity House, Forest Park, Pa., with emphasis on the national political situation, registration techniques and PAC financing.

Speakers will include Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president; David J. McDonald, CIO Steelworkers and National CIO - PAC secretary - treasurer; Roy Reuther, PAC director of the CIO Auto Workers; and Mrs. Esther Murray of the CIO-PAC staff.

★

THE MINNESOTA state CIO has completed a series of PAC conventions in five of the state's congressional districts.

The district meetings agreed in supporting Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) as a serious contender for the Democratic nomination for President, in urging an open state primary, and in emphasizing backing for Fair Deal principles.

"A local politician is going to launch an anti-labor campaign. I want something to christen him with!"

★

Joseph Beirne, president of the CIO Communications Workers and a vice president of CIO, has been named to the preliminary platform committee for the Democratic national convention.

★

"What are you doing about registration"?

That's the question the Indiana CIO Council's Legislative News Letter asks local officers.

Citing the "most shackling restraints against labor" contained in the proposed Smith bill, the Indiana Council proposed a drive so that "the total CIO rolls will be qualified to vote" on Nov. 4. Otherwise, it warns, "please do not try to 'pass the buck' onto someone else."

The only PAC buck worth passing is a dollar contribution.

Boyer Is Appointed To FEPC Committee

Pres. Harry Boyer of the Pennsylvania CIO Council has been named by Gov. John S. Fine as the labor member of the Pennsylvania Industrial Relations Committee. The committee's aim to advance fair employment practices on a voluntary basis.

Defense Goals Fade; Congress Cuts Foreign Aid $1.5 Billion

HIGH DEFENSE officials last week warned of the consequences of congressional cuts totalling $1.5 billion in the President's request for next year's Mutual Security Program.

They said that the nation will be much less safe against the danger of enemy attack six months from now than it would have been if the Dixiegop isolationists had been blocked in slashing the foreign aid program to a dangerous degree.

The reduced authorization means drastic cutbacks in European defense goals. At the same time, the "economy" bloc in the House has voted a serious delay in the building of our own military might through cuts of $5 billion in the budget for U. S. armed forces.

Military experts say that, even under the full military and mutual security program called for by the President's budget, it would take at least until 1954 for the free world just to catch up with the existing might of the Russian bloc. The cutbacks are expected to set the "catch up" date back at least two years.

Moreover, slashes in the foreign aid program may not yet be over. The isolationists have another opportunity to swing the ax when Congress takes up the appropriations bill to implement the authorizing legislation.

It seems likely, however, that Congress will approve the $6.4 billion foreign aid authorization agreed upon last week by the conference committee. President Truman asked for $7.9 billion.

The conferees decided on the total amount to cut simply by "splitting the difference" between the House and Senate bills, Sen. Connally (D. Tex.) disclosed.

THE HOUSE voted $6,174,600,000 and the Senate $6,720,000,000. In each chamber, cuts were made on the floor over and above a flat $1 billion slice made in the House and Senate committees on foreign affairs.

Under the cuts already made by Congress, the Atlantic Pact allies will be unable to produce the 50 combat divisions and 4000 planes they hoped to have by the end of the year. The NATO 1952 goals, approved at the Lisbon conference in February, were based on American aid in the full amounts sought by the President.

One of the few constructive actions taken by the Senate was its approval of an amendment by Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) and 26 other Senators setting aside $150 million in counterpart funds to provide productivity loans to European businessmen willing to break away from restrictive, anti-labor practices imposed by trade associations and cartels.

Mike Mann Named CIO Director In New York

MICHAEL MANN, CIO regional director in Chicago since 1945, has been appointed to a similar post in New York and also named a CIO national representative, CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood announced last week.

In New York, he succeeds Walter Harris. The later has become director of the United Shoe Workers of America, CIO, Pennsylvania Organizing Committee.

Mann was born in Ireland and came to this country as a youth. He joined the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union in Chicago and worked as an organizer in that area from 1939 to 1943. At that time he became secretary-treasurer of the Chicago Industrial Union Council and held the post until earlier this year, when he declined to run for re-election. He also was active in Chicago civic circles.

Frank Cronin, formerly regional director in Omaha, Neb., and currently chairman of a joint midwest organizing drive sponsored by the CIO, the CIO Electrical Workers and the CIO Auto Workers, will be in charge of the Chicago CIO office for the time being.

Migrant Labor Bill Action Urged By Helen Douglas

INTENSIFIED action by labor and other progressive groups to obtain passage of the bill creating a Federal Committee on Migrant Labor before Congress recesses or adjourns was urged by Helen Gahagan Douglas, former California Congresswoman, at the annual meeting of the National Consumers League in Washington last week.

Meanwhile, the Senate Labor Committee approved the migrant labor bill by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) and others as the first constructive step toward improving conditions of seasonal farm workers. Such a committee was recommended by the President's Commission on Migratory Labor and has been endorsed by the CIO.

The bill would charge the committee with coordinating the work of Federal and state agencies to combat substandard wages, intermittent work, disruption of family living, bad housing and lack of schooling among migrants.

Mrs. Douglas called upon interested organizations to "prove to the Senate and House that how they act on this bill is going to affect substantially the votes of large numbers of voters in this year's elections."

The migrants, she said, are denied a voice in Congress or state legislatures yet are of more importance to food production than the owners of corporation farms who "turn out crops like Ford turns out cars."

Also urged by the League was the setting of minimum wages for farm workers equivalent to those in industry, extending jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board to include agriculture, and extension of social security and unemployment compensation "to the least protected workers in our economy." UPWA Gains At Campbell

SOME 5000 members of the CIO Packinghouse Workers last week went back to work at the big Campbell Soup Co. plant in Camden, N. J.

Settlement of their 17-day strike was on the basis of a new contract granting a 10c hourly increase immediately, an additional 5c for maintenance and powerhouse employes, and an extra 4% retroactive general increase covering April and May.

Memorial Day was added as a paid holiday, along with a company-paid medical and surgical insurance program, maintenance of membership union security, and union dues payments by all employes. (LPA)

Wood Union Ends Walkout In Northwest

AFTER a month-long strike, the CIO Woodworkers last week reported winning new contract settlements with major operators.

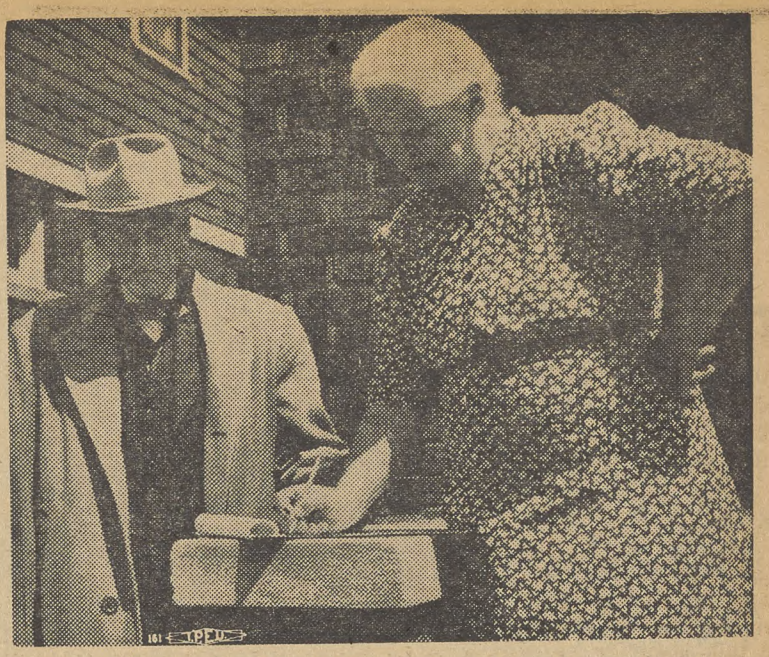
Basic terms were a wage increase of 7.5c hourly, three more paid holidays for a total of six, and two weeks vacation after three years employment (instead of five years).

IWA estimated that the settlement, which is subject to Wage Stabilization Board approval, is worth 13c hourly.

Since April, 1950, the IWA has gained wage and fringe benefit increases of 41.5c an hour, of which 32.5c was in wages.

In the settlement, however, the IWA was unable to get health and welfare insurance payments of 7½c hourly taken off pay checks.

At the peak of the recent strike, more than 40,000 IWA members were out at 700 logging and sawmill operations.



STILL ON THE JOB FOR PAC.—John Kennedy, 80, a retired member of Ford Local 600 of the CIO Auto Workers, still lends a hand for PAC. Here he gets Mrs. Sophie Stasevich's signature to CIO-sponsored petitions for reapportionment of Michigan's Legislature. She's also a former Ford worker.

Industry Opposition To Safety Bills Hit

UNION spokesmen last week blasted management's "sweetness and light" approach to accident prevention at the President's Conference on Industrial Safety at Washington.

A speech by Harry W. Anderson, General Motors vice president, in which he voiced opposition to federal safety legislation, prompted labor's criticism.

Frank Burke, safety director of the CIO Steelworkers, said that he couldn't understand the opposition to the federal mine inspection bill, which was introduced in Congress after more than 110 miners died in a Centralia, Ill., coal mine blast a few years ago.

(The Senate has passed the bill which would give the Dept. of Interior authority to enforce federal mine safety standards. The measure is pending in the House.)

Burke cited the fate of a bill to improve safety regulations in the Michigan metal mines, which was supported by the Steelworkers but which never got out of a state legislative committee because of business opposition.

(While Burke was speaking 400 volunteers were seeking frantically to rescue five men in an iron mine cave-in at Ironwood, Mich. Three were saved and two perished.)

In an opening address, President Truman called on the House to act immediately on the mine safety bill.

"In recent years thousands of miners have lost their lives in accidents that should never have happened," Truman said. "Thousands more have been injured. In a number of instances, mine disasters have occurred after warnings were given by federal inspectors."

Harry Read, executive assistant to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who took part in a panel discussion, said that labor asked Congress for federal safety legislation after it tried unsuccessfully to get management to cooperate in preventing accidents. Vice Pres. John L. Crull of the CIO Communications Workers also participated in the panel.

Baldanzi Dropped From CSC Board

George Baldanzi has been dropped from membership on the National CIO Community Service Committee, Irving Abramson, CSC chairman announced last week. Action was on a motion by Mrs. Bessie Hillman.

Baldanzi, former vice president of the CIO Textile Workers, recently signed up with the AFL.

Another Red Leader Is On Way Out

ANA PAUKER, the ruthless Communist leader of Rumania who reputedly killed her own husband because he deviated from the party line, apparently is on her way out.

It seems she did some deviating herself, according to the party's Bucharest newspaper, Scanteia. At any rate, last week she was denied reelection to her powerful posts on the party Politburo and central committee because she allegedly helped and encouraged "rightist deviation."

However, she continued as foreign minister. The newspaper said she acknowledged "some of her errors" and has pledged to fight for the defense of the party. Hence the Communist central committee decided to "help her see the origin of her deviations," Scanteia added.

There was more than a suspicion in Europe, however, that she was sharing the fate of other Jewish Communist leaders in both Russia and the satellite countries.

A long list of party stalwarts of Jewish origin—many of them veterans in its service—has been purged since the end of the war. The dropping of a leader from a party post has often proved a start down the path to liquidation.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE SUPREME COURT, by a vote of 6 to 3, decided that the President had no authority to take over the steel industry, claiming that an Act of Congress would be required. As we pointed out before, the seizure was only synthetic because industry retained the profits, dividends and what-have-you. It kept the industry going pending adjudication.

The Steelworkers, having no contract, stopped work immediately. Now the steel industry is down in a big way.

John P. Steelman, assistant to the President, called a conference. This came after the union went through all the processes provided for by the Wage Stabilization Board. The WSB made a recommendation which the steel industry spurned, yet it has the gall to talk about arbitration. Arbitration has been held in this case.

There was not one word from the reactionaries on the steel industry's failure to abide by the rules of the game, yet the Steelworkers were ridiculed for respecting every request of the government.

★

WE HOPE the case is now out of legal entanglement. The Steelworkers, under their splendid leadership and with their great fighting membership, will be able to take care of all matters.

It is incredible that they were forced into this position. When the facts are analyzed and accepted, the steel industry is to blame. The Steelworkers should receive the support of every true trade unionist—reactionaries and hysteria notwithstanding.

American workers must arouse themselves and take greater part in organizing the workers, political action, and every other activity our great movement is engaged in. We must protect the gains made and make the necessary progress the people are entitled to. Your union is your greatest strength.

★

At this writing, the textile situation is improving on behalf of the CIO Textile Workers. Any attempt to take the workers out of the CIO will be repulsed. It has been tried before in auto and failed. It has failed now in its objectives and will fail entirely as time goes on.

REG. DIR. Loren Houser reports winning a representation election at the Cambridge Woolen Corp., Cambridge City, Ind. by a vote of 36 for the Textile Workers Union and 9 no union. The Fayette County Industrial Union Council deserves credit for this victory along with TWUA Reps. Ralph Cline and Jerry Litney.

Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers reports a certification election victory at the Cork Insulation Co., in Wilmington, Del. The vote was 97 to 41 for the URW-CIO.

Reg. Dir. Henry Henry reports winning a representation election among the General American Aero-Coach office workers, East Chicago, Ind., by a vote of 47 for UAW-CIO, no union 0. Larue Leonard, staff member for UAW Region 3, carried on the campaign.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports a representation election victory at the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Co., Marion, O. by a vote of 52 for the UAW-CIO and 40 against. URW Int. Rep. Joe Emmons handled the election.

CIO Rep. Gilbert Lewis reports a victorious representation election at the Chrysler Corp. Tank plant, Newark, Del., by a vote of 541 for UAW-CIO, 16 no union. This plant will increase to about 3500 employees in about six months.

Pres. Pizer also reported representation election victories at Brockway Smith, Haigh & Lovell, Hamden, Conn., UFWA-CIO 20, no union 1; Nichols & Cox, Grand Rapids, UFWA-CIO 90, no union 1, and Valley City Furniture Co., Grand Rapids, UFWA-CIO 60, no union 34.

The CIO Oil Workers won a representation election at the Granite Oil Co., Quincy, Mass., which added some 36 new members to OWIU Local 366.

The CIO scored another victory, at the U. S. Oil Co., Providence, R. I., when a majority of the employees cast their ballots for the OWIU. Some 22 employees will hold membership in OWIU Local 366.

Strike Plan Gets Results For Gas, Coke

THE NEW "strike commission plan" of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers already is bringing results in better wages and conditions—with less lost time—for chemical industry workers.

The UGCCW program calls for naming of commissions by the international union to assist locals in ending bargaining deadlocks and gaining contracts before a strike, or in settling walkouts under way.

A first successful test for the program came in Cleveland, where a five-week strike at the American Agricultural Chemical Co. plant was ended with an improved contract.

Pres. Martin Wagner of UGCCW named Aubrey F. Bruyea and Stephen G. McMullen, district directors in Canada and New York, respectively, to a strike commission. Already participating for the international union in the situation was UGCCW Intl. Rep. John E. Phillips.

With their assistance, Gas, Coke Local 273 negotiators were able to get a new two-year contract with American Agricultural Chemical providing for a substantial wage increase, an improved hospital and medical program, and a number of other new contract gains. The local approved the settlement the next day.

UFWA Asks 2 Arrests For Scab Attacks

STRIKING CIO Furniture workers last week sought arrests of a plant superintendent and a scab at the Thomasville, N. C., Chair Co., charging them with assault with deadly weapons against pickets.

Charles Prevost, a foreman, and Cecil Marlowe, a scab, were named in warrants sworn out by officials of UFWA Local 286.

They were charged with firing heavy-duty slingshots, loaded with ball-bearings, at pickets in what the union called an effort to provoke violation of a picket-restraining injunction obtained by the company.

Fifteen hundred UFWA members now are in the fourth month of the Thomasville strike—which has been marked by mass arrests of pickets, police intimidation, use of scabs, injunctions and a flat refusal of management to bargain on wages.

"Some tactics," said UFWA Pres. Morris Pizer, "have not weakened the determination of the strikers to fight this battle to the only end which is possible and that is, of course, complete victory."

With the full backing of National CIO and CIO Southern Organizing Drive, the Furniture Workers are asking immediate strike relief contributions for the Thomasville workers. Funds should be sent to the Thomasville Strike Committee, UFWA, 101 Fifth Ave., New York 3, N.Y.

CIO Optical Union Gains First Pact At S. C. Plant

LOCAL 208 of the CIO Optical Instrument Workers got off to a good start in its first contract with Tec Optical Products Corp., a Charleston, S. C., subsidiary of a New York firm.

The contract includes a union shop with dues check-off, a 40-hour week, and insurance and hospitalization—including hospitalization for the families of members—completely paid for by management.

Other features of the contract are a rest period in the morning and afternoon, five and a half paid holidays regardless of the day of the week they fall on, seniority rights with super-seniroity for shop stewards; one week's vacation after one year, two weeks' vacation after five years, and job protection during illness.

And on top of all this workers got an hourly increase of 5c, with the union reserving the right to adjust inequities, which may increase pay of some of the workers by 10 to 15c an hour.

The South Carolina firm is a subsidiary of Kono Manufacturing Co., Woodside, Long Island, with which Local 208 has had a contract for 12 years. Local 208's headquarters are in New York City.

The contract was negotiated by Sebastian J. Rebaldo, Local 208 business manager. He was assisted by Lloyd P. Vaughan, South Carolina director of the CIO Organizing Committee; Vaughan's assistant, Joseph Donovan, and other CIO representatives.

APPOINTED — Irving Rosenberg, New Jersey director of organization of the CIO Retail Workers, has been elected chairman of the Newark Housing Authority.

Harry Moore Gets Award

HARRY MOORE, killed in a Florida race bombing last Christmas, will be posthumously awarded a top citation of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

He will be granted the 37th Spingam Medal, given each year to an American Negro for outstanding achievement. Moore was Florida state leader of the NAACP.

Presentation of the award will be made to his mother, Mrs. Rosa B. Moore, during the NAACP'S 43rd annual convention in Oklahoma City.

Walter P. Reuther, president of the CIO Auto Workers, will be among speakers at the NAACP convention, which will be held June 24-29.

In Detroit, Ford Local 600 of the UAW is pushing a pre-convention membership drive for the NAACP.

Murray Warns Of Walkout If Labor Denied WSB Voice

CIO WILL NOT "willingly submit to or cooperate with" the U. S. stabilization program if labor is denied all voice or vote by threatened congressional action turning it into an "anti-labor, pro-industry program."

That was the warning of CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week, as the Senate prepared to vote on the Dirksen Amendment to the Defense Production Act.

Murray termed the Dirksen proposal—which would kill the present Wage Stabilization Board—as "a backhanded effort by the steel industry to use the Congress for its own purposes."

In a letter to Senate Majority Leader McFarland (D. Ariz.), Murray urged defeat of the "anti-labor, pro-industry" Dirksen proposal. And he warned:

"Certainly neither the CIO nor any other respectable labor organization will willingly submit to or cooperate with a stabilization program so designed."

Dirksen's Amendment would substitute for the present WSB a new board made up entirely of public members having no power to recommend settlements in non-wage disputes. The House defeated a similar Lucas Amendment last year.

"I want to make it clear that the CIO feels that this amendment has only one basic purpose: To discredit the President of the U. S. and the existing Wage Stabilization Board and to undermine the recommendations of that Board in the current steel dispute, which have been endorsed by the President," Murray wrote.

"Up until Mar. 20 of this year, there was no dissatisfaction with the Wage Stabilization Board and its policies," Murray said. "Even our former Defense Production Administrator, Charles E. Wilson, has testified before the House Labor Committee that the Board performed its duties faithfully and well up until Mar. 20."

MURRAY recalled that the steel companies had "responded with alacrity" when the President asked them to submit their dispute with the CIO Steelworkers to the WSB. They agreed that "the Board had jurisdiction to issue recommendations on all issues in dispute between the companies and the union," including the union shop.

"Suddenly, on Mar. 20, 1952, all this changed. Having willingly, and even anxiously, submitted their case to the Board, the steel companies and their allies suddenly discovered, after the Board's decision was made on Mar. 20, 1952, that the Board was illegal, that it was improperly constituted, and that is should be abolished. They all cried, 'Kill the umpire!'"

Murray said that the Dirksen Amendment "is the direct expression of this cry."

"Those who support it," he continued, "are simply carrying out the wishes of the reactionary segments of big business which insist upon maintenance of profits far in excess of normal, as defined by this very Congress, while the living standards of their employes continue to decline because of the increase in the cost of living."

"It would substantially wreck our wage stabilization program," he declared.

Emphatic support of Murray's opposition to the Dirksen Amendment was voiced by Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers in a message to all members of the Senate.

Reuther called the Dirksen rider "an attempt to impose rigid, inequitable, unjust and arbitrary wage ceilings" and warned its adoption would "force workers to the picket lines by destroying defense emergency machinery for obtaining some measure of justice by peaceful settlement of disputes."

He said congressional enactment of such anti-labor proposals would "promote industrial warfare on the homefront with consequent interruption of production necessary for the national defense."

SPIRITED DEFENSE of record of Wage Stabilization Board was given by Pres. Joseph Beirne (center) of the CIO Communications Workers at a hearing before the House Labor Committee. Shown with him are David Feller (left), assistant CIO general counsel, and Jack Stieber, assistant to CIO members of the WSB.

'The Workers Are Taking A Beating'

"The international situation is such that Congress better take a careful look at the growing feeling in labor's ranks that workers are taking a beating."

That's what CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey told the Senate Labor Committee, in opposing the Morse industry seizure bill.

"American workers," he said, "are losing confidence in their government's ability to act as an impartial referee when needed. Workers see that it is becoming impossible for the government to serve impartially when such enormous pressure is exerted on it by industry and big business.

"We are spending millions of dollars to win the battles for workers' minds in Europe, while in this country we seem hellbent in destroying the confidence of workers in their government."

Beirne Supports WSB Steel Case Record

THERE is no industrywide bargaining in the steel industry except as the companies agree to it, Pres. Joseph Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers, a former member of the Wage Stabilization Board, last week told the House Labor subcommittee investigating the board.

In fact, he added, there IS no industrywide bargaining in steel. What exists, he explained, is "pattern bargaining."

"What happens traditionally in the industry," he said, "is that no agreements are made until U. S. Steel makes its agreement and then the other companies come to identical terms. This pattern bargaining has absolutely nothing to do with the Steelworkers Union.

"And the pattern which exists in bargaining is imposed by the companies, not by the union."

Beirne defended the board against allegations that its decision in the steel case violated national labor and stabilization policies in any respect—wages, fringe items, working conditions or the union shop. The industry's objections to the union shop he branded as "just phony."

He also rebutted in detail misstatements of fact given the subcommittee by John C. Bane, Jr., Pittsburgh lawyer who represented the industry on the WSB panel in the dispute.

He countered testimony of George C. Armstrong, Jr., former industry member, that the public members are biased in favor of labor by saying that he considered them "biased in favor of industry." But both he and Armstrong, he added, used the word "biased" in the sense of meaning those with whom they do not agree.

Truman Hits Moves To Kill Wage Board

CONGRESS was warned of the consequences by President Truman if it adopts the big industry plan to gut the Wage Stabilization Board, bar any voice in its actions to labor and turn the agency into an instrument for organized business.

In condemning Senate and House committee-approved proposals — notably the Dirksen Amendment—to strip the WSB of its disputes settling powers, Truman warned:

"I want to make it absolutely clear to the Congress what is at stake here. We cannot meet our production goals and keep our economy stable if we fail to provide a sound and fair system of wage stabilization and dispute settlement...

"If the Congress will not provide some forum where labor disputes may be heard and considered, it will, in effect, be encouraging strikes and lockouts."

Truman added that Taft-Hartley 80-day anti-strike injunctions "fall far short of meeting the needs of the defense emergency" and make "no positive contribution toward settlement of the dispute."

The President also condemned the Fulbright amendments to the Walsh-Healey "fair wages" act covering wages and conditions under government contracts.

'If I Were King'—What Taft Plans

THE TAFT-HARTLEY Law is nothing compared to new anti-labor legislation planned by Sen. Taft (R. O.) if he is the next President, says the Wall Street Journal.

The Journal quoted Taft as saying that what is needed is not a change in Taft-Hartley, but new legislation to be called an "anti-labor-monopoly law." Chief provision of the law would be the ban on industry-wide bargaining, as demanded by the National Association of Manufacturers and U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

The paper said Taft would propose that employes in each separate company should be required to "to choose their own bargaining agent. No union official would be entitled to negotiate labor contracts for employes of more than one company. Violations of the law would be treated the same as violations of anti-monopoly laws; a union would be prosecuted and fined."

The business paper predicted current efforts to crack down on unions would meet with success if the Republicans win control of both houses of Congress by "comfortable margins." (LPA.)

Why We Strike

From a statement of the International Wage Policy Committee of the CIO Steelworkers, adopted at a meeting June 13 in Pittsburgh:

ONE hundred ninety-nine days ago, the United Steelworkers of America entered into contract negotiations with the steel companies in search of economic justice and improved working conditions.

One hundred sixty-five days ago, the old agreements expired. During most of those 165 days, we have worked under out-dated conditions and obsolete wage rates.

Eleven days ago this union went on strike — a strike clearly forced by the steel companies. We struck in order that steel workers' 1952 wages may be enough to pay 1952 grocery prices; we struck to replace 1947 working conditions with 1952 working conditions.

Since our negotiations started, this union and its members have demonstrated remarkable patience, despite a barrage of unfair and misleading criticism from members of Congress, from the industry and from large sections of the press. But no amount of propaganda can hide the basic facts of our 1952 economic life from the steel workers or the public.

Over a five-day period, ending June 9, this union participated in collective bargaining talks with the six leading steel companies. We had reason to hope that at long last the executives of this rich and powerful group of companies might come to recognize the essential justice and fairness of our proposals.

We hoped in vain.

The steel companies, into whose coffers profits have been pouring at a tremendous rate since the Korean fighting began, offered a wage increase averaging only 13.3c per hour over the 18-month period starting Jan. 1, 1952. This is less than the spiralling cost of living has eaten out of steel workers' buying power since our last wage adjustment.

The steel companies have refused to grant even quarter-time premium pay for work on the Sabbath. They have scornfully refused even to give further study to guaranteed annual wages.

They have refused to grant the union shop. We know not what their reasons be—whether concern for "principles" they do not ordinarily observe, or solicitude for the strikebreakers of another era, for whom the companies still show a strange and unhealthy concern.

Finally, the steel companies hinge their inadequate offer upon the union's unconditional acceptance not only of the industry's refusal to improve day-by-day working conditions but of the industry's demands for surrendering of employes' long-recognized rights. What the industry is hoping to do, under the slogan of "management rights," is to seize from the workers' pay envelopes far more than the inadequate pay increase they have reluctantly offered.

This union of steel workers was not built upon the principle of abject surrender to the overlords of our industry. This union has grown because it has refused to bow down to the manipulators of great corporate wealth.

Our members, for more than 99 days after the expiration of the old contracts, stayed on the job. Having been forced into a strike action which we did not want, and which we tried to avert, we will stay on strike until our cause is won.

President Murray, who at every turn of events during these seven long months has expressed the will and hopes of our union, has assured our government that we will cooperate in assuring production of essential military requirements. We endorse this pledge.

To our government, we say: "Count on us to produce the essential military products necessary to carry on our fight against the menace of Communist aggression."

To the American public and to the brave men of our military forces, we say: "CIO steel workers support the nation's defense effort with all their spirit. We are on strike because, as self-respecting Americans, we have been forced on strike by a profit-hungry industry which has refused to pay fair wages and grant fair working conditions to its employes."

And to the steel companies, we say: "We, the members of the United Steelworkers' International Wage Policy Committee, reject your totally inadequate 'last offer.'

"We are ready, as always, to bargain collectively. We are ready, as always, to sign a fair new agreement.

'But we are not ready, and never will be, to surrender our just demands. We call upon you, the steel industry, to re-examine your position, and to take constructive heed of the workers' needs.

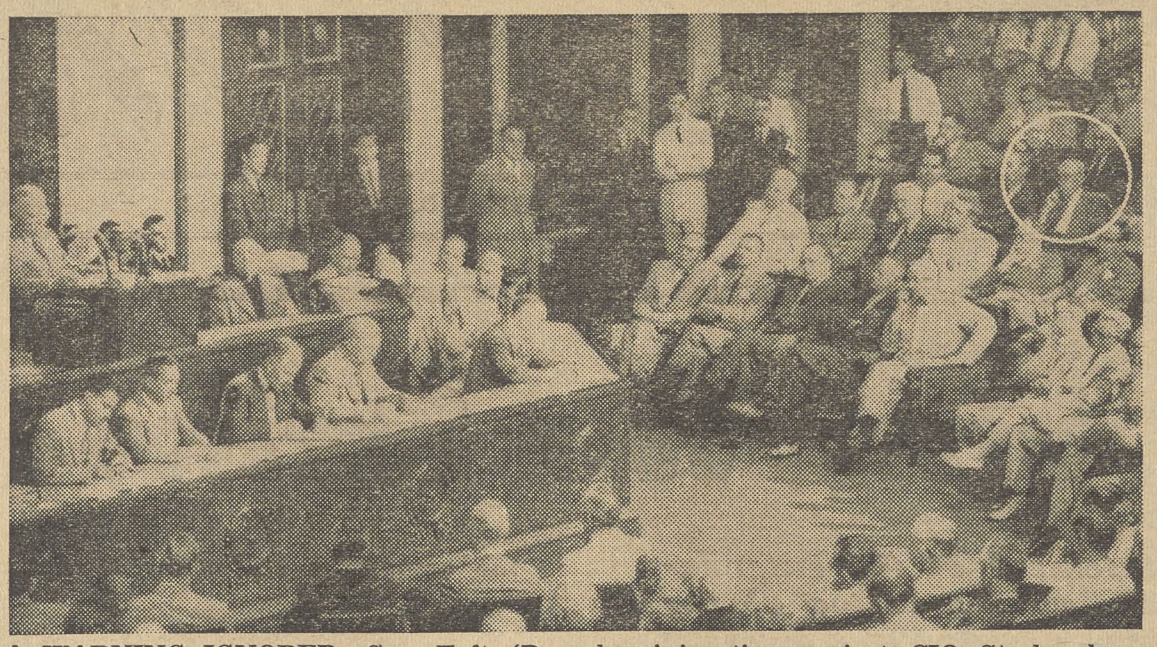
"That is the way to industrial peace in steel."

Truman Gets Answer—

Senate 'Asks' T-H Ban On Steel Strike

(See editorial, cartoon, Page 4)

By GERVASE N. LOVE



A WARNING IGNORED—Sen. Taft (R. O.), at right with hand in mouth, listens glumly as President Truman warns joint session of Congress that use of Taft-Hartley injunction against CIO Steelworkers would be "unwise, grossly unfair and quite possibly ineffective." But Senate "requested" T-H be used by a 49 to 30 vote.

ON SHORT notice, President Truman went before a joint session of Congress last week and asked for authority to let him seize and operate the steel industry, as an alternative to seeking a Taft-Hartley Act anti-strike injunction.

"I hope the Congress will act quickly," he said. "The issue of peace or war hangs in the balance, and steel is a vital element in the outcome."

The use of a Taft-Hartley injunction against the striking CIO Steelworkers, Truman told Congress, would be "unwise, unfair and possibly ineffective" in securing steel production. In addition, he maintained, the effect of an injunction "would be taking sides with the companies and against the workers."

Six hours later, he had his answer—or at least part of it.

The Senate's Dixiegop majority "took sides" with the steel companies and their six-month drive to get a T-H injunction against the steel workers.

The Senate beat down three different proposals to give the president the authority he sought. Then it voted by a 49 to 30 count, with the Dixiecrats teamed up with reactionary Republicans, to approve the Byrd Amendment "requesting" him to obtain a T-H injunction.

THE PRESIDENT sought legislation which would permit him to seize the strike-bound steel industry and allow him to set wages for the workers and compensation for the employers.

"A seizure law if properly drafted," he told Congress, "can achieve the objectives of assuring steel production, treating both parties fairly, and encouraging collective bargaining.

"The key requirement of such a law, if it is to accomplish these ends, is to provide fair and just compensation to the owners for the use of their property during a seizure, and fair and just compensation for the work of the employes."

Collective bargaining would be encouraged by such a law, the President said, because of the possibility the employers would get less than their "normal" profits, which have gone sky-high in the last four years, and the workers might get less than they think they are entitled to.

In the Senate, the request promptly became sort of a shirt-tail to the bill extending the Defense Production Act, which was under consideration (see also Page 5). The half-dozen proposals offered all were introduced as amendments to that legislation.

First Sen. Byrd (D. Va.), an old-line Dixiegop, sponsored the amendment which was finally accepted.

Then substitutes were offered by Sens. Maybank (D. S.C.), Monroney (D. Okla.), Humphrey (D. Minn.) and Morse (R. Ore.). All were defeated.

The Maybank Amendment authorized seizure for an indefinite period, but would not have permitted any changes in wages or employer compensation. It went down to defeat by a 68 to 12 vote.

Monroney's amendment was more in line with what the President asked. It would have allowed seizure of an industry and permitted the government to determine just compensation for the workers and the owners while the facilities were in government hands. It was defeated by 58 to 28.

Humphrey's proposal was limited to the steel industry and the present dispute. It would have permitted seizure; set up a special board to determine compensation for the owners, and allowed the government to set new wage rates within the limits of the recommendations the Wage Stabilization Board made when the case was before it for what most of the country thought was settlement. It was rejected by 47 to 32.

The Byrd Amendment got 18 Democratic and 31 Republican votes. The only Democrat favoring it who was not from a southern or border state was Sen. McCarran (Nev.). Opposing it were 22 Democrats and three Republicans—Sens. Ives (N.Y.), Morse and Tobey (N.H.).

Another anti-labor rider to the Defense Production Act—a proposal for compulsory arbitration—was dropped by its sponsor, Sen. Case (R. S.D.).

MOST rejected amendments have also been introduced as separate bills, and they were expected to come up for hearing shortly before the Humphrey Senate Labor subcommittee.

In the House, meantime, there was one test on seizure legislation. The Banking Committee turned down 15 to 10 a steel seizure amendment similar to one rejected in the Senate. An attempt on the floor to add the Byrd T-H Amendment to another bill was ruled out of order.

The potato that President Truman dropped in the lap of Congress was a hot one. In his address he recounted the steps he had taken to maintain the production of steel in the dispute between the CIO Steelworkers and the industry. He reminded Congress that when he seized the industry on Apr. 8 he formally notified the legislators, pointing out that if they wished to take another course it was up to them. They did nothing.

Steel, he said, is badly needed beyond the limited amount of emergency production the union and the industry agreed to provide for the armed forces in Korea. Giving him the right to seize the industry under the conditions outlined, he claimed, offered the best answer. He said:

"The Constitution protects the owners of property during a period of government operation by requiring that they be given just compensation—and they can appeal to the courts to enforce that requirement.

"The law should give similar protection to wage earners. This means that changes in wages and working conditions during seizure should not be prevented by law.

"If they were, the seizure would mean that workers would be compelled to work indefinitely without a change in wages, no matter how much a change might be justified. It is obviously not equal justice under the law."

But seizure should not, he said, be regarded as a means of determining the the issues between management and the union.

"Those issues will have to be settled by the parties through their own collective bargaining," he stressed.

On use of a Taft-Hartley injunction, the President said:

"The nation has already had the benefit of whatever could be gained by action under the Taft-Hartley Act.

"That act provides for two main things. It provides for a fact-finding board to investigate and report on the issues in dispute. In the steel case, we have already had the facts fully determined and reported by the Wage Stabilization Board.

"The act also provides for injunctions against a shutdown for a total of 80 days. In the steel case, the union already, even before Apr. 8, had voluntarily postponed strike action for 99 days. Insofar as fact-finding and delay are concerned, the practical effects of the Taft-Hartley Act were achieved in this case some time ago.

"OVER and above these facts, however, there are other compelling reasons for not using an injunction of the Taft-Hartley type in the steel case.

"Its effect would be to require the workers to continue working for another long period without changes in their wages and working conditions. This would be grossly unfair.

"The Wage Stabilization Board, the government agency charged with responsibility in these matters, has found—and the companies have admitted—that the workers are entitled to improvements in wages and working conditions."

At A Glance, Here Are Riders Swatting Labor

Here's a digest of major anti-strike riders proposed as amendments to the Defense Production Act, and what happened to them in the Senate:

BYRD AMENDMENT: "Requests" President Truman to get a 80-day no-strike Taft-Hartley injunction against CIO Steelworkers; adopted 49 to 30 with GOP Policy Committee backing.

MAYBANK AMENDMENT: Prohibits strike for 120 days and gives the President ultimate seizure authority, with no changes in wages or conditions; defeated 68 to 12.

HUMPHREY AMENDMENT: Authorizes government to seize steel plants and raise steelworkers wages; defeated 47 to 32.

MONRONEY AMENDMENT: Permits seizure of "indispensable" industries in case of strikes ot seven days notice; defeated 52 to 282.

IVES AMENDMENT: Strips Wage Stabilization Board of disputes-settling powers, curtails power on wage cases, but keeps labor-public-industry three-party membership; adopted 42 to 41.

MORSE AMENDMENT: Also separate bill, authorizes seizure of struck industries for 60 days, with 10-day "veto" power for Congress, defeated 54 to 26.

Here's How Dixiegop Senate Gave U.S. Labor The Byrd

Here is the roll-call by which the Senate, in a 49 to 30 vote on June 10, "requested" President Truman to obtain a Taft-Hartley injunction against striking CIO Steelworkers. Twenty-seven Democrats and three Republicans voted right against the Byrd Amendment, 31 Republicans and 18 Democrats voted wrong.

In the roll call, W stands for a yes or wrong vote, R for a no or right vote, X for paired wrong, Z for paired right, and A for absent.

'We Will Stay On Strike Until We Win'

"This union of steel workers was not built upon the principle of abject surrender to the overlords of our industry. Having been forced into a strike which we did not want, and which we tried to avert, we will stay on strike until our cause is won."

THAT DETERMINATION of 650,000 striking CIO Steelworkers to stick it out to victory was reaffirmed last week.

The rank-and-file steel workers who comprise the USA-CIO's International Wage Policy Committee met in Pittsburgh, five days after White House-sponsored bargaining sessions collapsed—because the steel barons still "refuse to do justice with respect to wages, fringes, union security and contract terms."

The steel union policy group told the industry "the responsibility for this strike lies squarely in your hands; in your refusal to play fair and square with the hundreds of thousands of workers who have made this industry great and efficient."

"We are ready, as always, to bargain collectively," the union said. "We are ready, as always, to sign a fair new agreement. But we are not ready, and never will be, to surrender our just demands."

The White House sessions broke up on June 9—just a week after the Sureme Court decision ending seizure, which touched off the long-postponed steel strike.

A "complete deadlock" was reported by John R. Steelman, presidential assistant and acting defense mobilizer, who conducted the parleys. Up until the talks were called off indefinitely, there had been numerous—and erroneous—predictions of an imminent settlement.

But the only agreement reached as the talks ended was that the union and management would cooperate with government defense production officials in allowing a limited amount of steel production to be resumed for specific military needs, such as jet engines and certain types of shells.

Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray said because the union is "mindful of our responsibilities to the defense effort and to the state of national emergency in which our country finds itself, we have given assurance to our government that we will cooperate in assuring production of military requirements essential to our forces engaged in combatting Communist aggressors."

This action was ratified by the USA Wage Policy Committee.

Several follow-up sessions were held by Steelman with defense, union and industry officials in an effort to work out plans for opening a limited number of mills to turn out what Steelman called a "small tonnage" of steel for "critically needed" military items.

But at deadline for this issue of The CIO News, no such final plans had been set, no mills had actually been opened, and the strike which has shut down some 95% of basic steel production continued 100% effective.

Except for particular military needs, according to steel management publications, the industry and consumers have been stockpiling various types of steel during the six-month period from last Jan. 1—when the USA contracts expired—until the present strike began two weeks ago. Steel Magazine reported that most industries have enough steel for consumer goods to continue production for at least a month.

Day after the White House talks—which began on June 5 and continued daily through June 9—ended, President Truman went before a joint session of Congress to ask once again for seizure legislation. He warned that issuance of a Taft-Hartley anti-strike injunction against the steel workers would be "taking sides" with the steel companies.

The Senate proceeded to "take sides" with the industry, voting 49 to 30 to approve the Byrd Amendment "requesting" Truman to issue a T-H strike ban. The Republican Policy Committee and most Dixiecrat Senators engineered the "hit labor" vote. (For details on the congressional situation, see opposite page.)

A biting attack on the congressional hysteria against the steel union was voiced by Murray to the Wage Policy Committee. He charged Dixiegop lawmakers with making a "political football out of the lives of some 650,000 steel workers, their wives and their families." And he said they "either do not care or do not understand the economic situation."

The policy committee members cheered as Murray pledged:

"As far as I am concerned, I am prepared to carry your mandate and the mandate of our last convention to the very end."

The chief spokesman in the White House sessions for the industry, Vice Pres. John A. Stephens of U. S. Steel Corp., claimed that before the talks broke down, the union shop was "actually the sole matter remaining in dispute."

That was just one of the recommendations of the Wage Stabilization Board on which Murray had said a contract must be "firmly based." And his detailing of the bargaining situation made plain the parties were apart on several issues, with the industry trying to undercut the WSB proposals on major contract clauses.

Where the board had recommended a 17.5c an hour average increase over an 18-month contract, the companies offered 13.3c which, Murray said, "is substantially less than the decline in the real wages of steel workers since our last wage settlement."

With retroactive pay due to USA-CIO members now estimated to total more than $1 billion, the companies wanted to advance the effective date from Jan. 1—when the contracts expired—to Apr. 1.

The companies offered nothing at all on the union shop—a key union proposal.

They rejected premium pay for Sunday work in the mills.

They based their entire proposal on rejection of union requests on non-economic aspects of the contract and acceptance by the union of inferior working conditions imposed by management.

By seeking to undercut working conditions, the union pointed out, the steel industry hoped to "seize from the workers' pay envelopes far more than the inadequate pay increase they have reluctantly offered."

Murray said the union is "confident that the public will continue to support the Steelworkers in this justified work stoppage."

And CIO councils and international and local unions throughout the nation last week were mobilizing backing for the USA-CIO as it prepared for an apparently long strike.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, urged all affiliates "to lend every support to the Steelworkers in their just fight. The Steelworkers, I am sure, can depend on 100% cooperation and support from organized labor and all liberal-minded people."

The CIO Electrical Workers, headed by James B. Carey, said the steel strike "will affect not only organized labor but the living standards of 160 million Americans" and pledged to the steel union IUE's "full resources toward the success of the strike forced on the Steelworkers."

A similar pledge of backing came from Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the CIO Rubber Workers. Many other unions earlier backed the steel workers.

From overseas, the UIL, one of the Italian free labor federations affiliated with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, wired the USA-CIO "fraternal solidarity in your unflinching struggle."

Where Steel Fell Short

CIO Steelworkers in five days of White House bargaining sought a settlement "firmly based" on the Wage Stabilization Board's recommendations, but here's how far the steel companies' proposals fell short on major issues:

	WSB Proposals	Steel Firms' Offer
Wages	17.5c an hour in three installments.	13.3c an hour average for 18 months.
Retroactivity	Until Jan. 1, on the first installment of 12.5c an hour.	Until Apr. 1
Security	Union shop, exact form to be negotiated.	Nothing
Sunday overtime	Quarter time premium pay.	Nothing
Guaranteed annual wage	Joint study under a impartial expert.	Nothing

'Big Steel's Hands Aren't Clean'

THE STEEL industry does not come into the court of public opinions with the cleanest of hands in its present dispute with the CIO Steelworkers, according to Lowell Mellett, nationally syndicated newspaper columnist.

"It comes," he added, "with a bad record of labor relations, one calculated to keep the workers in a mood to fight for what they consider their rights.

"The CIO News carries (see issue of June 2) a graphic reminder to its millions of readers of the struggle the steel workers have gone through to obtain wages and working conditions comparable to those of other industries.

"It is a full-page picture of the battle at the Republic Steel plant in Chicago on Memorial Day, 1937.

"In labor history it is known as 'The Little Steel Strike Massacre.' Ten men were killed, more than a hundred wounded. A Senate investigating committee reported that most of the men killed were shot in the back.

"And this is just one of the many bloody battles, beginning with the frightful Homestead riots, that have marked the history of steel's labor relations.

"It can be remembered also that the steel industry was the last important industry to cling to the 12-hour day, capitulating only to public opinion aroused by the Federation of Churches.

"If the proposed 26c an hour increase, including 'fringe' benefits, sanctioned by the Wage Stabilization Board, seems large it still merely measures the degree to which the steel industry has lagged behind other industries."

They Have Time For Prayer

CIO Steelworkers believe that everybody is entitled to worship—even supervisory employes strike-bound in a steel plant.

Steel union pickets let a Catholic priest and a Protestant minister enter the Inland Steel Co. plant, East Chicago, Ind., to hold services for 2000 supervisors who were in the plant when the strike started.

The clergymen entered the plant under an agreement of Inland Steel with the union which permitted Sunday services to be held in the plant during previous steel strikes.

Labor Gets The Byrd

In passing the Byrd Amendment, the Senate's reactionary Republican-Dixiecrat coalition went out of its way to kick American labor in the face—and American labor will not soon forget. (See Voting Record, page 2.)

The Senate majority of 49-30 was smug in its "victory"—a victory that placed the upper house on record as demanding that President Truman use a Taft-Hartley injunction against striking CIO Steelworkers.

It was a political vote, of course, in a political year—and many of the men who voted for Taft-Hartley and against the steel workers will soon be trying to convince working men and women of their "love for labor." (Incidentally, supporters of Taft and Eisenhower closed ranks in their intra-party feud to present a common front against the union; only three Republicans voted against the injunction.)

So the conservatives have had their inning in the Senate. Without doubt they are proud of their votes for "labor peace."

What these smug conservatives may not understand is the long-range effect of their vote. They have virtually ruled out the possibility of enlisting voluntary cooperation by labor in future disputes affecting basic industries.

What union would in the future be willing to lean over backward to stay at work, after its contract has expired, in the hope of finding a peaceful solution—when the end result will be a kick and a condemnation from a congressional majority? What incentive remains for collective bargaining when industry can rest assured that it has Congress in its pockets, regardless of the merits of the issue?

In endorsing government by injunction, the Senate has cut the ground out from under those who believe that reason rather than punitive action is the fair, American way to settle disputes. The effect of this expression of Senate conservative sentiment will be long felt in American industrial relations.

The Senate majority, while berating President Truman and the steel workers, has failed to meet a challenge for constructive action.

On both Apr. 9 and 10, President Truman appealed to the Congress for legislation that will help the country settle peacefully major disputes like those in steel. And the Dixiegops have come up with only one answer: sock 'em hard with Taft-Hartley, regardless of the rights and wrongs.

This is neither statesmanship nor smart politics—and the voters will remember when the conservatives appeal for votes as "friends of labor."

Still A Bad Bill

Ironically, the House and Senate last week finished work on the McCarran "anti-immigration" bill and sent it to the White House just when President Truman was meeting with members of an 18-nation committee on resettling refugees.

The President told the international group he hoped this nation would "continue to help those refugees who certainly deserve our help."

But such a goal would be blocked by the McCarran bill.

It's a bad bill, Mr. President, and requires a veto.

Medicine Man

Reds, Nazis Work Together

This account of the working alliances between the right and the left is adapted from an article, "Ribbentrop Returns," in a recent issue of Free Labor World, official journal of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

RECENT history is full of examples of alliances between extremes. The classic forces of reaction, in achieving the triumph of their dubious aims, have taken the form of Fascism, Nazism, Phalangism, Peronism, etc. (all of which are in fact the same thing under different guises).

They have been helped in their task by the fact that the Communists are always ready to join forces with no matter what kind of social or political movement, provided its aim is that of fighting against freedom, human justice and the principle of human equality.

In Europe, the first example of this revolting collaboration was in Germany. The international trade union movement has not forgotten, nor will it ever forget, the common front of the Communists and Nazis against the Weimar Republic and the free trade unions of Germany.

In present-day Europe there is one flagrant case of complicity between the forces of reaction and the Communists, and that is Franco Spain.

The Cominform supplies the Caudillo from time to time with victims, who satisfy his thirst for blood and also provide him with very good pretexts for convincing the Western Powers that he is playing a great part in the universal struggle against Communism.

The many "specialists" in the "Spanish problem" have not yet discovered the trick, which is however well-known in circles reliably informed on the inside of the Spanish drama.

It happens this way:

When Spanish Communists living in exile in France stray from the party line (which happens often, as the Spanish temperament is always ready to rebel against absolute authority), the party offers them a chance to redeem their sins by making a clandestine entry into Spain and "acquiring a new merit" by carrying out acts of violence and sabotage.

Once these heroic non-conformists are over the frontier, they are denounced to Franco's police by Communist informers. Sometimes they are arrested before they have carried out their "orders," and are only liable for some years' imprisonment.

But if the leaders of the Spanish Communist Party abroad have decided that the non-conformists shoud pay with death for their erring ways, the informers in the pay of the Kremlin and Franco wait for the "fait accompli."

In Latin America there are clear signs of this alliance between opposed politico-social extremes.

Peron, who is advised on social questions by a man named Santini (a former CP member who has maintained uninterrupted contact with the Kremlin), ordered the Buenos Aires press at the end of 1951 to tone down its attacks on the USSR. and the subversive activities of the CTAL (Latin American Branch of the World Federation of Trade Unions).

In Venezuela, the military junta has dissolved the free trade unions and imprisoned their leaders—actions which the ICFTU and the ORIT have repeatedly denounced. Nevertheless, Communist-inspired trade union organizations are still authorized by law.

IN PERU, under the right-wing dictatorship of Odria, the Communist member of Parliament Luna, who was elected with government support, enjoys full freedom to disseminate Communist doctrine, whilst the free trade unions have their activities and rights limited.

Lombardo Toledano (secretary of the CTAL) has advised Mexican workers to support the candidature of Gen. Henriquez Guzman in the July presidential elections. Gen Guzman is a representative of the "cristeros" and a determined opponent of the democratic policy of the Revolutionary Party headed by Pres. Miguel Aleman.

We could fill many pages with concrete examples of Peronist-Communist blocs in the young countries of the West Indies and Central and South America.

However, we think those we have already mentioned will suffice to warn the free world of the extent of the alliance between the extremes which menace democracy and fundamental human rights.

All workers, and especially those of the Latin American countries, must realize that the ICFTU goal of PEACE, FREEDOM and SOCIAL JUSTICE can only be reached by following the straight road of true democracy.

Senate Whacks Inflation Bill, Then Passes It

FUNCTIONS of United Nations Education, Scientific and Cultural Organization are explained by Franco Dino Gianfranchi (pointing), Italian union member, at CIO Iowa-Nebraska Summer School at YMCA Camp near Boone, Ia. Listening are Wayne D. Witt (left), Fort Dodge, Ia., of the Chemical Workers; Marilyn Thomas, Lincoln, Neb., a member of the Rubber Workers, and Benjamin Berger (seated), unionist from Israel.

AFTER TWO weeks of turning debate on the economic controls law into a political football against the CIO Steelworkers, the Senate last week finally passed a bill extending price, rent and wage controls—in greatly weakened form — for only eight months.

The bill continues the Defense Production Act which is due to expire June 30. The President asked for a two-year extension.

A majority of Republicans voting on final passage were opposed to even this inadequate continuance of the Administration's anti-inflation program. Not a single Democrat voted against it.

Earlier the Senate rejected several Republican attempts to end price and wage controls before Mar. 1. The mask was really taken off when 27 members of the Senate, all Republicans, tried to kill price controls Sept. 1 while keeping wages frozen.

Sen. Dirksen (R. Ill.) offered this amendment, which only nine of his GOP colleagues joined all Democrat Senators in opposing. Sen. Bricker (R. O.) said that lifting price controls would "help businessmen."

Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.), however, asked Dirksen how he could even think of removing price controls while keeping wages shackled.

THE bias against a fair deal for workers in favor of higher business profits shown in this proposal was reflected in other Senate actions last week. The bill as passed contains a "policy" statement that the government should suspend both prices and wage controls in individual cases where this would not be "unstabilizing."

Just before final passage, the Senate adopted by voice vote another inflationary amendment. It would allow wholesalers and retailers their pre-Korea percentage markups in cases where state anti-trust laws interfere with industry-wide markup allowances set by price officials. Another amendment prohibits price ceilings on goods or services sold by federal, state or local governments.

The Senate earlier knocked controls off the price of potatoes and prohibited the placing of ceilings on any other fresh fruit or vegetable. (As soon as this amendment was adopted, the Office of Price Stabilization abolished price controls on potatoes. The price per 100 pounds jumped an average of more than $3 the next day.)

While voting only an eight-month extension of price-wage-rent controls, the Senate continued authority for allocation and consumer credit controls for a full year. CIO has opposed extension of the latter, which includes the discriminatory Regulation X requiring high down payments on home purchases.

In the House, the Banking Committee voted to extend price-wage-rent controls for a full year, and to abolish all authority for the Federal Reserve Board to curb credit. The committee voted down on straight party lines a Republican move to accept the Senate version of the duration of the extension, as well as one of only nine months.

The stage was thus set for an ultimate showdown with the Senate on at least these two matters.

The House committee, however, followed the general inflationary pattern of the upper chamber in stipulating that the support prices for six basic agricultural commodities—corn, wheat, cotton, peanuts, tobacco and rice—shall not be less than 90% of parity instead of the present scale ranging from 75% to 90%.

It also refused the Administration request to restore slaughter quotas, voted to keep in the law the Capehart Amendment allowing manufacturers to increase prices with costs until last July 26, and extended the effects of the Herlong Amendment by voiding all price ceilings which do not allow pre-Korean markups to wholesalers and retailers.

Uphold Tidelands Veto, CIO Urges Congress

WHILE SENATE foes and friends of the tidelands oil grab bill jockeyed for a voting time favorable to their interests, the CIO last week called upon all members of Congress to uphold President Truman's veto of the measure.

Nathan E. Cowan, CIO legislative director, declared in a letter to each Senator and Representative that "we are absolutely against making these resources worth $40 billion available for exploitation by selfish interests."

He pointed out that the Supreme Court on three occasions has ruled that the off-shore oil resources "belong to the people of the United States and not to the few states involved."

"LET IT be oil for education not oil for exploitation," Cowan urged, adding: "It would, indeed, be tragic for Congress to forfeit these resources that could be used so advantageously to eliminate inequities of educational opportunity, provide additional school buildings, and improve teacher salaries."

Pres. James G. Patton of the National Farmers Union also wrote each Senator asking them to sustain the President's veto.

Oil lobbyists turned on the heat around the Senate Office Building in an effort to pressure Senators who voted against the bill either to change their votes or at least to be "conveniently" out of town when the vote to override the veto is taken.

The test has been postponed several times because of absentees. Last week it was due to come up Tuesday but was set aside by Senate debate on the President's new request for seizure powers in the steel dispute.

Sen. Holland (D. Fla.), leader of the fight to override the veto, then tried to schedule a vote for Thursday but called it off when he found that two Senators on his side would be absent. The margin is so close that even one vote may decide.

Sen. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.), meanwhile, reintroduced his "compromise" bill to retain federal control of the tidelands for five years but give states 37.5% of the revenues during this period. The Senate earlier rejected this proposal in approving the "states rights" bill, but President Truman indicated in his veto message that he would accept the O'Mahoney measure.

'Substantial' Hike Asked In Rubber Talks

THE CIO Rubber Workers last week opened their campaign for their 1952 economic program by going into negotiations with B. F. Goodrich Rubber Co. in Cincinnati, O.

Meetings with the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. are due to start in Columbus, O., on June 25, and those with the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. in Cleveland on June 27.

Representatives of eight Firestone URW locals will meet June 22 in Columbus to talk over the bargaining sessions, while those from 10 Goodyear locals will gather June 26 in Akron, O.

From all three employers the union is seeking "substantial" wage increases based on higher productivity, the advance in the cost of living, and high company profits, according to URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster.

CIO Urges Full Removal Of Home Credit Curbs

A MEANINGLESS "relaxation" of the Federal Reserve Board's Regulation X, which requires high down payments by purchasers of new homes, was put into effect last week.

The action, seen as an attempt to stave off complete repeal of the regulation by Congress which has shown increasing displeasure with its inflexibility, was termed "piddling" by the CIO National Housing Committee.

Leo Goodman, committee director, renewed earlier CIO demands that down payment requirements be eliminated entirely. He pointed out that reduction of the non-veteran down payment from 10% to 5% on homes costing $7000 or less would have practically no affect because there are almost no decent homes in that price range.

Biggest cuts under the new credit terms were made in down payment requirements on higher priced homes. On a house costing $10,000 the old down payment required was $1500 and now it's $1450, or only $50 less, but on homes costing between $15,000 and $22,000 the cuts ranged from $500 to $2250.

MEANWHILE, a House subcommittee on housing investigating the FHA and GI mortgage loan programs held a one-day hearing in Detroit under the chairmanship of Rep. Rains (D. Ala.). It heard Walter P. Reuther, president of the CIO Auto Workers, and members of CIO families who have been victimized relate "serious abuses" in the handling of the government's insured mortgage program.

Reuther charged that "speculative builders have been given the opportunity to cover their operations under the false front of an alleged cooperative."

He called for enactment of the Middle Income Housing Bill, elimination of abuses in the present FHA and VA inspection systems by the establishment of a federal service of inspectors, and enactment of a requirement that builders provide a warranty for at least two years on both materials and construction quality.

NATHAN Straus, administrator of the U.S. Housing Authority under President Roosevelt, told the hearing that FHA has been "converted into an instrumentality to raise the cost of housing."

Within four days of the hearing, Franklin Richards, FHA administrator, announced his resignation.

On the public housing front, the real estate lobby won a questionable victory in a referendum on the disputed 10,000-unit project in Los Angeles. Although the city voted to cancel its contract with the federal government by a vote of 387,343 to 258,718, the California Supreme Court ruled earlier that the project—on which $13 million in federal funds has already been spent—cannot be terminated.

Sec.-Treas. Albert T. Lunceford of the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council said that the referendum makes the city's taxpayers liable for the full $13 million in damages to the government for breach of contract. He added that they would be paying this "for the privilege of denying homes to poor families."

A step to correct the poor housing for workers in the atomic energy industry was taken by the CIO Housing Committee in cooperation with the CIO Chemical Workers. Harold Sandbank, housing consultant who helped develop initial housing proposals for Oak Ridge, was appointed to review the effects of the AEC's community policy in existing installations.

First Potatoes, Now There's Pork Shortage Predicted

A PORK shortage is on its way, and for the same reason as the potato shortage—failure of Congress to provide price supports, according to the Farmers Union.

Because of the lack of price supports and the resulting low prices, farmers last fall and winter sold many of their young sows for meat instead of breeding them. The resulting estimated 9% drop in the number of little pigs born this spring will produce a serious shortage of pork by the end of this year, the farm group reported last week.

Prices for pork are climbing, but they can't go above 24c a pound liveweight—the price ceiling based on 100% of parity. Consumers will have to pay the full cost of scarce supply in the form of less pork to eat.

The American people paid $135 million more this year for 104 million fewer bushels of potatoes than the combined cost of price supports and the retail price cost of potatoes in 1950, it was estimated.

By Philip Murray

I REGRET very much that we ha been unable to conclude a sett ment of the long pending steel di pute. The breakdown in negotiatio is again due to the adamant refus of the industry to meet the needs of t Steelworkers.

The steel companies have refused to justice with respect to wages, fringes, u ion security and contract terms.

On wages they have offered for the month period since our contracts expi an average of 13.3c per hour which is su stantially less than the decline in the r wages of steelworkers since our last wo settlement.

On fringes they have refused to g any recognition to the payment of meager quarter time premium pay Sunday recommended by the Wage S bilization Board,

The companies have likewise adaman refused to accord the Steelworkers Uni a responsible labor organization, genu union security. They have asserted objections to this, notwithstanding, that they have accorded similar recognition to many other unions and therefore in principle have accepted the union shop.

The companies have likewise refused to accept the recommendation of the Wage Stabilization Board that the parties jointly undertake a study of the guaranteed annual wage despite the fact that this study involves no financial commitment on their part but merely requires the parties, under the chairmanship of a mutually agreed upon impartial expert, to review this important subject for future discussion.

Finally, they have conditioned their entire offer upon the union accepting the companies' unilateral views with respect to the many important non-economic aspects of our labor contract.

These contracts were last negotiated five years ago and many improvements in the non-economic aspects of the contract are long over-due. The companies' offer will not only deny these improvements but turn the clock back to unilaterally imposed working conditions. Obviously, no self-respecting union could accept such an ultimatum.

In view of all these circumstances we have no alternative but to continue our present strike. We are seeking acceptance from the industry of the compromise recommendations of the Wage Stabilization Board.

My associates and I have striven throughout these conferences, as we have done throughout the past seven months, to arrive at a fair and reasonable settlement of our dispute with the steel industry. It should be clear to all that the industry is not disposed to make a settlement with the union in the similar spirit of fairness and equity.

We are confident that the public will continue to support the Steelworkers in this justified work stoppage.

Mindful of our responsibilities to the defense effort and to the state of national emergency in which our country finds itself, we have given assurance to our Government that we will cooperate in assuring production of military requirements essential to our forces engaged in combatting Communist aggressors.

Shades Of Old Adam Smith— C. Of C. Hits Runaway Plant Aid

SHADES OF Adam Smith! The U. S. Chamber of Commerce has just discovered that U. S. businessmen lauding "free enterprise" don't practice what they preach.

As they have many times in the past century, the chamber reports, businessmen are elbowing each other out of line in the scramble for tax-paid plants for runaway industries.

The scramble is so frantic to get cities and counties—largely in the South—to float tax-exempt bond issues to construct new plants that both the C. of C. and the Investment Bankers Association are taking a dubious look at such bonds. And they aren't selling very well.

The U.S. Chamber examines the financial aspect of the runaway plant problem in the latest issue of its bulletin, Economic Intelligence (that's what it calls it.)

Ironically, the report was printed alongside an enthusiastic book review on "The Return of Adam Smith." (Smith was the 18th century economist whose views are frequently cited by the "dog-eat-dog" theoreticians of big business. Actually, his views weren't what they are popularly made out to be.)

The C. of C. bulletin reports "many localities, in order to attract new industries, have constructed plants and facilities with money raised through bond issues. Usually the locality raises the money and builds the plant, then leases it to a private corporation."

"This procedure," the business group points out, "of course provides considerable advantage to private corporations since they acquire facilities without having to use their own capital."

Question: Is that what the politicians mean when they cry, "Freedom vs. Socialism"?

The Chamber bulletin then protests that local government construction of runaway plants "is discriminatory and detrimental to free competitive enterprise."

Remember: That's what U.S. big business says it's for.

Then Economic Intelligence tips its hand, recalls a few of the many treasury raids by businessmen in the past.

"In the 1830s," the bulletin says, quoting the Wall Street Journal, "states and municipalities sold millions of dollars in bonds, the proceeds from which were used to subsidize banks and canal companies. Subsequently, there occurred a disastrous wave of defaults.

"Shortly after the Civil War, state and local governments sold bonds to aid the railroads. In time, almost a billion dollars worth of these bonds fell into default.

"In the 1920s towns and cities again loaned their credit to real estate developers. In 1933 close to $2 billion of such bonds were in default.

"Now many localities are approving bond issues to build plants. The long-run consequences of such moves should be seriously considered."

But "there's a fly in the ointment" for runaway plant promoters, reports Irving Fagan for Labor Press Associated. He says:

"Bond dealers are not biting. They are not rushing to take such bonds. In the last four months, communities in Mississippi, Tennessee and Kentucky have approved $63 million in such industrial bond issues, but only $8 million worth have been sold to date.

"The Investment Bankers Association . . . warned its members against such bond issues, and most members have heeded the warning. So such bond issues are not selling."

TEXTRON—a big new England textile outfit now heading South—has been caught in the squeeze. Bond issues of $6.5 million voted at Meridian, Miss., $2.6 million at Aberdeen, Miss., and $6 million at Elizabethtown, Tenn., for new Textron plants aren't being sold so well.

J. P. Morgan & Co. came to the rescue of Greenville, Miss., taking three-quarters of a $4.75 million bond issue for a new plant for Alexander Smith, Inc., big carpet manufacturer. But the Morgan firm declares it is not in the market for any such bonds.

Alexander Smith's president, William Ewing, says the Greenville deal will put his firm in a much better competitive position. To which a competitor adds:

"I imagine we would be too, if we let the public build a plant for us."

The "no sale" sign on runaway plant bond issues has caused officials of one town, Lawrenceburg, Tenn., to hold up on a $4.5 million deal for Wamsutta Mills.

'Tax Bonanza' Up $312 Million

Here's one form of government assistance to business to which the U.S. Chamber of Commerce offers no "free enterprise" objections:

The "tax bonanza" of fast-write-offs on new plants, with individual taxpayers footing the bill for lost corporation tax revenues.

Two latest reports of the Defense Production Administration reveal approval of certificates totaling $312 million.

Firms getting the largest grants were: Great Northern Paper Co. $30 million, Union Pacific Railroad $19 million, U.S. Steel Corp. $12 million, and Bethlehem Steel Co. $12 million.

"Yes, but you had brains, energy, initiative, and influential friends in Wall Street."

IUE Fights Another GE Runaway Shop Proposal

THE ELECTRICAL industry has taken a leaf from the book of the textile industry—and is threatening to move some of its plants to the South.

The latest such move is planned by General Electric, which has announced that it will construct a transformer plant, which may cost as much as $25 million, at Rome, Ga.

APPOINTED — Norman Greenblatt has been named to Delaware Labor Commission. He's secretary of CIO Steelworkers Local 2209 and State PAC secretary.

The GE plant at Pittsfield, Mass., is the headquarters of the company's transformer and allied parts division. Approximately 7000 persons are employed there—nearly 2000 of them on transformer work.

GE said that the new plant will employ up to 1700 workers, but Pittsfield "will continue to be our main plant for the manufacture of transformers."

The CIO Electrical Workers, which holds a contract with GE, said that if that were so, transformer business would have to increase almost 100%.

"All this is at a time when the company is actually laying off workers in the transformer section at Pittsfield," declared John Callahan, business agent of IUE Local 255 at Pittsfield.

Callahan and other local officers are taking the union's protest against GE plans to the public in Pittsfield, where the GE plant is the main industry.

Local 255 held a membership meeting at which it was decided unanimously to send a delegation to Washington to protest against granting GE tax amortization privileges for the new plant while adequate facilities are available for making transformers.

'Breach Of Faith' Charged On Borg-Warner Contract

THE WAGE Stabilization Board was guilty of a "gross breach of faith" when it refused to rule on the demands of the CIO Auto Workers for company-wide bargaining with the Borg-Warner Co., labor members of the WSB charged in a dissenting opinion.

The UAW-CIO represents more than 12,000 employes of 12 Borg-Warner plants who felt strongly enough about company-wide bargaining to strike for it. After three weeks on the picket lines, they returned to work pending WSB action—which was denied after being held up for nearly seven and a half months.

The WSB declined to act on the ground that to rule would be exceeding its jurisdiction. The public members buttressed their stand by quoting an opinion from Chairman Paul M. Herzog of the National Labor Relations Board that any WSB ruling would be "an encroachment upon the exclusive functions of the NLRB" as set forth in the Taft-Hartley Act.

"It is our considered opinion," the labor members said in their dissent, "that the Wage Stabilization Board has abdicated its functions and duty to make its own decision.

"This board has, indeed, gone so far in surrendering its responsibilities that it has adopted as its own the conclusions of the NLRB about this case without knowing the reasons for that board's conclusions!"

WSB refusal to make a recommendation on the dispute leaves the union "without any forum in which to try the master-contract issue," the labor members pointed out.

"UNDER such circumstances," they said, "this dispute is properly within the jurisdiction of the WSB, and the board should have faced up to its responsibility by issuing a recommendation based on the merits of the dispute.

"Its failure to do so is all the more disturbing, not to say shocking, in view of the fact that it held the case for seven and one-half months before deciding that it was powerless to act. There can be no possible justification for such a long delay . . .

"Only one conclusion can be drawn from the failure of the board to act expeditiously on the jurisdictional question despite its knowledge of this issue and the views of the contending parties at the time that the dispute was certified—and that is that the public members believed that the board did have jurisdiction of the matter.

"To change its position now, entirely and exclusively upon the basis of an unexplained conclusion of the NLRB, is a gross breach of faith with workers who submitted their case to this board with great reluctance, and called off their strike three weeks after certification of the dispute only when great pressure was exerted by the board and other agencies of the government."

The dissent was signed by CIO Labor Members Joseph W. Childs and Benjamin C. Sigal.

U.S. Employes' Wagner Act Approved By House Group

THE "LITTLE Wagner Act" bill which would require practically all federal agencies to deal officially with employe unions has been approved by the House Civil Service Committee.

Sponsored by Rep. Rhodes (D. Pa.), the measure would give unions the right to organize and collect dues in federal buildings. Agencies would have to consult with unions on grievances, safety programs, performance ratings, in-service training, labor-management cooperation, appeals, granting of leave, promotions, demotions, layoffs and pay matters. The FBI and CIA were exempted from the bargaining provisions.

Chairman Murray (D. Tenn.) argued against the proposal as not necessary, but Rhodes and Rep. Withrow (R. Wis.) pointed out that some bureaus follow anti-union policies.

"We have found a number of instances which indicate that in some departments or agencies at least any normal approach to the problem of labor-management relations is absolutely nonexistent," Withrow declared.

MICHIGAN'S Governor G. Mennen Williams (right), is welcomed by Pres. Morris Pizer of the CIO Furniture Workers to the union's seventh convention at Grand Rapids. Behind Pizer is Mayor Paul Goebel of Grand Rapids, who greeted the delegates.

More Jobs, Higher Pay Set As UFWA Goals

STEPS to let the workers share in their increased productivity and to cut high unemployment in the furniture industry were urged by the CIO Furniture Workers at their seventh convention at Grand Rapids, Mich., last week.

The 200 delegates called for breaking through the wage freeze, a minimum wage of $1.25 an hour, a 35-hour week without reduction in pay—to help create jobs for the 30,000 unemployed in the industry—and for extension of UFWA insurance and pension fund protection to every member of the union.

The convention also pledged full support for continuation of its drive to organize the unorganized, particularly in the South, after hearing a report of organizing progress from Pres. Morris Pizer and Sec.-Treas. Fred Fulford.

Action on the organizing drive also was taken after speeches by Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, and John Riffe, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee.

The convention also called for full support of PAC.

Pizer and Fulford reported that since the convention two years ago, UFWA has become collective bargaining agent for 10,000 more furniture workers, has won 103 of the 158 NLRB elections in which it participated.

Other advances were the chartering of 29 new locals, extension of coverage of the UFWA Insurance Plan to about half of the union's membership, and wage gains averaging 16c an hour, which were kept lower than could have been attained because of the stringency of Wage Stabilization Board regulations.

The delegates acted on proposals for sharing the profits due to productivity increases and cutting the work week after hearing a report by the union's research department.

The department reported that although 45,000 furniture workers lost their jobs in 1951 because of sales slump, furniture manufacturers rolled up profits before taxes $13 million higher than in the boom year of 1950 and more than double those for 1949.

The research report found "some 15,000 unemployed workers were able to find employment during the past eight months of improved activity but over 30,000 workers are still unemployed. There is also considerable part time work because production currently is still about 15% below the peak attained during the last quarter of 1950 and the first quarter of 1951."

Output per man hour in furniture and bedding increased about 40% from 1939 to 1951, the report said.

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers warned that "unless labor stops the reactionaries dead in their tracks," the next Congress will witness a barrage of legislation aimed at destroying union gains.

"The kind of Congress we get in November will determine our fate, make no mistake about it," Potofsky said. "It is our duty, nay, it is more than that; it is a matter of our survival as free trade unions what we do about the next Congress."

Rhodes Bill Sets Shorter Textile Hours

A MAXIMUM workweek of 35 hours in the textile industry with no reduction in weekly wages is called for in the National Textile Bill just introduced by Rep. Rhodes (D. Pa.).

Pointing out that approximately one-sixth of the industry's 1¼ million workers are now totally unemployed and, with few exceptions, the rest are only partially employed, Rhodes said that the shorter week is necessary because of the great increase in production resulting from increased efficiency, technological advances and added workloads.

"The threatened collapse of the textile industry is more than a tragedy to the working people and their families," Rhodes said. "It endangers the whole economy, our defense effort and the security of the Nation."

CIO Urges Truman To Veto McCarran Immigration Bill

EXPRESSING concern that labor may be affected adversely by the McCarran "Iron Curtain" immigration bill, CIO last week urged President Truman to veto the measure.

"We are opposed to the McCarran Bill not only because of the many injustices of the present law which it perpetuates, but even more because of the many new injustices which it adds," Nathan E. Cowan, CIO legislative director, wrote in a letter to Truman. "In the latter category are many loosely drawn and unnecessarily harsh provisions for exclusion, deportation and denaturalization."

Pointing out that the bill grants "vast new unreviewable powers over the lives of millions of human beings," Cowan said. "an Administration hostile to labor could easily use these vastly expanded powers to punish or intimidate labor union members or labor union leaders of foreign birth even though they are naturalized citizens."

After Senate and House conferees tried to "sweeten" the proposal by amending some minor provisions but not changing its basic racist philosophy, the measure was given final Congressional approval last week.

THE HOUSE approved it by a vote of 203 to 53 after shouting down efforts by Rep. Javits R.-Lib. N.Y.) and Rep. Yates (D. Ill.) to send it back to conference. The Senate—or, rather 18 Senators, since only that many were on the floor when the vote was taken—then sent it to the White House by voice vote.

Only token resistance was made on the Senate floor. The measure was, however, again assailed as an "anti-alien" bill in a statement read by Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) on behalf of himself and Sens. Humphrey (D. Minn.), Moody (D. Mich.), Benton (D. Conn.) and Pastore (D. R.I.).

Earlier, the first three and Sen. Magnuson (D. Wash.) urged the President to veto the bill on grounds that it is an "exclusion" measure. Sens. Douglas (D. Ill.) and Kefauver (D. Tenn.), as well as Benton, also have called for a veto.

Inadequacies of the quota system of immigration were underscored last week by President Truman when he told representatives of 18 countries to the provisional intergovernmental committee for the movement of migrants from Europe that he hopes Congress will pass legislation admitting 300,000 displaced persons as non-quota immigrants over the next three years.

A bill making such provision has been introduced by Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.).

CIO Supports Famine Food Reserve Plan

SUPPORT of a Food & Agricultural Organization plan for the creation of famine food reserves was solicited of Sec. of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan last week in a letter from Dr. Ernst Schwarz, CIO representative. He appeared before the FAO interagency committee that developed the program.

The plan provides for the establishment of a number of emergency food reserve units, to supplement the limited food always available in any famine area, which would be concentrated sources of calories and protein. It has been endorsed by the CIO and by the Intl. Union of Food & Drink Workers Associations, world secretariat of unions in the food and beverages field.

The food reserve plan is being discussed at this month's meeting of the FAO Council. If approved, it will go before the United Nations Economic & Social Council for further discussion.

Dr. Schwarz is executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Latin-American Affairs.

'Fair Trade' Bill Reported To Senate Minus Approval

DELAYING action against hasty Senate consideration of the so-called "fair trade" bill recently passed by the House came from an unexpected source last week.

Chairman McCarran (D. Nev.) of the Senate Judiciary Committee said his group wanted to consider the measure because it would affect anti-trust laws. He asked Chairman Johnson (D. Col.) of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee to refer the bill to his judiciary group before it went to the floor.

Johnson's committee ignored McCarran's request and voted to report without recommendation the measure by Rep. McGuire (D. Conn.).

The bill would restore the effectiveness of price-fixing laws in 45 states by making manufacturers' price agreements binding on all retailers even if they had not signed them. The Supreme Court last year ruled that only dealers signing such contracts were bound by them.

When the report is considered, the Senate itself will decide whether to refer the bill to McCarran's committee. Both the Justice Dept. and the Federal Trade Commission have warned that the measure would create a big loophole in present anti-trust laws.

Spokesmen for these two government agencies also said that the price-fixing provisions would cost consumers "billions" of dollars a year in higher prices. The House minority report pointed out that a survey of retail prices on 208 items showed that they cost $945.10 in "fair trade" states and only $740.86 in non-fair trade areas.

Old Folks Get Another Vote On Aid Boost

THE HOUSE will get another chance to boost old age pension payments this week. Because the old folks back home wrote so many indignant letters blasting the Dixiegops for their refusal to increase the payments when the issue first came up, the Democratic leaders arranged a second vote. It was set for June 16.

This time the measure will be considered under regular rules with only a majority needed for passage. On the first test, ten more voted in favor than against, but the bill was defeated because it was up under a gag rule requiring a two-thirds margin for adoption.

THE HOUSE rejected the bill May 19 when GOP leaders opposed it after the American Medical Association charged that that measure, which makes no provision for medical care, would open the door to "socialized medicine."

The only basis for the AMA misrepresentation was a section following standard Veterans Administration procedures for medical examinations to prove disability. Private—not government—physicians would be authorized to make such examinations as a means of preventing chiselers from getting such benefits.

Some 4.5 million people now on the rolls stand to benefit from the measure, which would increase payments by 12.5% or not less than $5 a month. When they learned what the House had done, they sent so many critical letters to their Congressmen that even Republicans who voted against it the first time have been pressuring for reconsideration.

Senate Democratic Leader McFarland (D. Ariz.) has prepared a similar bill, which is being cosponsored by 22 other Senators, but his measure omits the section objected to by the AMA.

Too Long To Wait—

Time To Make Bill Of Rights Real, Reuther, Bunche Say

THE URGENCY of ending discrimination was emphasized at the sixth annual Bill of Rights dinner in Washington by a top CIO official and a United Nations leader last week.

More than 300 guests heard CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Dr. Ralph Bunche of the UN Trusteeship Council call for complete application of the principles of the Bill of Rights, which became the law of the land 160 years ago.

Reuther and Dr. Bunche both received awards for their work in furthering the principles of the Bill of Rights from Michael Straight, national chairman of the American Veterans Committee. The dinner was sponsored by the Greater Washington Area Council of AVC.

One of the reasons Reuther, who is also CIO Auto Workers president, received the award was for his work in behalf of proposed Rule 22 to permit a simple majority vote in the Senate to stop filibustering which for years has been employed as an effective means of stopping civil rights legislation.

"Rule 22 has got to be put on the top of the agenda of both politicial parties," Reuther said. "All the noble words (about civil rights) that the parties will put in their platforms are not worth anything unless they back Rule 22."

In a slightly veiled reference to Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, candidate for the Republican nomination for the Presidency, Reuther said:

"When you are asked whether you are for FEPC, the answer should not be that you are for civil rights, but it requires education. Education enforced by legislation is the way to accelerate education."

Reuther noted that we don't rely on persuasion to enforce the traffic laws.

"The ticket the cop gives you steps up the speed of the educational process," he said. "If we can be practical about going through the red light, why can't we be as practical about civil rights."

The speech of Dr. Bunche, who was ill, was read by his sister-in-law, Mrs. Aileen Davis.

Dr. Bunche said that the Negro must be thoroughly integrated into American society. However, all this must be achieved in much less than 50 years. Another 50 years would be much too long for anyone to wait to enjoy his democratic birthright, particularly when he has been deprived of it far too long . . .

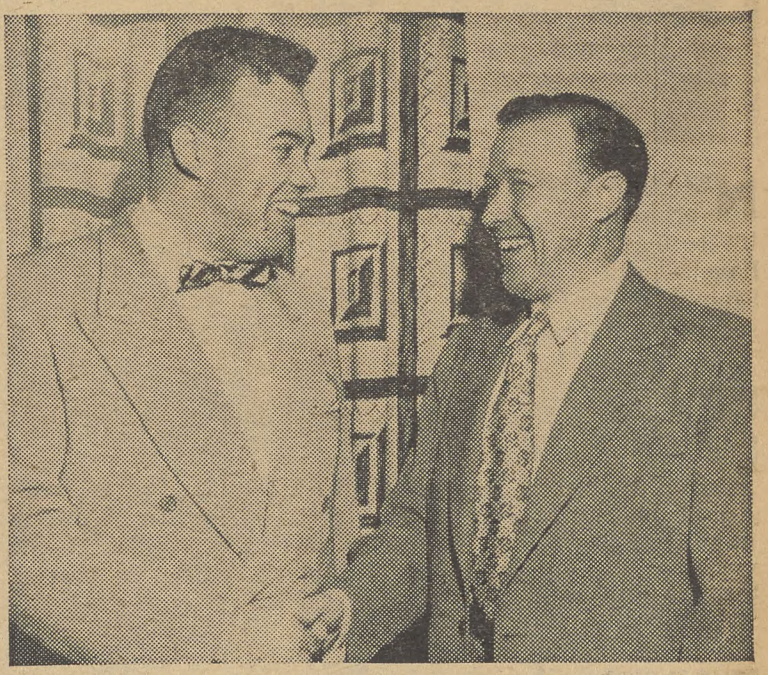
"Democracy, human freedom, the right and the dignity of the individual constitute the foundation stones in our American way of life. To meet this challenge, we in this nation must give a convincing demonstration that democracy is something to live by as well as swear by.

"And where could a better place be found to give this demonstration than right here in the capital of the United States."

Awards for their efforts in behalf of civil rights in Washington went to Don S. Willner, AVC member and lawyer, particularly for his work for integration of the Washington Fire Dept., and Frank Reeves, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, for fighting for the right of Negroes to play on "white" playgrounds, combatting police brutality against Negroes, and for aiding the Interracial Workshop.

An award also was given to Alan Barth, Washington Post editorial writer and author of "The Loyalty of Free Men." These awards were presented by Dr. Paul Cooke, chairman of the AVC Washington Area Council.

Other speakers included Judge William Hastie of the Third U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Philadelphia, and Robert Nathan, AVC leader and economist, who raised funds at the meeting for making the AVC Clubhouse a Freedom House for Washington.



CONGRATULATIONS are extended by Dr. Paul Cooke, chairman, Washington Area Council, American Veterans Committee (left), to Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers, who received an award at the council's Bill of Rights dinner.

Court To Hear 2 School Cases

The Supreme Court last week agreed to hear two major suits attacking racial segregation in public schools.

The justices agreed to review, in next fall's term, the long-pending suits challenging segregated schools in Clarendon County, S. C., and Topeka, Kans.

Both suits, brought with support of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, declare segregation violates the "equal protection of the laws" section of the Constitution.

The Supreme Court, in a 6 to 3 decision, ruled against the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, ordered that union to end discrimination against Negro porters on the St. Louis-San Francisco Railroad.

PAC In Action—

'Facts Are Weapons'—And PAC Has 'Em For Campaign

"FACTS ARE weapons." That's the slogan of the CIO Political Action Committee, now arming CIO folks for the 1952 election battle.

It has just issued a two-page roundup of "weapons" available at its Washington office. Included are everything from calendars to books—all spelling out the need for registration, an informed voting public, and 100% voter participation. A brief description of each publication, plus the price and a handy order blank are part of the roundup.

Given special attention is PAC's brand new '52 Fact Series, which briefly and honestly discuss the major issues in the campaign—prices, taxes, Taft-Hartley, corruption and foreign policy among others.

The list—and all the publications—can be ordered from the CIO Political Action Committee, 1346 Connecticut Avenue, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

IN WASHINGTON, the District of Columbia CIO Council decided to sit out the Democratic presidential primary race between Sen. Estes Kefauver and Mutual Security Director W. Averell Harriman.

It did indorse individual delegates to the Democratic National Convention, including on its list Tilford E. Dudley, assistant director of the CIO Political Action Committee.

NEW YORK CIO leaders fired questions at Harriman and came up with some pointed answers.

Harriman insisted that any candidate for President, who promises both adequate security for America and the free world and cuts taxes and expenditures for foreign aid and defense during the next four years, is being "dishonest."

NEW JERSEY candidates for U. S. Senate and House of Representatives will have plenty of homework during the next few weeks.

They'll be working on a searching questionnaire sent them by the Jersey PAC, which wants to know their views on 55 questions covering nine major subjects and ranging from foreign policy to housing. The Jersey PAC hopes for answers from the senatorial candidates before its June 14 meeting at which endorsements were to be considered.

Al Zack Joins CIO News Staff

Appointment of Albert J. Zack as an associate editor of the CIO News was announced last week by Henry C. Fleisher, editor and CIO Publicity Dept. director.

Zack will assist in CIO television-radio operations.

For the past 4½ years, he has been publicity director of the Ohio CIO Council. A member of the CIO Newspaper Guild, Zack participated in the 16-month strike against the Bowles papers in Springfield, Mass.

Cicero Cops Convicted In Riot Case

FOUR of the men who help run the town of Cicero, Ill., were convicted last week of failing to protect the civil rights of Harvey E. Clark, Jr., a Negro who moved his family into what had been an all-white apartment building.

Three days of rioting followed the Clarks' move. The apartment building was set afire and the Clarks' furniture was destroyed. Village officials made little or no attempt to protect the Clarks or preserve order, although more than 100 persons were arrested during the disorder. Peace was finally restored when five companies of National Guardsmen moved in.

Convicted by a jury in Federal Court in Chicago were Cicero's police chief, village attorney and two policemen.

Chief of Police Erwin Konovsky was found guilty on counts of violating the federal civil rights statute and of conspiring to violate it. He faces up to two years in prison and a $2000 fine.

Sgt. Roland Brami and Policeman Frank A. Lange were convicted of violating the statue. They face possible sentences of a year in prison and fines of $1000 each.

Village Attorney Nicholas Berkes was found guilty on the conspiracy charge. He, too, may be punished by a maximum sentence of a year in jail and a $1000 fine.

Vic Reuther Says—

'Workers In Crisis Countries Need Stake In Democracy'

FOR "THE coldest of strategic reasons," free trade unions of the world are obliged to expose the falseness of Communist claims, Victor G. Reuther, CIO representative in Europe, told the general executive council of the Norwegian Federation of Labor at a recent meeting in Oslo.

"To the misguided and desperate wage-earners of the crisis countries of western Europe, those workers who form the core of communism's fifth column within the frontiers of freedom," he said, "it is vital that we point again and again to the realities of life in Soviet Russia to the forced labor camps and to the one-party dictatorship and the reign of police terror.

"But it is much more vital that we outbid the Communists for the allegiance of these wage-earners in France and Italy by offering them a greater stake in the democratic way of life."

Communism, he maintained, is more than an economic program for better material conditions. It is a military threat that requires a military answer, and also a "fanatical creed and conspiracy which will not be destroyed by better housing and higher wages alone."

"In the crisis countries of France and Italy," Reuther continued, "where the democratic political and trade-union forces lack the strength of their counterparts in Norway, their claims have been disregarded and the accent has been placed on military defense.

The campaign of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions to strengthen the free labor movement at the shop level, "where the injustice of the French and Italian economies is concentrated," he added, "is the most hopeful aspect of what is on the whole a dismal and dangerous predicament."

"It is along that line of responsible but vigorous action," he said, "thinking and behaving as trade unionists, that all of us, within our own national organizations, and collectively within the ranks of the ICFTU, can make our unique contribution to the defense of the West."

Reuther praised Norway as "a citadel of strength and hopefulness in a Europe which is deeply divided." Its labor movement, with the labor movement of Sweden, offers a shining example, he said.

Contract Notice Set By UPWA

The CIO Packinghouse Workers served notice last week on the Big Four packers and the larger independents that contracts will be terminated when they expire Aug. 11.

The agreements facing cancellation cover some 120,000 union members. The union at its convention in Denver last month voted to ask for a 30c an hour wage increase, a guaranteed annual wage, the union shop, and a pension and insurance program financed by the employers.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

NEGOTIATIONS in the long pending steel dispute have broken down due to the adamant refusal of the industry to meet the needs of the Steelworkers. The companies have chosen to ignore the facts and figures of the Wage Stabilization Board with respect to wages, fringes, union security and other contract terms.

The industry as well as certain reactionary congressmen are raising the cry to invoke Taft-Hartley action, even though the Steelworkers in an effort to reach agreement voluntarily postponed any strike action far beyond the cooling off period of the Taft-Hartley Act.

I call upon each CIO Council, local unions, international unions and all CIO members to lend every support to the Steelworkers in their just fight to meet the needs of their members. The Steelworkers, I am sure, can depend on 100% cooperation and support from organized labor and all liberal-minded people in this country of ours.

THE WRITER will be on the road at the time you read this, attending the convention of the CIO Furniture Workers in Grand Rapids, Mich., meeting with a group of insurance agents in Milwaukee, Wis., and attending the convention of the Communication Workers of America in Cleveland, O. More about these next week.

On June 18, I will be leaving New York by ship to attend the meeting of the General Council of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, being held this year in Berlin, Germany. We need today, more than, ever greater understanding and cooperation of all free people the world over, to overcome the threat of continued Communist agression. Through our combined efforts we must dispel all threats to continued world peace.

THE CITADEL of anti-unionism in Wisconsin has fallen. Workers at the Kohler Co. (plumbing fixtures), Sheboygan, Wis., chose the CIO Auto Workers as their collective bargaining agent in an NLRB election by the following vote: UAW-CIO 1831; independent 850; AFL 710; no union 52; void 50; challenged 23.

The Kohler company has opposed unions throughout its 79-year history. In 1934 an AFL organizing attempt was defeated in a vicious strike during which two pickets were killed and many others, including women and children, injured. A company union, formed 18 years ago, has since thrown off management domination. In a secret ballot referendum, it affiliated with the UAW-CIO in April. The company promptly organized a brand-new "independent" union which used the services of the company's attorney.

REG. DIR. FRANK BENDER reports that in a representation election at the Atlantic Furniture Products Co., Inc., the workers favored the CIO Furniture Workers by the following vote: eligible 63, UFWA-CIO 32, against 22, challenged 5, void 1. CIO Field Rep. Robert Brylke was in charge of the campaign.

Act. Reg. Dir. Henry Henry reports that after almost a year's delay in a dispute over challenged ballots, the CIO Paperworkers was determined as the winner of a representation election at the Messenger Corp., Auburn, Ind., the vote being UPA-CIO 65, no union 62. UPA Area Dir. Nicholas Vrataric and UPA Rep. Elzie Bush handled the drive.

Reg. Dir. Lee Tucker reports a representation election victory for the CIO Steelworkers at the National Lead Co., Baroid Sales Div., Malvern, Ark., by the following vote: eligible 164, USA-CIO 93, AFL Chemical Workers 67, void 2. Spearheading this drive were Allen Bryant, Ed Waldron and Ira Cates, USA staff representatives.

In a representation election at the Utilex Corp., Glenvale Products Div., Malvern, the workers favored the CIO Auto Workers by the following tally: UAW-CIO 42, no union 14, challenged 1. Jack Crump, Competitive Shop Dept., UAW-CIO, and UAW Intl. Rep. William Kimberling conducted this campaign.

Reg. Dir. A. R. Kinstley reports that the CIO Packinghouse Workers won bargaining rights for employes of the Malco Meat Products Co., Kansas City, Kan., by the company agreeing to recognize a card check. All 10 eligible workers signed UPWA authorization cards. UPWA Rep. Frank Brown conducted the campaign.

Sec-Treas. Ross Blood, CIO Shipbuilding Workers, reports that in a representation election at the RTC Shipbuilding Corp., Camden, N. J., the workers favored the IUMSWA-CIO by the following vote: eligible 194, IUMSWA 105, no union 85, challenged 2.

Reg. Dir. Nicholas Dragon reports that in a representation election at the Tattersal Produce Co., Phoenix, Ariz., the workers voted unanimously in favor of the CIO by 23 to 0. CIO-LIU 78 Executive Board Member Ann Tinnon and Executive Officer Jack Garrett handled this drive.

Michigan CIO Raps GOP Rule In Legislature; Backs Steel Strikers

By TED OGAR

DOMINATION of Michigan's Legislature by a "Republican party-employer coalition that consistently refuses to meet its obligation to the people" was roundly condemned by the 14th annual Michigan CIO convention.

Striking at the lawmakers' failure to vote improved unemployment and workmen's compensation benefits or to enact a fair reapportionment law, the state CIO charged the Legislature "has repeatedly passed special interest legislation and failed to pass those laws needed for the benefit of all the people."

The council suggested affiliates press for improved benefits through collective bargaining, and push registration, voting, reapportionment and legislative action as keys to improved State laws.

Nearly 900 delegates — the great majority from locals of the CIO Auto Workers—participated in the convention, which was held in Grand Rapids.

The three-day convention opened coincidentally with beginning of the CIO Steelworkers national strike, and first convention action was unanimous approval of a resolution pledging the steel workers "all possible moral, physical and financial aid."

UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, in an address entirely devoted to the steel strike, pledged the Auto Workers' "total resources" to aid the USA-CIO strikers.

The steel corporations won the Supreme Court decision, Reuther said, "but the steel workers will win their just demands before this fight is over."

"The real allies Joe Stalin has in America are the steel corporations and their blind selfishness," Reuther said. "If they had their way, there would be brought about in America the kind of environment which prolifically breeds communism.

"While the boys in Wall Street are making a fuss about fighting communism, they're really aiding it. Phil Murray does more to fight communism in one week than those in Wall Street have done in all their lives."

In contested elections, the Michigan Council re-elected Pres. August Scholle to his tenth term and Sec.-Treas. Barney Hopkins to his ninth term. The Administration slate of 17 vice presidents also won.

The Council also voted to hold conventions every two years, instead of annually, with political action conferences to be held on the "off years."

Delegates endorsed the national CIO legislative program and adopted a 19-point program on State legislation. This called for repeal of Michigan's "negative and punitive anti-labor laws" such as the Hutchinson and Bonine-Tripp acts, increases in unemployment and shop injury payments, extension of unemployment insurance to cover public employes, passage of a corporation profits tax, and reapportionment of Michigan's congressional districts.

The delegates pledged to intensify the unions' efforts to secure reapportionment of the Legislature through a petition campaign. (Michigan's senatorial districts run in population anywhere from 60,000 to 661,000, each with one seat in the State Senate.)

At the annual Michigan CIO press-radio banquet, awards were presented to 22 winners in the annual labor journalism contest sponsored by the Michigan CIO Press Council. Commentators on 15 CIO radio programs throughout the State received special awards from the Michigan CIO Radio Council.

Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) praised Michigan's CIO publicists for their work in "getting the truth to the people" and urged them to intensify their efforts "to make sure the people of America won't walk into a booby trap next November. Never have I seen such reckless distortions of public issues as I have seen in the past 10 years."

'Everyone Was Swallowed Up'

The "trickle down" theory of prosperity of former President Hoover and his followers was condemned by Gov. G. Mennen Williams to the Michigan CIO convention.

He described the theory as one that "government would take care of the interests of big employers, big finance and big business—and the benefits of their prosperity are then supposed to trickle down to the masses of common people."

Under that theory in the Twenties, Williams recalled, "the rich got richer and the poor got poorer and ultimately the prosperity of everyone was swallowed up in a great depression."

Haywood Gets Thanks From Vienna Mayor

THANKS for the "deep understanding" of the problems of Vienna and the Viennese worker shown during his recent visit to CIO headquarters have been sent CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood by Franz Jonas, mayor and governor of the Austrian capital.

Jonas has just returned home after spending some time in the United States. He and Haywood talked at length during his visit to CIO headquarters.

"You and your collaborators' thorough knowledge of the struggle the people of my home town have been and still are making against the threats of totalitarian dictatorship," he wrote, "have assured me that we can depend on the help of the American workers.

"I shall not miss any opportunity to tell the trade unionists of Vienna that millions of American workers are on their side."

CWA Convention To Act On Big Defense Fund Plan

DELEGATES to the sixth annual convention of the CIO Communications Workers in Cleveland this week are being asked to approve a defense fund that ultimately will reach $12 million.

The proposal is one of a series of important items on the convention agenda and is pointed up by strikes the CWA was forced to call earlier this year in advancing its collective bargaining program.

Some 75,000 members in different sections of the country won wage raises of $4 to $7 weekly after strikes in April. Another 50,000 workers recently gained boosts of $2.50 to $6 a week in nine southeastern states.

Last week some 7500 employes of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., which serves the Washington, D. C., area and nearby states, negotiated increases of $3.50 to $5.50 a week. They are members of CWA Locals 2300 and 2336.

Of the increase, $3 a week across the board became effective immediately. The remainder will be retroactive to June 8 on approval of the Wage Stabilization Board.

The contract also calls for arbitration of all dismissals and demotions, instead of those among only half the employes, as in the old agreement. Differentials for night and temporary work were increased.

Townsend Going To Japan

PRES. Willard Townsend of the CIO Transport Service Employees is going to Japan on behalf of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions to help Japanese union members fight off Communist infiltration.

Townsend will leave June 29 for Berlin, where he will attend the meeting of the ICFTU General Council, and then will spend several days in Paris, leaving there July 8 and arriving in Tokyo on July 13.

He will spend four months in Japan helping the trade union movement—which has developed almost entirely since the end of World War II — in its fight against Communist aggression.

Townsend's assignment is one of several moves the ICFTU is making to meet Communist aggression in the underdeveloped countries.

This summer, a mission will start full time work among plantation workers in Asia, and two representatives will be sent to work among Asian miners.

The cost of these ventures is coming out of a special $700,000 fund earmarked to help fledgling uinons in underdeveloped countries build up strong labor movements. The CIO contributed $100,000 to the fund.

IUE Officers Act—

Defense Fund Of $1 Million Set In GE Showdown

THE CIO ELECTRICAL Workers last week got set for a showdown with General Electric, whose "chiseling" 1% wage increase offer incensed 70,000 IUE members working for GE.

The day after demonstrations by IUE members at 53 GE plants throughout the country, IUE's international officers, vice presidents and conference board chairmen authorized "a special national defense fund to insure the successful prosecution of our fight with GE."

This fund will be raised by contributions of $1 a month from each member and will reach a total of more than $1 million.

IUE officers, meeting at international union headquarters in Washington, pledged "full support to all measures necessary to victory in this crucial dispute with GE—up to, and including strike action."

The IUE leaders wired GE Vice Pres. L. T. Boulware a challenge "to hold a secret ballot among all GE employes to determine whether they want to knuckle under to your cheap, chiseling offer of 1%, or whether they want to secure the IUE-CIO program of adjustment of incentive rates, equal pay for equal work and an inequity bonus for skilled workers, other day and salaried workers."

The IUE accused GE, along with other "multi-million dollar corporations," of spearheading "the current anti-labor drive, both in industry and in Congress."

The union, which represents more than 374,000 workers, noted that in more than three months of so-called negotiations, the only offer by GE was a cost of living increase of 1.03%. IUE added:

"It is evident to us that the attitude of the company is part and parcel of the general drive in American industry to weaken, undermine and defeat organized labor."

Tempers boiled over at the demonstrations. Local leaders reported that the attitude of the GE workers was "intense" and "angry."

At the big Lynn, Mass., plant, more than 10,000 first-shift workers left the plant three-quarters of an hour ahead of the regular lunch hour break to join in "one of the most spirited plant gate rallies ever witnessed in the Lynn area," IUE leaders there reported.

In the Westinghouse chain, where IUE-CIO represents 50,000 workers and has turned down an offer of less than 1% as a final settlement, the AFL-IBEW signed off and accepted the company's penny-an-hour proposition.

EVERYBODY OUT—Workers at big Fort Wayne, Ind., General Electric plant, which employs 12,000, quit work to hear negotiations report. They joined in nation-wide demonstration called by CIO Electrical Workers in 53 GE plants, after IUE rejected inadequate 1% wage offer. IUE is setting up a million dollar "defense fund" for showdown with GE and is ready to strike if necessary.

Long Strike Won By IUE At Shawnee

A BITTER 12-week strike of the CIO Electrical Workers at the Sylvania Electric plant at Shawnee, Okla., ended June 7 with the union winning an average wage increase of 15c to 16c an hour.

During the long strike, the company tried to marshal the community against the strikers. A back-to-work movement failed a few weeks ago when workers marched into the plant after the scabs and prevented them from working by heckling them.

"This contract has been won by the militancy and fortitude of the heroic members of Local 744," declared IUE Sec.-Treas. Al Harnett.

"I have seen a lot of strikers, but these Shawnee workers, more than 80% of whom are women, rank with the best I have seen anywhere.

"They knew what was needed in Shawnee and they fought to win it.

"Their victory is a credit to the pioneer spirit of Oklahoma and the determination of the people there that they should not be treated as second class citizens."

The union also won maintenance of membership with dues check-off, seven paid holidays, vacations of a half week after six months' service, one week after one years' service, two weeks after three years' service, and three weeks for 15 years.

Aid Bill Goes To President

AFTER HACKING $1.5 billion off the amount President Truman says is necessary for adequate worldwide defense against Communist aggression, Congress last week passed and sent to the White House an authorization for a $6.4 billion Mutual Security Program next year.

The cuts made slash deepest into military and economic aid for Europe. They are already so severe that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization will not be able to reach its 1952 goal of 50 divisions and 4000 planes.

Nevertheless, Rep. Vorys (R. O.) said the Republican-sponsored "economy" drive which cut the authorizing measure was "only the first chapter."

Baldanzi Repudiated In Jersey TWUA Locals

THE EFFORTS of George Baldanzi to lead CIO Textile Workers into the AFL have failed in New Jersey, according to Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council.

Holderman, who is acting state director of TWUA-CIO, reported last week that 20,230 textile workers in the state who belonged to locals "which supported Baldanzi when he ran for president of TWUA-CIO at its Cleveland convention have repudiated him now that he has tried to lead a secession movement into the AFL."

"There can be no greater evidence of the loyalty of textile workers for the CIO than to realize that over 20,000 members who followed Baldanzi while he was in the CIO have flatly refused to follow him out of the CIO," Holderman said.

Baldanzi following his defeat for the presidency of TWUA became director of organization of the AFL textile workers.

Holderman said that of 53 TWUA locals in New Jersey with 29,610 members, 36 locals with 24,595 members have voted to remain loyal to CIO, while only five locals with 1540 members have voted to secede.

Rug Strikers Holding Firm

THE CIO Textile Workers last week accused major carpet firms of forcing a smaller concern in the industry to withdraw an offer of 10c an hour wage increase.

Jack Rubenstein, TWUA's carpet director, said that the Roxbury Carpet Co., Saxonville, Mass., withdrew an offer which it made two days earlier. He said that the offer was twice what the biggest companies had offered.

"When we actually met, the company withdrew its proposal," Rubenstein said. "We have since investigated, and we have obtained evidence that officials of the larger companies were responsible for the withdrawal.

More than 13,000 TWUA members are on strike in five carpet and rug mills, 500 of them at Roxbury.

ORE CARRIERS TIED UP—Two iron ore carriers supplying the big Ford River Rouge plant are tied up at Dearborn, with Mesabi iron mines struck and steel mills down in CIO Steelworkers' national strike. Government efforts to get arrangement for a limited amount of steel production for defense purposes continued in Washington, while the House moved to back Senate demand for a T-H injunction. Jack Kroll Says—

'Extra Dollars For Better Living' Are At Stake In '52

By GEORGE WARTENBERG

WHAT'S AT STAKE in the 1952 elections are "those extra dollars which make the difference in advancing or retarding our American standard of living."

JACK KROLL

That's what Jack Kroll, National CIO Political Action Committee director, told a special PAC conference in Cincinnati last week.

Stressing the bread-and-butter urgency of PAC, Kroll said:

"Extra dollars go into the pocket of the American worker as Congress passes laws favorable to the general welfare of American families.

"But Congress can also take those dollars out of the working man's pockets by unfavorable tax laws and measures affecting the wage and price level.

"It is those extra dollars which make the difference in advancing or retarding our American standard of living in the future."

Hard work by unionists—talking up politics and issues in the plant, at home and with friends and neighbors—will be essential, Kroll stressed, for victory in November.

The Cincinnati conference—one of a series held throughout Ohio—brought together shop stewards, local officers and members from five Southern Ohio counties. Robert J. Davidson, CIO regional director, was chairman.

Esther Murray, CIO-PAC staff member, pointed to the relatively large attendance of women and suggested that all locals pay increased attention to participation of their women members, as well as wives of union members in all PAC activities.

"If we can get our information on wages and prices over to the family and into the homes, we have won half the battle," she said.

"If the housewife knows the story and effectively participates along with her husband in politics, we would have real strength in winning the support of any community we needed. Our opponents know this and have made special appeal to women while we in the unions, who have all at stake, have neglected to tell our families what the aims and policies of the union are all about.

"Informal friendly meetings of neighbors in the homes for the purpose of discussing some of the vital political and union issues of today might go a far way in achieving this goal," she said.

The Cincinnati conference set a pattern of discussing vital election issues with rank and file CIO members in Ohio. Similar conferences have been held in Canton, Portsmouth and Dayton, and Jacob Clayman, secretary of the Ohio CIO Council, announced that additional conferences will be held in Akron, Youngstown and Steubenville this month.

Funds Cut Again For Public Housing

CONGRESSIONAL foes of low-rent public housing last week once again pared funds for new defense housing and also used a hatchet on the entire public housing program.

Action came despite warnings of spokesmen for the aircraft industry that the nation's critical housing shortage is a major reason for the dangerous lag in U. S. plane production.

Senate-House conferees sliced 10,000 units off the 45,000 authorized by the Senate for construction next year. President Truman had asked for 75,000 units. The House originally cut this to 5000.

Much more serious, however, was adoption of a rider by Rep. Thomas (D. Tex.) which will limit the program to 35,000 units in all succeeding years. The conferees also adopted a modified version of the so-called Gwinn Amendment, which the Senate had rejected on grounds that it would actually kill the program by its unworkability.

The substitute, proposed by Sen. Ferguson (R. Mich.), says that no member of any organization designated by the Attorney General as subversive shall be resident in any public housing project. Whether or not this would have the same crippling effect as the similar proposal of Rep. Gwinn (R. N.Y.) was not immediately clear, even to members of the Appropriations Committee staff.

A Republican drive to knife the program still further when the conference recommendation reaches the floor was indicated when GOP Reps. Phillips (Calif.), Taber (N.Y.), Coudert (N.Y.) and Cotton (N.H.) refrained from signing the report. That left them free to oppose items on which they disagreed.

WHILE the Administration's public housing program was being slaughtered in Congress, an emergency Joint Meeting of the San Diego Labor-Management and the San Diego Defense Mobilization Committees heard industry representatives charge the lack of adequate housing is the main cause of the lag in plane production.

D. C. Wilkins, Jr., manager of industrial relations of Consolidated Vultee Aircraft Corp., told the group that 12,000 additional rental units were needed in the San Diego area to take care of the needs of his company's employes alone.

Wilkens said that when his firm found it necessary to expand from 5900 employes to its present 24,460, it had to hire 40,000 to reach that total because of the high turnover due to lack of housing. He said that somewhere between 25% and 60% of all employes hired by the four San Diego plane firms quit and returned East because of the lack of housing.

Prices Hiked On 1000 Items

Pull in your belts, folks. The Inflation Express is going even faster.

This week the Office of Price Stabilization okayed retail price increases on clothing, furniture, radios, television sets and more than 1000 other consumer items.

Increases were authorized as a result of new freight rate hikes. Recently the Interstate Commerce Commission permitted 15% boosts in freight rates, the 12th general increase since World War 2.

It was the second time in recent weeks that the OPS had passed bad news on to consumers. On June 1, grocers were permitted to raise ceilings on scores of food items, an action which the agency said might add $150 million to the nation's annual food bill.

Biemiller Again Runs For Congress

Andrew J. Biemiller, former liberal Democratic congressman from Wisconsin, has entered the race for re-elction next November.

Labor's Political League of Milwaukee, composed of CIO, AFL and independent unions, persuaded him to run again by presenting him with petitions bearing 10,000 signatures asking him to be a candidate.

Big Lobbyists Lose Pal In Sen. Brewster

SOON THEY'LL be calling Senator Brewster (R. Me.) "mister."

That was the decision of Maine Republicans, reached June 15 in a state-wide primary that brought a record number to the polls

Brewster lost his race for the Republican senatorial nomination to Gov. Frederick G. Payne who got 68,485 votes to Brewster's 65,357.

Brewster's defeat removes from the band of Senate labor-haters one of its staunchest members. It also deprives special interest lobbyists of one of their chief supporters.

Brewster's name figured frequently in probes of lobbying and in recent years was linked to wire-tapping and the frenzied activities of Pan-American Airways.

He conducted his campaign on an anti-labor basis, claiming opposition to him stemmed from his support of Taft-Hartley.

Actually Brewster's defeat was caused by the resentment of areas of the state who suffered when price supports were removed from potatoes, according to Maine political analysts.

New York CIO, Kroll Map 'Get Out The Vote' Drive

THE NEW YORK State CIO Council met last week with National CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll to map preliminary plans for getting out the vote in the coming elections.

The council's executive board, local PAC directors, regional CIO directors and local council chiefs participated.

The urgent need for a strong Fair Deal standard bearer was stressed by spokesmen from all areas of the state. Forty-three representatives, a Senator and an entire Legislature will be elected in November in addition to the state's 45 presidential electors.

The area reports left no doubt that a record vote will be necessary to counter gerrymandering by the Republican-controlled Legislature through which the GOP stands to gain at least four congressional districts despite a drop of two in the state's total.

An action conference will be held in July to get the machinery rolling for an unprecedented PAC campaign. The CIO will coordinate its activities with those of other civic groups at the community level.

Cincinnati To Air CIO Video

CIO'S TELEVISION series, "Issues of the Day," is due to go on another station shortly.

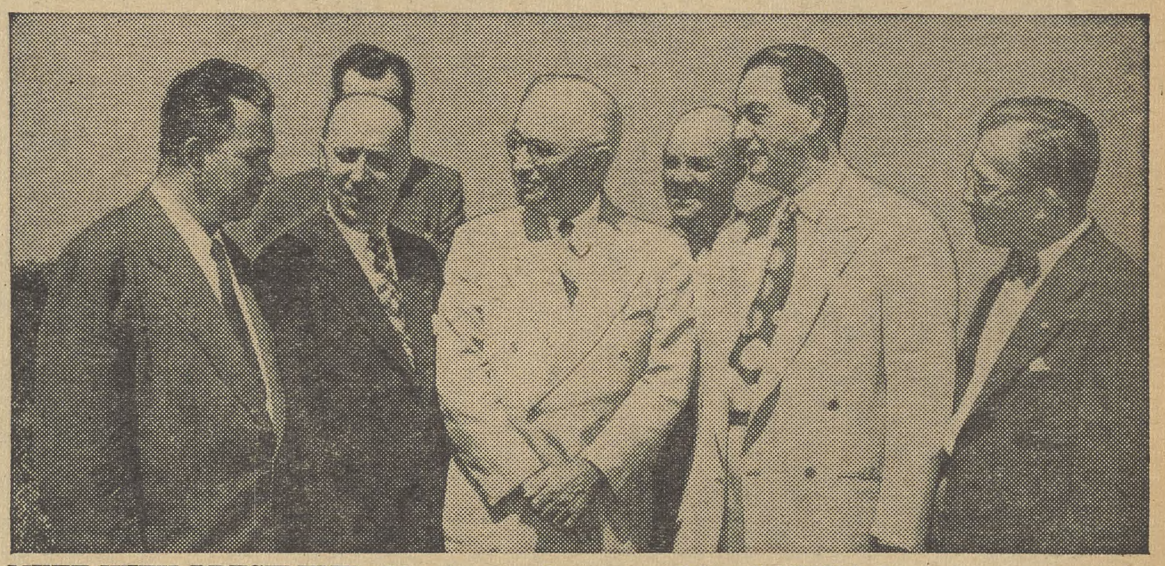
Starting in mid-summer, the 13-week series will be broadcast over Station WCPO-TV in Cincinnati, Ohio. It will be sponsored by the Greater Cincinnati Industrial Union Council of which Walter Grainger is president. Exact schedules will be announced later.

It will be the Cincinnati CIO's second TV venture. Earlier this year it broadcast a 13-week series of interview programs called "What's the Answer?"

Reaction to this initial venture, led the Cincinnati CIO to sponsor the current film series prepared jointly by the CIO Publicity Dept. and the CIO Political Action Committee.

In Washington, where the show is being aired over Station WMAL-TV, arrangements were completed for moving to a new and better time spot. Instead of the late Friday evening time spot occupied until now, "Issues of the Day" will be on Sunday afternoons, starting at 4:45.

Give A Buck To PAC



MEET WITH PRESIDENT—Members and officers of the CIO Utility Workers climaxed a legislative institute in Washington with a brief meeting with President Truman at the White House, at which they "recommended he change his mind and be a candidate." UWUA Pres. Joseph A. Fisher reported Truman "said no, that would be impossible." In group (from left, front) are Patrick McGrath, UWUA New York regional director, UWUA Sec.-Treas. William J. Pachler, Truman and Fisher.

T-H Ax Sharpened For Steel Strikers

THE DIXIEGOP coalition in Congress last week was hell-bent on trying to smash the CIO Steelworkers.

It was sharpening up the Taft - Hartley ax and getting ready to toss its no-strike injunction clause in the back of the steel union.

While the congressional assault on labor shifted from the Senate to the House, the steel strike continued solid with 650,000 men and women out and some 90% of basic steel production shut down.

At the end of the third week of the steel strike, this was the situation in summary:

1. The House was prepared for decisive votes on joining the Senate in "requesting" President Truman to obtain a T-H anti-strike injunction, and on propposals to either abolish or drastically curtail the Wage Stabilization Board.

2. President Truman said that Congress could not force him to move for an injunction against the Steelworkers.

3. USA-CIO Pres. Philip Murray warned the House against the T-H proposals, saying they were "a backhanded effort by the steel industry to use the Congress . . . for its own purposes."

4. Price officials hinted a relaxation of their position on steel price boosts.

With final votes pending, the House considered adding to the Defense Production Act the Byrd Amendment "requesting" a T-H injunction, passed by the Senate 49 to 30 two weeks ago.

House consideration came despite a warning by Rep. Spence (D. Ky.), Banking Committee chairman, that it was playing with a "keg of powder" if it tried to force an anti-strike injunction on the steel workers, who delayed the walkout well beyond the 80-day period provided in Taft-Hartley.

"Instead of cooling off," Spence predicted, "it's only going to create more fire."

An effort by Rep. Bolling (D. Mo.) to write a steel seizure amendment—with power to increase wages—into the Defense Production Act was ruled out of order, as such oldtime foes of labor as Rep. Hoffman (R. Mich.) hit the ceiling with Taft-Hartley war cries.

Truman told a press conference Congress could not tell him what to do, because T-H was permissive legislation. The Congress can pass the laws, he said, but it was his duty to apply them.

The President told reporters that use of the Taft-Hartley Law is under consideration, but he said that congressional action—in which the House is expected to join with the Senate—would not have any bearing on his ultimate decision.

The Byrd injunction amendment was just one of the anti-labor riders pending in the House.

Equally important was a move to abolish the Wage Stabilization Board—while keeping intact the wage control sections of the Defense Production Act.

A proposal to kill the WSB was approved by the House Labor Committee, by a reported vote of 16 to 5. At the same time the committee rejected a proposal that "all wage controls should be eliminated."

Abolishment of the WSB was proposed after hearings marked by bitter attacks on CIO members of the board. The committee in its report condemned particularly the WSB's recommendations for a steel settlement (which have been defied by steel management), WSB aprpoval of the union shop in several industries, and lengthy WSB consideration of the Borg-Warner case (in which the board finally turned down the CIO Auto Workers' request for a company-wide contract).

If the House rejects full destruction of the WSB, it may move to restrict its powers—as did the Senate, in adopting the Ives amendment stripping the wage board of disputes settlement powers and limiting its functions in wage cases.

Both the Byrd and Ives riders were condemned as "unwholesome and undesirable" by Murray in a letter to Speaker Sam Rayburn (D. Tex.). He urged that they be "resoundingly rebuffed" by the House.

Murray warned a vote for the anti-strike rider would be "simply and nakedly a vote in favor of big business and against the workers. It is a vote for price and profit gouging. Such a vote cannot and will not be forgotten by the American workers."

Legislative moves to Taft-Hartleyize the steel strike got support from Sen. Morse (R. Ore.) — previously a bitter critic of the steel magnates—and ex-Gen. Eisenhower (see editorial, Page 4). And in the background was Sen. Taft himself. Last week the Ohio Republican again suggested legislation "to prohibit or limit nationwide bargaining in some way."

The "rapacious and predatory" steel industry and its attempts to crush the steel union through Taft-Hartley were cited by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, in an offer of strike assistance to the Steelworkers union.

There was no immediate comment from Murray on Lewis' offer of a $10 million "loan" to the steel union.

On the steel price front, Economic Stabilizer Rogert L. Putnam said the industry would get "friendly and sympathetic" consideration of a price increase beyond $3 a ton if it settled with the USA-CIO. He revealed a price boost of $4.50 a ton was the latest discussed.

A union committee led by Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald continued discussions with John R. Steelman, presidential assistant, on reopening of a limited amount of steel production for "essential" military purposes. McDonald said "no agreement has been made for the opening of any mill for production."

Agreement was reached to move finished steel for "urgent" military items from struck mills.

Separate strike settlement agreements covering some 10,000 workers were reached by the USA-CIO with the Midvale Steel Co., Universal-Cyclops Steel Co., Rheem Manufacturing Co. and Rotary Electric Steel Co. while the WSB approved a contract for 5000 steel workers at three Pennsylvania plants of the Barium Steel Corp.

LISTENING IN.—CIO Steelworkers pickets at the main gate of U. S. Steel Corp. plant in South Chicago listen to broadcast of President Truman's special message to Congress warning against Taft-Hartley injunction and asking strike seizure law. But war cry to swat the steel union with T-H was growing.

'Let Me Call You Sweetheart'

The soft soap publicists of Big Steel are still working overtime.

Last week U. S. Steel Corp. management tried the old divide-and-rule tactic in an unsuccessful effort to split the ranks of striking CIO Steelworkers.

According to a lengthy account in the Wall Street Journal, Big Steel Vice Pres. C. F. Hood sent each of the company's 200,000 production employing a glowing letter trying to sell management's last offer. That was the 13.3c and no union shop proposition which steel workers already rejected.

Big Steel might as well have saved the postage.

Steel's 'Class War' Stand Condemned

By its unyielding opposition to the union shop, steel management "reflects a class-war attitude of antagonism toward nonclass war unions which aims not only at preventing their growth but at their ultimate destruction."

That is the comment of The Labor Leader, published by the Association of Catholic Trade Unionists in New York City.

The editorial said unions are "an indispensable part" of society and said "without reservation, thinking, socially informed Catholics must support the CIO Steelworkers . . ."

'Steel Firms Are Striking Against U.S.'

"THE STEEL industry is on strike against price stabilization and against the government."

That's what Robert R. Nathan, Washington economic consultant and World War II government official, says.

Under title of "Who Struck Whom?" Nathan discussed factors in the steel deadlock in an article in The New Leader Magazine. He wrote in part:

"The immediate act which halted steel production was the strike called by the United Steelworkers of America. But, fundamentally, the steel industry is on strike against the government for higher prices and even higher profits.

"It is generally believed in Washington that the steel industry would have settled weeks ago on the recommendations of the Wage Stabilization Board had the government permitted a substantially larger steel price increase than was warranted.

"The steel industry refused to come to reasonable terms with the union because the government had refused to surrender to the industry on the price stabilization front.

"The steelworkers have suffered a substantial shrinkage in the real buying power of their earnings because of rising living costs. It would require the January, 1952, and July, 1952 wage increases recommended by the WSB to restore the steelworkers to the purchasing power of their hourly earnings as of the date of their last contract.

"The steel companies have two channels for price relief. First, there is the Capehart Amendment, which allows for higher prices to compensate for higher costs. Also, companies may come in for price relief under the 'earnings standard.'

"The profits of the steel industry have been so high that they cannot possibly qualify for any price increase under the earnings standard. The profits before taxes of the steel industry in 1951 were approximately $2.5 billion. This compares with average annual profits before taxes in the base period of $1.2 billion.

"In essence, the steel industry wants to break the price stabilization program. It does not want to cooperate with the people in preventing further inflation.

"President Truman was correct in saying that the steel industry wants a mark-up on the wage increase. They would like to raise their prices sufficiently to cover all of the increases in the wage cost and to get a profit margin on those higher costs. That is what they have done year in and year out."

"THE STEELWORKERS' CASE" was presented over the CIO Auto Workers' "Meet the UAW-CIO" television show over two Michigan TV stations by USA-CIO Reps. Robert L. Farmer (left) and Arthur J. Menozzi (right), with Guy Nunn, Auto Workers' Commentator. Beginning June 25, "Meet the UAW-CIO" will be telecast at 7:30 p.m. each Wednesday on WWJ-TV, Detroit.

'No Deal' Or Raw Deal?

Next Nov. 5, on the morning after the presidential election, the Republicans will come up with one of two explanations for why they failed again.

If ex-Gen. Eisenhower is the GOP nominee, the "Wednesday morning quarterbacks" will claim: "We could have won if we had nominated Taft."

If Sen. Taft is the GOP nominee, the excuse will be: "We could have won if we had nominated Eisenhower."

Whatever the excuses that are going to be offered, apparently the nation will be spared the "me, too" line of argument—for Taft and Ike now are jockeying to see how close they can agree on how many things that are bad for America.

Whatever the post-mortems the Republicans offer after they get swatted down by the American voters on the next election day, the facts are that the GOP lost the election back in April, May and June of '52—before the nominating conventions.

The Republicans lost the election because they fell hook, line and sinker for the propaganda herrings of the steel industry.

For weeks, the GOP—plus Dixiecrats like Byrd who are indistinguishable from them—have done nothing but pour venom, scorn, hate, contempt and threats upon American working men and women.

Nominally, that scorn and contempt has been directed against the Steelworkers of the CIO, led by Pres. Philip Murray, because they have challenged the price and profit gouges of the steel industry and because they will "never surrender" in the fight for improved wages and conditions.

American workers of all union affiliations recognize that the steel union is fighting their fight. And the political assault led by the GOP against the steel union is part of a war on all of labor.

Through the long months of the steel deadlock, Sen. Taft has been chief strategist of the congressional Dixiegop moves "on the side of the steel companies." If he were the Republican nominee and if he were elected President, Taft already has revealed to the Wall Street Journal, he has ambitious legislative plans for a new crackdown on labor which would make the Taft-Hartley Act, by comparison, look like a dish of strawberries and cream.

Comes now Gen. Eisenhower, whose campaign is one of "out-tafting Taft" in the way of swatting labor.

Eisenhower proclaims he's "strictly a no-deal man"—which must be interpreted as "no deal" for the American people, a "good deal" for his backers, and a "raw deal" for working men and women.

He says, for example, that the Taft-Hartley Act is "the best so far" and he "certainly" would use it against the CIO Steelworkers—which is exactly Taft's position.

No wonder Murray commented that Eisenhower "became a 'me-tooer.'"

Between an Eisenhower who says he doesn't know the answer to important present problems and looks backward to an America of 50 years ago, and a Taft who would restore the unrestrained big business domination of America of the same period, there is no choice for labor.

In 1952, principles and program—building in the people's interests on the gains of the last 20 years—still are decisive in American politics.

The Rivals

Not 'Too Old To Work'

The following article on the problem of employment for older workers, by Pres. A. R. Mosher of the Canadian Congress of Labor, appeared in The Canadian Unionist, CCL official journal.

By A. R. MOSHER

ONE OF THE outstanding factors in modern society is the increasing life-span of our citizens. Better standards of living, improved hygiene and sanitation, have considerably lengthened the average life of the population not only in Canada and the United States, but also in Western Europe.

Figures for Canada are usually estimated as one-tenth of the U. S. figure, which means that, within the next eight years, Canada will have 1.5 million persons 65 years of age and over, or one-tenth of the population.

Is it even intelligent to assume that this large section of the population should be deprived of employment, and forced to live on pensions or annuities?

It seems to me that, as a social and economic policy, it is unfair not only to persons over 65, but to the industrially-employed population, if we continue to follow the principle of compulsory retirement at 65.

At one end of the scale we are endeavoring to provide children and young people with an education which will fit them not only to make a living, but to live lives which have purpose and meaning, and which will give them what have been referred to as the "durable satisfactions of life."

During this period of education, which, in the case of some professions, may run into the late twenties, children and young people must be maintained by the gainfully employed.

If, at the same time, we lay down a rigid and arbitrary rule that workers must retire at 65, irrespective of their ability, their health and their own wishes, or any other considerations, we are simply asking the middle group to carry the whole burden, and to produce enough to maintain both the younger and the older sections.

There is another aspect of this problem, namely, the refusal of government and industry to give employment to workers even in their forties.

If anyone over 45 loses his employment, he finds it increasingly difficult to become re-employed, and, ironically, this practice is partly due to the adoption of pension plans. Older workers who are taken on by a new employer are ordinarily unable to make sufficient contributions to a pension plan to provide for retirement at 65.

What we are faced with, therefore, is not only the failure of government and industry to make the fullest use of the available manpower in the middle-age group, but a stringent requirement that no one shall be permitted to retain any useful employment after he reaches 65.

No one will suggest for one moment that a worker whose facilities are impaired by age or other conditions has a right to employment which he is incapable of performing efficiently.

On the other hand, there are in practically every industry a variety of occupations which do not demand the quickness of hand or eye which may be expected of younger workers.

DURING THE WAR, it was found that older workers were able to make a highly valuable contribution to the war effort. They were steadier and more dependable; their record with respect to absenteeism was extremely good, and they were able to perform the duties assigned to them in a wholly satisfactory manner.

Admittedly, the work at which older persons were employed had to be carefully chosen; they were not asked to perform highly skilled work, unless tests showed they were capable of doing it.

It was clearly demonstrated that older persons had remarkable ability to learn new jobs, and that they took a pride and satisfaction in their work because they felt their ability was being recognized and utilized in a worthy cause.

It is noteworthy that, while industry and government lay down a fixed retiring age of 65, persons who are self-employed, running a corner grocery, a bookstore, or a cigar stand may continue to earn a good livelihood, and manage their affairs efficiently, even in their eighties. The same observation applies to farmers.

I am convinced that one of the most wasteful practices of our economic and social order is the compulsory retirement of workers at 65, along with our failure to provide new employment, where this is necessary, for workers in the younger age groups, who often become unemployed through no fault of their own.

Facts On '52

'Tax The Needy And Spare The Greedy'

"TAX THE NEEDY and spare the greedy" — that's what Congress has been doing to the American people in tax legislation for the past 10 years.

The story of how Congress each year is shifting more and more of the tax load on to moderate and low-income families, while writing new loopholes for high-income groups and corporations, is told in the CIO-PAC campaign pamphlet, "'52 Facts About Taxes."

Ever since FDR's veto of an unfair tax bill in 1943 and through President Truman's 1947 and 1948 vetoes of tax bills as "grossly" unjust, the PAC pamphlet says, "the conservative coalition in Congress . . . has been chipping away at the theory that the tax burden should be borne by those best able to carry it."

"Their effort," PAC points out, "has been manifest in the deliberate choice of excise (sales) taxes instead of higher taxes as a source of new revenue, the brazen favortism toward selected special interests such as oil and gas companies, the conscious creation of new privileges by which high-income executives and men of wealth can escape a large part of the taxation to which they are theoretically liable.

"Spokesmen of special privilege have gone before Congress arguing for taxation of the wage-earner, taxation of the low-income families, and 'relief' and 'incentive' for the wealthy.

"The conservative coalition has listened and obeyed. The trend has been away from the long-established doctrine of capacity to pay."

Instead, the PAC pamphlet points out, the Dixiegop coalition in control of Congress is forcing the average income family into "paying the piper" through multiplication of federal excise taxes, stiffest income tax boosts in the lower brackets and a developing campaign by the National Association of Manufacturers,

Committee for Economic Development and other business groups for a federal sales tax placed on top of widespread state and local sales levies.

Taxes are very much of a bread and butter matter. For example, according to a congressional study, "families making less than $1000 a year pay a higher percentage (23.6%) of income in taxes than families with incomes of $5000 and $6000 a year."

Indirect taxes—such as sales and excise levies—mount up for lower bracket families. The PAC pamphlet points out that cigarette and gas excises alone "eat up nearly 1% of the income of low-wage families" but are, comparatively, meaningless to high-bracket groups.

"This helps explain why," PAC says, "even in 1948 when rates were lower, the top 10% of our families by income—only 5 million families—were able to buy almost as much ordinary consumer goods as the 25½ million families making up the bottom 50% by income."

The fact-packed booklet then contrasts the special treatment accorded business firms and high-income brackets.

Take the question of corporation profits: In 1951, corporations earned—after paying taxes—an estimated $17.7 billion in net profits. They paid out $9 billion in dividends.

"Only three times in history," PAC points out, "did corporations have as much left in net profits after taxes as in 1951. Only once in history did corporations pay out more in cash dividends."

Consequently, business firms "could pay substantially heavier taxes than at present and still earn money, pile up reserves and pay out huge cash dividends," the booklet says.

Yet, what did Congress do? Efforts to tighten the excise profits tax were killed last year in the Senate, many of whose members come up for election this year. The Dixiegops went hog-wild in voting a tax law in which, as The Wall Street Journal has said, "low income individuals get the stiffest percentage boosts."

And the tax loophole scandal is uncurbed. These wide paths to lower taxes include deduction of "free enterprise" political advertising as "business expense," income-splitting privileges, the capital gains device, the depletion allowance ("one of the worst rackets"), fictitious family partnerships, the "stock option" deal for corporation executives, and tax-exempted securities.

The answer is at the ballot box.

"The country needs a Congress interested in a sound dollar and in the general welfare of the people rather than the special privileges of the rich," the PAC booklet says.

"We still need higher taxes to balance the defense budget . . .

"Equitable taxation neither 'soaks the rich' nor snatches shoes and meat from the poor.

"The principle that should guide Congress in considering new revenue bills is the principle of equality of sacrifice.

"We don't need new taxes wrung from the great bulk of our families earning $4000 a year or less.

"The corporation that can pay higher taxes without serious sacrifice, the upper-middle and high-bracket income families that enjoy most luxuries, are proper subjects of taxation based on the doctrine of equality of sacrifice."

Sure, Taxes Are Heavy But It's No One-Way Street

By Labor Press Associated

THE TAX burden is heavy, and the anti-labor boys harp on "gigantic" government, the "bureaucratic" state. The impression is, of course, that your tax money pours into Washington, to be spent mysteriously, and what do you get out of it?

Well, it's no one-way street. Lots of that money goes pouring back into the states. Here's where the money went in fiscal 1951 for the 12 largest programs, according to a survey by Congressional Quarterly:

Old-age assistance	$825,635,536	Vocational education	$ 26,652,000
Aid to blind	26,195,000	Hospital building	108,204,000
Aid, dependent children	316,476,899	Farm extension work	31,142,000
Highway building	395,821,146	Commodity Credit Corp.	40,766,000
Airport program	30,388,000	Surplus commodities	19,374,000
School lunches	78,245,000	Jobless aid	173,838,000

That's only the 12 major programs. Total federal payments to states and local governments in fiscal 1951 came to $2,280,959,373, or $46 million over 1950.

Nor is this the full extent of the amount of money flowing back from Washington, for it does not include $2,569,138,249 in federal payments direct to individuals and groups within states. Most of this went to veterans for adjustment and vocational rehabilitation, to state national guards, and for conservation payments made by the Dept. of Agriculture.

Do the states that contribute most to the federal treasury in internal revenue payments also get the greatest sums in grants-in-aid? Not at all. In fiscal 1951 the five top states getting most aid were:

California	$202,823,232	Texas	$118,139,549
New York	156,171,464	Pennsylvania	106,814,743
		Illinois	$92,414,746

In fiscal 1951 the five top states in federal internal revenue collections were:

New York	$9,243,924,054	Michigan	$4,156,021,742
Illinois	4,329,996,625	Pennsylvania	3,886,470,430
		California	$3,558,227,340

Behind The Headlines—

Fine Dixiegop Hand In Tax Policy

By IRVING FAGAN
For Labor Press Associated

THE prize political phony of the 1952 campaign is that Roosevelt and Truman are responsible for our present 56c dollar.

The real culprits are Taft, Vandenberg and Millikin, Republicans; Byrd and George, Dixiecrats. They planned it that way, with the blessing of the National Association of Manufacturers, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, and the American Bankers Association.

It's a complicated story, but the essential facts are simple.

President Roosevelt and Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, even before Pearl Harbor, wanted to foot the cost of defense as far as possible by pay-as-you-go. They hoped to pay two-thirds by taxation, one third by borrowing.

Byrd, Taft, George, Vandenberg, Millikin objected, even after Pearl Harbor. They had their way. And that gave us the 56c dollar.

The giveaway was a story in the New York Times of Mar. 8, 1942, that "Senator Taft said that Secretary Morgenthau's new program 'just seems to go too far toward taxation of the wealthy and not far enough in the lower income group.'"

That is what was really eating Taft and Byrd and the others, and that's why the Roosevelt-Morgenthau plan was ditched. Taft, Byrd et al. were protecting the wealthy. And that's how we got the 56c dollar.

The Constitution says all money bills originate in the House. But what has happened in the past 20 years is that a money bill was jammed through the House under a gag rule limiting debate and prohibiting amendments, and the real job passed on to the Senate Finance Committee, which decided how big our debt shall be and how our taxes shall be levied and collected.

Since 1938 that committee has been dominated by Dixiecrats George and Byrd, Dixiecrat-Republicans Taft and Vandenberg and Millikin, who was chairman in the 80th Congress, which gave us the Taft-Hartley Act. George, Byrd and Taft have run that committee for years.

The whole thing can be found in a book, "The National Debt in War and Transition," by Henry C. Murphy, for many years a Treasury Dept. employe.

He shows, by tables, that for the years 1940-46, both inclusive, total expenditures were $391.1 billion; total net receipts, $176.1 billion; total deficit, $215 billion; percentage of expenditures covered by net receipts, 45%.

Hard-pressed and bombed Britain managed to pay 52% and put 48% on the cuff; Canada managed to pay 57%. We paid ony 45%.

So, George, Byrd, Taft, Vandenberg and Millikin, for 1939-46, added to our public debt $50 billion. And that's why we have a 56c dollar.

For when the government has to meet expenses by borrowing instead of taxing, it increases the money supply, and that brings inflation; and the more borrowing, the more inflation, and the more inflation, the less the dollar is worth.

Nor is that all. The Republicans won in 1946, found a large cash surplus, could have cut the public debt. Instead, they put over a tax cut—for the upper-bracket people and the heirs to large estates. Worse, the Senate Finance Committee didn't pass any wartime tax bill until 10 months after Pearl Harbor. Result: A 1943 deficit of $57.4 billion, largest in our history.

No, Roosevelt and Morgenthau are not responsible for the 56c dollar. Responsible are the NAM, the C of C, the American Bankers Association, and their spokesmen in Congress.

CWA Pulls No Punches In Big Convention

TELEPHONE decorated speakers rostrum from which Pres. Joseph A. Beirne (above) presided at Communications Workers Convention. Number is national office's.

By GERVASE N. LOVE

A FEW YEARS back, when the scattered unions in the telephone industry first formed themselves into the CIO Communications Workers of America, the skeptics predicted that by 1952 Pres. Joseph A. Beirne "will be able to hold his convention in a phone booth."

So the 1952 convention was held last week. If it was in a telephone booth, it was the biggest telephone booth in the country—Cleveland's magnificent Public Auditorium, which has seated more than 13,000 persons on occasion, where CIO, Democratic and Republican national conventions have been held—and Beirne wasn't the least bit lonesome.

Keeping him company were 1300 voting delegates, 400 alternate delegates and some 1500 guests, most of them vacationing CWA members.

They represented some 700 locals holding bargaining rights for nearly 350,000 workers in the communications field who are protected by 121 hard-won contracts with 79 different employers, ranging in size from giant "Ma Bell" down to units with less than 100 members.

FOR A week they aired their problems freely in a magnificent demonstration of democratic unionism. Hundreds of rank-and-file delegates expressed their views—and they pulled no punches—in debate on top drawer convention agenda items like organizing, collective bargaining and the institution of a defense fund.

They patted their national administration on its figurative back when they thought it was due—and they clouted it just as hard when they thought THAT was due. And when they went home, nobody was mad at anybody else.

In the most important subject to come before the convention, the delegates approved a proposal for a $12 million defense fund after first rejecting it.

The turn-down came on June 18 after nearly a full day of debate, during which an amended version also was rejected. The following day it reached the floor on a motion to reconsider.

On a roll call vote, it was finally approved by a count of 133,000 to 101,000.

The plan provides that the locals pay to the international an addition 50c per member per month until a fund of $12 million, or $50 per member, is built up. They will resume payments when it drops below $40 per member continuing until the $12 million is again reached.

The fund will be administered by the international executive board and will be kept in a separate account from other union funds. Each local will be given an amount ranging from $100 to $10,000, depending on the number of members, to be kept in a special account earmarked for use only for emergency defense purposes.

In his keynote address, Beirne paid high tribute to his fellow-officers and the 12 district directors—the personnel of the international executive board—for their outstanding work during the previous year.

He also lauded the CIO Steelworkers, on strike against the basic steel industry, and defended the recommendations of the Wage Stabilization Board, on which he represented the CIO. He particularly warned against distorted versions of the award being presented by industry apologists.

"The significance is that those distortions are a sign of our times," he commented. "The signs can be further seen when the President, acting in behalf of all the people, seized the industry so as to prevent a strike, and the Supreme Court in looking at that constitutional issue for the first time said, 'You cannot do that'."

"The President, accepting as we all should the decisions of the Supreme Court, went back to Congress and said, 'Give me whatever it takes to preserve those who depend on steel in this worldwide conflict we are all in.'

"The sign of the time is that the Congress kicked it around like a political football, and the Senate has already said, 'Use the Taft-Hartley Act.' "

BEIRNE told the delegates there is a prime necessity to get into the political fight this year so as to elect a Congress and a President who will have at heart the interests of the people and not those of "the shysters."

"Our contribution last year to PAC was lousy," he said frankly. "I can't blame the practical politician in Congress. He knows that we go in circles, apparently, because our PAC last year was awful.

"If it is that way this year, then, if you begin to lose things, as we did under T-H, if the Dixiecrats and Republicans get greater in number to carry out their program, then don't go around whining next year. You asked for it."

He urged approval of the defense fund as "the biggest thing we have to decide for the strengthening of an organization we can be proud of." He continued:

"Going beyond that, we have one thing else to do this week for our long-term interest. It goes back to the Steelworkers' fight, that has its roots in the political arena.

"I don't mind saying to you in all honesty and sincerity, with the full exercise of a limited voice today"—he was speaking under the handicap of a sore throat—"that I honestly believe that in the year 1952, American workers can go no place else but to the Democratic Party for relief and leadership.

"I only hope that the Democratic Party as well as the Republican Party will select an enlightened leader around whom the people can rally, once he becomes President—rally to make America stronger than it is.

"Because what is good in its strength for America is good for us as members of CWA, and we can determine long before November whether we fully appreciate the impact of our government on our activities by the success or failure we will have in our PAC drive."

Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, expressed the pride of the CIO in the Communications Workers. He also gave thanks on behalf of himself and CIO Pres. Philip Murray for the role Beirne played as a WSB member in the steel crisis.

He was bitterly critical of the way the newspapers have been handling the steel situation, and warned that they are destroying the freedom of the press.

"It has become 'license' of the press," he declared, pointing out that such newspapers aid communism as effectively as the CIO opposes it.

He urged the CWA-CIO to retain the unity it has built up despite differences.

"WHEN you have some of these hair-splitting debates, remember it is the union that counts," he said.

"You will never have a perfect world. Who wants to be perfect anyhow? I want room for improvement at all times."

Assistant Sec. of Labor Robert T. Creasy, former head of the CWA Long Lines Div. before the present setup was adopted, brought greetings from Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin.

He also spoke on unemployment compensation laws, warning that even in a period of relatively full employment such as the present, thousands of dislocated workers are unable to find jobs.

"The entire field of unemployment compensation, together with the activities of the employment service . . . is a vital part of your economic life," he said.

"It is under attack, and it is your duty to do everything within your power to prevent your members from being mislead by distorted propaganda against it."

The convention adopted a collective bargaining program with stress on wages, elimination of inequities and pensions after discussion in executive session that lasted until after midnight.

It also adopted a budget after hearing a report from the finance committee which was sharply critical of the international executive board for spending more during the last year than was taken in. The additional funds came from a surplus built up in earlier years.

The executive board staunchly defended its course, citing high operating costs during the transition from the old structural setup to the present two-level form adopted at the 1951 convention.

The union pledged its "full support and cooperation" to striking CIO Steelworkers. It also urged all CWA members and locals to give every aid to the CIO Textile Workers—especially in the South—both in its defense against AFL raids and in its efforts to organize the unorganized.

PROBLEMS in CWA are same if one is short, like Ernest Y. Hodkins, Kansas City, Mo., or tall, like F. William Mogford, Toronto.

DISTRIBUTING CWA Literature was hot work: Helga Nesbitt reacted accordingly.

FIRST pledge for Local 1162 strikers came from Ruth Sears, Oakland, Calif.

Kefauver Got Wild Glad-Hand At CWA

SEN. ESTES KEFAUVER (Tenn.), an active campaigner for the Democratic nomination for President, was given a rousing welcome by delegates to the CIO Communications Workers convention.

The welcome included a hearty handclasp from Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, who was appropriately dressed for the occasion in a coonskin cap, the symbol of Kefauver's campaign.

An orchestra played the "Tennessee Waltz" and cheers echoed through the huge auditorium when he walked in, smiling and waving his hand, and again at the end of his address.

His speech was described by Beirne as his "first comprehensive speech outlining his labor views."

Kefauver strongly attacked the Taft-Hartley Act, called for labor legislation fair to both labor and management, urged greater labor participation in international affairs — something the CIO has demanded for years —and warned that the union movement will be shackled even more firmly than now if any Republican is elected President.

"The purpose of collective bargaining," he said, "is to make satisfactory and lasting labor-management contracts. I don't believe that lasting settlements can be made when one side of the negotiations is placed in handcuffs.

POLITICAL action by women was urged by India Edwards, Democratic National Committee vice chairman.

"Unions were originally formed because management was able to push individual workers around. The Taft-Hartley Law was designed to push unions around.

"The steel crisis today again makes it clear that the Taft-Hartley Law leaves the federal government powerless in an emergency unless it is going to intervene on a one-sided basis. Yet we were not able to convince a majority of the members of the Senate of this fact.

"The Taft-Hartley injunction now would, in my opinion, just postpone a settlement of that dispute.

"I think that the members of the United Steelworkers have been remarkably patient for over a period of five months in the face of a rising cost of living, and I personally have confidence in the recommendations of the Wage Stabilization Board. I don't believe that an anti-labor injunction will encourage either labor or management to bargain."

Kefauver paid tribute to the CWA-CIO for its growth "in the face of a labor-management law that is one-sided."

"This is what you want to bring home to the people and what we have to do this fall," he continued.

Kefauver expressed pride in the fact that he voted against T-H when it was first proposed, and he was serving in the House, and later for its repeal.

"I recognize and think most people recognize," he continued, "that some legislation was necessary, that we wanted fair and not punitive legislation.

"Now, ladies and gentlemen, I think we must put a labor-management law on the books that follows certain principles of mutuality. The law should be written in a spirit of good will, both towards labor unions and towards management."

It is the Democratic party, he declared, that "has tried to do right in protecting the dignity and order" of the workers over the years. T-H, he said, "symbolizes" the attitude of the Republicans.

He expressed gratification that Beirne, a delegate to the Democratic national convention from Maryland, will be a member of the preliminary drafting group of the platform committee.

Mrs. India Edwards, vice chairman of the Democratic National Committee, urged CWA-CIO members to get into politics actively through the party of their choosing.

"I hope that every man and woman in the hall," she said, "will enter political party work, if you are not already in it, right up to your necks.

"Enter it through your party and through the PAC, and don't forget that you cannot vote unless you register. It is not enough that you and your family are registered. See that every one you come in contact with is registered so that they can vote on Nov. 4."

CWA Aide Sues Ma Bell For Million

GLENN E. Watts, director of District 2 of the CIO Communications Workers, last week filed suit for $1,250,000 against the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. of West Virginia — a Bell System firm—in U.S. District Court in Washington.

The suit was in the form of a counterclaim to the company's suit against him for $700,000. That action grew out of a strike against the company last April by CWA Local 2004.

Watts is seeking compensatory damages of $250,000 and punitive damages of $1 million. He charged that the company sued him and threatened him with economic ruin so he would be afraid to discharge his duties and would advise calling off the strike, and had falsely and maliciously held him up to public ridicule and disgrace.

He also accused C. & P. of intimidating, defaming and coercing him for the purpose of obtaining the "collateral, corrupt advantage" of forcing the local to end the strike on terms "dictated unilaterally by the company."

'I Want To Help Others'—

Osie And His Nickels Aided CWA

IT HAPPENED some time ago during a Communications Workers' strike and it came to light belatedly, but it's still worth printing.

It took place in Tonawanda, N. Y., where members of CWA Local 1162 were taking up a payday collection from members of the CIO Steelworkers as they left their jobs at the Bethlehem Steel Co. plant in nearby Lackawanna.

An eight-year-old Negro boy stared for a time at the collectors, then approached Wayne Grey, CWA staff representative.

Why, he wanted to know, were people putting money in those cans? Gray explained that more than 1300 members of the union had been on strike for six weeks, and that the Steelworkers—who are now on strike themselves—were helping them out.

The boy left, came back later with a dime. He proudly deposited it in a jingling can.

Some hours later he showed up again—in a store where the collectors were counting up gifts that totaled more than $500.

"I've been looking all over for you," he told Gray, and handed over 50c.

His name, he said, was Osie Smith, but he wouldn't tell where he got the money.

Then one of the strikers, a girl, filled in the story. She had watched him shining shoes at 10c per shine. Whenever he finished a job he put a nickel in one pocket, the rest of the money in another. The nickel was for him, the rest of it for the strikers.

Why did he do it?

"I want to help others," he said, "because some day I might want some one to help me."

CWA CONVENTION gave high praise to 1400 members of Local 1162, Tonawanda, N. Y., on strike against Western Electric since Apr. 1. Local's delegates were (left to right) Joseph Patti, Joseph Gentile, Pres. Frank Catalano, William Newman and Rudolph Cerjan. More than $3000 was pledged to aid in fight, and a big door collection was taken up.

House Rejects AMA War Cries Votes $5 Old Age Pension Hike

DESPITE opposition by the American Medical Association and die-hard Republicans, the House last week reversed itself and passed a bill to boost old age insurance benefits about $5 a month.

The roll call vote was 360 to 22. This was 105 votes more than the two-thirds majority needed for approval.

The House action was hailed by the Committee for the Nation's Health.

CNH Chairman Michael M. Davis said that the vote demonstrates "that doctors who try to throw their profession into politics under the guidance of public relations counsel are not as wise as doctors who work with the sick in the ways they are trained to do under the guidance of science."

"Public relations counsel" meant Whitaker & Baxter, AMA's high-priced and high-powered publicists.

The bill calls for an increase in benefits for the four and a half million persons receiving old age insurance of $5 a month or 12½%, whichever is larger. The maximum benefits payable to a family would be increased from the present $150 to $168.75 a month.

Persons who become eligible in the future for old age assistance would get the increases, although in some cases the rises would be somewhat smaller than paid to those now receiving the benefits.

As the present fund is large enough to absorb the increases in benefits, the bill does not call for any increase in social security taxes. The bill went to the Senate.

The bill was amended in an attempt to meet charges made by the Republicans a month ago when the measure was defeated by a 150 to 140 majority, which was far short of the two-third vote.

At the instigation of the American Medical Association, the Republicans then hurled charges of "socialized medicine" at the bill.

The AMA's House of Delegates, which met in Chicago two weeks ago, tried to get the Republicans to do another smear job on the bill.

But a deluge of letters of protest—received by the Republicans since they defeated the bill—made them wary of staging a repeat performance.

They got their signal from Rep. Martin (Mass.), House minority leader, who said, "I think that on the whole the Republicans will vote for the bill and let the Senate fix it up."

PENSION BENEFITS BEGIN.—Twenty-five members of the CIO Textile Workers shared in $27,000 in retirement benefits under new program at Lawrence, Mass., mill of American Woolen Co. Food, Rent Hikes Push BLS Index Near Peak

IT'S NOT NEWS to housewives, but the cost of living is still climbing.

The consumer price index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics went up again, for the twelfth time in 15 months. And it's now just a hairline below the all-time high.

The latest BLS report, issued last week, reported the index reached 189.0 over the pre-World War II average in the month ending May 15. That was an increase of .2% during the month, to bring the index just one tenth of a point below the all-time high reached at the beginning of this year.

Rising food prices, which climbed 3.9%, and rent hikes were important factors in the latest index gain.

The BLS index gain meant a 2c hourly wage increase for 1.3 million railroad workers and at least 1c hourly for 100,000 aircraft, oil, textile and aviation workers.

Here are the cumulative figures for the "new" BLS Index:

Period	Index	Period	Index
1939 monthly average	99.4	1950: June 15	170.2
1943 monthly average	123.6	1951: June 15	185.2
1944 monthly average	125.5	1952: Jan. 15	189.1
1945 monthly average	128.4	Feb. 15	187.9
1946 monthly average	139.3	Mar. 15	188.0
1947 monthly average	159.2	Apr. 15	188.7
1948 monthly average	171.2	May 15	189.0

New Orleans Tank Plant Strike Voted

WORKERS in the Chrysler tank engine plant in New Orleans have voted 892 to 8 to ask for authorization to strike if need be to win a satisfactory contract.

Under the CIO Auto Workers constitution, strike action can be taken only after a two-thirds vote by secret ballot and authorization by the international.

Norman Matthews, director of the UAW-CIO Chrysler Dept., and Reg. Dir. Russell Letner said New Orleans management has refused to apply wage rates and other working standards provided in the national agreement which covers all other Chrysler plants.

For the first time Chrysler is insisting on a separate, local contract at New Orleans providing 29 to 51c an hour less for New Orleans Chrysler workers in 190 classifications and a greater spread between different classifications.

Ford workers in New Orleans are covered by the national Ford agreement and get the same rate for the same work as Ford workers in Detroit. The UAW-CIO won an NLRB representation election at the Chrysler plant May 5, by a vote of 462 to 1.

Conferences at Detroit on the New Orleans situation have been arranged by the Federal Mediation Service. (LPA)

Senate Kills Plans To End Job Patronage

AN ELECTION - minded Senate last week killed proposals to take politics out of the postoffice and three other U. S. agencies.

By majorities ranging up to 29, the Senate turned down proposals to take 21,000 postmasters out of the political patronage system and put them under civil service.

Similar proposals affecting 94 U S. Marshals and 51 key officials of the Customs Bureau also were defeated.

The three government reorganization bills were originally recommended by the bi-partisan Hoover Commission on government reorganization, and were presented with President Truman's endorsement.

The fight against the bills to extend civil service was led by Sen. McClellan (D. Ark.).

A small group of senators, led by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), led the unsuccessful effort to win approval of the measures.

Humphrey attacked "the hangover of spoilism" and said:

"The American people are sick of corruption and the political patronage system."

LIU 78 Ups Pay In Vegetable Sheds

Wage gains ranging from 7½c to 12½c an hour for vegetable shed workers in the Salinas-Watsonville, Cal., area were chalked up last week by CIO Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers Local Industrial Union No. 78.

The new contract, covering 3500 workers, was won after four months of negotiating with 53 shipping firms. The wage increases are retroactive to March 15. The negotiating committee was headed by Pres. J. E. Frost and Frank L. Menezes, district executive officer.

ELLERY FOSTER, former research director for the CIO Woodworkers, has been appointed advisor to the government of India on community development under the Point Four Program.

Ship Union Delays Strike In 10 Yards

THE CIO Shipbuilding Workers have again postponed strike deadlines for 40,000 members in 10 East Coast shipyards to permit work continuance until "full victory" in negotiations or a walkout.

The strike was to have begun June 13 at eight yards of the Bethlehem Steel Co. and two of the Todd Shipyards Corp. IUMSWA Pres. John Grogan announced that the decision to postpone the strike was made at a two-day meeting in New York City of the union's officers, executive board, Bethlehem Atlantic Coast committee and the Todd bargainers.

The union demands include a 20c across-the-board hourly increase, lifting the standard rate for first-class mechanics to $2 an hour, union shop, eight paid holidays and increased vacations.

Swift Named On 360 Price Boost Counts

UNCLE SAM last week charged Swift & Co. with widespread violations of meat price controls.

In federal court in Boston, the concern—one of the Big Four packers—was charged with 360 violations. U. S. Atty. George F. Garrity said that the firm was being charged with more than 100 other violations in actions in federal courts in New Haven, Conn., Concord, N. H., and Sioux Falls, S. D.

Complaints filed in Boston alleged that ceiling price regulations controlling the sale and distribution of meats were "knowingly and wilfully violated" and that false invoicing was used to "accomplish and cover up the alleged violations."

The criminal information was filed on behalf of the Office of Price Stabilization. Swift & Co., its subsidiaries, branches and some of its managers and employes were named.

UFW Officers In New Terms

TWO TOP officials of the CIO Furniture Workers were re-elected on the closing day of the UFWA-CIO's national convention, held in Grand Rapids, Mich.

Pres. Morris H. Pizer was returned to office for his third two-year term and Sec.-Treas. Fred Fulford to his second term.

Newly-elected vice presidents are Michael DiCicco, New York, Eastern Region; Samuel Sloan, Chicago, Midwestern Region; Walter Carson, Memphis, Southern Region; and Fred Stefan, San Francisco, Western Region.

3 In Family Gain Pension Benefits Of ACWA Plan

THREE MEMBERS of a family with a total of 140 years' service in the Rochester, N. Y., clothing industry soon will be enjoying together the benefits of the CIO Clothing Workers pension plan.

Already two members of the family, Mrs. Martha Sayles and Mrs. Ida Fenrick—twin sisters who went to work in a Rochester clothing factory 50 years ago—have retired under the pension plan. Whenever they moved to a new plant, they went together.

Mrs. Fenrick said that her husband, Theodore, who has worked in Rochester clothing plants for 40 years, plans to apply soon for retirement under the ACWA plan.

ANGRY WOMEN tenants in the first Michigan housing cooperative get help in their drive for a fair housing deal from James Lincoln (center), administrative assistant to Sen. Moody (D. Mich.), and Leo Goodman, director of the CIO National Housing Committee, at the recent Congressional investigation of the VA and FHA loan programs in Detroit. Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers also testified.

By 3 Votes Senate Kills Seaway Bill

BY A three-vote margin, the Senate last week killed all chance of action on the St. Lawrence Seaway project for this session of Congress.

Action came on a motion by Sen. O'Conor (D., Md.) to return the bill to the Foreign Relations Committee, which had earlier reported it out without recommendation. The vote was 43 for recommittal to 40 against.

Voting came less than an hour after President Truman had made an 11th-hour plea for passage and a day after the CIO, continuing its fight for the seaway, had urged the Senate to beat down attempts to kill the measure by such parliamentary devices as recommittal.

Capitol Hill observers noted 13 senators were absent when the vote was taken and called it a new victory for one of the strongest Washington lobbys. Fighting the bill were railroad groups, big private utilities, some mine companies and seaport lobbyists.

Voting for recommittal were 24 Republicans and 19 Democrats. Twenty-four Democrats and 16 Republicans voted against burying the measure, which had been studied for 30 years and backed by every President of the United States since it was first proposed.

In his last-minute plea for passage, Truman said it would be "one of the nation's worst economic mistakes" to let the project fail "by default."

He warned that Canada would develop the project single-handed. Almost immediately after the vote was announced, Canadian External Affairs Minister Lester B. Pearson said Canada should proceed immediately with an all-Canadian seaway project.

Truman also said:

"If Canada builds the waterway, and they expect to build it, we will pay toll on every ton of steel that comes from the iron deposits in Labrador.

"It has become necessary for us to import nearly all our iron from Labrador, Liberia, and Venezuela. This waterway would prevent our steel mills in the Midwest from moving to the East Coast.

"That situation happened to the textile mills of New England and I don't want to see it happen in the case of the Midwest steel mills."

In a letter to every senator, CIO Legislative Director Nathan E. Cowan noted, "CIO has consistently and energetically supported legislation to advance the project on the grounds that both the power and navigation facilities would expand and stabilize employment in New York State, New England and the Midwest."

Both pleas were rejected and "absentee" senators, plus a powerful lobby, won another round in their long battle against the seaway.

Truman Calls Again For Strong FEP Measure

PRESIDENT Truman last week served fighting notice that there would be no compromise on his civil rights program.

In a two-fisted speech at the commencement exercises of Howard Univ., a Negro institution, the President called for the full force and power of the federal government behind a strong civil rights program.

"I am not one of those who feel that we can leave these matters up to the states alone, or that we can rely solely on the efforts of men of good will," said the President.

It was an obvious challenge to Sen. Taft (O.), Gen. Eisenhower and leading contenders for the Republican presidential nomination. Both of them have positions directly opposed to that of the President. It was also an answer to some members of his own party, who have hinted at a compromise in an effort to placate the Southern Dixiecrat bloc.

Truman summed up his concept of civil rights by saying that all Americans "should be equal before the law . . . enjoy equal political rights . . . and . . . have equal opportunities for education, employment, and decent living conditions."

He derided the "prophets of doom" who said his program would weaken the country. The President contended that, on the contrary, "it had made it stronger."

The nation has made progress in the past five years, Truman reported, but he added, "we still have a long way to go." Only two of the 10 points in the President's 1948 civil rights program have been enacted into law.

Improved race relations, the President argued, could only be achieved by "forward movement" and not by following the doctrine of people who "are so afraid of rocking the boat, that they stop rowing."

Truman also linked civil rights to foreign affairs, saying:

"We should realize that much of the trouble in the world today is the result of false ideas of racial superiority . . . Today, as we reach a fuller understanding of the brotherhood of man, we are laying aside those old prejudices.

"We are working with the new nations of Asia and Africa as equals. Anything less would be a betrayal of the democratic ideals we profess. Better than any other country, the United States can reach out, through our diversity of races and origins, and deal as man to man with the different peoples of the globe."

Listen In! CIO Joins In Radio Forum

THE CIO will be well represented on major radio networks during the next few weeks.

Maurice F. McElligott, secretary-treasurer of the Illinois State CIO Council, led off over CBS last Saturday on "Cross-Section U.S.A." with a discussion of how to balance the national budget. At 4:30 p.m. EDT June 28 on the same program over the same network, Milton Plumb, assistant editor of The CIO News, will take part in a round table discussion of the work of the 82nd Congress.

The "Viewpoint U.S.A." program broadcast over NBC at 12 M. EDT July 6 will feature a pre-convention discussion of labor's role in the coming Presidential campaign by Jack Kroll, director of the CIO Political Action Committee.

Robert Nathan's series of weekly 15-minute talks on national affairs, presented on behalf of the national CIO, will resume at 7 p.m. EDT July 5 over the ABC network. It will continue at the same time on following Saturdays.

Civil Rights Issue High In Poll Of Labor

"THE Democrats have no hope of victory if they retreat from their 1948 platform on civil rights or key labor issues."

That opinion of Barney Hopkins, secretary-treasurer of the Michigan CIO Council, keynoted the replies of CIO leaders in 10 states to a questionnaire circulated by The Nation, New York weekly. The Nation published the replies in an article entitled, "The Planks Labor Wants in the 1952 Platforms."

Frank Rosenblum, general secretary-treasurer of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, summed up CIO's views on specific platform planks this way:—

"Labor wants effective price controls, including rents; expanded social security, including unemployment compensation based on uniformity of payments among the states; equitable taxation, with more relief for low-income groups and with proper excess-profit taxes; repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and restoration of provisions of the Wagner Act; adequate housing for low and moderate-income families; national health insurance; federal aid to education; civil-rights legislation to implement constitutional guarantees for all minorities (anti-poll-tax, anti-lynching and permanent FEPC legislation); repeal of the McCarran and Smith acts and other regulations curtailing the basic rights of individuals and providing for 'thought control'; positive efforts toward a resolution of the basic issues involved in international tensions so that the threat of a world war and its consequences will be eliminated."

Other CIO leaders, answering the questionnaire in much the same words, were Roy W. Atkinson, CIO regional director in Seattle; Elizabeth Nord, Textile Workers, Rhode Island; James F. Christie, Vermont State CIO Council, and George Brown, Oregon State CIO Council.

IUE Contract Aids Upgrading

Union contracts help end discrimination.

Thanks to seniority provisions of the CIO Electrical Workers' contract with Philco Corp. in Philadelphia, some 30 Negro workers have been upgraded to production and assembly jobs in recent weeks in the big plant.

Herbert Hill, a labor relations assistant of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, reported upgrading of Negroes in the tube assembly, main television assembly, radio assembly, electric drill and other production departments.

'You Hold The Key'—

Church Handbook Tells How To Fight Bias

HOW EVERYBODY can help improve human rights in his community is the theme of a 82-page paper-bound book just issued by the Women's Division of the Methodist Church.

The book, "You Hold the Key to Human Rights," spells out how communities can improve human rights and group relations.

To encourage the reader to go and do likewise, the Methodist report is filled with examples of how human rights have been improved in the United States and the world.

"You Hold the Key" points to the United Nation's Declaration of Human Rights as "a challenge and a promise for every man, woman and child in the world. For Americans, so directly in the spotlight of world leadership, it is a clear and compelling responsibility."

"Human rights begin with man's treatment of his fellow man. They are enjoyed or denied—in your own communities, in our every-day dealings with our friends and neighbors," the report says.

The UN Declaration points out, says the book, that in addition to personal, economic—(which includes the right to belong to unions), political and social rights, there are "certain rights—and these are the most important—which cut across all categories and are really all-embracing." These are:

"The right to equal opportunity in all areas of life, 'without distinction of any kind, such as race, color, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status . . .'

"Freedom of opinion and expression, 'including the right to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers . . .'

"The right to education 'directed to the full development of the human personality and to the strengthening of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms . . .'"

"You Hold the Key" says "the most important fact about human rights in the U.S. is that we are constantly striving to "reinforce and expand them." It then goes on to tell about the work of the President's Committee on Civil Rights, on which CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey served.

A major portion of the book is devoted to the mechanism for organizing the community to aid finding out what a community lacks in civil rights and then carrying the campaign to its objective. Getting all groups in the community, including unions, to join in the campaign is stressed.

"You Hold the Key to Human Rights" sells for 50c a copy and is available in quantity at the Literature Headquarters, Women's Div. of Christian Service, Methodist Church, 7820 Reading Rd., Cincinnati 37, O., or the Community Relations Service, 386 Fourth Ave., New York 16, N. Y. —F. R.

'Self-Starters'—

Ohio CIO Parley Gives Locals Job Of Studying World Issues

By ROBERT WARMAN

SIXTY Ohio CIO unionists spent three days in Columbus talking over labor's task in world affairs at the state's first CIO International Affairs Conference.

They went home determined to be "self-starters" in translating newly-gained knowledge into political action.

From Jack Kroll, Ohio CIO Council president and CIO-PAC national director, came the warning that labor's interest in world affairs is part and parcel with its interest in national issues. And the place to begin, he said, is in local political action. Kroll told the delegates:

"You have on your own individual shoulders responsibility for what our nation will do in the future, and that will be, to a large extent, what the world will do."

The three-day conference was held at Ohio State Univ. in Columbus, under joint sponsorship of the State CIO Council and the American Labor Education Service. The later organization was assisted by a grant from the Fund for Adult Education, which was established by the Ford Foundation.

Labor participants in the Mutual Security Administration are urging a shift in emphasis in U. S. foreign policy, the conference was told by Robert Oliver, CIO labor adviser to the MSA.

Oliver said the struggle against communism is not one that can be won by military preparations alone, but by helping the world to gain higher living standards.

Oliver stressed the importance of U. S. labor attaches in the diplomatic service. Because they speak the language of the people, they enjoy, he said, a tremendous advantage over the ordinary diplomat.

Renewed high tariff-protectionist demands by some U. S. industrialists were held a threat to recovery in Western Europe by John M. Leddy, director of the State Dept. Office of Economic Defense and Trade Policy.

Leddy said U. S. foreign policy places Europe first because of its great industrial potential. But jacking-up U. S. tariffs, he warned, would be a break on European defense mobilization.

THE State Dept. aide credited the U. S. economic recovery program begun with the Marshall Plan for gains in Western Europe. But he said the cartel domination of much of Europe's economy, with resulting high prices, badly needs correction.

A program for local union consideration of world affairs was presented by George Guernsey, CIO associate director of education. He suggested locals invite foreign trade unionists to local meetings, stress the United Nations and Point Four, emphasize the work of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, and encourage reading and discussion of international issues.

The need for intelligence in foreign affairs was pointed up by Orville Jones, State CIO Council education director, who said:

"For the first time, we are building the machinery where workers are taking part in world affairs. When we get strong enough, we may find the answers."

TALKING IT OVER.—Four participants in Ohio CIO International Affairs Conference were (from left): Merlin Bishop, American Labor Education Service and parley co-chairman; Orville Jones, Ohio CIO Council education directors, also co-chairman; Abdel Raouf Abu Alam, Egyptian labor attache; and Joseph Glazer, CIO Rubber Workers education director.

Japanese Labor Will Fight For Rights, ILO Warned

JAPANESE trade unions are planning new protest strikes rather than sacrifice rights won under the allied occupation.

Saburo Oka, president of the Japan Teachers Union, made that prediction to the Intl. Labor Organization meeting in Geneva.

Occupation policies, he said, "broke down the feudalistic practices and liberated workers and farmers." Since the Korean war, he added, there had been an abrupt change in these policies.

"The necessity to control Communist activities during this period led to many restrictive regulations," he added, pointing out Japanese workers were "united in opposition to rearmament because they want to protect their own livelihood . . . fear Japan's reverting to its fascistic prewar status and the resultant denial of democracy."

"Occupation, in its original stage, gave us many forms of freedom, most of which, however, we have already lost, or will shortly be deprived of," he observed, adding:

"Freedom is something not given but something to fight for."

HERE'S PART OF group of Ohio CIO unionists who attended state's first CIO International Affairs Conference, heard PAC Dir. Jack Kroll emphasize voters' responsibility "for what our nation will do in the future, and that will be, to a large extent, what the world will do." Wider discussion of world issues was urged.

CONGRATULATIONS are being extended by Betty Humphreys, member of Local 1, CIO Government & Civic Employees, to George Cargill on his election as president of her union's British counterpart, the Civil Service Clerical Association. Miss Humphreys is studying British trade unions.

Britain Encourages Civic Employes To Join Unions

THE BRITISH government isn't the least bit coy. It comes right out and says its employes ought to join the labor unions in their fields.

In fact, it even issues a handbook to every new worker explaining the value of unions in promoting good working relations and in negotiating for salaries and working conditions.

This report is sent from England by Betty Humphreys, a member of Washington Local 1 of the CIO Government & Civic Employees, who went to Great Britain on her own to study the labor movement. She is concentrating on civil service unions.

As a result of the government policy, she wrote, civil service unions have 500,000 members in a potential of 700,000, and have prestige as well as strength.

Workers whose pleas for wage increases once were ignored can now take the government to compulsory arbitration, she said —and often upset the refusal of a demand.

Miss Humphreys has been doing most of her research in the office of the Civil Service Clerical Association, the union for the lower grades of government workers, with nearly 160,000 members.

SHE WAS asked to speak at its recent convention in Prestatyn, North Wales, and to attend as a fraternal delegate. In her brief address she emphasized the importance of personal exchange between unions with similar objectives in Great Britain and the U.S.

"Two of the hotter issues of the convention," she wrote, "were equal pay for women (which they have been trying to get since their start in 1902) and a fair scale of pay for their foreign members in Malta and Gibraltar.

"I explained our equal pay scheme in the U.S. and also our work on wage scales in Panama. By these examples I tried to show the advantages that might accrue by greater exchange of detailed information on similar problems."

CIO Urges Prompt Okeh Of P. R. Bill

THE CIO last week urged the Senate to take "prompt, favorable action" on the new Constitution of Puerto Rico. Nathan E. Cowan, director of the CIO Legislative Dept., wrote each Senator:

"The government of the United States consistently has pursued a policy in Puerto Rico designed to vest ultimately in the people of that Commonwealth complete authority and responsibility for local self-government.

"The objective of that policy will have been accomplished when Congressional approval is given to the Constitution recently adopted by the people of Puerto Rico by an overwhleming vote.

"We know from personal association with our membership in Puerto Rico the deep significance and meaning of the new Constitution to the people of Puerto Rico. Speedy approval of the Constitution by Congress will forge an enduring bond of friendship and good will between them and our own people."

CIO Delegation On Way To ICFTU

A CIO delegation led by Allan S. Haywood, executive vice president, left last week by ship for the meeting of the General Council of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. The council will meet July 1-5 in Berlin.

Other members of the delegation are Pres. Michel Quill of the CIO Transport Workers, Victor Reuther, CIO representative in Europe, Michael Ross, director of the CIO Dept. for International Affairs, and James Leary, ICFTU representative at the United Nations.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE WRITER travelled to Grand Rapids, Mich. and had the pleasure and privelege of attending and addressing the annual convention of the United Furniture Workers of America.

This union has made great strides in the past couple of years internally and organizationally. Except for a very few who still seem to favor totalitarism, the delegates supported the policies and programs of their national officers. This union stands forthright with CIO policies and the Convention demonstrated that the membership is behind their officers.

I then proceeded on to Chicago where I met with Frank Cronin, director of the mid-western organizing drive now under way. Things are moving along nicely and we expect big things in the near future.

★

From Chicago I traveled to Cleveland, where I attended and addressed the convention of the Communications Workers of America, CIO, and what a convention! This union and its officers have been a great asset to the CIO, they are happy to be a part of our great organization, and they want to build and unite an even stronger union under the banner of CIO.

In addressing the delegation I pointed out the strides made in the telephone industry in the past few years, I discussed some of the problems and issues facing CIO and organized labor today and what our objectives are. The delegates expressed enthusiastic support of CIO-PAC and the tremendous battle being waged by the CIO Steelworkers. Pres. Joseph Beirne presented to the convention a resume of facts and figures of the true steel situation.

As this paper goes to press the writer will be on the high seas en route to Berlin to attend the meeting of the General Council of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. I will be back around July 14, at which time I will give a report on this meeting. In my absence, my assistant, R. J. Thomas, will be in charge of the CIO Organizational Dept.

In light of the present day political and economic situation, we must all work increasingly hard to make our great union stronger.

★

Reg. Dir. Charles Cowl reports that in a representation election held at the Continental Can plant, Auburndale, Fla., the workers favored the CIO Steelworkers by the following vote: USA-CIO 83, AFL 9, neither 22. Credit for this important victory goes to Joe Moore of the CIO Organizing Committee and Intl. Rep. Estes Riffe of USA-CIO.

Natl. Dir. John Riffe, CIO Organizing Committee, reports the following representation election victories: The White Motor Co., Birmingham, Ala., eligible 20, RWDSU 17, no union 0; Whitin Machine Works, Charlotte, N. C., eligible 225, USA-CIO 131, no union 88, challenged 2.

Sec.-Treas. John Lawson, CIO Stone & Allied Products Workers, reports two certification elections: Northwestern-Hanna Fuel Co., Lime Island, Mich., USAPWA-CIO 8, no union 0; The Detour Dock Co., Detour, Mich., USAPWA-CIO 19, no union 8. Intl. Rep. Robert Kurtz was in charge of both elections.

Act. Reg. Dir. A. R. Kinstley reports that the Textile Workers Union, CIO, won a representation election at the Mid-West Burlap and Bag Co., Kansas City, Mo., by the following vote: eligible 27, TWUA 17, AFL 1, no union 7, challenged 1. Intl. Rep. Howard Berge directed this drive. The CIO Packinghouse Workers won a representation election at the Armour Fertilizer Works, North Kansas City, Mo., by the following vote: eligible 36, UPWA 25, no union 1. Field Rep. Frank Brown organized this group and handled the election.

CIO Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that in a representation election at the New Haven Casket Co., New Haven, Conn., the CIO Furniture Workers won by a vote of 14 to 13 no union. Union Rep. John Sullivan handled this election.

Chairman John Green, United Railroad Workers, reports the tug-boat captains of the Marine Div. of the Long Island Railroad, New York, N. Y. voted in favor of the URRAW-CIO by a 2 to 1 majority. As a result of this election, all workers of the Marine Div. are now CIO members.

'Clean Sweep' Won By TWUA

"A CLEAN SWEEP victory" has been won by the CIO Textile Workers in the important textile industry center of Passaic, N.J.

The TWUA has regained full control of the Passaic Joint Board, announced Carl Holderman, State CIO Council president and TWUA acting state director.

Holderman said the AFL Textile Workers — now engaged in an industry-wide raid against the TWUA — "had completely abdicated from their claim of a right to control the Passaic Joint Board and its funds."

He said the AFL union's attorney had signed a stipulation restoring the joint board's funds and property to the Textile Workers.

"This completely shatters the attempts of the UTW-AFL to raid our union," he said. "By signing this stipulation, the AFL recognizes that they have been repudiated by our members and now concede that textile workers have been and will always be loyal to the TWUA-CIO."

CIO Maritime Group Protests To Truman, Backs Super-Liner Deal

THE CIO Maritime Committee has lodged a strong protest with President Truman against the efforts of Comptroller Gen. Lindsay C. Warren to block delivery of the $70-million superliner United States to the United States Lines.

Chairman Joseph Curran wrote Truman that Warren's "expression of authority far exceeds the power heretofore publicly claimed by the Comptroller. If sustained, it would mean that the validity of every subsidy contract (shipping or otherwise) would be subject to the whims of the Government Accounting Office and the Comptroller."

Delivery of the super-liner to the U. S. Lines was scheduled over the past weekend, after Sec. of Commerce Charles Sawyer was advised that the government's contract with the company was legal.

CURRAN, who is president of the CIO National Maritime Union, also wrote Truman that in the dispute:

"Of equal importance is the doctrine that the decisions of GAO and Comptroller General are final and binding on the executive department to exercise discretion in the administration of the law except with the concurrence of the two auditing agencies.

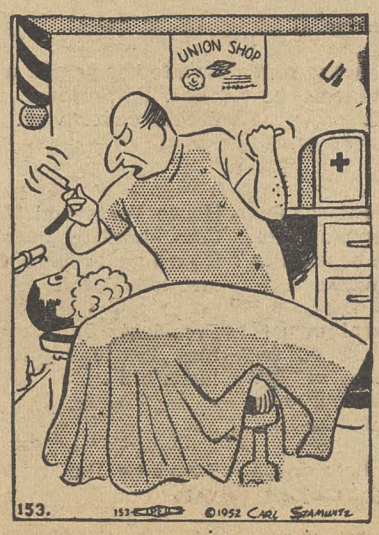
"Thus the auditors inevitably become the government's principal legal and contracting offices.

"It is difficult to believe that Congress intended such a result or that the public, particularly business (including farmers), can afford to concur in the theory advanced by Lindsay Warren and his legal staff.

Curran said that the "normal functions" of the Comptroller General are supported by the CIO and all labor and the commission is not unmindful of his pro-American Merchant Marine work.

Curran also told President Truman the liner United States is "invaluable" as "an instrument of national security.

"Employment of skilled merchant seamen on the ship contributes much to both the economy and the preparedness of our country," he wrote. "If not delivered on schedule our merchant marine will receive a mortal blow."



"The first aid kit? That's for these anti-union carpers who can't keep their mouth shut while I'm shaving 'em!"

TWUA Protests Wage Cut Rule By Bates' Arbitrator

THE CIO Textile Workers is going to go to court to set aside part of an arbitrator's decision cutting the wages of 7000 employes of the Bates Manufacturing Co., Lewiston, Me.

Court action was authorized by the unanimous vote of the union's executive council at a meeting in New York City last week. TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve said:

"We cannot legally contest the wage cut, amounting to about 7½c an hour, awarded by the arbitrator, even though we believe it is an outrageous miscarriage of justice.

"However, it is not within the power of the arbitrator, under our contract, to alter any of the contract terms. He could not legally suspend the escalator clause any more than he could abolish paid holidays."

THE arbitrator is Prof. William Simkin of the Univ. of Pennsylvania.

An emergency conference of delegates from all the northern cotton-rayon locals was scheduled to be held in Boston June 22. The union's executive council authorized Rieve; Executive Vice Pres. Mariane S. Bishop, who is also the union's cotton rayon director who helped present TWUA's case to the arbitrator, and Sec.-Treas. William Pollock to speak for it in asking recommendations on the effect of the decision on other pending wage arbitration cases.

During the hearing, TWUA charged that the company, which has five plants in Maine, cited losses in the past three months that were misleading. The company had asked for a 30c hourly wage cut ruling.

The union said that the losses arose from "peculiar circumstances" including large inventory losses due to the decline in the price of rayon yarn and raw cotton.

In a statement issued after the hearing, the union said the Bates firm has been "fantastically profitable," but because of a "few months of slack business, the impartial arbiter has authorized the company to cut wages despite the workers' rising living costs.

During the hearing, union spokesmen disputed the company's claim that its assets are are "dwindling," and charged that they are, in fact, increasing.

TWUA declared that Bates' net working capital, as of last Dec. 31, was at an all-time high of more than $20.7 million and that its earned surplus was $12.7 million.

From 1946 to 1951 while its wage rates were higher than those of some of its competitors, the Bates concern earned $52¼ million before taxes and more than $30 million after taxes.

"There is no sense and no justice," TWUA said, "in a situation in which the owners of industry take the profits but the workers suffer the losses."

Migrant Labor Pact Extended

The Migrant Labor Agreement between U. S. and Mexico has been amended and extended from June 30 until Dec. 31, 1953.

The agreement aims to provide not only for furnishing Mexican labor where needed in this country, but also to halt the flow of illegal Mexican labor—known as "wetbacks"—into this country.

The new agreement contains changes made by Public Law 78, presumably designed to halt the wetbacks, but which CIO warned was full of loopholes.

No New Laws—

Haywood: 'Unionists Have Licked Commies'

By MILTON PLUMB

THE CIO is firmly convinced that no new legislation is needed now to deal with Communist-dominated unions, CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood told the Senate Labor subcommittee last week.

Pres. James B. Carey of the CIO Electrical Workers testified that his union agrees completely with the CIO position on this matter.

Speaking on the basis of IUE's experiences in the defense-critical atomic energy and electrical industries, Carey contended that even in the most strategic areas, the problem can be handled satisfactorily by administrative action.

"We have today an aroused alert trade union movement on guard against communism and informed as to its methods and techniques," Haywood said.

"That is the best assurance that we could have that any further attempt of the Communists to use the trade union movement for their own ends will be defeated."

Haywood traced the history of the successful struggle within the CIO to clean up unions dominated by Communists, which culminated in the expulsion of 11 unions which claimed one million members. He emphasized:

1. While a considerable portion of this membership has since returned to new CIO unions free of Communists, "the campaign to bring these workers back into the American trade union movement has been arduous and expensive" and took a large part of CIO energies over the last two years.

2. The CIO expulsion procedures were thoroughly fair and democratic, providing full hearings and due process, and they have been upheld by the courts.

3. There has been no challenge to the correctness of the CIO determinations as to which unions were Communist controlled.

4. The eradication of Communists from the CIO was accomplished without government intervention.

As a matter of fact, Haywood said, the Communist-dominated unions used provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act making unions generally sueable on contracts in the federal courts in an effort to delay the CIO expulsion action.

"These provisions had been adopted by the reactionary 80th Congress for the purpose of harassing labor unions," Haywood pointed out, "and the Communist-run unions did not scruple at using them in their attempts to harass the CIO."

Haywood added that the Taft-Hartley non-Communist affidavit requirement "has accomplished nothing worthwhile to date, and I see no reason to expect that it will accomplish anything hereafter." He declared that it is "fundamentally unsound in principle" and "raises a grave question of civil liberties" insofar as it relates to belief.

Pointing out that the purpose of a fair labor relations law should be to promote harmonious industrial relations, Haywood objected to the affidavit because it "gratuitously insults unions" and places in the hands of the employer, rather than the government, the decision of whether or not a union is to be penalized for Communist leadership.

An example of the latter operation of the law was cited to the committee by the IUE-CIO. Carey charged that "a small group of profit-blinded business executives" has given "active assistance and encouragement" to a Communist-dominated union in return for savings of millions of dollars "in money not paid out in wage gains and other contract improvements."

The big electrical corporations, Carey charged, "have committed something very close to treason" in actively supporting the United Electrical Workers, which the CIO expelled in 1949 because of Communist domination. He named the General Electric Corp. as one of the firms which "utilize communism" in this way.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), chairman of the subcommittee which has been holding hearings on the problem of Communists in the labor movement, called Carey's charges "very serious" and said he would call representatives of both GE and UE to testify before his committee.

Carey said that GE used the courts to aid UE in its fight with the CIO union and assisted it in National Labor Relations Board elections. He attacked particularly a "collusive agreement" granting UE the checkoff even before the question of the proper bargaining agent had been determined in the courts.

At the same time, GE refused to grant the checkoff to the CIO Electrical Workers and would not permit the IUE to send representatives or distribute election material in its plants, Carey said.

Carey, speaking for the IUE, suggested that the Defense Dept. set up a tri-partite committee of labor, industry and procurement representatives to determine whether unions or employers involved in defense contracts are security risks.

Such a board would be empowered, after hearings, to refuse or revoke defense contracts to employers who bargain with Communist-dominated unions.

Haywood said that the CIO has taken no position with regard to enlargement or extension of the government's administrative procedures in this field.

COMMUNIST CONTROL of the United Electrical Workers, expelled from the CIO in 1949, was denounced by Pres. James B. Carey of CIO Electrical Workers at hearings before the Senate Labor subcommittee. Russ Nixon (with glasses in background), UE's Washington representative, listens while Carey questions UE's right to speak for the workers in the industry.

Sneak War On Jersey Rent Controls Hit

NEW JERSEY real estate boards are preparing for a wholesale assault on rent control, State CIO Pres. Carl Holderman warned last week.

Holderman named Raymond Preideaux, president of the New Jersey Real Estate Board, as kingpin in the plan to strip tenants of protection against rent rouging and illegal eviction.

The real estate interests are "planning a sudden sneak attack on the rent program," through "quick passage of a local decontrol ordinance before the public becomes aware of the threat," Holderman warned.

He revealed that Preideaux had been travelling the state, advising local realtor boards on techniques of decontrol by local action and suggesting they cultivate local officials and win them over to decontrol on the basis of a private survey of rental vacancies compiled by real estate interests.

He cited as an example of the real estate group's tactics the case of Rutherford, N. J. The CIO official charged that there "a real estate-dominated city council rammed through a decontrol measure in spite of protests from various community groups, and over the strenuous opposition of more than 700 irate tenants who jammed into the public hearings, whereas only two people spoke in favor of decontrol."

Gary Rent Lids Restored By U.S.

Full federal rent stabilization for most of highly industrialized Lake County, Ind., went back into effect on June 12, as the area was certified as "critical."

Rent Stabilizer Tighe E. Woods noted there had been a substantial influx of workers into the large steel plants of Gary, Hammond and East Chicago, causing a housing shortage and a threatened sharp increase in rents.

'Remedial' FEP Bill Passes Senate Subcommittee Test

A "REMEDIAL" and enforceable Fair Employment Practices bill last week received initial Senate committee approval.

The bill—a fusion of measures introduced by Sens. Humphrey (D. Minn.) and Ives (R. N. Y.)—was approved by the Senate Labor subcommittee. Approval by the full Labor committee is required before Senate action.

The bill would set up a U. S. "Commission on Equality of Opportunity in Employment."

The five - man commission would be empowered to issue orders to employers, or unions, charged with bias, ordering them to stop discriminating because of race, religion, color, national origin or ancestry in hiring of workers. The commission's orders would be subject to court review.

The bill was discribed by Labor subcommittee sources as "remedial" rather than "punitives."

Procedures outlined for the anti-bias agency are patterned after the New York State FEPC law, calling for a three-step procedure: investigation and attempts to mediate bias cases by commission investigators on a voluntary basis, formal hearings before the commission, and, if necessary, court action by the commission to gain enforcement of its decision.

One serious loophole, however, is contained in the measure. It would give Congress a veto power over any regulation issued by the commission.

House Butchers Price Controls, Votes T-H Against Steel Strike

—SEE PAGES 2 & 3

"TURN ON THE HEAT . . . on Bethlehem Steel, not on us!" It was plenty hot, with the temperature around 95, for these card-playing CIO Steelworkers in a picket tent near the Bethlehem, Pa., plant and that coal oil stove is strictly a gag. But there's nothing humorous in the determination of the Bethlehem strikers, nor the skill and detail of their strike organization. (See story and pictures, Pages 6 and 7.)

Now We'll Need Telescopes To Keep Track Of Prices

HOUSEWIVES will have to become astronomers to keep track of higher prices and higher living costs—if what Congress has done to price controls is allowed to stand.

"If we tie the cost of living to Talle's Comet," said Economic Stabilizer Roger L. Putnam last week, "we may never see it again."

"Talle's Comet" was his description of the House-approved amendment by Rep. Talle (R. Ia.) wiping out virtually all present price controls.

Both Putnam and Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall bitterly condemned the House action—in committee of the whole and later roll call votes—to wipe out price ceilings at a time when living costs have passed previous peaks.

Putnam said the Republican-led "minority in control of the House voted for higher food prices, higher living costs, and higher defense costs. It voted for inflation."

"The absenteeism on the one hand and the 'to hell with the consumer' attitude on the other gave us a bill which is a monstrosity," Putnam declared.

"If the Congress tears the guts out of the stabilization program and lets the cost of living again run riot—as this bill would do—the housewife will find that the high prices she is now paying will look like bargains compared to what will happen. The lobbies would win, but the people would lose."

Arnall revealed that the Bureau of Labor Statistics consumer price index, which was at 189.0 in mid-May, has climbed past the 189.1 all-time record of mid-January.

Arnall warned Speaker Rayburn (D. Tex.) that, if the House action stands, consumers "will have absolutely no protection against additional inflation and skyrocketing price increases."

The price chief debunked the "deflation" campaign which business papers have been building up for several weeks, as preliminary to the House price-boosting decontrol drive.

"There are some soft spots in our economy today," Arnall said, "but their prevalence has been greatly exaggerated.

"Basically, our economy is firm, with widespread upward pressures on prices despite the presence of some soft spots. Under these circumstances, inflation remains a very real threat to our national economy."

House Hoots, Hollers And Kills Price Controls

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE DIXIEGOP coalition of reactionary Republicans and more reactionary Southern Democrats that has been running rampant in the House voted last week to kill off virtually all price controls at midnight June 30.

After this contemptuous defiance of the housewife and other consumers, the Dixiegops proceeded to kick American workers and thousands of tenants in the teeth.

They voted to continue wage controls for one year beyond the June 30 expiration date of the Defense Production Act, thus freezing wages while giving control of prices to the greedy, the profiteers, the chiselers and the speculators.

Then they yielded to pressure from the real estate lobby and voted to end rent controls in most communities on Sept. 30 unless their continuation is voted by local governing bodies or by the citizens in a referendum election.

THE effect of the House action is to add millions of dollars to the cost of living while preventing workers from obtaining wage increases to meet price boosts, and adding billions to the cost of rearmament.

The end came on June 26—four days before the Defense Production Act was due to die—after the extension measure under consideration was turned into a shambles by a series of amendments that would have made it meaningless even if controls had been retained.

The amended act was extended by a 211 to 185 vote.

FINAL action was taken on both the amendments and the extension after trial heats during which the House sat as a committee of the whole. This means that no roll call votes were taken and that each action was subject to formal approval when the House again went into regular session.

The Senate previously had passed a bill extending a weakened version of the Defense Production Act to Feb. 28, 1953. Conferees representing the two bodies went into conference. They were expected to report back with a compromise bill setting the price and wage controls death knell for some date between those named in the two versions.

The House during its rampage acted with far less dignity than the average union convention, no matter how wild. Hoots and shouts, catcalls and boos were frequent, and Rep. Cole (R. Kan.) forgot himself so far as virtually to call Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall a liar.

The amendment to end price ceilings on June 30 was introduced by Rep. Talle (R. O.).

IT would remove all controls over the prices of items which are not rationed or allocated. No items are rationed and no rationing is in sight. The only items allocated are some metals, so the effect of the amendment is to kill controls on articles consumers buy and to retain them on what most manufacturers buy.

The tally, on the roll call, was 210 to 182. Voting for it were 56 Democrats — all from the South except for Rep. Fernandez (N.M.) — and 154 Republicans. Opposing it were 141 Democrats, 40 Republicans and one independent.

The hatchet job on rent controls was the contribution of Rep. Wheeler (D. Ga.), and was written into the bill by a vote of 226 to 169.

It would end controls in critical defense areas and other communities now protected by them on Sept. 30 unless positive action is taken in the community to extend them—and the extension may not be beyond Mar. 31, 1953.

Earlier, a proposal to end rent safeguards except in critical defense areas on June 30, offered by Rep. Williams (D. Miss.), was defeated by a standing vote of 119 to 69.

A move by Rep. Barden (D. N. C.), chairman of the House Labor Committee, to kill all price and wage controls on July 31 was defeated by a 150 to 244 vote, although it had been tentatively approved in the committee of the whole.

Other amendments:

Rep. Cole (R. Kan.): Guaranteeing individual wholesalers and retailers customary markups; the Office of Price Stabilization applied markups on an industry basis.

Rep. Cole again: Abolishing the Salary Stabilization Board and transferring its functions to the Bureau of Internal Revenue, which filled a similar role during World War II.

Rep. Rogers (D. Fla.): Relieving persons selling goods or services at prices below ceilings of the obligation to report to the OPS.

Rep. Dague (R. Pa.): Protecting competitive positions established within an industry before the start of the Korean fighting in the application of price controls.

Rep. Jones (D. Mo.): Removing wage controls from the newspaper, radio, television, theatre and outdoor advertising industry, which have not been subject to price control.

Cole's attack on Arnall came during a Republican fight to block the reading of a letter from the Price Stabilizer commenting on the Kansan's amendment to allow each individual retailer and wholesaler his individual markup. Arnall said enforcement of such an amendment would be "impossible" because nobody would know what the ceilings should be.

The House, on a party vote, approved reading of the letter.

'Taking Food From Babies'

Now it's the diaper set that's hit by inflation.

On grocery shelves all over the nation, cans and jars of baby meats, cereals and other baby foods cost a penny more last week.

The boost resulted from an Office of Price Stabilization order upping ceiling prices for baby food processors. Action was taken under the industry earning standard issued by OPS under the loophole-ridden Defense Production Act.

OPS also allowed the building material industry to up prices to reflect higher freight rates. Such increases were granted earlier for more than 1000 consumer items.

"It's A Little Confusing"

'Fair Trade' Bill Hit

CIO LAST WEEK sharply attacked a pending bill in Congress to make price-boosting "fair trade" laws enforceable.

Such action, said Nathan E. Cowan, CIO Legislative Dept. director, would make "consumers the victims of a price-fixing device."

The CIO protest was directed against the House-passed McGuire Bill, which now is before the Senate. The bill sets aside a recent Supreme Court decision and makes it possible for 45 states with "fair trade" laws to re-enforce such legislation.

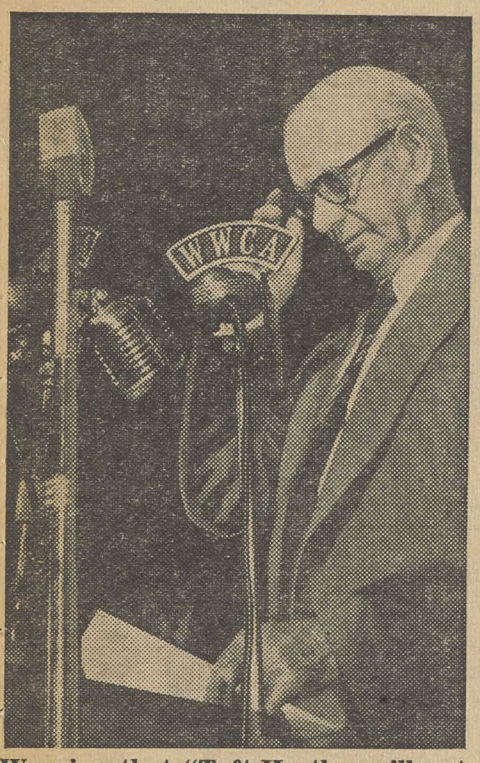
"We do not believe that resale price maintenance, which makes consumers the victims of a price-fixing device, is the right way to give small retailers the protection to which they are entitled," Cowan said in a letter to each Senator.

"The unfair and monopolistic practices of large retailers should be attacked directly under the unfair competition provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, strengthened, if necessary, to cope with the conditions as they exist."

Cowan pointed out that the Robinson-Patman Act, which the CIO endorses, permits a seller to reflect the lower cost of large-volume sales in lower prices, but that the McGuire Bill would prevent sellers from passing on to customers any part of the lower cost of large-volume operations.

"We object to legalizing this practice whereby manufacturers of identified products fix the prices at which retailers must sell them to consumers," Cowan decared. "We believe that competition between retailers, as well as between manufacturers, should not be stifled but should be encouraged."

'Taft-Hartley Won't Make Steel'



Warning that "Taft-Hartley will not manufacture steel" is voiced by USA-CIO Pres. Philip Murray at Gary.

Old timers of the steel industry, retired workers now enjoying pensions won by the USA-CIO in 1949 strike, filled first rows at strike rally of 8000 steelworkers in Gary, Ind., Memorial Auditorium. Old timers cupped ears to hear Philip Murray, cheered when he blasted the steel companies.

"We as free Americans will not work under a Taft-Hartley injunction."

That's what signs and banners proclaimed as 8000 striking CIO Steelworkers jammed the Municipal Auditorium in Gary, Ind., one of the nation's big steel centers.

They cheered as Philip Murray, president of the steel union, said:

"Over on Capitol Hill, attempts are being made to suppress organized labor in the United States.

"Now they seek imposition of the infamous Taft-Hartley Act.

"Taft-Hartley will not manufacture steel."

But the Dixiegops on Capitol Hill went full speed ahead on their efforts to break the four-week-long strike of the USA-CIO and force steel production through court injunctions.

The House joined the Senate in voting a "request" that President Truman move for a T-H anti-strike injunction against the Steelworkers.

The vote came in the midst of general assault on labor and consumers as the House butchered the Defense Production Act. Democratic Leader McCormack (Mass.) described the Dixiegop majority as "drunk with power."

While voting to wipe out all price controls (see opposite page), the House took these two actions aimed at labor:

1. Approved the amendment by Rep. Smith, Virginia, labor-hater, "requesting" T-H action against the steel union—a rider similar to the Byrd amendment adopted 49 to 30 by the Senate. The House vote, in committee of the whole, was 190 to 138; the roll call count was 228 to 164.

2. Adopted 256 to 138 a rider by Rep. Lucas (D. Tex.) abolishing the present three-party Wage Stabilization Board and setting up a new agency dominated by public members and stripped of authority to handle wage disputes.

There was no immediate comment from Truman on the congressional "request," but an aide said there was no change in the President's position that T-H was purely permissive and, while he was considering its use, Congress could not force him to invoke an anti-strike injunction.

Quick To Oblige

The congressional T-H action was just what the big steel companies ordered.

Ten days ago, according to daily press reports last week, U. S. Steel and other of the "big six" firms had vetoed a contract settlement reached by the USA-CIO with Bethlehem—the number two steel producer.

The agreement reached by top union officials with Bethlehem included a modified union shop and wage provisions acceptable to both parties, it was reported. But Bethlehem had to get approval of other producers, and they turned the deal down—prefering Taft-Hartley to a contract settlement of the seven-month-long dispute.

A steel management spokesman said they were waiting for Taft-Hartley.

And the Dixiegops in Congress were quick to oblige.

Joining with Rep. Smith—the author of the permanent injunction—union receivership bill—in pushing the T-H rider to the production act were Rep. Clarence Brown (R. O.), a high Taft campaign leader, Rep. Wolcott (R. Mich.) and Rep. Arends (R. Ill.).

The anti-labor bias ruling the House was indicated in parliamentary rulings of Rep. Mills (D., Ark.), the acting speaker. He ruled that the T-H rider was in order but quickly tossed out an effort by Rep. Walter (D. Pa.) to add protection for steel workers in form of guaranteed retroactivity of the wage settlement.

And then the House went ahead to vote, ignoring the warning of Rep. Multer (D. N. Y.): "Anybody who thinks you can force the steel workers to produce more profits for the steel barons at their expense is mistaken."

While both houses of Congress now have voted for Taft-Hartley—within a few months of the 1952 elections—there were two alternative legislative proposals presented to the Senate.

The Senate Labor Committee last week approved two industry seizure bills. One, by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), was a short-range measure limited to the present steel strike, and would give President Truman authority to seize the steel mills and to raise steel workers' wages. The other, by Sen. Morse (R. Ore), would be a long-range T-H amendment and also would allow wage increases in seized industries.

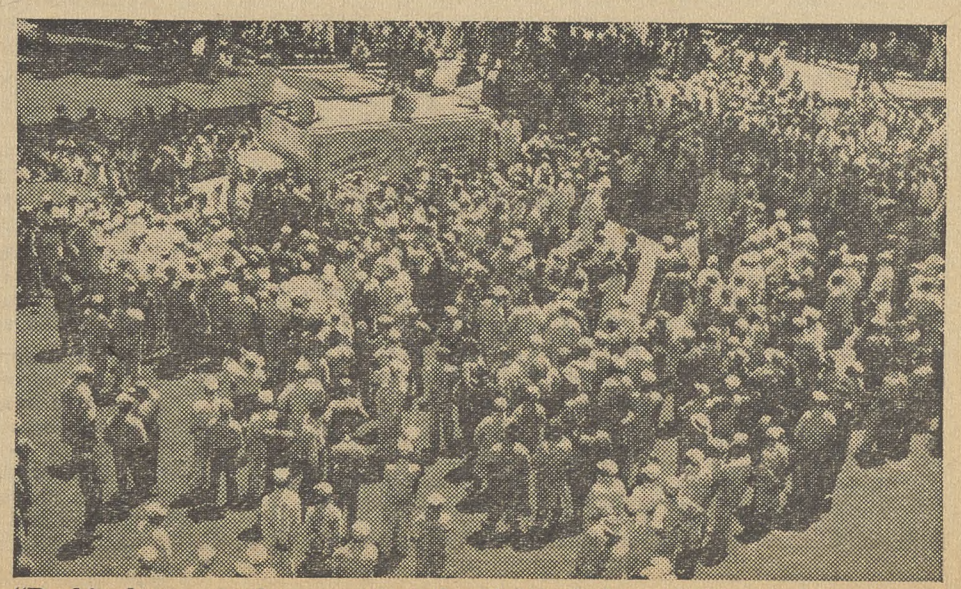
Since the Senate earlier turned down similar proposals when presented as amendments to the Defense Production Act, early action on the two bills was doubtful. The Democratic Policy Committee said it would not press for action on them at this session.

Big Steel Threat

In the steel producing centers, under agreement of the union and management, shipments began of finished steel and some raw steel needed for military purposes. Steel for such purposes as jet engines and aircraft carrier construction was shipped from plants in Pittsburgh, Chicago and Newark.

At the Gary strike rally, Murray said the "big six" steel firms had threatened to "blackball out of business" small producers reaching agreements with the union. The only new USA-CIO settlement was for 5000 workers at five Blaw-Knox Co. plants in the Pittsburgh area. (On the other hand, the company union at Weirton Steel Co. signed on the company's terms—which were the same "last offer" of the steel industry which the USA-CIO had rejected.)

Truckload of steel earmarked for U.S.S. Randolph is passed through picket line at Jones & Laughlin plant, Pittsburgh. Navy Lieut. H. A. Patterson shakes hands with James A. McLaughlin, Local 1843 president.



"Packinghouse workers support the fight of the striking steel workers," says sign on sound truck, and hundreds of UPWA-CIO members at Swift's turn out for rally in Chicago's Union Stockyards to back USA-CIO.

Lessons For November

Three times back in 1950 and '51, Congress "struck out" on the question of inflation—and all of the American people have paid the price for what the lawmakers did and did not do in the form of ever higher prices and lower living standards.

A month ago, the Senate "struck out" again, voting to weaken further the Defense Production Act.

Last week the House Dixiegop coalition—"drunk with power," in the words of one lawmaker—was "striking out" all over the lot.

On the one hand, it gleefully joined with the Senate in demanding that the CIO Steelworkers' strike be broken by Taft-Hartley.

Then the House voted blindly to kill price and rent controls while keeping wage controls—a contemptuous fraud against workers and consumers.

These were acts of total irresponsibility at a time when the cost-of-living is at an all-time high, when factory workers' wages are $13.79 a week below a modest family budget and when still more profit increases for business are predicted.

What happened last week in the House under the Dixiecrat-GOP alliance was well described by Rep. Bolling (D. Mo.) as "a case of the most backward part of the Democratic donkey leading the whole Republican elephant around by the nose."

What happened last week in the House is a lesson for November—another demonstration that politics are a bread-and-butter matter for American workers.

By the way, have you registered and given your buck to PAC?

Crystal Ball Dept.

It's pretty banal, these days, to describe anything as "significant." But no other word can reasonably be applied to the report of the President's Materials Policy Commission.

It is obvious, of course, that even a country blessed with the natural resources of the United States hasn't all the raw materials it once had. It isn't so generally realized that we have been using them at such a rate that we now are a deficit nation, with use out-stripping production.

That is what the Materials Policy Commission concluded after 18 months of study and analysis. Its documentation for such a conclusion is impressive.

The implication for the American worker is apparent: Our vaunted standard of living, the highest in the world, is in danger; so is our security. If employment, living standards and security are to be maintained, more and more of our raw materials will have to be imported.

There is no need to be panic-stricken, but there is definite need, as the commission asserted, for "serious concern." The commission proposed conservation of our own resources and the coordinated development and use of all raw materials by all free nations, a not unreasonable suggestion despite the difficulties involved.

But one thing is certain. Long before such a problem becomes effective—in fact, from the very first day it is subjected to serious discussion—it is absolutely imperative that the spokesmen of American working men and women have a full voice in determining every last detail.

Is Labor A Commodity?

The arbiter's decision in the Bates textile case, cutting wages of 7000 workers by 7.5c an hour, is part of an effort "to drive wages down" in the industry generally, said Solomon Barkin, CIO Textile Workers research director. Highlights from his dissenting opinion as a member of the three-man arbitration board follow:

By SOLOMON BARKIN

THE WAGE CUTS ordered are inexcusable and unpardonable. The logics of the market place have again degraded workers into lifeless commodities. They are denied the benefits of the rising productivity of our industry and the nation.

They are stripped of the ordinary protection against the rising cost of living brought about by the profit hunger of the speculators, and the inflationary price policies of American business.

Must workers in our country remain easy prey to the avarice of the few? Can we allow arbitrators and employers to depress living standards and let workers remain unprotected from the inhuman forces of crass commercialism? Can we permit the government to stand by without concern while groups of workers have their living standards depressed?

This decision will not only affect the lives of the workers of a single company, but will also start a series of wage reopenings in other plants. This determination raises most fundamental questions about our economy and the public responsibility in this area.

Both workers in general and textile workers in particular, as well as the public, must condemn this decision, for it is a throwback to the earlier exploitative stage of industrialism from which this country had seemingly emerged.

This decision is a challenge to those who believe we have uprooted the belief in wage cuts as the answer to industrial problems. Instead of cooperating on a program to prevent a return to competition at the expense of labor, the board majority has resuscitated the ancient dogmas that business profits must remain supreme no matter what the cost may be.

This decision has been awarded in the face of the following facts:

1. The wages of American workers are continuing to rise. Daily, new agreements providing for substantial wage increases are being announced.

2. The wage reductions ordered by the majority members cut down increases designed specifically and deliberately to offset the rise in the cost of living.

3. The company has enjoyed substantial profits. The stockholders received in the period from 1946 through 1951 dividends of $124.13 per $100 share in 1945. The company's net worth at the beginning of 1952 was $24 million higher than at the beginning of 1946. It earned 46c profit per each man hour worked in 1951. The company has been enjoying fabulous prosperity.

This decision reflects the determination of northern capital, particularly as evidenced in this industry but not restricted to it, to drive wages down and to restrain the growth in the workers' living standards and workers' well-being.

This decision affects a Maine company, but the financial interests controlling this company have large holdings in other textile plants located throughout the north and south. For it must be noted that more than half of the southern textile industry and large sectors of other industries in that region are dominated by Boston, New York and other northern financial powers. They had it in their power to establish wage parity between their northern and southern mills as other industries, such as the automotive, synthetic yarn, chemical and others, have done.

The tragedy of this decision becomes particularly manifest against the background of current congressional deliberations on the Defense Production Act. Congress is writing into the law every form of price protection to producers. Industry's rights to tax benefits for expansion in textile capacity are being extended at a time when capacity is already more than plentiful.

This arbitration decision stems from an absolete and outdated economic philosophy. Competition cannot and must not be conducted at the workers' expense. We are in an international conflict to maintain the dignity of man. If our economic market forces challenge this dignity and our faith in constant progress, we must provide the underpinnings which will assure it. The workers should not be asked to bear the cost of competitive forces.

Facts On '52—

'To Live At Peace In A World Of Peace'

"TO LIVE at peace in a world of peace." That's the basic goal of America's foreign policy, the CIO-PAC says in its latest campaign pamphlet, "'52 Facts on Foreign Policy."

Pointing out that we've come a long way from the days when ocean barriers appeared to protect us, the PAC report warned that "in the world of today there is no event that threatens the peace of the world that does not concern each of us."

We can't "go it alone," in these dangerous times, PAC says, for our security is threatened by aggression anywhere.

And aggression, it notes, "is an infectious disease. Unless it is quarantined and resisted it is as murderous a threat as the Black Death of the Middle Ages."

Our intimate ties with the well-being of the rest of the world is not a new development. PAC points out: "Woodrow Wilson warned 35 years ago that 'we are participants in the life of the world. What affects mankind is inevitably our affair.' Franklin Roosevelt had the same thing in mind when he said in 1937 that the United States must help 'quarantine the aggressors' of that period."

Scorching the isolationists of our day, the pamphlet notes "a political leader who pretends that the old isolationism is good enough today, because it appeared to be good enough for his grandaddy, is either a demagogue or a fool."

Discussing the Soviet threat to world peace, the PAC pamphlet notes the Reds' claim to "anti-imperialism." But it cites the record since 1945 which proves the Western democracies have voluntarily recognized the right to independence of 600 million people in the Philipines, India, Pakistan, Indonesia, Ceylon and other countries.

During that same period, the Kremlin has enslaved the countries of Poland, Czechoslovakia, Romania, Hungary, Albania and the Baltic states and threatens the independence of Yugoslavia.

The United States has resisted Soviet aggression, the PAC notes, "wherever our power made it possible—and still avoided any provocation that would invite general war."

The record of resistance began back in 1947, PAC recalls, and it cites this record:—

The Truman doctrine of 1947 declaring we would "contain" Soviet aggression and our specific help to Greece and Turkey, which kept those nations free.

The 1948 air lift which broke the Russian blockade of Berlin.

Organization of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in 1949.

Our instant reaction to the attack on South Korea, invaded by a Kremlin satallite.

Noting that "the best place for us to exercise world influence is in the United Nations," the PAC argues against yielding "to the impatient and reckless people who argue that the UN, because it has not worked perfectly, should be abandoned."

Working through the United Nations to preserve peace, the PAC observed that "our program is a hard one—to checkmate the Kremlin without allowing the outbreak of general war."

The pamphlet devotes considerable space to discussing the Korean campaign, which it charges "shortsighted men and crude politicians have tried to undermine."

"The plain fact," says PAC, "is that if the United Nations had failed to fight in Korea, the prestige of the UN and the whole Western world would have collapsed."

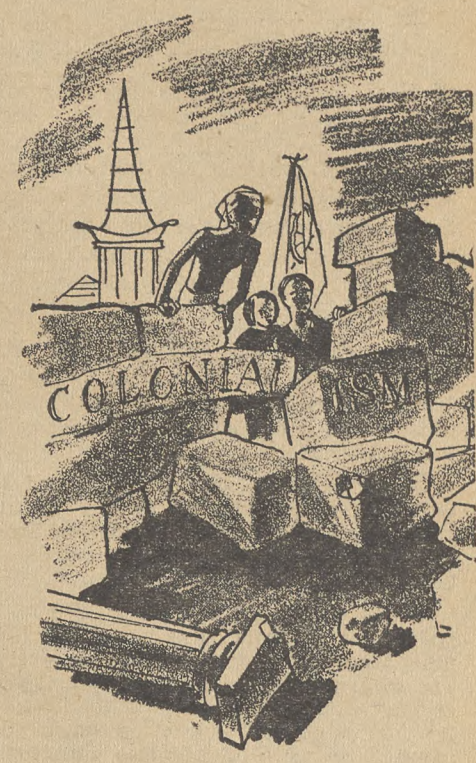
"We fought in Korea because a fight was necessary to warn the Kremlin that aggression would be resisted anywhere and at any time."

In Europe, the pamphlet recalls that "five years ago it seemed that war-weary Western Europe might fall almost without a struggle into the hands of Russia."

This is what such a catastrophe would have meant to the United States:—

- The Reds would control a population of 580 million as against 156 million in the U. S.
- They would match our steel production of 110 million tons a year.
- They would possess coal production of 930 million tons a year as against our 554 million tons.
- They would control—or force us to fight for—overseas areas producing uranium, rubber, tin, dozens of other materials that we need for defense.
- We would stand naked and alone.

But banded together with the other



Western nations into the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, PAC contends, "we can fight with a reasonable chance of survival if war is forced upon us."

Detailing the other aspects of American foreign policy, from the Marshall Plan through Point Four, in which the creative aspects of American foreign policy are expressed, the PAC notes that "we seek no conflict with the Kremlin."

But "we can never hope to return to the old isolationist ways . . . There are no shelters in which we can hide from the responsibilities that go with power," the pamphlet notes.

"We need good nerves to live at the beginning of the second half of the Twentieth Century," says PAC, "but we have reason to hope that our foreign policy will be successful."

Book Review—

Record Of How Laws Help End Bias

"EQUALITY By Statute" —which shows that you can legislate against prejudice—could not have been issued at a better time.

Various presidential candidates have taken various stands on FEPC, but they can be roughly divided into two categories—those who think that education of the people will eventually give a better break for Negro workers and those who believe that legislation is necessary to help do the job.

The author, Dr. Monroe Berger, who is assistant professor of sociology at Princeton Univ., has looked history and facts squarely in the face and has come up with this conclusion:

"We have reviewed the advances in minority status and welfare, the changing role of the Supreme Court, the operation of the New York State Law Against Discrimination, and the evidence from sociology, social psychology and psychoanalysis.

"All this indicates that law in our society is a formidable means for the elimination of group discrimination and for the establishment of conditions which discourage prejudicial attitudes.

"Law, we find, has certain potentialities in this area of human behavior. It can codify our society's loftiest ideals rather than its basest practices—that is, the legal machinery can be drawn from the support of discriminatory practices.

"This is, of course, a rather negative function, but there are others more positive. Law can withhold certain privileges from the discriminators. It can put the state's influence and power on the side of those who are discriminated against and give them more effective means for defending themselves.

"Law can also help establish those fundamental conditions of social life which encourage free association of all groups and which discourage prejudicial attitudes.

"Frequently, favorable laws can be wedges for advances in the status and welfare of groups which are made the object of unfair discrimination. In summary, law can affect our acts and, through them, our beliefs."

The burden of the book is the operation of the New York State anti-discrimination law. Dr. Berger says the law "offers the best opportunity for an appraisal of such legislation since it has been in operation the longest, has evoked widespread comment, and is administered by an agency with a budget larger than those of similar agencies in other states."

"Although the State Commission Against Discrimination has administered the law cautiously, there is no doubt by now that a measure such as the Ives-Quinn Law (which is another name for the New York act) is appropriate to achieve its end, the reduction of employment discrimination," he declared.

Only three northern states besides New York have similar laws, which proves that progress on a state-by-state basis is slow. What is needed is a Federal FEPC—now that we know from this study that law not only works but breaks down discriminatory behavior. F.R.

A Job Done... A Job To Do

"The most significant gains Negroes have made in labor unions have been in those affiliated with the Congress of Industrial Organizations," says Dr. Monroe Berger in "Equality by Statute."

"While there is some discrimination in the locals of CIO unions, no national excludes Negroes from membership or segregates Negro members . . . "

Morse Says GOP To Blame For Failure To Vote FEP

THE REPUBLICAN party, a prominent GOP leader charged last week, is responsible for the failure of Congress to adopt an FEPC law.

Sen. Morse (R., Ore.) made this charge in a television interview over Washington Station WMAL-TV.

Morse said civil rights legislation could not be adopted so long as the Senate retains the filibuster.

Responsibility for the filibuster rule, the Oregon Senator said, rests "in the first instance on my party because the stalwart, reactionary leaders of my party entered into a coalition with the southern Dixiecrat-Democrats to adopt a rule that makes it practically impossible to stop a filibuster in the Senate of the United States."

His remarks were made during the course of a TV film presented by the CIO and the CIO Political Action Committee, entitled "Joe Davis, American."

The film tells the story of a Negro university graduate who is unable to get work for which he is trained. Besides being presented in Washington, the film will be shown in Pittsburgh, Dayton, Cincinnati and other cities.

Morse, interviewed by Willard Shelton, Washington correspondent, also knocked down the notion that FEPC legislation can reasonably be left to the states.

"I am rather amused these days," he said, "to hear some of the Taft forces in the national campaign talking about the law of New York and at the same time, out of the other side of their mouths, talk about a voluntary FEPC law, overlooking the fact, of course, that the New York law is a compulsory law.

"Now, of course, if the states of the country would pass a law such as the New York law or a law such as the Oregon law, which is modeled after the New York law, the problem would be solved.

"But it is hopeless to expect those states in which the most serious cases of race discrimination exist to clean their own house and we are here dealing with what I insist is a constitutional right . . . a constitutional right of equality of citizenship and if you are going to have that you are going to have to face it as a national problem.

"Therefore, I intend to continue to support a national FEPC law."

'A Strike Today Ain't What It Used T

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

"THIS IS positively the paintin'est town you ever saw," said a worker at local strike headquarters of the CIO United Steelworkers in Bethlehem, Pa.

"Soon as I get home after puttin' in my four-hour picket duty, the wife gives me the eye, so I pick up the brush and paint bucket and get goin' on the porch where I left off. I've painted everything but the tail on the cat."

"Yeh, with all this spit and polish, the town is goin' to look like a bloomin' battleship by the time the strike is over," said a grinder who put in a hitch in the Navy in World War II.

"A strike today ain't what it used to be," said a white-haired drawer in the mills who has worked at Bethlehem Steel for 26 years and has vivid memories of blood and thunder strikes of the past.

"I was just a kid in the big 1910 AFL strike, but my father was working in the mills then and went out with the others. The town was under martial law and you couldn't stand on the sidewalk talkin' to a few fellows without a state cop shovin' you along. They were mighty free with their clubs too and would just as soon bust your skull as look at you.

"Those Cossacks would ride right up on the sidewalks, roarin' and cussin'. There was a lot of shootin' too and plenty were dragged off to jail, includin' my father. They beat him up bad. The strike lasted for months, but was broken finally. The men had to go back to the mills like whipped dogs."

"HECK, they tried the rough stuff in the 1941 strike, for that matter," put in a tall, husky worker who said he was a heater with more than 25 years' service at Bethlehem. He has two sons in the Army, one in Korea.

"The mayor ordered the city cops to break up the picket line and they tried to run us down with police cars and threw tear gas at us. And the Governor sent in the state police then too.

"They not only clubbed the men but struck women and children, and arrested everybody in sight. You weren't ever sure when you walked the picket line that you'd get home that night with a whole skin."

"Don't forget one little difference though," broke in the white-haired drawer. "The '41 strike only lasted four days—and we won it!"

"Don't remind me!" growled the heater. "All we do in this danged strike is wait and wait some more. Go on strike, go back to work; go on strike, off again, on again. It's been going like that for months. Enough to drive a man nuts."

"It might be worse," said the drawer. "What if they pull a Taft-Hartley injunction against us, and we're ordered to wait 80 days more before we can strike again?"

"They might at that," said the heater bitterly. "More waitin'—what a rat race."

"Who says we'd go back?" said the grinder.

"That would depend on what Phil Murray told us to do," said the heater. "If he said to go back, we'd go—and if he said stay out, we'd stay." (Last week, Murray said: "Taft-Hartley will not manufacture steel.")

That's right," said the drawer. "Sure is," agreed the grinder.

Waiting around week after week for a settlement of the big strike is indeed getting on the nerves of many of the 17,000 members of the USA-CIO employed at the Bethlehem Steel Corp., at Bethlehem, Pa. The hundreds of thousands of union workers in the other steel plants throughout the country must feel somewhat the same.

The present strike, which finally got going for good June 2, after the U. S. Supreme Court declared the President's seizure of the mills was unconstitutional, was starting its third week when I visited local strike headquarters at 40 West Broad St. in Bethlehem.

Headquarters of USA-CIO District 9, which covers 11 counties in eastern Pennsylvania and two in New Jersey, are also in Bethlehem. District Dir. C. B. Newell's offices are a block away in the Bethlehem Trust Bldg., at Broad and Main, but he doesn't have a chance to spend much time there these days.

You'll find him day or night at the big union hall up the street where Bethlehem Steel's three big locals carry on their activities, now devoted solely to the strike.

It's easy to spot Newell among the strikers that crowd the hall by his gay colored sport shirt. You may catch sight of him listening closely to the remarks of a group of strikers, or walking slowly toward the office to take a phone call, trailed by one or more men still talking to him; or sitting in a meeting. But whatever he is doing, Newell, a dark-haired, good-looking man, always looks calm, cool and unruffled.

He needs to be, for running a strike, even one as peaceful as the present strike is, presents continuous problems and headaches. There's always some kind of bug getting into the strike machinery, which takes time and patience to remove.

A picket line may kick up a rumpus as to whom should be allowed to pass through on maintenance work. The union has agreed to permit those employes needed for work essential to keeping the steel mills in condition to continue on the job. But a question may come up as to what is or isn't essential. The Strike Committee was in session all night over a beef on that score when I was there.

SOME 600 were on maintenance jobs, Newell said. The union members authorized to do such work were examined both by the union and the company and the distribution of jobs agreed upon jointly.

One important operation permitted to continue "at slow bell," Newell said, was the coke works. Gas supplied by the Bethlehem works is used by some 400,000 people in the Lehigh Valley area, including the towns of Bethlehem, Allentown, Quakertown, Easton and others.

The major part of the Strike Committee's responsibilities has to do with relief and welfare activities, as well as assignments to picket duty. The 45-man committee which runs the strike is made up of the executive officers of the three big Bethlehem locals plus grievance committee members, and includes Newell and two of his staff.

A strike, like an army, travels on its stomach, and seeing that none of the strikers or their families go hungry, takes a lot of work and planning.

Picketing, although mostly a routine affair conducted at five assigned gates w out opposition from company or city thorities, is tied into the relief setup being made compulsory for relief bene No picket duty, no relief—except exemptions made for good cause.

From early morning until night steady stream of men climbed consta up the tall flight of winding marble st leading to strike headquarters, to regi for picket duty and other assignments to get a meal or refreshments after th come off the picket line; or to be in viewed for any needed welfare assista

Breakfast was served daily five to at a big white oilcloth-covered table in large room off the main hall, and f 11:30 a.m. until midnight, sandwiches, and coffee were available.

WHEN supplies permitted, a full ner was also served once a day. union's little truck pulling up in fron strike headquarters to bring in fresh plies was a common sight.

The strikers' praise of the union c and their crew of workers in the crow little kitchen was fulsome.

The former Navy cooks, all Bethle strikers, were on kitchen duty when I there. Carl Mantell said he'd been ta to cook by the chef of a famous New hotel who was with him in the Navy. I tell has worked for Bethlehem Stee 22 years, and has cooked for three strikes.

Then there was Calvert Unangst, and Tony Morganelli, both with two y Navy service and six years' work re at Bethlehem Steel. Strike Aid Curbed In Pennsylvania

Here's the result of state and big business domination of unemployment compensation and relief agencies:

Pennsylvania is trying to bring the old English "poor laws" up to date in an effort to deny assistance to striking CIO Steelworkers.

The State Public Assistance Dept. in Harrisburg last week announced that all steel workers, or others idled by the steel strike who apply for relief first must dispose of any autos, TV sets, war bonds, or life insurance.

All of these were classed as "luxury items" by Robert P. Wray, the state's deputy secretary of public assistance. He said the eligibility ruling "applies to all who apply for relief regardless of whether they are steel strikers, those affected by the steel strike or other needy."

Wray also said the state will get liens against all steel workers owning or buying homes, to regain later such relief as the state pays.

CSC Mobilizes Steel Strike Aid

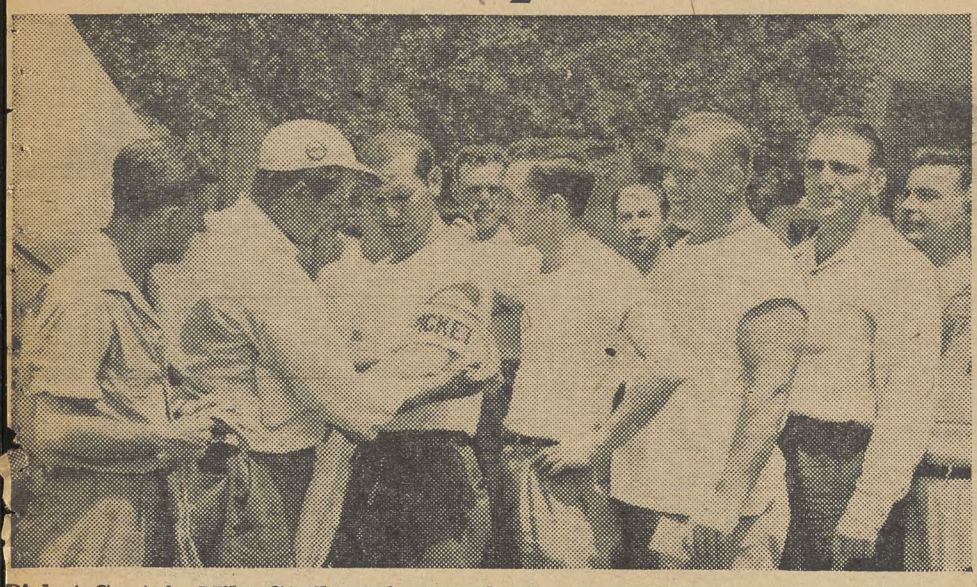
CIO Community Services Committ throughout the nation are organizing give striking steel workers "the most p sonal help of all—food, medical attent shelter and clothing for their families."

Leo Perlis, CIO-CSC national direc said steel strike assistance is the comm tee's major present task.

He told the CIO-CSC training insti at Bear Mountain, N.Y., that strike "resources exist in both the voluntary public agencies which we support by contributions and taxes. It is up to C CSC representatives to marshal those sources in support of the Steelworkers."

After picket duty, strikers chew the fat and drink coffee.

Be'—Story Of A Steel Town On Strike



Picket Captain Mike Stofko tying armbands on pickets.

Union Chef Carl Mantell (left) and KP crew put in long hours in kitchen.

treasurer of the strike fund, a big dark-haired Irishman with a kindly face, took me down in the basement to show me the grocery relief supplies on hand for those who needed them.

A number of big bags already filled stood ready for distribution in a room piled high with canned and packaged groceries. Each relief bag, he said contained 10 lbs. of potatoes, 5 lbs. onions, 2 lbs. sugar, 2 cans evaporated milk, one pound package each of coffee, pancake flour, kidney beans, and one can each of pork and beans, peas, corn and beets.

Small families get one bag, large families are given two.

The union buys the supplies from a friendly wholesaler who delivers them in a truck without a name on it to avoid antagonism of local retail groceries whose owners feel that it takes business away from them to give out food supplies to strikers.

Some local groceries extend credit to families during the strike, permitting them to run up a big bill to be paid off in installments later when the men go back to work. This may cause hardship, particularly to large families who may have to skimp on current expenses to pay the long overdue bill.

MAHONEY understands problems of large families in a steel town, for he was the youngest of 18 children. He was born in Bethlehem 43 years ago of parents both born in Ireland.

He also has a 24-year service record at Bethlehem Steel and has been through four strikes there, beginning with 1941 and continuing through those in 1946, 1949 and now 1952. Hugh speaks with much pride of his father, "Big Tim" Mahoney, now dead, who was a policeman when the 1910 strike took place, and who turned in his badge rather than take action against the strikers.

One of the busiest men in the day-and-night rush of strike activities, Mahoney scarcely has time to sleep. The day I talked to him, he'd been up all the previous night. When urged to go home and go to bed, Mahoney just grinned and said, "I can take it." His job in the plant was much harder, he implied. He is a heater and works under terrifically high temperatures.

BESIDES his official strike job, Mahoney also has his duties as financial secretary of the big Local 2598 with some 6000 members to take care of, as well as other union offices he holds.

Another very busy man who has little time to sleep is John Posivak, chairman of the 11-man strike relief committee. Born in Bethlehem 40 years ago, Posivak worked as a hooker in Bethlehem Steel's rolling mills for eight years. Since 1943 he has been a member of the union's District 9 staff, and is at present chairman of the Political Action Committee. His union activity covers 22 years.

Daily from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Posivak and other members of the relief committee interview strikers registering for relief at the union hall. Then there are long conferences with city, county and state relief officials; talks with local bankers, savings and loan people, landlords and others concerned with financial obligations of the strikers, such as time payments on autos, furniture, homes, etc.

Posivak said the union was getting good cooperation from all of these for the most part. So far, landlords, stores, banks and loan companies, are waiting for the end of the strike before pressing for payments.

RELIEF authorities are cooperating with the union in handling cases of dire need. To expedite relief, a plan was drawn up at a meeting between union officials and representatives of the State Dept. of Public Assistance for the counties of Northampton (where Bethlehem is located), Lehigh, Monroe and Carbon, under which applicants for relief are given preliminary interviews at union headquarters.

(The fact that a large proportion of the workers at the Bethlehem Steel plant do not live in Bethlehem but are scattered in as many as 196 towns in a radius of 50 miles or more, complicates the relief problem as well as other union activities.)

Posivak and his committee listen to all kinds of troubles in the course of interviewing applicants for relief. Emergencies are bound to occur when 17,000 workers stop getting their paychecks. Some of the things that arise would have happened anyway, but no money coming in, makes a crisis worse.

There was the tense young truck driver for instance, with 16 years' work record at Bethlehem Steel, who came in for an interview while I was talking with Posivak. His wife was in the hospital for a serious kidney operation, and he had an 8½-month-old baby girl at home to look after.

Chief worry of most of the strikers interviewed, however, Posivak said, was about food for their kids—particularly those with large families and low wage rates, (Minimum hourly pay, for laborers, is $1.36.)

So far there have been no evictions for failure to pay rent, Posivak said. If such cases did arise, the relief committee would try to reason with the landlord, and if genuine hardship was involved, pay the rent.

Traditionally in the labor movement, the picket line has been the heart and soul of a strike. Many a struggle for higher wages or union recognition has been won or lost on the picketline.

Keeping scabs from going to work when a boss tries to open a plant on strike becomes a matter of vital importance—even a matter of life and death in some instances where armed force to break the strike is used.

This doesn't apply in the present steel strike. No attempts to open the mills or sneak scabs in are being made. Steel plants are shut down and unused gates locked. No smoke arises from the long line of chimneys that stretch for miles along the highway leading into Bethlehem from the south.

THE battlefront has been switched from the picket line to smoke-filled offices in Washington, New York and Pittsburgh, where government, union and company officials argue long and heatedly over the merits of the union's case—and the price of steel.

This has taken the zip out of the picket line. Yet the union does think it important to continue picketing, for even in its present subdued form, the picket line is a rallying point and a cohesive force that binds the workers more closely together. Also something unexpected might arise.

"You never can be sure what may happen," said a cautious striker.

In Bethlehem, the USA-CIO Locals maintain a regular schedule of four-hour picketing shifts from 7 a.m. to 11 p.m., at five of the plant's main gates. In addition there is a night shift on from 11 p.m. to 7 a.m.

Every striker—unless excused for good reason—is supposed to picket two four-hour shifts a week. His relief benefits depend upon his picketing activities. Strikers go to union headquarters on Broad Street for their picket assignments, and picket captains are on duty at each gate.

MIKE STOFKO, whom I met at strike headquarters, was a picket captain, and clearly a man for the job. In his yellow shirt and canvas cap tilted rakishly over his sunburnt red, good-natured face. Mike was a colorful character. Full of energy and ready for any job that came up, he bustled around busily everywhere. Every strike brings out workers like Mike. They are needed.

Like so many other active unionists I talked to, Mike too was born in Bethlehem. He didn't look old enough for it, but he said he'd worked 22 years at the plant.

Ready for the worst, but hoping for the best, the strikers at Bethlehem are all waiting expectantly for the victorious end of the strike, and for the decision that will give them a substantial wage increase, the union shop and other long overdue improvements in the contract.

And while they've been waiting, they have worked out and built up a strong and effective program of activities which illustrates once again the capabilities, intelligence and zeal that lie waiting for a chance among rank and file workers.

Now A World War Trip Can Be Told

Hugh Mahoney, one of the strike leaders at Bethlehem Steel was one of four unionists who left the United States in October 1945 for a tour of war plants and battle fronts in Europe on a trip arranged by the Office of War Information and the British government.

Mahoney said the four men were asked to find out at first hand what concealed gripes the GI's had that they had no chance or inclination to tell their officers. This was the first group authorized to undertake such a mission.

Now it can be told, Mahoney said, that the unionists had a secret meeting with prominent government officials at the White House during the New Year holiday just after their return from Europe, and were able to tell about some important things bothering our soldiers.

As an instance, Mahoney said, they told of some GI complaints about a tank that needed heavier armored protection to stop shells. As a result of this disclosure, steps were taken promptly to cut through military red tape and order this change in the tank's construction made at once.

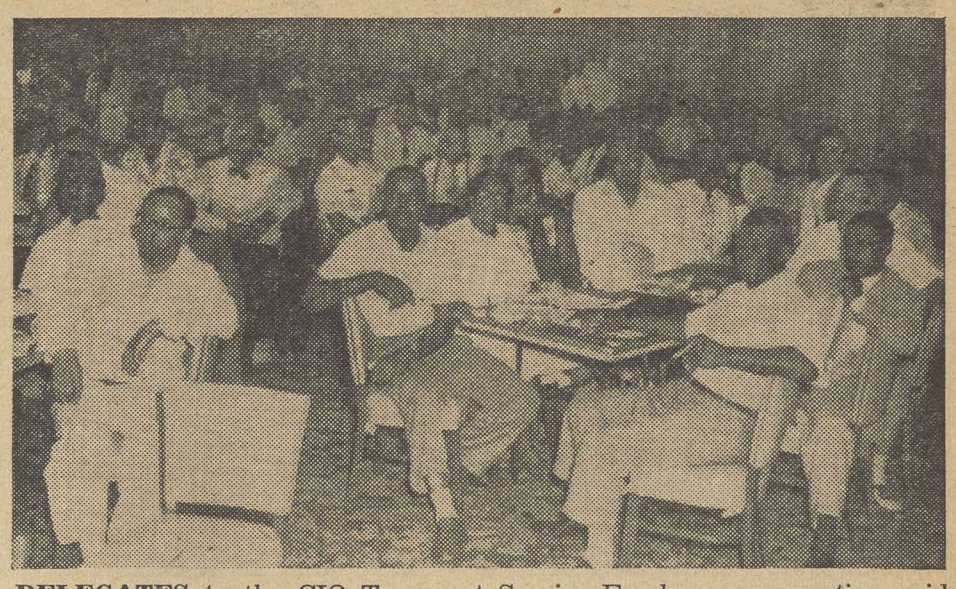
UTSE Tells Gains, Builds For More In Future

MARK 10 YEARS IN CIO: These delegates to the CIO Transport Service Employees convention at Cincinnati last week attended the convention of the union 10 years ago when CIO affiliation was voted. In the front row, beginning second from the left are UTSE Secy.-Treas. Eugene E. Frazier, Pres. Williard S. Townsend, Pres. J. P. Covington; second from right, second row, George L-P Weaver, an assistant to Townsend.



DELEGATES to the CIO Transport Service Employees convention paid close attention to a speaker despite the sweltering heat. The convention marked the 15th anniversary of the union, including the meeting out of which the union grew. The first meeting was called by Willard S. Townsend, who has been the head of the union ever since it was organized at its first convention in Chicago.

By FRED ROSS

THE CIO United Transport Service Employees convention last week marked two anniversaries, took a good, steady look at its past, found it good and geared itself to press on for even greater achievements.

During the 15 years from the time of the Chicago meeting which culminated a year later in the organization of UTSE, the organization has grown from a handful of red caps to a union 18,000 strong, including not only red caps but dining car employes, Pullman laundry workers, other station employes, fertilizer and tobacco workers, and skycaps.

The convention also marked the tenth anniversary of the decision of UTSE to join CIO. This action was taken at the 1942 convention held in the very same Hotel Manse, Cincinnati, where the union met last week.

During its 15 years of struggle, UTSE-CIO has seen the renumeration of red caps increase from the uncertainty of tip payments to a base pay of $1.25 an hour—with many of them receiving higher pay — and their recognition as regular employes of the railroads.

UTSE also has improved the wages and working conditions of other workers it represents—while taking the forefront in the fight for civil rights.

In his report to the convention—the eighth biennial convention—UTSE Pres. Willard S. Townsend reported outstanding gains made since the 1949 convention.

UTSE won in eight elections in miscellaneous plants in North Carolian and Florida.

Other UTSE advances in the past two years included certification by the National Mediation Board of the union as representative of the red caps of the International-Great Northern Railroad at San Antonio and Palestine, Tex., the organization of the carmen, coach cleaners and helpers at the Savannah Union Station by defeating the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, and organization of employes at seven miscellaneous plants in North Carolina.

TOWNSEND urged further advances in the organizing and legislative fields, which were endorsed in resolutions adopted by the convention.

Officers were elected unanimously. Townsend and Eugene E. Frazier were re-elected president and secretary-treasurer respectively. J. P. Covington was chosen again as vice president.

Harold D. Snell, an assistant to Townsend, was elected a vice president to succeed John L. Yancey, who was not a candidate for re-election. Richard Hamme, UTSE southern regional director, was elected to the executive board, replacing Cecil Patrick who did not seek re-election. John Grinage was elected to fill a post on the enlarged board. All other board members were re-elected.

Earl W. Davis, a former vice president, was elected to the board of trustees.

The convention hailed improvements in the Railroad Retirement Act, but called for increasing the minimum monthly pension to $100, lowering the age requirement to 60 with employes receiving full benefits after 30 years of service and increasing the benefit formula by 25%.

Another resolution lauded improvements in the Railroad Insurance Act but urged boosting the benefits by 25%.

The convention adopted a strong civil rights resolution which called for repeal of the Wherry Amendment to the Senate rules which permits a filibustering minority to prevent enactment of civil rights legislation.

The resolution also called for the passage by Congress and state legislatures of FEPC and other civil rights measures, and the immediate establishment by Presidential order of a FEPC with enforcement powers.

The delegates adopted a new constitution, which more clearly defines the duties of the President, cuts the vice presidents from three to two, and increases the board members from seven to eight.

ANOTHER provides that in in the future the international officers shall be elected every four years, instead of every two years.

Speakers stressed that in this "year of decision" UTSE delegates and other CIO members should participate more intelligently and actively in political action.

Jack Kroll, CIO-PAC director and president of the Ohio CIO Council, predicted that 70 to 80% of the resolutions that the convention would adopt would call for legislation on the city, state or national level.

He urged the delegates to know the legislative records of their representatives, senators and state lawmakers.

"We are not getting (information on political issues) down to the rank and file members," Kroll said. He urged the delegates to distribute PAC literature and to learn the issues themselves so that when they ask for PAC bucks they can explain why the money is being collected.

Kroll said they should not be like the steward, who, when asked why he was asking for PAC bucks, replied, "Damned if I know."

R. J. Thomas, assistant CIO director of organization, said that the CIO Steelworkers are engaged in a "political fight" in their efforts to get the Wage Stabilization Board recommendations.

He said that the refusal of steel companies to grant the steel union the WSB recommendations was part of the industry's fight "to convince the American people that nothing will operate unless their man is running things in Washington."

Other speakers included Cincinnati Councilman Theodore Berry, who last week introduced a resolution asking that a three-man committee investigate racial discrimination at Coney Island, a Cincinnati amusement park. Pres. August Scholle of the Michigan CIO also spoke.

Aid Pledged To Steel Strikers

The UTSE convention resolved: "If the odious Taft-Hartley Act is invoked to send the Steelworkers back to work, all of our locals will continue to render such aid to the USA-CIO as shall be required."

Georgia U. Sued By Negro To Gain Law School Study

Horace T. Ward, Negro graduate of Morehouse College and Atlanta Univ., filed suit in federal court in Atlanta last week to force the Univ. of Georgia to admit him to its Law School.

Ward has been trying to get into the Law School since October, 1950. He charged he was denied the right to study there "solely on account of . . . race and color," and claimed such a stand violates the 14th Amendment to the Constitution.

Gov. Herman Talmadge, a diehard "white supremacy" advocate, has ordered a last-ditch fight by the State against the suit. Should Ward win, all funds for the university would automatically be cut off under an amendment to the last appropriations act effective when a court of final jurisdiction rules out segregation in any part of the university system.

No Compromise On Fair Deal, Carey Tells UTSE

"THE workers of America . . . will not return to the womb of reaction and conservatism" when they vote in the 1952 elections, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey told the UTSE convention.

"We cannot separate civil rights from the issue of peace in this age of revolution," said Carey, who is also president of the CIO Electrical workers.

"The unrest in the Far East, in Africa, is economic, political and ideological. It is a revolution against misery, poverty, and foreign domination. It requires constant re-examination of our foreign and domestic policies.

"For example, we have learned that whatever part of the world that we hope to aid in the development of a sound military program, we must also simultaneously have a positive and creative social program. Our foreign policy must be sensitive to the unrest of the Far East and Africa.

"We must realize that we cannot hope to win the loyalties and friendships of these people and at the same time lend support and comfort to outdated colonialism.

"We must also drive home to the politicians that our racial policies here at home have an impact on our foreign policy in Asia and Africa. We cannot convince peoples of this part of the world of our friendship and yet deny our colored neighbor here at home the protection and opportunities of a domestic society.

"We Americans are traditionally a free and hopeful people. I cannot and will not accept that we are in the grip of circumstances over which we have no control.

"Therefore, the American workers must serve notice on our political parties that we will not be satisfied with, nor countenance, compromising with programs that have contributed to our prosperity and well-being over the last 20 years.

"In the last five Presidential elections the American people have demonstrated their unequivocal belief in a liberal and progressive program."

Carey paid tribute to the contribution of UTSE to the CIO.

He lauded UTSE Pres. Willard S. Townsend for the suggestion that CIO set up the Committee to Abolish Discrimination, which CIO Pres. Philip Murray accepted enthusiastically. Carey is chairman of the committee, Townsend is secretary, and George L-P Weaver is director. Weaver is also an assistant to Townsend.

Carey also praised Townsend for his services on several international assignments, and Weaver who served as assistant to the Administrator of the National Security Resources Board and as Assistant to the RFC Administrator.

Carey also lauded Vice Pres. Earl Davis and Vice Pres. J. P. Covington, Henry White of Tennessee, and other UTSE leaders for their work in behalf of CIO.

BACK TO SCHOOL.—The first labor institute conducted by the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers brought this large group of delegates, instructors and guests to Pennsylvania State College. CIO was represented at the school by R. J. Thomas, assistant director of organization, while UGCCW Pres. Martin Wagner presented certificates to students. Joseph R. Joy, union vice president and director of education and research, was in charge of arrangements with Penn State officials. Diplomas were presented to more than 100 "graduates."

CIO Brewers Gain In St. Louis Fight

TIME AND AGAIN the CIO Brewery Workers have battled for the principle of organizing "everybody from the cellar to the roof."

The majority of the 6000 workers in the big brewing center of St. Louis is backing the CIO union in its current effort to uphold this principle against AFL Teamsters raiding tactics.

According to BW-CIO Pres. Karl F. Feller, the struggle began last April when management of the Anheuser-Busch (Budweiser) brewery at Newark, N. J., precipitated a strike by its inability to say anything but "no" to Local 2's contract demands.

With the aid of the New York City and the New York State and New Jersey CIO Councils, the union was able to stop the flow of beer into the taverns of the area, but the beverage was shipped from the other Budweiser plant in St. Louis.

Nothing could be done—if the Newark strike was to be effective—but to shut down the St. Louis brewery. With the consent of Robert Lewis, business agent and secretary of Brewers' Local 6 and chairman of the St. Louis Joint Board, pickets from Local 2 arrived at the St. Louis brewery.

Nobody went through the picket line, but Lewis, who had been secretly dickering with the Teamsters for affiliating the five St. Louis locals with the AFL union, ordered the men not to respect the picket line.

However, he agreed to call a meeting of Local 6 to hear both sides of the story. He allowed Feller to speak without the privilege of rebuttal. Lewis gained the support of the meeting by misrepresenting the dispute as a contest between the BW international offices and the AFL. The international BW-CIO board ordered Local 2 pickets to leave St. Louis.

With the Local 2 strikers holding firm with the backing of the CIO movement in New Jersey, Anheuser-Busch threw in the sponge at Newark, granting a 10c an hour wage increase, which with another 5c an hour boost approved by the Wage Stabilization Board, brought the scale up from $1.95 an hour to $2.10.

That was important, but even more important was that BW-CIO had beaten back another Teamster raid against industrial unionism as it had been doing—except for a short interval of peace—since 1900 when the AFL gave the Teamsters their first charter.

The 200-man Engineers Local 246 in St. Louis has signed authorization cards to have the BW-CIO continue to represent them, and the Bottlers' Local 187—3000 strong—voted unanimously as an overflow meeting to remain loyal to BW-CIO.

ALTHOUGH Brewers Local 6 voted to join the Teamsters, letters from members to BW international office in Cincinnati report widespread dissatisfaction with the Lewis-engineered decision. There is also a strong possibility that two smaller locals—Firemen's Local 279 and Mill Workers Local 259—will remain loyal to BW-CIO.

Another important result of the Teamsters' tactics is that Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, and Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald of the Canadian Congress of Labor have alerted their regional offices to report all efforts of the AFL union to raid Brewery Workers throughout the United States and Canada.

Reports from the regional officers to BW headquarters indicate the raids have failed.

BW is just beginning to fight. It has called a special convention at the Sinton Hotel, Cincinnati, July 14-18, to map out an aggressive campaign in behalf of "organizing everybody from the celler to the roof."

Bittner Honored By Library Gift

The memory of Van A. Bittner has been honored by the Johnstown, Pa., CIO Council, with a donation of funds to buy books for the county free library.

'Horsemeat-leggers' Found Guilty In Chicago Scandal

"HORSEMEAT-leggers," the 1952 version of the bootlegger of prohibition days, won't be tolerated in the Chicago area.

That was the verdict of a federal jury, which last week found two Oak Park, Ill., firms and three individuals guilty—the first convictions in the Illinois horsemeat scandals. The three defendants are also under indictment in several Illinois counties for violation of local laws.

The federal jury found the defendants guilty of relabeling federally-inspected horsemeat as "chucks" or "shanks," to be sold as beef.

Convicted were the K & S Dog Food, Metropolitan Distributing Co., Charles C. Kocmond, Matt Klaersch and Robert Kletz.

Unsuspecting consumers, buying meat labeled "chuck" or "shank," would believe they were getting beef. Instead they would be getting—at beef prices—a product the defendants had purchased for approximately 10c a pound.

Each defendant was convicted on one count. Maximum penalties that could be imposed are fines of $1000 for the firms and jail sentences of one year and fines of $1000 for the individuals.

TWU Warns Of Strike For 40-Hour Week On Buses

NEW YORK CITY faces a possible strike by CIO Transport Workers unless it provides "satisfactory" protection for nearly 9000 bus drivers.

That warning was made last week by Michael Quill, TWU president, in demanding a meeting with Mayor Vincent R. Impellitteri and the city Board of Estimate.

This is the situation:

On Juy 1, city-owned transportation systems go on a 40-hour week. The TWU threatens to strike nine private bus lines, employing 8000 workers unless these workers also receive a 40-hour week.

Also on July 1, the city proposes to sell five East Side bus lines, employing some 600 workers, to a private corporation for $1,750,000.

TWU demands the sale include an agreement protecting the rights its members had while working for the city. Specifically, this incudes protection of seniority rights; protection of pension rights, since the workers involved here already contributed $750,000 to the city's pension fund, and the same 40-hour week they would receive if they remained city employes.

In his demand for an immediate meeting with city officials, Quill said the city "faces the possibility of a complete shutdown of its transportation network"—including the city-owned subways, bus and elevated lines and privately owned bus lines as well.

Dayton To Air Video Series

DELEGATES to the Montgomery County CIO Council in Dayton, O., voted unanimously last week to sponsor the CIO's television series in that area.

Acting after a demonstration of two of the series of 13 films prepared by CIO and the CIO Political Action Committee, the Dayton delegates agreed that the program should start early in August. Exact schedules will be announced later.

At the same time, the Montgomery County Council voted to invite CIO Councils in two adjoining counties, Clark and Butler, to join in sponsorship of the series. Clark and Butler counties are in the same television area.

"Issues of the Day" is now on the air in Washington and Pittsburgh and will go on the air in Cincinnati in mid-summer. Other cities will be added later.

Immigration Bill Vetoed By Truman

PRESIDENT TRUMAN last week vetoed the McCarran "Iron Curtain" immigration bill—an action which had been urged by CIO, Americans for Democratic Action and many liberals.

In his veto message, Truman said the "discriminatory policy" contained in the bill "repudiates our basic religious concepts" of the "brotherhood of man."

He conceded the bill contained some improvements in immigration laws adopted piecemeal over the past 154 years.

But, he argued in a 3500-word message to the House, these improvements were outweighed by "many undesirable features."

Opponents of the measure, who had recommended a veto, predicted it would be upheld in the Senate. The House voted to override by 278 to 113.

The 302-page bill, passed by Congress without a roll call vote and with only 18 senators present when the measure came before that body, was roundly criticized by CIO.

In a letter to Truman, urging him to veto the measure, CIO Legislative Dir. Nathan E. Cowan said:

"We are opposed to the McCarran Bill not only because of the many injustices of the present law which it perpetuates, but even more because of the many new injustices which it adds. In the latter category are many loosely drawn and unnecessarily harsh provisions for exclusion, deportation and denaturalization."

The presidential veto message contained two recommendations for congressional action this year:

1. "Enactment of legislation removing racial barriers against Asians from our laws. Failure to take this step profits us nothing and can only have serious consequences for our relations with the peoples of the Far East."

2. Enactment of temporary emergency immigration legislation to admit an additional 300,000 immigrants to this country over a three-year period.

Approving the general purpose of the McCarran bill (to revise and codify a hodgepodge of legislation) the President said he regretted it was "embedded in a mass of legislation which would perpetuate injustices of long standing against many other nations of the world."

The President went into great detail to explain the discriminatory features of the present quota system, which the McCarran bill retained.

"The idea behind this discriminatory policy was, to put it boldly, that American citizens with English or Irish names were better people and better citizens than Americans with Italian or Greek or Polish names," he said.

"The basis of this quota system was false and unworthy in 1924. It is even worse now. At the present time, this quota system keeps out the very people we want to bring in. It is incredible to me that, in this year of 1952, we should again be enacting into law such a slur on the patriotism, the capacity, and the decency of a large part of our citizenry."

TWUA Ousts Six—

Baldanzi 'Strikebreaking' Fails In Carpet Walkout

"STRIKEBREAKING pure and simple" last week was charged by the CIO Textile Workers to George Baldanzi and other ousted former TWUA officials who have deserted to the AFL.

Baldanzi and two associates were charged by the TWUA Executive Council with attempting to break the month-long strike of 13,000 carpet and rug workers.

Named with Baldanzi were Charles Serraino, former TWUA vice president and New Jersey director, and Joseph Peraro, leader of a pro-Baldanzi local in Thompsonville, Conn.

The Textile Workers said they joined with Pres. Anthony Valente of the AFL textile union in attempting to induce leaders of two striking TWUA locals at the Bigelow-Sanford and Mohawk carpet mills in Amsterdam, N.Y., to sign up with the AFL, call off the strike and send the workers back into the mills without a contract.

The Amsterdam local officials turned the AFL down cold.

Of the Baldanzi move, the TWUA council said:

"This is strikebreaking pure and simple.

"IT IS well that those who once saw something to admire in George Baldanzi . . . should know the full extent of his degeneration. He now seeks to destroy the movement which nurtured him for most of his adult life.

"We will carry on our struggle to win justice and security for American textile workers and we will achieve our goals. Those who seek to deter us by strikebreaking and dual unionism will find no reward save the infamy they so richly deserve."

Bigelow-Sanford and Mohawk are two of the Big Four carpet mills struck by TWUA locals early in June. The others are A. M. Karagheusian, Roselle Park, N. J., and Alexander Smith, Inc. — the largest carpet plant — at Yonkers, N. Y. Major strike issue is the union's proposal for a 25c hourly wage increase.

In an earlier trial action, the TWUA council expelled Baldanzi, formerly executive vice president, and five associates who switched to the AFL union. Also expelled were Sam Baron, Baldanzi leader in Canada; Lewis M. Conn, former North Carolina director; Ben Manney, former Passaic, N. J., joint board manager; Emanuel Boggs, former Danville, Va., joint board manager, and Serraino. None of the six appeared at the hearing.

The TWUA council also approved transfer of the union's southern headquarters from Atlanta to Charlotte, N. C.—nearer the center of the southern textile industry—and pledged "all the support within our power" to striking CIO Steelworkers.

TWUA Cotton-Rayon Locals Challenge Wage Cut Moves

Strenuous resistance to employer wage cut proposals has been pledged by CIO Textile Worker locals with 90,000 members in the northern cotton-rayon industry.

Four-hundred delegates from the cotton rayon locals met last week in Boston, to combat the wage cut precedent set in the Bates case, in which an arbitrator ordered a 7.5c an hour reduction for 7000 workers.

Sixteen other New England mills also have demanded wage cuts, with the first proceedings involving 15,000 Fall River and New Bedford, Mass., workers.

The TWUA cotton-rayon council approved a recommendation of Emil Rieve, union president, to demand separate arbitration proceedings with each firm. (For comment on the Bates' decision, see Page 4.)

Frank Bonacci Retires After 50 Years Of Union Work

FRANK BONACCI, CIO regional director at Salt Lake City, Utah, and a veteran of 50 years in the labor movement, will retire on pension effective July 1 because of ill health.

In addition to his union activities, Bonacci has served as a member of the lower house of the Utah Legislature since 1945.

Earlier he had served for the 1937 and 1939 bienniums.

Bonacci was born in Italy and came to the United States in 1896. He went to Canada two years later, worked on the Canadian Pacific Railroad and later in the coal mines of British Columbia and Alberta, and got his first taste of unionism when he joined the Western Federation of Miners in 1903.

Later he joined the United Mine Workers, serving on many committees and holding local offices. After returning to the United States he worked for the Denver & Rio Grande Railway in Utah and became a member of the Machinists.

He went back to the coal mines in 1919 and with others made a long series of unsuccessful efforts to organize the Utah coal diggers, spending many months on strike. The attempts finally proved successful in 1933 after the National Industrial Recovery Act was passed.

Bonacci became a UMW field worker in 1933 and was appointed a CIO representative in 1937. He was named regional director at Denver, Col., in 1942, and the following year was transferred back to Salt Lake City, where he has remained since.

He is a member of CIO Steelworkers Local 2164 in Salt Lake City and lives in Helper, Utah.

Taylor Rules On Dispute

CIO Organizational Disputes Director George W. Taylor recently handed down his first decision in a jurisdictional disagreement between two international unions.

Involved were the Woodworkers, the Paperworkers, and employes of the Minnesota & Ontario Paper Co., International Falls, Minn. The IWA has represented the workers since they left the AFL in 1946, but the UPA has claimed jurisdiction.

Taylor ruled that the IWA was to negotiate a renewal of the current contract, after which both unions are to work out a procedure with the National CIO to permit the workers to decide the affiliation they want.

Cicero Cops Fined $2500 In Riot Case

THREE OF FOUR Cicero, Ill., town officials found guilty of failing to protect the rights of a Negro family were fined a total of $2500 in U. S. District Court in Chicago last week.

Chief of Police Erwin Konovsky was assessed $2000 and Sgt. Roland Brani and Patrolman Frank A. Lange of the police force were ordered to pay $250 each on charges they denied civil rights to Harvey E. Clark, Jr. and his family.

The Clark's effort to move into a previously white apartment building touched off a race riot during which the building and their furniture were damaged by fire. The disturbance was finally quelled by national guardsmen.

Konovsky and Village Atty. Nicholas Berkes also were found guilty of conspiring to allow a mob to try and drive the Clarks from the town.

FEP Bill Passes Senate Labor Unit

The Senate Labor Committee last week approved a modified anti-discrimination bill which combined measures introduced by Sens. Humphrey (D. Minn.) and Ives (R. N.Y.).

It would establish a five-man Commission on Equality of Opportunity in Employment which would have the power to order employers to stop discrimination in hiring because of race, religion, color, national origin or ancestry. The orders would be subject to court review, and would be issued only after efforts to solve a problem by voluntary means.

Reuther Warns Democrats On Platform Compromise

"WE ARE not loyal to a party, we are loyal to a platform—and CIO does not want the basic New Deal platform compromised."

That was the declaration of Walter Reuther, a CIO vice president and president of the 1,200,000-member CIO Auto Workers.

After a meeting in Detroit with Estes Kefauver, Tennessee senator who seeks the Democratic presidential nomination, Reuther said either Kefauver, W. Averell Harriman, or Gov. Adlai Stevenson of Illinois would be "acceptable" candidates.

Reuther warned CIO "in good conscience" couldn't support Sen. Russell (D. Ga.), Dixiecrat leader who also seeks the nomination.

"If the Democrats compromise the basic New Deal platform and civil rights issue and put Russell on the ticket," Reuther said, "I don't see how the CIO in good conscience could support them."

Topeka, Kans., has only 64% of its eligible voters registered, and the city CIO Council is out to move that figure upward.

Joining with other organizations, the Council PAC has assigned from two to ten canvassers to each precinct in a house-to-house drive to register voters.

Each new voter is given an "I'm Registered" lapel button.

Walter C. Bryant, Council president, said "we're going to try to present registration appeal to potential voters in every home in the city. This drive will be strictly non-partisan. All we're hoping for is to bring this city's total registration up to somewhere near what it should be."

Some of ex-Gen. Eisenhower's political policies, as voiced in his campaign for the Republican presidential nomination, were denounced by August Scholle, Michigan CIO Council president, at the FDR-CIO Labor Center recently.

"In the case of the steel strike," Scholle said, "Eisenhower tells us . . . that he knew nothing about the facts in the dispute but then claims that inept leadership was responsible for the strike and that the Taft-Hartley injunction law should have been used.

"On the question of FEPC, Eisenhower lined himself up with the Dixiecrats by stating that he was opposed to federal legislation in this field because he was against any laws which coerced people to act. At the same time, the general stated his support for compulsory universal military training, which compels a lot of young men to perform an act which displeases them."

CIO-affiliated unions in Canada are preparing an all-out political education campaign for the coming provincial and federal elections.

The national PAC of the Canadian Congress of Labor, with which CIO and some national unions are affiliated, met in Toronto to plan the program.

Henry Weisback, PAC-CCL secretary, reported "our committees were leading in bringing out the trade union votes in every city in Saskatchewan and British Columbia, thus enabling the CCF (Canadian Commonwealth Federation) to pile up large votes in B.C. and winning all city seats in Saskatchewan."

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

(CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, whose column regularly appears in this space, is in Berlin for meetings of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. In his absence, here is a digest of CIO election victories.)

REG. DIR. George DeNucci reports that the Scioto Distributing Co., Columbus, O., agreed to recognize the CIO Brewery Workers and signed a contract with Local 47. Bus. Agent Arthur Poppenhaeger handled the situation.

Acting Reg. Dir. Fullerton Fulton reports that employes of the Socony-Vacuum Co. oil refinery in St. Louis, Mo., voted in a representation election 306 to 89 to join the CIO Oil Workers. They were formerly members of an AFL federal labor union.

Reg. Dir. Roy Atkinson reports that in a representation election at the Allen V. Smith Co., pea processers at Garfield, Wash., the workers favored the CIO by a vote of 8 to 0 for no union. They had previously been covered by the AFL Teamsters Union, and normally number 20 to 30 people. This campaign was handled solely by CIO Field Rep. John Glenn.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports that in a representation election at the Rockwell Register Corp., Bellefontaine, O., the workers favored the CIO by a vote of 64 to 15 for the AFL, no union 21.

Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes reports that the CIO Steelworkers won a representation election at the Southern States Iron Roofing Co., New Orleans, La., by a unanimous vote.

State Dir. Ernest Pugh reports the CIO Woodworkers won a representation election at the Harris Hardwood Co., Roanoke, Va., by the following vote: eligible 135, IWA-CIO 84, no union 43, void 2, challenged 6.

A Letter Of Correction From Murray To Humphrey

The following letter was sent last week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray to Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) in correction of a recent report in this paper:

I HAVE always been aware that the headlines in The CIO News are generally quite emphatic. Nevertheless, it would be a distinct understatement merely to say that I was greatly surprised when I read the headline on Page Two of The CIO News of June 16 which might imply to a careless reader that your proposed amendment to the Defense Production Act authorizing seizure and a wage increase was one of a number of "riders swatting labor."

Investigation discloses, however, every, that the error was an honest one, made in the rush of going to press. The headline writer, getting the story summarizing the various proposals to end the steel strike, noted that most of them were also anti-labor and, in a typical headline writer's haste, assumed that all amendments listed fell in the latter category.

While I trust that future CIO News headlines will still be forceful, I am assured that hereafter our editorial staff will recognize the varying amounts of force involved between a "swat" and a pat on the back.

You may rest assured that the members of the United Steelworkers of America, and of the entire CIO, have not been confused by a headline. Our members are deeply grateful for the forthright and wholesome battle you are fighting in Congress for fair and impartial handling of all labor matters, and your steel dispute proposals certainly are no exception.

Chrysler Tank Plant Is Struck

About 1100 members of the CIO Auto Workers went on strike in New Orleans last week because the Chrysler Corp. refused to include them under coverage of its national agreement with the UAW.

The workers, employed in the firm's tank engine plant, voted 892 to 8 to walk out if necessary to get the same wage rates and working conditions other Chrysler workers enjoy. Union officials said the tank engine employes would be paid 29 to 51c an hour less than Chrysler workers filling the same jobs elsewhere if the company has its way.

New Inquiry On World Oil Cartel Asked

A THREE-WAY investigation of a "giant international oil cartel" reportedly unearthed by a Federal Trade Commission inquiry was demanded last week by Sen. Hennings (D. Mo.).

Hennings said the FTC report has been classified as secret and that President Truman is unwilling to make it public because "it might adversely affect our foreign relations."

However, he added, the President is willing for congressional committees to examine it on a confidential basis.

The Missourian said the 900-page FTC report showed "a giant oil plot" which should be taken up immediately by the Dept. of Justice, the Senate Judiciary Committee and the Senate Small Business Committee. The Judiciary Committee is headed by Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) and the small business group by Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.).

THE REPORT was written after a two-year FTC investigation. It purports to show that the Standard Oil Co. of California and the Texas Oil Co., working together through the jointly-owned Arabian American Oil Co., have sought to divide Middle East oil resources and fix prices with the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, Royal Dutch Shell Oil Co. and Anglo-Iranian Oil Co., which is British-controlled.

"The unlawful activity of these companies," said Hennings, "is not just an ordinary, garden variety of anti-trust violation, but strikes at the heart of the American free enterprise system.

"It is of greatest importance, therefore, to expose this international intrigue and to free the oil industry from the clutches of this monopolistic monster."

IUE Drives In N.J. Area On Open Shops

THE CIO Electrical Workers are beginning a drive in New Jersey "in the spirit of the original organizational drives that built the CIO" to sign up all open shop electronics and machine plants.

The campaign was planned at a Newark, N. J., meeting of all IUE local union officers and shop stewards and will focus on open shops in Jersey.

The IUE now has some 53,000 members in District 4, covering Jersey and New York.

Milton Weihrauch, District 4 president and an IUE international vice president, said:

"We shall not only complete the unionization of all electronics and machine shops but we shall defeat any unprincipled obstructions, be they AFL raids or anti-union corporation propaganda."

The District 4 conference also backed GE locals after hearing IUE Pres. James B. Carey report on the deadlocked negotiations with General Electric. IUE has taken a strike vote against GE after more than three months of futile bargaining.

Liberal Legislative Goals Set By CWA Convention

THE CIO Communications Workers concluded their sixth annual convention, in Cleveland, by adopting a forthright, 16-point legislative program based on the principle of improving the welfare of Americans and extending humanitarian programs at home and abroad.

CWA called for national health insurance, far-reaching reforms in workmen's compensation, federal and state minimum wage laws providing for $1.25 an hour with extension of the federal act to all workers in commerce or industries affecting commerce, broader unemployment compensation laws and a strengthened social security program.

The program also demanded low and middle income housing programs, rent controls, elimination of the poll tax, equal pay for equal work, extension of GI benefits to veterans of the fighting in Korea, adequate Mutual Security Agency appropriations and the providing of aid under Point 4 type programs.

Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, statehood for Alaska and Hawaii, home rule for the District of Columbia, speedy construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project and federal aid to education likewise were urged.

THE CONVENTION was heartened when it received word of the settlement of the 12-week strike of Local 1162 against the Western Electric Co. plant at Tonawanda, N. Y.

The delegates, who had pledged or given the strikers more than $6000 in aid, cheered when told that the settlement included wage increases ranging from 11 to 23c an hour for piece workers and 12 to 22c for day workers, and a strong seniority clause.

Following the speech of Sen. Kefauver (Tenn.), candidate for the Democratic nomination for President, the convention voted the union's "full support" to the "Democratic party and its principles."

Wood Union Out In Canada

MORE THAN 30,000 members of the CIO Woodworkers have been on strike since June 15 in British Columbia, completely tieing up the Canadian province's largest industry.

The union is seeking a substantial wage increase from more than 100 logging, sawmill, plywood and shingle operators represented by the Federal Industrial Relations Group.

The operators proposed a wage cut, but agreed to renew the old contract intact when the provincial conciliation service recommended no wage changes. The union rejected the recommendation, as the industry in making the highest profits in its history.

Tobacco LIU In Lancaster GetsCIONews

THE ENTIRE membership of CIO Local Industrial Union 1780, United Tobacco Workers, at Lancaster, Pa., is now receiving The CIO News on a direct mail basis.

CIO Field Rep. Ben Stahl sent in the order, together with a list of the members who are now getting the official CIO organ at their homes.

All local industrial unions are entitled to receive The CIO News in bundle lots for redistribution to the members, the cost being met by per capita payments. The additional cost for sending it directly to the members is but half a cent per week, plus a small initial cost for each address stencil.

Many local industrial unions find The CIO News of greater value when it is mailed each week directly to the members.

Information on reduced subscription rates for local union membership orders is available from Al Motley, CIO News, 718 Jackson Place N.W., Washington 6, D.C.

11 Senators Ask FTC Inquiry On Power Lobby

CONGRESS was asked last week to order the Federal Trade Commission to take a three-year look into the propaganda activities of the private electric power industry.

An investigation of the industry's fight to turn the country against public ownership of utilities, comparable to the seven-year FTC probe that started in 1938 and bared the secret expenditure of millions of dollars to influence opinion, was asked by 11 Senators in a joint resolution introduced by Sen. Magnuson (D. Wash.).

The resolution proposed an inquiry "into certain practices and activities" of private countries in the industry.

Specifically, it would direct the FTC to investigate the amount of money spent by the utilities "directly or indirectly to influence the election of state and federal officials"; attempts to influence teaching in the schools, and efforts to "induce" church, club and other groups to oppose public ownership of power.

In addition, the resolution called for a probe into advertising expenditures of utilities and their financial interests in newspapers, magazines, pamphlets and other media. The investigation would run for three years, with a report to Congress every 30 days.

Magnuson acted on behalf of himself and Sens. Gillette (Ia.), Green (R. I.), Hill (Ala.), Kefauver (Tenn.), Lehman (N. Y.), Murray (Mont.), and Humphrey (Minn.), Democrats, and Sens. Langer (N. D.), Morse (Ore.) and Tobey (N. H.), Republicans.

In a statement, Magnuson pointed out the importance of electric power as the base of American industry.

"The private utilities," he said, "have long regarded their monopoly to supply electric service as an exclusive domain in which they could operate pretty much like private enterprise. The public never shared this view."

But efforts to protect the public interest by regulation have "never worked effectively," he claimed.

"So yardsticks were developed in the form of public power projects," he continued, "not to supplant the private utilities, but to afford effective competition and thus keep the service up and the rates down.

"It is important to recite these obvious facts—as they are not so obvious to the private utilities. At times they seem to forget that they are granted an exclusive monopoly privilege . . . upon condition that they serve the public at the lowest rates consistent with sound operating practices."

COONSKIN CAP and all, Pres. Joseph A. Beirne (right) greeted Sen. Kefauver (left), candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, when he arrived to speak at the convention of the CIO Communications Workers in Cleveland. The convention pledged "full support" to the Democratic party and its principles.

Steel Firms Up Tax Bonanza Gravy To $4.5 Billions

WHILE Big Steel was crying everything from "poverty" to "principles" in refusing to grant employes a 1952-style wage increase, it is still merrily riding the gravy train of quick tax write-offs.

U.S. Steel Corp, leading the industry's fight against the CIO Steelworkers, last week was granted $99 million more in charge-offs under the "tax bonanza" law.

According to the Defense Production Administration, U.S. Steel was given the right to charge off 65% of $99 million out of income taxes during five years, in place of the normal depreciation period of 25 years. The money will provide for transportation of iron ore from Venezuela to its plants in this country.

Bethlehem Steel added $9 million to its tax charge-offs, getting the DPA nod for 70 and 75% on plants in Pennsylvania and Maryland.

All told, tax bonanza certificates amounting to $20 billion have been issued. Of this amount, steel has certificates totaling $4.5 billion, more than any industry and more than twice as much as its nearest competitor, the railroads.

URW Strikes In Canada Over Pensions

MEMBERS of the CIO Rubber Workers striking against the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. at Hamilton, Ont., for pensions, higher wages and other contract improvements last week were assured the "fullest support" of the Canadian Congress of Labor.

Donald McDonald, CCL secretary treasurer, accused the company of "attempting to put into effect a management policy on pensions which was laid down at the recent annual convention of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association."

"At that meeting," he said, "H. J. Clawson of Montreal urged Canadian employers to use all their efforts to prevent the establishment of industrial pension plans in Canada along lines now paid by many industries in the United States.

"There is a natural alliance between the Firestone Co. and the major automobile companies which are major customers, but it appears that support for the position taken by Firestone extends considerably beyond that."

Pensions under the Canadian equivalent of this country's social security laws are lower than in the U.S. and are not paid until the age of 70 is reached, as against 65 here. The URW is seeking $125 a month at the age of 65, as in the Firestone contract covering plants in this country, with the full cost to be borne by the employer until the pensioner becomes 70.

Pension, Welfare Reopenings Asked

The general executive board of the CIO Rubber Workers last week urged the industry voluntarily to reopen negotiations this year on pension and health and welfare plans.

Most of the plans were signed in 1950 and remain in effect until 1955 unless reopened by the employers. The URW executive board urged all locals to make an "extraordinary effort" to gain liberalization of them because of the higher cost of illness and increased living costs of pensioners.

Senate Unit Stalls Action On Buchanan

THOMAS C. Buchanan, an outstanding member of the Federal Power Commission and its chairman since January, last week was denied the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee's approval for appointment to another term.

Chairman Johnson (D. Colo.) said the committee voted 9 to 4 against reporting the nomination either favorably or unfavorably.

The Oil & Gas Conservation Commission of Johnson's home State and the Kansas State Corporation Commission both opposed approval of Buchanan because of his opinions in natural gas cases, which have favored the great mass of consumers rather than the big producers.

So did Sen. Martin (R. Pa.). Buchanan, a Democrat, served eight years on the Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission before his appointment to the FPC four years ago. His term expired June 23.

Draft Ruling On Seamen Hit

The CIO Maritime Committee has condemned the decision of Selective Headquarters to stop seeking deferment of draft-age merchant seaman.

Hoyt Haddock, committee secretary, said there is a shortage of 2000 three-year seamen to man the 1720 U. S. merchant ships now in service.

Senate Votes Island Bill

THE SENATE last week joined the House of Representatives in approving a commonwealth constitution granting Puerto Rico full local governmental powers.

Approval by the Senate was by voice vote after lengthy debate, after Sen. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.) said ratification would demonstrate "the fact that the people and government of the United States want no part of colonialism."

Three of four proposed amendments were rejected, with the Senate approving only a rider giving Congress power to approve any future amendments to the island constitution.

'No Compromise'—

Big Six Steel Firms Balk At Union Shop Settlement

BULLETIN

The CIO Steelworkers late on July 3 filed "conspiracy" charges against the Big Six steel firms, charging they are restraining collective bargaining.

The action, filed with the National Labor Relations Board in Washington, declares that the six major steel firms have a compact to refuse to approve agreements won by the union on the basis of the WSB recommendations, said USA-CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg.

THE "BIG SIX" steel companies last week took a "no compromise" stand toward settlement of (1.) the industry's strike against the government for a whopping price increase and (2.) the five-week strike of some 600,000 CIO Steelworkers.

The union has dented the industry's solid front against a wage settlement with the union shop—but it hasn't broken it.

Some 35 steel producers have signed with the USA-CIO, the largest recent settlement being Pittsburgh Steel Co., the nation's 14th ranking basic steel firm.

But U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Republic and the other big firms were holding out—waiting for the Taft-Hartley injunction which an obedient Dixiegop-controlled Congress "requested" President Truman obtain against the steel strikers. Truman so far has ignored the "request."

Frankest expression of big steel's no settlement stand came from Charles M. White, Republic Steel Corp. president, who said there is "no possibility of compromise" with the Steelworkers over the union shop.

(White is one of the tough spokesmen for the steel industry. He was president of Republic on Memorial Day, 1937, when 10 steel workers were killed in the South Chicago massacre. White also has said: "There are worse things than a strike . . . It is a helluva good way to work it.")

White's position reflected the stand of other big firms, led by U. S. Steel Corp., which earlier vetoed an agreement tentatively reached by the union with Bethlehem.

U. S. Steel itself continued its "sweetheart letters" to its 175,000 employes, with Vice Pres. C. F. Hood writing gloriously of "freedom of choice."

USA-CIO Pres. Philip Murray challenged Hood to debate the union shop before a rally of steel strikers at Duquesne, Pa., but the company official had no reply.

DESPITE THE companies' advertising assault on the union shop, they have already granted it to almost half of the USA-CIO's 1.2 million members.

Murray reported that more than 500,000 steel workers—principally in fabricating plants, which often are direct subsidiaries of the basic industry—now have the union shop.

In the basic industry, the union has won contract settlements with some 35 firms and covering more than 52,000 workers which include the union shop and wage and other contract improvements based upon the Wage Stabilization Board's recommendations of three months ago.

After the pact with Pittsburgh Steel, in which Murray led USA-CIO negotiators, the union reached settlements during the past week with Harrisburg, Pa., Steel Co., the Newport Steel Co. in Martins Ferry, O., and the Copperweld Steel Co. at Warren, O.

The Pittsburgh agreement provides a 12c hourly wage increase, retroactive to Apr. 1, a modified union shop, six paid holidays, three weeks vacation after 15 years service, and increases in night shift differentials. The Harrisburg wage increase was 15c hourly.

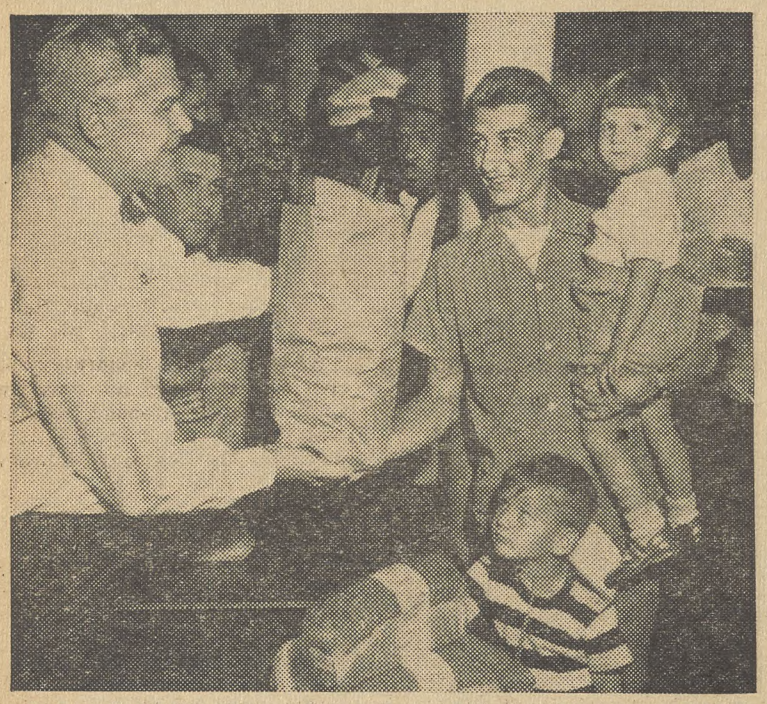
PRESSURE by the industry for over-ceiling price rises continued. Weirton Steel Co., which went through the motions of signing with its company union, filed for a $5.50 a ton price increase. Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall said he would turn it down, that all the industry is entitled to is $3 a ton.

The Senate last week adopted a resolution asking an end to the steel strike and the immediate resumption of collective bargaining.

It was introduced by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.). It asked the industry and the CIO Steelworkers "to agree upon interim conditions which would make possible the immediate resumption of production pending settlement of the issues in dispute."

Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) and Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) joined Humphrey in sponsoring the resolution, which noted that "arms and material are vital to the security of the U. S. and the free nations associated with it."

FIRST IMPORTANT BREAK—Philip Murray (right), CIO Steelworkers president, and Avery C. Adams, Pittsburgh Steel Co., sign contract giving 10,500 steel workers an immediate 12½c hourly wage increase, modified union shop and other WSB recommendations. USA-CIO called the settlement "an important break in the solid front put up by the basic steel industry."



FOOD PACKAGE is handed to George Eberle, striking member of CIO Steelworkers Local 1843, in union hall at Hazelwood, Pa., by USA Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald. Eberle holds daughter, Judy, 3, while son Tommy, 5, gazes intently at McDonald.

'Fat-Bellied' Barons Lambasted By Murray

"THE FAT-BELLIED citizens who control the steel industry . . . are apparently living in the hope that someday they'll be able to crush you," Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO Steelworkers told a strike rally in Youngstown, O., last week.

The steel industry, he said "has made for itself a record that is indeed damning. No responsible group of people could have contrived a more malicious method of deceiving the people than have the leaders of this industry."

Murray recalled that in the last three disputes—1946 and '49, '52—the mulishness of the steel moguls compelled the President to put the cases in the hands of impartial boards. In all three cases the Steelworkers accepted the recommendations but the steel industry shouted "No" and forced a strike.

"I ask you," he added, "what do you suppose might have happened to your union if you had adopted the same attitude toward the rest of the American people that this industry has adopted?"

The industry's entire offer, he said, hinges on worker acceptance of the employers' privilege, unilaterally, to wipe out job descriptions worked up in joint studies and to arbitarily rewrite job descriptions to suit the companies.

Through these two gimmicks alone the industry could virtually take back the full amount of any "wage increases" it might agree to, Murray pointed out.

WSB Short-Changed After Powers Slashed

HOUSE economizers have slashed the Wage Stabilization Board's budget so fiercely its activities would be short-changed into "an exercise in futility," according to Vice Chairman Benjamin Aaron.

The House approved a $7.5 million budget for the board compared to the $15,930,000 sought for the full fiscal year. Congress, in extending the Defense Production Act, gave the WSB only another 10 months of life after cutting its powers drastically.

The House decision on the budget, unless changed in the Senate, in effect will kill wage stabilization, Aaron said. It will be impossible, he explained, to continue any effective program with $7.5 million.

The amount requested would have permitted only continuance of the present staff of about 1580 persons in Washington and the regional offices, Aaron said. The House-recommended figure, he added, will force a staff cut to 640 persons.

It means, he continued, that the board is faced with two alternatives: to refuse to handle the 1800 voluntary requests submitted each week for permission to make wage adjustments that require approval, or to end all other activities.

"It is inconceivable," Aaron went on, "that Congress wants to create a situation in which a citizen has no place to go for authorization to make a wage adjustment not permitted by the self-administering regulations.

"This would mean that the board would have to ignore the requirement of the Defense Production Act that wage stabilization be administered in such a way as to correct hardships and inequities.

"If the board decided to continue to handle voluntary petitions, it would be necessary to abandon the function of advising labor and management of what is permissible under wage stabilization policies and issuing interpretations of board regulations.

"The former service was performed 1,240,000 times during the last fiscal year, and over 20,000 interpretations were issued. It would also be necessary to eliminate all enforcement activities. The unscruplous employer could with impunity ignore the law.

"Even if all these activities were eliminated, the board still would have to effect additional savings of from $2.5 to $3.5 million. This could be done only by reducing the servicing of petitions. At present, the board has a backlog of 13,000 petitions. We have been criticized for delays in processing such petitions."

TWUA Wins Test Election In Silk Mill

THE CIO Textile Workers have won an organizing election in a Pennsylvania silk mill in the first test since the AFL textile raid began.

The victory covered the Plaza Silk Mills in Beavertown, Selinsgrove and Middleburg, Pa. The vote in the National Labor Relations Board election was 213 for TWUA to 147 for no union.

"This election is significant," said TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve, "because the propaganda of the forces led by George Baldanzi was extensively used against us by the employer.

"This is the first election we have engaged in since the dual-union movement began. It proves that the secession problem is pretty much behind us, and we are again going about our real business of organizing the unorganized."

CIO Challenges GOP On T-H, Civil Rights

By BOB SENSER

THE CHAIRLADY was young and sweet. "I can't resist the temptation," she said coyly, "to point out to you, Mr. Reuther, that we hope more CIO members will vote Republican this November."

Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers shot back: "The formula is very simple: you earn our votes and you'll get them."

An audience of 100 roared and clapped approval.

This exchange took place last week in Chicago at a pre-convention hearing where the Republicans were mulling over what to include in the 1952 platform.

Two top CIO officers—Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Vice Pres. Reuther—told the GOP how it could earn the support of more people.

Carey and Reuther worked as a team testifying jointly before three GOP sub-committees on civil rights, on foreign policy, and on labor welfare.

At the hearings Reuther wore a neatly designed tie which, in red and white lettering on a blue background, said: "Register—Vote."

In a 16-page statement submitted to four platform subcommittees, the CIO asked that the Republicans enact a constructive platform that will "deal honestly and effectively with the domestic and world conditions of 1952."

Planks suggested by the CIO, in line with its legislative program, call for:

- "Modernized and strengthened" federal civil rights laws, including FEPC.
- Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law because it violates the "basic human rights of the wage earners of America."
- "A bold program of industrial expansion" for immediate and long-range needs. ("If private industry fails to provide the necessary expansion, the government must.")
- Better anti-inflation laws, free of "loopholes for any special interest" but not " a system of controls which places the burden of sacrifice solely on the workers."
- "A fresh start" in public housing for low-income groups.
- A federal budget on a "pay-as-we-go basis." (But "we must tax the standard of luxury of the few before we tax the standard of living of the many.")
- A "broad national health insurance program."
- A minimum wage of $1.25 an hour.
- "Supplies, funds, and technical assistance" for underdeveloped countries.
- The highest possible degree of federal aid to education.
- Expansion of the Social Security system, and "decent and uniform" workmen's compensation.
- Equal status for women without loss of present protections.
- "No return to isolationism . . . no abdicating the leadership which has been placed in our hands" by the rest of the world; acceleration of our military buildup and that of our allies, and continued aid to western Europe economic recovery.
- Immigration laws which "give shining proof of our faith in human freedom."
- Preservation of the rights of all the people in tidelands oil, prevention of waste of natural resources, and participation in the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power development.
- Rejection of the "hysterical procedures and denial of basic individual rights . . . foisted upon our society on the specious plea of internal security."
- Continued opposition to totalitarianism in all forms.

Reuther called on the GOP to denouce the one-sided anti-inflation law just passed by Congress. He said that the law "hitches prices to an elevator and puts wages deep down in a deep freeze."

"The labor movement in America is not going to sit by idly and accept this situation," he warned. "We wouldn't be a free labor movement if we did."

A hard-hitting declaration on civil rights headed not only the CIO's official statement but also both Carey's and Reuther's testimony to the platform subcommittee on civil rights.

Carey called civil rights the "most important and most serious question facing the country. Reuther said that it "transcends in importance any other issue" in the coming political campaign.

The CIO's statement, read by Carey, emphasized: "If we are to stand as the world's leading champion of human rights, we must put our own national house in order. To do less is to make a contribution to powerful enemies of freedom."

Reuther struck at Senate Rule 22 as the main roadblock to passage of civil rights legislation.

"Unless we eliminate Senate Rule 22," he said, "all the other talk about civil rights is just pious political fly-paper to attract votes, because no such laws will pass when one third of the Senate plus one can block action."

After criticizing politicans who want FEPC left up to the states, Reuther said:

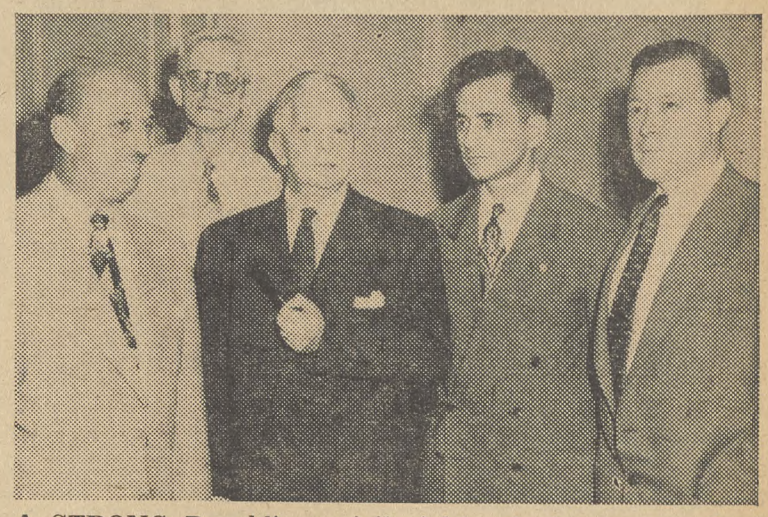
"Let the states try first? Well, we are sitting here today precisely because the states have not done anything about fair employment."

Throughout their testimony Carey and Reuther challenged the Republicans not only to write a good platform but to live up to their pledges.

Carey reminded the platform-writers of the GOP:

"We'll be participating in the coming campaign more actively than we ever have before."

END OF T-H, strong civil rights plank, national health plan endorsement and disavowal of reactionary alliances were urged on Republican platform committee in Chicago by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey (left) and CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther (right). Shown between them is Paul Sifton of CIO Auto Workers Washington office.



A STRONG Republican civil rights plank was urged at Chicago hearing by (from left) Sec. Francis Shane of the USA-CIO Civil Rights Committee, Harry Read for National Catholic Committee on Race Relations, Exec. Sec. Walter White of the NAACP, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and UAW-CIO Pres. Walter Reuther.

CIO Urges 'Bold Policy, No Return To Isolation'

THE CIO urged Republican platform builders in Chicago last week to come forth with a "bold foreign policy that will take the offensive" in the fight against communism.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey made a formal presentation to the GOP convention's foreign affairs subcommittee. Then he and CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther both offered proposals informally.

"In this world struggle our course is clear," said Carey. "There is no return to isolationism for America. There is no abdicating the leadership which has been placed in our hands.

"There is no half-way commitment, no bargain-counter collaboration, that can provide that leadership. . . .

"We must continue, indeed we must accelerate, the build-up of a military power in our country and among our allies that is capable of crushing aggression whenever and wherever it appears. . . . We must be prepared to pay our full share of the cost based on our resources. . . .

"To all peoples of the world who are joined in this determination to preserve liberty and to lift the age-old yoke of poverty from the backs of men, the United Nations provides the one hope that the struggle against tyranny can be won without war."

Sen. Nixon (R. Cal.), asked Carey whether the CIO "supports" the U. S. State Dept.

"By and large," Carey answered, "We must support the present foreign policy." He went on to criticize the way some people have attacked Sec. of State Dean Acheson.

Carey pointed out the CIO has found fault with some points of the Administration's foreign program. "For example, we think that a man like Reuther would be a better representative of the U. S. than some of the diplomats we're sending abroad these days," he said.

Nixon quickly asked: "You mean like (Philip) Jessup?"

"Yes," Carey fired back, "And men like the AT&T's Walter Gifford in the Court of St. James."

When Reuther took the platform, he looked at Nixon and said:

"We have been and are critical of some of the policies of the State Dept. The real tragedy is that too often Democratic and Republican voices have blasted away not at the State Dept. weaknesses but at its virtues——it's foreign aid program for example."

'Nothing Can Stop Fair Deal'—HST

PRESIDENT TRUMAN said last week nothing could stop the "forward progress" started by the New Deal and continued by his Fair Deal Administration.

An then he ad libbed to his opposition, "Put that in your pipe and smoke it."

The President made these remarks in a "preview" campaign speech dedicating Bull Shoals Dam, a hydroelectrical and flood control project on the White River in Arkansas.

Truman—aiming at the Dixiecrats—said the South made its greatest strides during the past 20 years of Democratic control.

"Remember these things this year, when you see and hear the storm of political propaganda that will be put out to try and turn back the clock," he said.

"We don't want to turn the clock back. We want to keep moving forward. That means we have to keep on fighting the pull-backs and the reactionaries.

"The New Deal and the Fair Deal have done a lot for the whole country, but I believe that they have done more for the South than any other part of it. I know that the New Deal and the Fair Deal have done more for the South than any other administrations in this country's history."

The President noted that "about a million people in Arkansas and Missouri are now getting power from rural electrification cooperatives.. There are a lot of people who would like to put them out of business, but I am not going to let them."

What Congress Has Done

If somebody at the plant where you work disconnected the fire alarms, cut off the sprinkler system and sold the fire extinguishers for junk, you wouldn't notice the difference—until the fire broke out.

So it is with what the Dixiegop-controlled Congress has just done to the Defense Production Act.

At a time when the flames of inflation are climbing (check your grocery bill on that), Congress has jimmied the fire alarms, cut off the sprinklers, sold the fire extinguishers and smashed the fire engines of the government's inflation-fighting force.

The Defense Production Act extension as finally voted by Congress doesn't go quite as far as the House bill, but it is still—as CIO President Philip Murray said of the latter measure—"a palpable fraud" which will "freeze wages but leave the profiteers free to rob the American consumer."

Consider: The new law prohibits controls on a wide range of foods, extends to food wholesalers and retailers new profit guarantees, sets state price-fixing laws above OPS ceilings, and opens the way to kill off rent controls Sept. 30 in most cities through the "local option" loophole.

Then the law continues wage controls but kicks out the present Wage Stabilization Board, setting up a new agency under the Senate's thumb and stripped of "jurisdiction with respect to any labor dispute."

"This," as Murray said, "is one of the most monstrous measures ever conceived." And, as President Truman warned, it opens "a dangerous gap in the mobilization program."

The lawmakers have taken their stand—for higher prices, higher rents and lower wages. Now the people must give their answer—at the polls. This means hard work now . . . for PAC . . . for a full registration . . . for a big vote on Nov. 4.

A Billion Well Spent

One of the last acts of the false "economy"-minded Congress cost American taxpayers $1.4 billion, but it was taken on one appropriation bill that all patriotic Americans were happy to see passed. Even most of the "economy" bloc did not oppose it, although a handful of holdouts in the self-named "wrecking crew" offered token resistance.

The measure was a deficiency appropriation, most of which will be used to meet June payrolls of the Armed Force. The extra money was needed, Defense Dept. spokesmen said, because the country now has more men on its defense payrolls than had been planned on. This "overstaffing"—perhaps the first in the government to which the "economy" bloc has not objected—resulted from lower casualties in Korea in recent months than had been anticipated.

The few Dixiegop holdouts who voted against the measure acted consistently with their earlier votes which butchered the mutual security program and cut next year's military appropriations by more than $5 billion beyond the point essential for adequate defense.

American taxpayers—no matter how pressed—will look with scorn upon any lawmaker who tries to buy their votes with lower taxes at the possible cost of countless lives in the future.

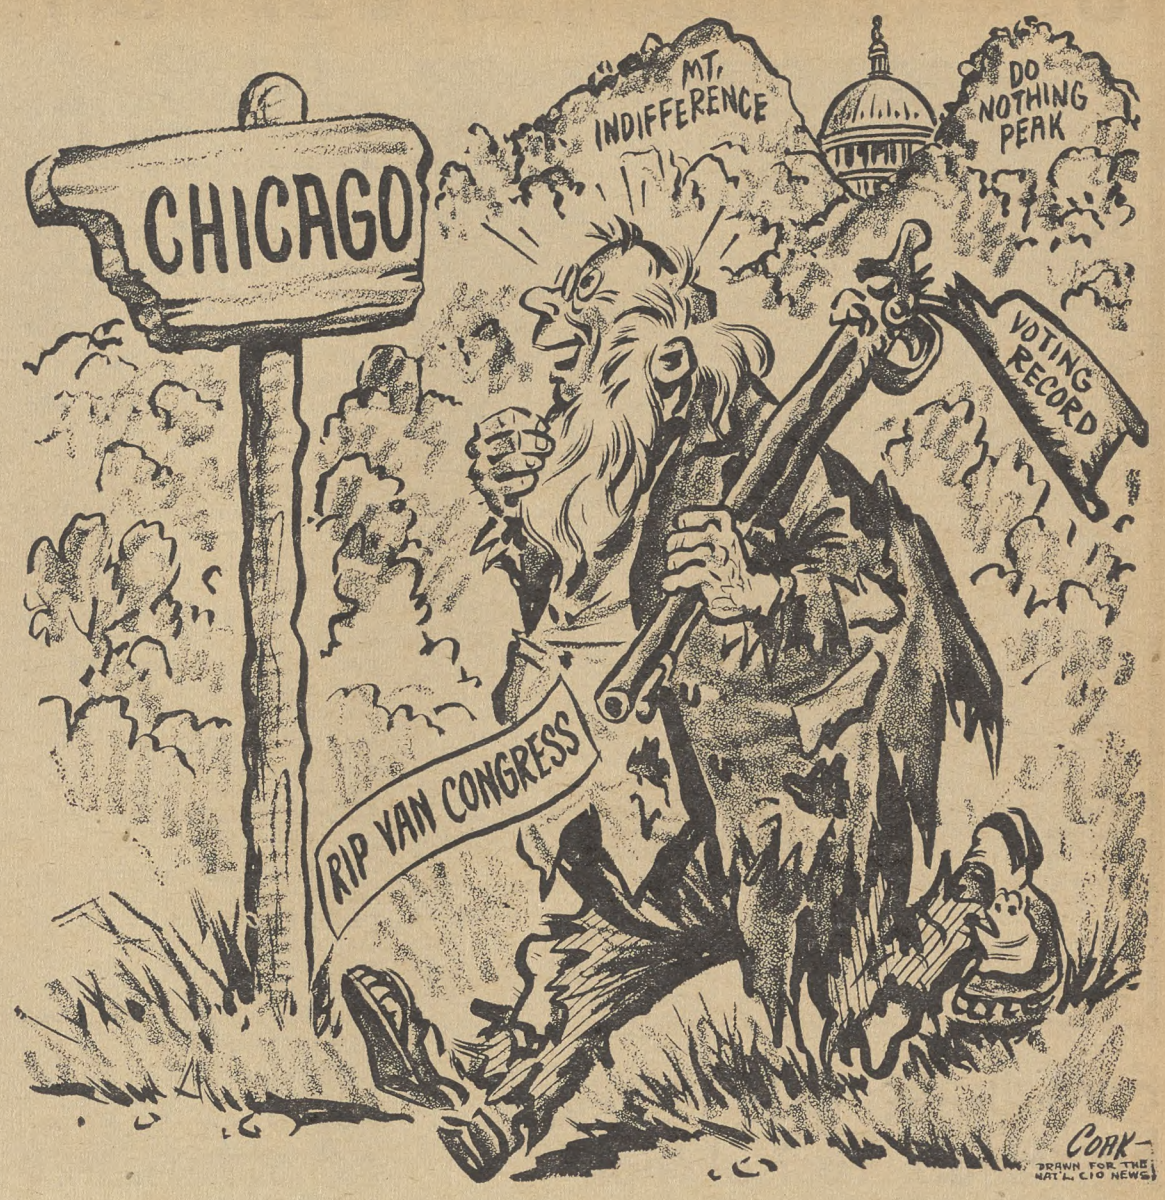
Down From The Hill



A Lesson For 'Ma Bell'

"CWA IS HERE to stay," writes Jack Barbash as the first assumption and summary offered by way of "gratuitous advice" to Bell telephone system management in his new book tracing the story of the CIO Communications Workers of America.

Declaring flatly that "the Bell system union policy has not worked, and no scapegoat is available from outside the telephone industry," Barbash suggests that "if company policies were premised on the theory that CWA could not last, that theory can be abandoned. There is firm evidence of CWA's staying powers."

"Unions and Telephones: The Story of the Communications Workers of America" devotes nearly the first half of its 246 pages to telling the story of the growth of unionism in the telephone industry prior to the formation of the CWA-CIO. Such background is essential to a full understanding of the present organization, which Barbash clearly shows evolved democratically from earlier movements.

Beginning with the grant of the first basic patent in telephones to Alexander Graham Bell in 1876, the pre-Wagner Act story traces the drift of the AFL Electrical Workers into the new industry through the peak of IBEW activity in telephones during World War I, followed by precipitous decline and company unionism.

The company union was "the major vehicle for the Bell System's systematic elimination of union influence in the telephone industry," Barbash declares. He cites among the other causes which prevented the growth of a permanent organization of telephone workers prior to 1937 "the lack of an industry approach of the IBEW to the task of organizing and maintaining unions of telephone workers."

With the advent of the New Deal, independent employe associations, emerging from the now illegal company organizations, banded together "in self-defense" into a loose confederation, the National Federation of Telephone Workers. At its formation in 1939 it represented 42 organizations with 165,000 members.

By militant leadership—carried over into the CWA when it was formed—the NFTW made considerable organizational progress and directed a number of successful strikes, which reached their climax in the first nationwide telephone strike in 1947.

Joseph A. Beirne and C. W. Werkau, present president and secretary-treasurer of the CWA-CIO, first were elected to those positions in the NFTW in 1943.

The stubborn opposition of the Bell System to engage in industry-wide bargaining in the 1947 strike situation revealed a structural defect in the organization. This led to the formation of the Communications Workers of America as an independent national union, replacing the earlier loose confederation of autonomous unions in NFTW.

"We were trying to make a federation of unions do the job which can be done only by one union in the telephone industry," Beirne said right after the 1947 strike had proved ineffective.

Ten days before the first working convention of the CWA, another major event affecting telephone unionism took place. This was the formation of the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee with Executive Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood as its chairman.

The CIO committee took over at the outset the American Union of Telephone Workers, led by John J. Moran, former NFTW president, and the Association of Communications Workers, led by Ernest Weaver. Both men now hold high positions in the CWA-CIO.

There was, however, strong sentiment for the CIO within CWA. This led to a referendum in 1949 and by a vote of 71,312 to 34,419—more than two to one—the membership of CWA voted to affiliate.

"The development of CWA to its present stature is a great achievement," Barbash concludes. "To put the whole matter in shorthand terms, what CWA is and stands for today represents the outcome of the democratic process in action."

Barbash, staff director of the Senate Labor Subcommittee, says, "CWA is a fairly young union to have much of tradition and history, but it has packed even in its brief existence a whole lifetime, as labor history goes, and as I have understood CWA's struggle for survival, its members have a good deal to be proud of." —M. U. S. Labor—The Inheritor Of Jefferson

Here are some highlights of a speech by Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who is also president of the CIO Electrical Workers, to the Univ. of Virginia's Institute of Public Affairs at Charlottesville, Va.:

By JAMES B. CAREY

AMERICAN TRADE unionism is, in many ways, more the inheritor of Jefferson's spirit and principles than any group in the United States of our time . . .

Jefferson's hatred of oppression, his devout belief in the equality of man and his God-endowed freedom, his assertion of the divine right to rebel against tyranny—all are principles that have come to the bloodstream of our modern American world more directly from Jefferson than from any other of our founding fathers.

Our hatred of oppression, our belief in equality and freedom, the right to rebel against tyranny—whether it be of the political or economic kind—these are the reasons today why men and women band themselves together in trade unions. And we have the right to form these trade unions because of our Jeffersonian heritage, and the heritage of previous ages of rebellion that came to a focus in Jefferson's philosophy.

But we of American labor realize an even more intimate connection with Thomas Jefferson and his philosophy of government.

(Carey told how a prosecuting attorney and a presiding judge both belonging to the Federalists—the reactionary party of the day—crushed the first American trade union, the shoemakers of Philadelphia, when they struck after Jefferson failed in his efforts to liberalize the federal judiciary.)

The first trade union in America, the first union to stage a strike and win a strike, also became the first union in America to be destroyed by a court decision. And the court decision was intimately tied into the political struggle between democracy and reaction, between economic justice and the concentrated power of wealth and privilege . . .

I have recounted this history of organized labor's initial and losing fight against oppressive reaction for two reasons:

FIRST, it establishes that the very origins of the American labor movement—even under the nation's first liberal administration—met a crushing defeat at the hands of reactionary forces that the administration could not control.

SECOND, the basic issues that split the Jeffersonians of the Democratic-Republican Party from the Federalists, the same basic issues that destroyed America's first trade union, continue today to be the basic issues confronting organized labor.

Essentially it has been the same fight for labor—organized and unorganized—since Jefferson in his First Inaugural Address, 150 years ago, said:

"Take not from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned."

Essentially, down through these 150 years, it has been a continuing battle that labor has fought—the same battle that Jefferson fought and Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry Truman have fought. It has been the battle both for things and against things.

For things, it has been a battle to extend democracy, to make democracy economic as well as political. It has been a battle to make real and living Jefferson's vision of the equality of all men, their equal opportunity, their right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." It has been a battle to keep Jefferson's ideas from becoming mere text-book sentiments—revered, sanctified phrases better memorized than put in practice.

Against things, it has been a battle for 150 years against special privilege and exploitation, against poverty in the midst of plenty, against the brutal wielding of economic and political power by a wealthy minority. It has been a battle against corruption in business and government and against the curtailment of civil liberties promised the American people in Jefferson's "Declaration of Independence" and in the Bill of Rights.

Jefferson said, "Take not from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned." . . .

Last night this Institute, sponsored by the University which Jefferson founded, listened to a man who symbolizes almost everything the Federalists stood for—and almost everything that Jefferson devoted his life to fighting.

For 186 years, from the birth of our Republic, the common man, the workers, and organized labor have had to wage war against what Senator Robert Taft stands for today . . .

When I say that the presence of Senator Taft in these halls profaned the memory and heritage of Thomas Jefferson, I do not engage in personalities. Taft and his supporters, the men of extreme reaction, the men of privilege, profiteering and power-grabs, symbolize the full fruition of the forces that would destroy the structure of democracy that Jefferson designed.

The wide-open split today between the completely-reactionary and the not-quite-so-reactionary wings of the Republican Party—something that never happened before in the 20 years of the ferociously attacked New Deal and Fair Deal—is proof of what Taftism stands for.

Today Republicans are at each other's throats over a single issue: Taft's fanatical insistence on reversing the victory that Jefferson won over the Federalists in 1801.

Free, Independent Unions Backed By ILO Conference

THE TRIRTY-FIFTH Intl. Labor Organization conference concluded its sessions in Geneva, Switzerland, by passing a strongly-worded resolution maintaining the right of labor unions to function without political interference.

"It is essential," the resolution said, "for the trade union movement in each country to preserve its freedom and independence so as to be in a position to carry forward its economic and social mission regardless of political changes."

The "fundamental and permanent mission" of organized labor, it asserted, is the economic and social advancement of the workers.

The resolution was sponsored by labor representatives on the ground that a declaration of broad principles was needed because unions in many parts of the world are threatened by destruction or absorption in a political party.

Employer representatives opposed it in committee. They denied its statement that an independent labor movement is "essential" for good labor-management relations, claiming that such relations sometimes exist where there is no labor movement. However, they abstained from voting against it.

George P. Delaney, of the AFL, the U. S. labor representative and a conference vice president, charged "a certain section of management" with a "careful and studied campaign to discredit the ILO and to defeat the end of U. S. participation in" it.

"Some European employer representatives," the New York Times reported, "have said privately that they feel the United States employer representatives are still more interested in fighting American trade unions and the New Deal than in building up resistance to communism."

Delaney's advisors included Dir. Michael Ross of the CIO Dept. for International Affairs; CIO Research Dir. Stanley J. Ruttenberg, and Thomas R. Owens, legislative representative of the CIO Rubber Workers.

Ship Union Affiliates

The executive board of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers has voted for the union's affiliation with the International Metalworkers' Federation, of which the CIO Steelworkers and Auto Workers are members.

And Bridal Veil Had Union Label, Too, No Doubt

Two CIO members, first brought together through their union, were married by another member of the CIO in Buffalo, N. Y.

The bride is Joan Gillam, vice president of Eleetrical Workers Local 511 at Sylvania Products Co. and her husband is Gus Helm, former president of the Sylvania local and now a member of Auto Workers Local 501.

Performing the ceremony was the Rev. Alan Peabody of the Riverside Salem Evangelical and Reformed Church. He's a member and past president of Local 528, Government and Civic Employees. (LPA)

Labor Draft Proposals Hit By Joint Group

THE LABOR-Management Manpower Policy Committee is "opposed unequivocally" to a labor draft to meet the needs of defense mobilization.

Its position was made known last week when it laid down a set of employment principles to aid employers and communities in meeting the manpower needs of defense plants.

It also urged employers to hire workers on the basis of their qualifications and "without regard to non-performance factors such as age, sex, race, color or creed."

The committee is composed of 24 representatives of organized labor and the management of industrial and agricultural enterprises. It was set up a year ago in the Office of Defense Mobilization to make recommendations on how the country can best meet the manpower problems of rearmament.

The CIO is represented by Sec.-Treas. Jacob Clayman of the Ohio CIO Council and Mrs. Katherine Ellickson, CIO associate director of research.

"We are convinced," the committee said, "that the manpower job can be done through a voluntary manpower program such as is incorporated in this statement, and we therefore urge labor and management and all the regional and area labor-management manpower committees to exercise their every effort to carry out the intent of the principles."

The committee emphasized that it was merely recommending a set of principles, not establishing a "code." Its stress was on voluntary acceptance of its proposals to solve the manpower problem on a voluntary basis.

Among other principles it recommended were:

Restriction of hirings to the number of workers required for the job.

Cooperation with federal-state employment services for greatest use of "human resources."

Fullest development of local recruiting programs before going to other labor market areas.

Cooperation with community and civic groups on problems of housing, transportation, child care and schools affecting the recruiting or retention of manpower.

Wetback Fund Is Sabotaged

THE SENATE has sabotaged the program for stopping the flow of illegel Mexican "wetbacks" into the U. S.

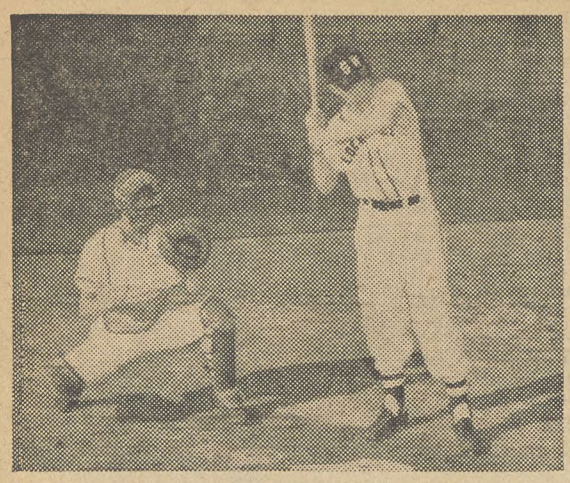
It refused to vote funds for enforcing the program.

The Senate not only defeated an amendment by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) to appropriate $2.5 million—said to be the minimum amount needed for enforcement for a year—but also rejected a proposal by Sen. Magnuson (D. Wash.) to allocate $2 million.

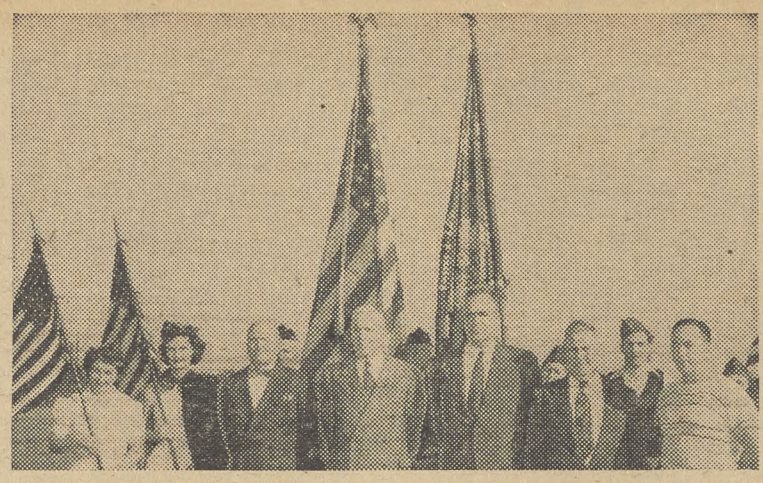
The Humphrey proposal was defeated 65 to 11, and Magnuson's recommendation was snowed under 62 to 17.

Both proposals were opposed by Chairman McCarran (D. Nev.) of the Senate appropriations subcommittee, which drafted the legislation to finance the State, Commerce and Justice Depts., and the federal courts for the new fiscal year. The border patrol is operated by the Justice Dept.

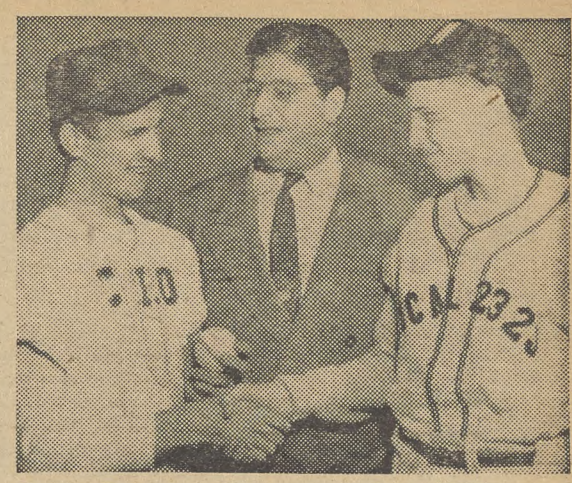
It's A Grand Old Game For CIO Teener Teams



Showing their stuff in Chester, Pa., Teener League are Batter Don Ryan, USA-CIO, and Catcher Jerry Schupp, TWU-CIO.



Just like the majors, the Teener League opens up with VFW color guard ceremonies. Mayor Ralph Swarts of Chester is second man from left.



Capt. Douglas Watson (left), TWU, and Capt. Richard Webb, USA, shake hands before John Moreno, league secretary.

'Fan Dancer' Drive Against CWA Fails

ONE MORE "revolutionary" organizing gimmick went down the drain last week—along with a quarter of million dollars of AFL money.

An eight-week show—strip teasers, fan dancers, marionettes, comedians, acrobats and imitation Dagmars—featured a six-month organizing drive of the AFL Electrical Workers. Objective: To woo the 18,000 employes of the Northwestern Bell Telephone Co. away from the CIO Communications Workers. The campaign was a flop and last week IBEW pulled out of the territory.

Hitting the road out of Chicago, the show, billed as a "revolutionary new labor tactic" costing $18,000 a week, made one-night stands across Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Iowa and Nebraska.

The shows were aimed at rank-and-file telephone workers. Largest of these to attend was 16—in Omaha.

They played to full houses—or almost full ones—but the audience was made up mainly of IBEW building trades electricians, other AFL people, local telephone company brass — invited by the IBEW—businessmen from the communities—and observers from CWA.

It was all high class stuff, featured Beatrice Kay, Joan Blondell and other stars. Joan did a strip tease. The IBEW had tried to get Gypsy Rose Lee, but she was strip-teasing elsewhere. There was Jane Manners—6 ft. 2 and much like Dagmar.

There were marionettes, comedians, acrobats. Just like television.

The show was main feature of IBEW's campaign, second drive in this territory in a year. They spent an estimated $250,000 on the campaign, much more on the first try. The Northwestern campaign was Number Five in six straight CWA wins against IBEW.

Last week, when they did a fade-out, Dan Tracy, IBEW president, wrote to employes in Northwestern, said they weren't taking action before the NLRB, said they recognized their responsibility to consider the welfare of the employes and wouldn't interfere with CWA bargaining now under way.

Commenting on the withdrawal, CWA said:

"Tracy's letter tries to hide the fact that the IBEW campaign was a flop. They didn't hesitate to interfere with the bargaining a year ago. The fact is they didn't get enough cards signed up to petition for an election. That's the real reason they pulled out."

Reason given by CWA for IBEW's failure:

"We met their campaign with down-to-earth trade unionism, doing a job for our members, settling grievances, negotiating, union-building on a broad front."

CIO Files In Michigan For Redistricting

A QUARTER MILLION voters have signed petitions to give the electorate a chance to vote for ending disproportionate representation in the Michigan Legislature.

The petitions calling for putting the question on the ballot in the November election were filed last week by the Michigan Committee for Representative Government at the secretary of state's office in Lansing.

The Michigan CIO Council, which belongs to the committee, has been very active in the petition drive.

If the voters approve of the redistricting plan, every vote will have the same weight as any other vote. Under the present system there are 60,000 people in the 32nd senatorial district and 10 times as many in 18th senatorial district, but in each case only one senator is elected. In some house districts there are six times as many peopeople as in other districts.

Hate Drive Will Boomerang In Elections, ADL Predicts

"THE COMING presidential campaign may match the 1928 Hoover-Smith campaign in published and whispered defamation."

That is the prediction of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, in its annual study of racial and religious bigotry in the U.S.

Widespread use of smear literature in the campaign to date was cited by the ADL as evidence of the existence of "a vast enterprise of prejudice that feeds upon domestic strife and international stress."

It warned the two major parties to "crack down hard on the purveyors of hate literature, who are trying to climb on one of the political bandwagons."

"Fortunately," ADL said, "appeals to religious prejudice have generally boomeranged, although too many recent campaigns in the South have been a case of which candidate could outhate the Negro.

"But generally, bigoted politics is losing politics, thanks to the common sense and good will of the average American."

Herman Edelsberg, Washington representative of ADL, predicted the smear campaigns would boomerang again in 1952.

"Never in all the history of our land," he said, "has there been such widespread recognition of the peril of uncontrolled prejudice, bigotry and group tensions; and never have so many people and organized groups taken so active a part in coping with these problems."

The survey showed:

1. Efforts by Communists "to injure racial and religious minority groups by posing as their friends, but actually working to exploit" them.
2. Succesful operation of a network of professional bigots.
3. A switch from Jew-baiting to anti-Catholic themes.
4. A concerted wave of attacks on public schools.

Senate Approves GI Voting Bill

Men and women of the armed services and their families will get a better chance to vote in the November elections under a bill unanimously voted by the Senate and sent to the House.

The measures allows GIs, U. S. defense workers overseas, and U. S. exchange students in foreign countries to use a federal absentee ballot if they are from states where absentee voting procedures are not adequate.

Cost Of Living, Taxes Top Issues

Ohio workers have their own ideas of the important issues in the 1952 campaign.

In a poll taken at a series of weekend PAC conferences in the state's industrial centers, workers are listing these issues as most important:

Cost of living, taxes, Taft-Hartley and foreign policy.

Lowest on the list, and considered not important at all, are corruption and "socialism," the battlecry of reactionary politicians.

FULL SUPPORT for CIO's legislative program was pledged by Archibald S. Alexander, former Assistant Secretary of the Army running for Senator from New Jersey. Meeting with Alexander (first from right) and Joel R. Jackson and Hugh Caldwell, Essex-West Hudson CIO Council PAC director and president; Mrs. Esther Murray, National CIO-PAC; and Carl Holderman, State CIO Council president. Alexander has CIO endorsement in his campaign.

Connecticut Labor Pushes Biggest Registration Drive

By HAROLD SENIOR

CONNECTICUT labor reached midpoint in its 1952 voter registration program—one of the biggest in the nation.

The names of 400,000 workers have been checked to determine whether they are registered or not.

The project is non-partisan and is being sponsored by Connecticut's major labor organizations—the Connecticut State CIO Council, the Connecticut AFL, the AFL Machinists and the railroad brotherhoods.

It is considered the biggest registration project of its kind ever conducted by labor organizations anywhere in the country.

It involves a new technique to determine who is registered and who isn't—a technique resulting from a study made and financed by the State CIO Council early last winter.

The new technique involved a check of all names in all the city directories for Connecticut, covering 90% of the state's population.

A mark was put alongside the names of all persons in worker occupations. These names were then typed on special triplicate printed forms, giving the address and the place of employment or occupation, and the ward and district number. Wives' names also appear. The names, 400,000 of them, were then checked against voting lists and the triplicate forms were marked to indicate whether or not the individual was registered.

The slips for persons registered will be retained for a "get-out-the-vote" campaign.

John Glynn, a member of the labor-management institute staff of the Univ. of Connecticut, on leave of absence was employed to supervise the clerical project.

To do the huge job of checking city directories and voting lists and typing out slips, 50 Univ. of Connecticut students were engaged on a part-time basis.

Whether the completed first half of the registration project proves worth the time, effort and heavy financial expenditure put into it, depends on how successfully labor does the second half of the job.

This second half and harder part is to get the unregistered people registered.

It has been found that about 40% of the 400,000 people whose names have been checked are not registered. It is clear that labor has a big job ahead, between now and November, if it is to make voters of the 160,000 individuals who are eligible to vote but are not on a voting list, CIO officials agreed.

The state labor organizations have already set up a program to carry the work forward. In some local areas the work is under way.

Hartford is one of the areas where notable progress has been made, according to Patrick J. Ward, CIO Auto Workers field representatives assigned to political action.

Ward reported that in Hartford and surrounding towns the labor organizations have set up a ward and precinct organization.

The first step was to call a meeting of CIO, AFL and IAM leaders. These leaders then went back to their organizations and called separate meetings.

Each union set up ward and precinct organizations.

Then all three groups met together again and joined their organizations into one organization, broken down into units to cover the different wards and voting districts.

An effort will be made by the state labor groups to help set up organizations like the one in Harford in every community in Connecticut where there is substantial union membership

State CIO Council Pres. Mitchell Sviridoff is a member of a State "Get 'em Registered" Committee.

GOP Candidate Violates Hatch Act, Newark CIO Says

CHARGES that the Republican congressional candidate from New Jersey's 12th district was violating the Hatch Act have been leveled by the CIO-PAC in his home town.

The Essex-West Hudson CIO Council's Political Action Committee contended that Alex J. Matturri, GOP candidate, was violating the federal "clean elections" law by maintaining membership on the Newark Housing Authority and the Essex County Rent Control Advisory Board while seeking federal office.

Calling for Matturri's immediate "resignation or removal" from the two posts, Joel R. Jacobson, CIO-PAC director, cited letters from two governmental officials in support of the PAC position.

Charles H. Barnes, acting law officer of the U. S. Civil Service Commission, cited earlier court decisions in similar cases prohibiting such actions. Tighe Woods, rent stabilization director, notified Matturri two months earlier that "it would be a violation of the Hatch act for a member of the local rent advisory board to be a candidate for a federal office."

Jacobson noted that "CIO-PAC is not making any judgment of Matturri's candidacy, at this time, but it does appear to us that if Candidate Matturri expects the voters to place him in a position to legislate in the future, he might well begin to respect the laws which are on the books right now.

"If Matturri does not resign immediately from his positions on these two local boards, he should be removed immediately."

UAW Auxiliaries Join In Detroit's 'Ballot Battalion'

MEMBERS OF Women's Auxiliaries of the CIO Auto Workers are helping to fill the ranks of Detroit's "Ballot Battalion."

The "Ballot Battalion" is a non-partisan community drive, with labor participation, to get one million registered voters in Detroit. Roy Reuther, UAW-PAC coordinator, is vice-chairman of the group.

Catherine Gelles, UAW Women's Auxiliaries international secretary, reported:

"As an example of what our Auxiliaries members are doing in the campaign to get out the vote, we have canvassed neighborhoods where special registration headquarters have been set up.

"Our campaign has included everything from ringing doorbells, driving persons to and from the booth, assisting at the booth to baby-sitting, in spite of the thermometer reading around 100 degrees."

A campaign by CIO-PAC and other labor groups in the Detroit area to make registration more convenient has been successful.

Detroit election officials opened four additional registration centers. They have agreed to open an additional 37 registration stations in every neighborhood for the eight-day period prior to the July 7 registration deadline.

ACWA Members Get $40 Million Vacation Pay

VIRTUALLY all men's and boys' clothing plants shut down last week as members of the CIO Clothing Workers headed for resorts on two-week paid vacations.

ACWA-CIO estimated that the value of the paid vacations for 395,000 union members at $40 million. The vacationeers will receive an extra day's pay for July 4.

ACWA-CIO Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky hailed the life insurance, and health, accident, maternity, hospitalization, surgical and pension benefits prevailing in the union's contracts.

'All-Out Crusade' Urged By Reuther On Civil Rights

"AN ALL-OUT crusade" during the 1952 Presidential campaign "to square American democracy's day-to-day practice with its noble promises in the field of civil rights" has been urged by Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers.

Reuther issued the call for the crusade at the 43rd annual convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, at Oklahoma City. Other speakers and a resolution called for intensified political action to improve civil rights.

Reuther said that in the Soviet Union's psychological warfare against the Western powers it has no more powerful weapon than bigotry and racial discrimination in the United States.

"Acts of racial tolerance by home-grown bigots are worth more than to Joe Stalin than 100 infantry divisions," he said.

As long as segregation and discrimination continue in this country, Reuther continued, "we cannot give moral leadership to the struggle against Communist tyranny . . . More than any other issue, the civil rights issue will demonstrate in the immediate period to come whether America has the moral strength to carry out effectively the position of world leadership which we must assume if the fight for democracy is to be won."

Reuther said the first step in realizing the civil rights program must be the revision of "the vicious Senate Rule 22 permitting unlimited debate" which is "the main roadblock to the enactment of fair employment practices legislation and other civil rights measures."

Walter White, NAACP's executive secretary, warned Republicans and Democrats that repudiation of the civil rights program will bring down the wrath of millions of independent voters.

Important among these independents, he declared, and "more determined than most on this issue is the Negro vote now nearing 2,000,000 strong in the South and holding the potential balance of power in no less than 17 northern states with 281 votes in the electoral college . . . "

Wisconsin CIO Opens Guns In Registration Campaign

THE 90,000-member Wisconsin State CIO has opened its guns for the 1952 election campaign.

The State CIO-PAC meeting in Madison, endorsed Henry Reuss, Democratic candidate for U. S. Senator against Joe McCarthy. The PAC also endorsed William Proxmire, a former CIO member, for Governor on the Democratic ticket.

Registration drives are being spearheaded in Wisconsin cities by the CIO. In Janesville the community has 100% registration. Most of the work was done by the Janesville local of the CIO Auto Workers. In Milwaukee a major registration drive is underway.

The state CIO has started an educational program in order to fight for reapportionment on a population basis. Wisconsin legislative seats have not been redistricted since 1921. A referendum on this question is on the November ballot.

Bill Abbot, state CIO legislative director, warned the Legislature that the CIO is making a campaign issue out of the tax situation in Wisconsin.

He said the 1951 Legislature refused to raise revenue by taxing the railroads, banks and insurance companies.

"As a result," he added, "The budget is unbalanced for the first time in history, and we are subsidizing the railroads to the tune of one million dollars per year.

"The CIO will not stand for any further taxation of wage earners. We insist that the deficit be made up by taxing those who can afford to pay, the banks and railroads."

Prices To Zoom Under New Controls Law

PRESIDENT Truman last week signed the pale wraith of an economic controls bill from which practically all the sturdier muscle had been hacked by reactionary congressional butchery.

He signed it because six hours after he laid down his pen, the Defense Production Act, which the new law revised and extended, would have expired, leaving the economy with no safeguards except the dubious good will of the greedy.

Prices are almost certain to soar under the extension.

"The Congress has opened a dangerous gap in the mobilization program," the President said the following day in a sharply worded statement.

"Unfortunately . . . the new law weakens our ability to hold down prices and stabilize our economy.

"At a time when our defense production is still expanding and necessarily contributing to inflationary pressures, the Congress has weakened price controls, has limited the effectiveness of rent control, and virtually cancelled selective credit controls."

As a result, the President asserted, his administration is being forced "to take a serious gamble with inflation."

"This law," he continued, "gives the American people only very limited protection against the dangers of inflation . . . "

He said the extension bill was "the target of every favor-seeking lobby of the special interests in this election year.

The people should be "grateful," he said, to Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.), and Rep. Spence (D. Ky.), chairmen of the Senate and House Banking Committees, for their fight "against great odds" to keep the bill from being a "total loss."

The new law fortunately bears little resemblance to the mangled legislation that emerged from the House after a Dixiegop field day, but it still opens the way to price and rent increases while curbing wages.

Many of the worst features of the House version were removed by House-Senate conferees in a 16-hour marathon session on June 27 and 28. The Senate passed the compromise by a voice vote a few hours after the harried conferees completed their task. The House approved it by a vote of 192 to 142 on a roll call during an unusual Saturday night session.

The compromise version that President Truman signed:

EXTENDED the amended Defense Production Act for 10 months instead of the two years sought by the Administration.

Killed the present Wage Stabilization Board, replaced it with a similar tripartite board whose members shall be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and deprived it of authority to act in labor disputes.

Extended wage controls to Apr. 30, 1953.

Exempted farm workers and employes of enterprises with eight or fewer workers from wage controls, and permitted wages to rise to $1 before being controlled.

Exempted professional engineers, architects employed by other architects and certified public accountants employed by other CPAs from wage controls.

Extended price controls to Apr. 30, 1953.

Exempted from price controls all processed fruits and vegetables, which account for about 11% of the average household budget; also exempted rates, fees and charges of states, territories and possessions, a gesture toward state-owned liquor stores.

Ended rent controls on Sept. 30, except where local governing bodies take definite action to extend them to Apr. 30, 1953.

Killed Federal Reserve Board regulations on down payments and installment payments on housing, and permitted their restoration only when the annual rate of home construction passes the 1.2 million mark—about 100,000 above the present rate.

Extended authority for allocations and priorities to June 30, 1953.

REQUIRED that farm price supports on crops under price control be maintained at no less than 90% of parity.

Prohibited the establishment of price ceilings on fluid milk which conflict with those established by a state regulatory body.

Prohibited reimposition of restrictions on installment buying, which were suspended recently.

One of the House amendments killed in conference, sponsored by Rep. Talle (R. Ia.), would have ended price controls on June 30 on all materials not rationed or allocated.

How Your Congressman Voted On Prices, T-H, Wages

Here are three key roll calls by which the House of Representatives created "a palpable fraud" in extension of the Defense Production Act.

They cover the three key questions of wiping out price ceilings, "requesting" use of a Taft-Hartley injunction against the CIO Steelworkers, and is junking the Wage Stabilization Board. All votes were on June 26.

Column No. 1 details the roll call on the Talle Amendment. This would have wiped out virtually all existing price ceilings. It was approved by a 210 to 182 vote.

Column No. 2 details the roll call on the Smith Amendment, which proposed breaking the steel strike with a T-H injunction. It was adopted by a 228 to 164 vote.

Column No. 3 details the roll call on the Lucas Amendment, which would kill the present WSB, set up a new agency with a majority of public members. It was adopted by a 256 to 138 vote.

In all three tabulations, R is a vote against the amendment, W is a vote for the amendment, X is a vote paired against the amendment, Z is a vote paired for the amendment, and A is absent or not voting.

Wage Talks Open

CIO Rubber Workers on July 7 will open wage negotiations in New York with U. S. Rubber, the largest of the Big Four rubber companies.

Bargaining covers 35,000 workers in 19 URW locals.

WATERMELONS and how to tell a ripe one didn't show on the curriculum for the CIO School for the Upper South at Monteagle, Tenn., but self-styled experts gave instruction at a field day. Students in the dissecting laboratory are, left to right, Ray Jackson, Clothing Workers; Bill Carey, Woodworkers; A. R. Hickman, Local Industrial Union 1784, and Carol Graham, wife of the CIO-PAC delegate, Robert Graham. CIO members from five southern states attended the school.

McCarran Bill Wins Over Veto

BITTER ATTACKS by several liberal Senators on the McCarran "Iron Curtain" immigration bill failed to prevent Congress from over-riding President Truman's veto of the measure.

The bill was enacted into law when the Senate voted 57 to 26, one more vote than the two-thirds needed to defeat the veto. The House previously voted 278 to 113 to nullify the President's action.

Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) called the bill "racist, restrictionist and reactionary."

He added that the measure "plays straight into the hands of the Communists."

"Don't slap at, don't insult, the millions of fine citizens who have come to us from countries of eastern Europe," he pleaded. He apparently was referring to the perpetuation of the 1942 quota system which foes of the measure claimed would discriminate against eastern Europeans and others.

Lehman begged his colleagues not to "make second-class citizens" of naturalized Americans and subject them to "the fear of deportation."

Sen. Pastore (D. R. I.) said heatedly the quota system was "born in bigotry, created in hate and reaffirmed here today." He declared that the bill would "perpetuate and reestablish bigotry" for a long time to come.

Absenteeism in the Senate during the debate was deplored by Sens. Humphrey (D. Minn.) and Benton (D. Conn.)

The conservative New York Times could not stomach Congress's action.

In an editorial entitled "Victory for a Bad Bill," the newspaper declared that congressmen who acted to override the veto "voted to retain a quota system which as Mr. Truman said, 'discriminates, deliberately and intentionally, against many of the peoples of the world'; to shut out many who need a refuge against Communist tyranny; to subject our own citizens returning from abroad to what Mr. Truman called 'serious risk of unreasonable invasions of privacy'; to empower the Attorney General to deport aliens who have a 'purpose' to do something wrong; to impose different requirements on native born citizens of foreign parentage from those imposed on other citizens; and to restrict or eliminate judicial reviews of certain cases in which citizenship has been denied by legislative action.

"This legislation is unfair and unwise. It is hard to understand how so many legislators with fairly good voting records stood for it."

Truman Refugee Plea Shelved

Hope for action at this session of Congress on President Truman's request for special legislation to admit 300,000 refugees to the U. S. in the next three years was shelved by the House Judiciary Committee last week.

A subcommittee headed by Rep. Walter (D. Pa.) recommended a bill to carry out the President's recommendations, but the full committee shipped it back for further consideration.

One representative commented "the committee buried the bill without benefit of clergy."

Humphrey Raps Demo Vote Record

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) castigated his Democratic colleagues and the State Dept. for their support of the McCarran "Iron Curtain" immigration bill despite President Truman's veto.

"When my party helps to emasculate the controls bills, refuses to do anything about 'wetbacks,' and helps to pass such an immigration bill, it's got a lot of explaining to do to the people," he said.

He was particularly incensed by the State Dept.'s indorsement of the measure, which Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) noted just before the Senate vote.

"The State Dept. ran out on its principles and I hold it responsible," Humphrey said. He added that the department "knuckled under" to McCarran, who is chairman of the Senate Appropriations subcommittee handling State Dept. funds.

CIO Backs Farmers On Kansas Flood Plan

THE CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation, after a study of the flood problem in the Kaw River Valley of Kansas, has joined forces with farm groups in the area to oppose a Pick-Sloan dam in the Blue River.

The CIO group also endorsed the Dept. of Agriculture plan for harnessing flood waters in the Blue River Valley which last summer poured into the overburdened Kaw to help lay waste thousands of acres of rich farm lands and devastate the Kansas City area.

The Blue flows into the Kaw from the north about 125 miles west of Kansas City, where the Kaw—also known as the Kansas—meets the Missouri River.

The Pick-Sloan plan calls for construction of a dam on the Blue at Tuttle Creek, just above its meeting with the Kaw. With three smaller dams that would be necessary, it would cost more than $100 million, flood 90,000 acres of irreplaceable farm land, send 160 farm families in search of new homes and wipe out several small farm villages.

The Dept. of Agriculture alternate plan is of the watershed management type. It calls for about 160 small detention dams in the hills above the Blue Valley, terracing on farms, more grass and cover crops, grassed waterways, to slow down drainage, strip cropping, contour plowing and similar practices.

It would cost about the same as the Pick-Sloan plan, but the farmers themselves would pay some $30 million. The work would require about the same period of time and the effect on flood control would be about the same—but the 90,000 acres and the homes and villages of the people who own and work them would be preserved.

The CIO committee met in the Swedish Lutheran Church in Garrison, Kan., which would be inundated if the Tuttle Creek dam is built. It conferred with representatives of the Blue Valley Farmers Association, Kansas Farmers Union, Kansas Grange and Kansas Farm Bureau.

Congress authorized the Tuttle Creek dam in 1939, but the farmers have managed to block appropriations for it. This year the House made no appropriation, but the Senate authorized $10 million, and the bill is now headed for conference.

THE committee sent a telegram to Senate conferees—those from the House have not been named—urging the Dept. of Agriculture plan.

"We strongly recommend," it added, "in the interest of the promptest and most effective flood prevention at Kansas City and elsewhere in Kansas, that all appropriations for Tuttle Creek dam be denied pending congressional consideration of Agriculture program and pending congressional study of recommendations of the President's Missouri Valley Authority."

The telegram was signed by Anthony W. Smith, committee secretary, and Nathan E. Cowan, CIO legislative director.

Other committee members who attended were Pres. Joseph Fisher of the Utility Workers; Reg. Dir. Chester Dusten of Portland, Ore.; Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler of Los Angeles; Pres. Clarence Palmer of the Utah State CIO Council; Sec.-Treas. William Butler of the Colorado CIO Council; Sec.-Treas. Rodney C. Jacobson of the Minnesota CIO Council; Reg. Dir. A. R. Kinstley, alternate for Sec.-Treas. James Davis of the Missouri CIO Council; and Wayne Gray, alternate for Vice Pres. Thomas Jones of the Communications Workers.

Southern CIO Students Meet At Highlander

STUDENT unionists from five southern states and 10 different unions attended the seventh annual CIO School at Highlander Folk School in Monteagle, Tenn.

The 38 students came from North and South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi and Tennessee, and the CIO Rubber Workers with 10 students had the largest delegation.

From two leading educators, the worker-students heard warnings that organized labor must help defend the free public school system from attacks by extreme right wing groups.

Willard Goslin, ousted former superintendent of schools at Pasadena, Calif., and now at George Peabody College in Nashville, Tenn., and Harold Benjamin, also of the Nashville school, gave similar warnings.

Goslin pointed out that if the nation gets a second-rate school system, workers' children are stuck with it, while Benjamin protested the attempts of small groups to dictate to teachers.

Other sessions at the school featured discussions of the steel strike, impact of the Tennessee Valley Authority on the South, and religion and organized labor.

K-F Pensioners Get Medical Benefits

The CIO Auto Workers have reached agreement with Kaiser-Frazer Corp. adding company-paid medical - surgical - hospital benefits to all retired employes and their dependents.

The agreement also raised temporary disability payments for regular employes from $30 to $36 a week, with 26 weeks coverage.

SOLVING PROBLEMS of striking Steelworkers is job of CIO Community Services Committee, Dir. Leo Perlis (seated) explains at session on strike relief during recent training institute at Bear Mountain, N. Y. Standing is Andrew W. L. Brown, CIO Auto Workers Community Services Dept., who was chairman of the meeting.

INTERNATIONAL incident was narrowly averted when East German cop tried to stop Henry C. Fleisher (right), CIO publicity director and editor of CIO News, from taking photos on inter-zone bridge in Berlin.

HAND ON PISTOL, cop leaves Fleisher and runs over to O. Englund, of Swedish white collar workers' union, who also was taking snapshots. Russian soldiers watched from East zone as he grabbed at Englund's camera and later attempted to wrestle him across the border line into Red territory.

HIS GRIP on Englund broken by German labor editor (in light suit in previous photo), cop heads back to his own side of bridge, hand still on holster. Communist resort to force took place on tour of Berlin during ICFTU meetings.

(By Radio from Berlin)

EXPANSION of free trade unionism and maintenance of liberty in the face of Communist pressure accented the opening sessions of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trades Unions General Council in Berlin.

Meeting at Praelast Schoenberg, one of the few modern auditoriums in the bomb-scarred, beleaguered city, approximately 80 delegates from every continent buckled down to five days' study of many problems.

Included were wages, prices, productivity, labor in colonial areas, the Schumann Plan and North Atlantic Treaty Organization problems, and ICFTU help to educate and organize workers in underdeveloped areas.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president and director of organization, in a major speech focussed attention on CIO concepts of militant trade unionism.

"The union which ignores the problems of prices, wages and productivity, which does not place these matters first on its working agenda," he said, "cannot in the long run provide service and progress for its members and for the community in which it lives."

Some people abroad, he said, may believe that the CIO was born "with a silver spoon in its mouth" and gets its economic advances handed on silver platters. In actual fact, he continued, CIO unions "have fought their way to acceptance by the corporations."

Haywood said CIO unions know that new machinery, new processes and higher output can produce higher living standards —but labor insists on a fair share of productivity's fruits.

He cited the strike of the CIO Steelworkers as the latest struggle of a CIO union for fair sharing of the wealth. The convention was expected to send a message of greeting and support to the steel union before adjourning.

CIO delegates played leading roles in the convention. Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers was appointed to the committees on standing orders and colonial problems.

Michael Ross, director of the CIO Dept. for International Affairs, was named to the Schumann Plan committee and CIO European Rep. Victor G. Reuther to the NATO committee. Henry C. Fleisher, CIO publicity director, was to report publications committee recommendations.

Haywood on July 4 was to join German trade union leaders in placing a wreath on the grave of a victim of Nazism.

The Fight For Codetermination

By VICTOR G. REUTHER
CIO Representative in Europe

THE STORY of the fight for a progressive and uniform general codetermination law in Germany is told in the steadfast struggle and solidarity of the German trade unions.

It is a story of a fight for a democratic Germany, with a voice for labor in industry, carried on with strong determination to win over the opposition of conservative and reactionary forces in control of the German federal government.

The pendulum can swing one way or the other.

The story begins with the granting of political sutonomy to West Germany. Since that time labor has been in constant conflict with the government.

Labor has had to battle reactionary employers on the one hand and reactionary elements in government. To a large extent these elements have had an upper hand. Price controls have been lifted, shooting prices skyward and cutting real wages.

And in the field of codetermination, the government has sided completely with management.

In the face of these events, the unions launched in 1950 a fight for codetermination in the basic industries, such as iron, steel and the coal mines.

Tension mounted in the wake of broken promises and intimations that the rights accorded by the occupation authorities covering codetermination in the steel industry would be abrogated as soon as the federal government recovered full sovereignty. This spurred a strike vote among metal workers and miners.

The government initially took no action because it was sure the Allies would enjoin the strike. But the Allies failed to act largely because of the intervention of American unions.

THE GERMAN government thus found itself bound to negotiate a "Law for Codetermination in Basic Industries" covering steel and coal. The pledge was made that a similar law extending codetermination to all industries would eventually be enacted.

The major criticisms leveled by the DGB against the federal draft were that:

1. Works councils were divorced from trade unions, becoming the official organs of the plant.

2. The provision of Allied Control Council Law 22 and various state laws whereby the works council would cooperate with the trade unions was completely left out.

3. It covered only private industry. Public service and administrations were excluded.

4. The right of codetermination in wage matters, working conditions and job classifications was taken from the works councils.

When the draft law of the federal government was submitted to the Bundestag for a second reading, the executive board of the DGB met on Apr. 1 to line up local union support for a program of action.

Ten days later, Pres. Christian Fette of the DGB outlined his plan for "guerilla warfare." He proposed progressive work stoppages in large cities hitting at vital industries, transportation and utilities, and large mass demonstrations.

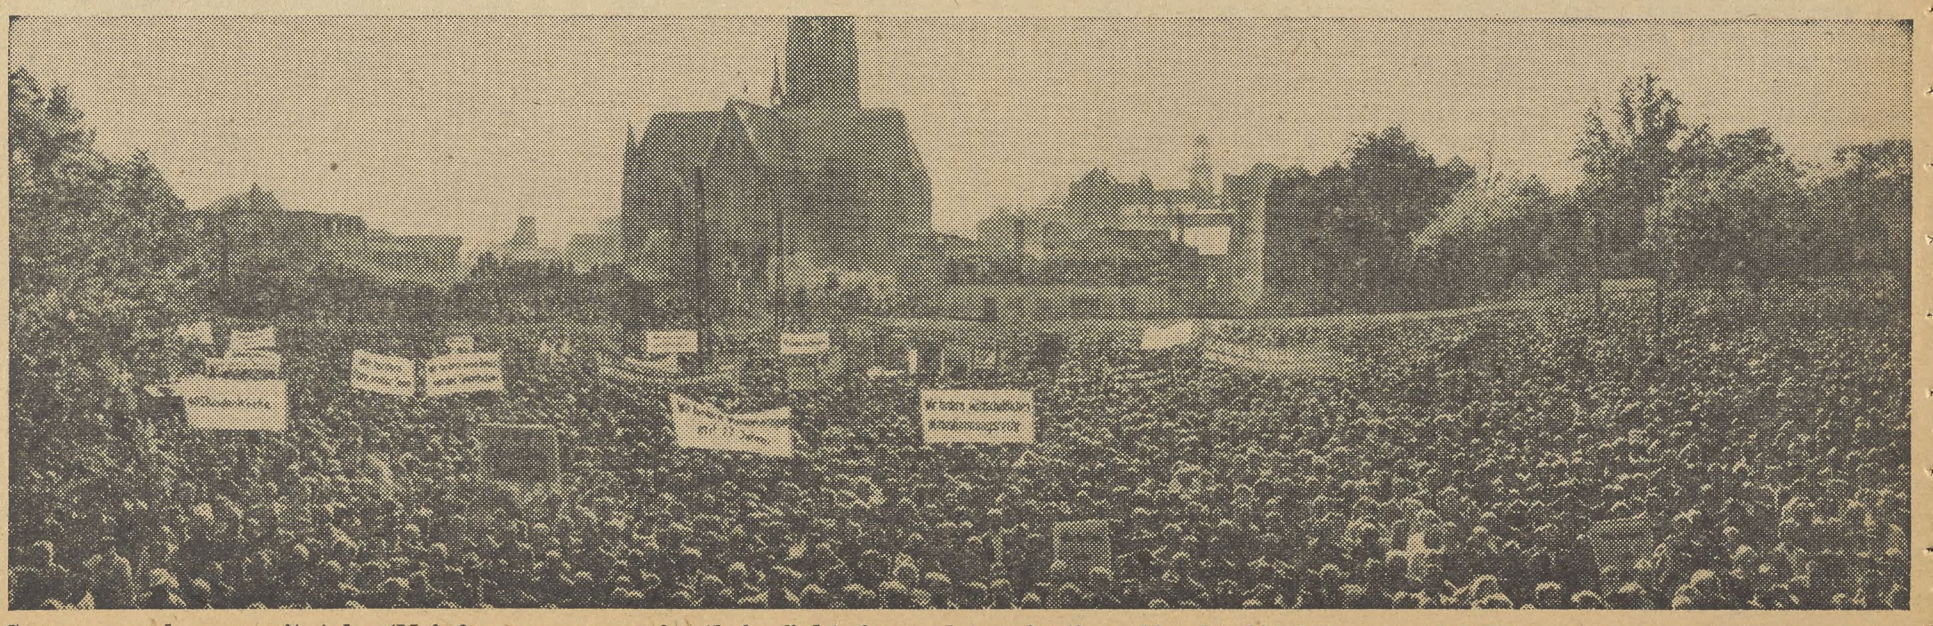
The first of the dramatic mass meetings were held on May 15 in Dusseldorf, Cologne and Brunswick. The next day meetings were held in Hamburg and Mannheim. More than 100,000 persons were massed in Hamburg; 80,000 in Frankfurt, and 50,000 in Dusseldorf and Munich.

These were followed by mass demonstrations in Berlin, Frankfurt, Bochum, Bielefeld and Reutlingen, Kassel and Lubeck.

A 30-minute strike of all workers in Bavaria, Munich and Nuerenberg was joined by workers in Oberhausen, Geldern and Kleve on May 26.

Other demonstrations were held in many other cities.

The magnitude of the DGB campaign and the impressive determination of all of the German workers are indicative of the stakes involved.



German workers won't take 'No' for an answer in their fight for codetermination. Nearly 100,000 were at DGB protest meeting in Frankfurt.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

(CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, whose column regularly appears in this space, is in Berlin for meetings of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. In his absence, here is a digest of CIO election victories.)

SEC.-TREAS. Martin Grayson of the CIO Lithographers, reports three representation election victories for the ALA. At the Bradford-Robinson Co., Denver, Colo., Rep. William Etter and Local Pres. George Lentz headed the successful election campaign.

At the Storm Printing Co., Dallas, Tex., where the vote was ALA-CIO 6, no union 1, Etter directed the drive. A consent election was won in the lithographic department of the Bon Marche Store, Seattle, Wash., through the capable direction of Intl. Rep. Ace Burnett.

National Dir. John Riffe of the CIO Organizing Committee reports the following representation election victories in the South: Willis Hines Lumber Co., Inc., Kinston, N. C., eligible 52, CIO Woodworkers 37, no union 12, challenged 2; Montague Betts Co., Lynchburg, Va., eligible 53, CIO Steelworkers 33, no union 17; William & McKeithan Lumber Co., Pollockville, N. C., eligible 115, IWA-CIO 110, no union 0; Harris Hardwood Co., Roanoke, Va., eligible 135, IWA-CIO 84, no union 43, void 2, challenged 6; Shaw Warehouse, Birmingham, Ala., eligible 18, CIO Retail & Wholesale Union 8, no union 6; Solomon Manufacturing Co., Leeds, Ala., eligible 174, CIO Clothing Workers 83, no union 63, challenged 3.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that Phillips Petroleum Products Pipeline Co. employes working from Borger, Tex., to Denver, Colo., favored the CIO Oil Workers by a vote of 10 to 1 for the AFL. George Perks of the Oil Workers local in Denver deserves the credit for this victory.

Act. Reg. Dir. Frank Cronin reports a representation election victory in three plants of the Harrison Sheet Steel, Chicago, with the CIO Auto Workers polling 255, AFL Teamsters 100. Intl. Rep. Charles Fortune handled the organizing campaign. At the U. S. Rubber Co., Chicago, the UAW-CIO won by 28 to 1 for no union.

Reg. Dir. Ben Henry reports that in a run-off election at the Iowa Battery Works, Sioux City, the UAW-CIO defeated the AFL by a vote of 185 to 181. Intl. Reps. Robert Roberts and Marshall Hughes handled the drive.

Reg. Dir. William Taylor reports the CIO Electrical Workers won a representation election at the Magnavox Co., Paducah, Ky., by a vote of 251 to 39 for the AFL and 6 for UE. Intl. Rep. Larry Williams handled the campaign.

Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett reports the following IUE-CIO representation election victories: Seeger Refrigerator Co., Evansville, Ind., IUE-CIO 15, UE 7, IBEW-AFL 6; Electric Equipment, Detroit, Mich., IUE 13, IBEW-AFL 0; Machine Products Co., Minneapolis, Minn., IUE-CIO 11, no union 2; Hertner Electric Co., Bedford, O., IUE-CIO 32, UE 21, challenged 1.

Reg. Dir. Joe Walsh reports a 68 to 4 representation election victory for the CIO Furniture Workers at Washington Cabinet Industries, Milton, Pa. Union Reps. Neil Hickey and Willard Harrison directed the drive. The CIO Textile Workers won an important representation election at three plants of Plaza Mills, in Selinsgrove, Middleburg and Beavertown, Pa., by a vote of 213 to 147 for no union. Union Rep. William McCraig was in charge.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports these victories: Excello Co., Lima, O., UAW-CIO 292, no union 41, with UAW Dir. Joe Tomasi assisted by Walter Seymour handling the situation; United Dairy Co. stations at Athens and Waterford, O., where the Dairy Div. of the CIO Retail & Wholesale Union won by a vote of 30 to 11 against.

Reg. Dir. A. R. Kinstley reports that in a representation election at Hill's Rendering Co., Iola, Kan., the CIO Packinghouse Workers won by a vote of 7 to 3 for no union. UPWA Rep. Frank Brown directed the drive.

Reg. Dir Irwin DeShetler reports that LIU-CIO 78 won a representation election at the Giberson Shed, Brentwood, Calif., by a vote of 169 to 33 against. Local Rep. Don Bolt and CIO Reps. Ken Gillie and James Spangler deserve the credit for this win.

Sec.-Treas Ross Blood reports that the CIO Shipbuilders won a representation election at the Regan Forge and Engineering Co., San Pedro, Calif., by a vote of 40 IUMSWA to 18 IAM-AFL.

'Fair Trade' Bill Voted

THE SENATE last week passed 64-16 and sent to the White House a price-boosting "fair trade" bill.

The bill would overthrow a Supreme Court decision against fair trade laws in 45 states. The laws permit a manufacture and a retailer to sign a minimum price agreement which then becomes binding on all the retailers in the state. The high court ruled that merchants who did not sign such agreements were not bound by the law.

Sen. Morse (R. Ore.) predicted that President Truman will veto the measure. With Congress scheduled to adjourn July 5, he could kill the bill by a "pocket veto" by letting it lie on his desk without signature for 12 days.

N.Y. Tenement Fire Deaths Bring New Demand For Housing Bill

AROUSED by New York City tenement fires—one of which killed seven members of one family — a number of House Democratic members from New York last week mapped an action program against firetraps.

This program was developed at a Washington meeting with CIO representatives:

1. Reps. Multer and Dollinger reintroduced the middle income housing bill that would enable cooperatives and other nonprofit organizations to build new housing on money borrowed on long term, low interest rates. (The bill was defeated by the Senate in 1950.)

2. The nine congressmen issued a statement supporting the bill as a long-range means of eliminating the 50,000 fire-trap dwellings.

3. The Public Housing Administration was urged to fireproof housing built under the Lanham Act to provide temporary housing for those now living in unsafe tenements.

4. Rep. Celler said that he would seek to have the platform committee of the Democratic convention support the middle income housing bill.

5. Chairman Rains (D. Ala.) of the House Banking and Currency subcommittee will be asked to conduct a hearing in New York City to determine what can be done under existing statutes to eliminate substandard and dilapidated tenements.

The latest New York tenement fire resulted in newspaper exposes revealing that a half million persons live in tenements and other flimsy buildings in the metropolitan area. Leo Goodman, secretary of the CIO Housing Committee, arranged a display of the newspaper stories at the meeting, which was held under the auspices of the committee, the New York State and City CIO Councils, and New York City CIO regional office.

Besides Multer, Dollinger and Celler, other representatives at the meeting were O'Toole, leader of the New York City House Democratic delegation; Edna Kelly, Klein, McGrath, Rooney and Heller. A number of legislative representatives of CIO international unions were present, including Gardner Jackson, CIO Electrical Workers, and Elizabeth Christman, Clothing Workers.

Rep. Javits (R.-L. N. Y.) last week introduced a low income housing bill which would make available a federal loan fund of $3 billion at 3% over a six-year period and mortgage money guaranteed by the FHA to cooperatives, other non-profit groups and long term investors.

EVERYBODY'S HAPPY in this discussion of unions and labor legislation between Ted F. Silvey, secretary of the CIO Community Services Committee (seated), and five delegates to the National YMCA Youth and Government Assembly in Washington. Silvey is a member of the YMCA's National Board. Unions Publish Tacoma Daily

Six newpaper unions is Tacoma, Wash.—on strike or laid off for 10 weeks—have begun publication of the Tacoma Reporter, a tabloid daily.

The Seattle-Tacoma local of the CIO Newspaper Guild joined with AFL crafts in publishing the paper. The first issue was sold out.

AFL Pressmen have been on strike since April, while other crafts have been idled.

AMA Tosses In Sponge, Ends Long Fight Against Co-op

A 20-YEAR fight waged by a local society of the American Medical Association against an Elk City, Okla., cooperative hospital ended last week when the AMA threw in the sponge.

It was a complete victory for the co-op hospital, founded in 1931 and engaged in open warfare with the County Medical Association ever since.

Under the terms of the agreement, the County Medical Association admitted to membership all doctors on the hospital staff. All of them are fully qualified physicians. Then the American College of Surgeons approved the hospital.

Action came only after the hospital instituted legal action against the medical society. After long legalistic delays, trial date was set and deposition of witnesses taken.

At this time, leading doctors of the Medical Society indicated a desire to settle by mutual agreement, rather than before a judge.

The agreement which was worked out included a joint statement which read: "The settlement can best be described not as a victory for either side, but as a great triumph for the health of the people of Beckham and surrounding counties. . . . The health of the people of Western Oklahoma has an importance which far transcends the differences existing between the parties."

Power Lobby Inquiry Urged By Tennessee CIO

"THE PRIVATE power industry in America must be cleansed," declares a resolution of the Tennessee CIO Industrial Union Council inserted in the Congressional Record last week by Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.).

"We as citizens of Tennessee, have personally experienced the growth and achievement of TVA," the resolution says, "know that low cost power is vital to a full production economy. The assurance and provision of an abundant supply of power at lowest possible cost is a public responsibility."

The Council called upon law enforcement bodies and Congress to "expose, punish and publicize unethical, immoral or illegal practices" and demanded an immediate investigation "of all expenditures of moneys by power monopolists for propaganda, lobbying, political activity, or corruption of public servants or institutions."

Senate Ups Old Age Aid

THE SENATE has added several improvements to the House-passed revision of the Social Security program.

One improvement would boost public assistance payments to the needy aged, blind and totally disabled by $5 a month, and $3 a month for each dependent child.

The Senate also raised to $100 a month the amount of money persons on the old age insurance rolls can earn without forfeiting their claim to benefits. The present limit is $50, and the House had already raised it to $70.

The House finally passed the bill after defeating it earlier. The about-face was due to a change of heart by the Republicans, who refused again to follow the advice of the American Medical Association to defeat the measure after being deluged by letters protesting their earlier action.

The measure went to a conference committee where an attempt was being made to iron out the differencs.

Congress Fizzles Away And Goes Whoosh

By MILTON PLUMB

LIKE MANY other duds this year's Fourth of July firecrackers, the 82nd Congress has fizzled out on the American people's expectations.

Despite all the hissing, sizzling and costly political pyrotechnics connected with its performance, it died out with a disconcerting phoof instead of going off with a bang.

Because the Dixiegop reactionary coalition of Southern Democrats and Republicans which ran the 82nd Congress was held together only by a desire to obstruct all Fair Deal proposals, its record has been totally negative. It has been a "do-nothing" Congress at a time when the nation can't afford do-nothing lawmakers.

The state of world affairs throughout its year and a half of existence demanded a Congress with vision, courage and integrity. Instead, coalition control and the lack of strong Democratic leadership produced a Congress that has not taken wholeheartedly even one positive action for the common welfare.

L-L

Special interest lobbies found that the Dixiegops made ideal servants of their own selfish ends. The coalition, blinded by its partisan desire to embarrass the President, veered completely away from the Administration program and played directly into the hands of big business and special interest groups.

In its actions on nearly every major bill, the Congress showed a shocking disregard for the welfare, and even the safety and security, of the nation.

Many factors contributed to its shortcomings. But the basic cause was simply the failure of American voters to go the polls in sufficient numbers in 1950, a non-presidential election year. The actions of the 82nd "Horsemeat" Congress have been the penalty that has had to be paid as a result.

A second major cause was the dominant political motive behind the Dixiegop coalition. The alliance, as Sen. Morse (R. Ore.) has disclosed, came about through a deal between the Dixiecrats and the GOP leadership, whereby the former agreed to support Republican efforts to embarrass the Administration in return for a promise that the minority party would prevent a showdown on civil rights.

"There's been some talk, sir, that you lost face in your recent campaign against organized labor."

Another contributing factor—although it was more a symptom of the bankrupt coalition rule than a basic cause—was the Dixiegop effort to cover up legislative failures by staging a record number of useless investigations.

These coalition political operations consumed much time as well as a record amount of the taxpayers' money. Most investigations had nothing to do with pending legislation, but they cost several millions of dollars, exceeding by about a million even the previous all-time high set by the investigation-mad Republican 80th Congress.

Typical of the waste was the long rehash of U. S. Far Eastern policy 10 to 20 years ago by Sen. McCarran's committee looking into the Institute of Pacific Relations. The group spent hundreds of thousands of tax dollars, and was itself accused of using "methods like the Communists," which it supposedly was attacking.

The McCarran Committee, like others, served the Dixiegops' ends by keeping headlines and congressional attention focussed on a one-sided view of the Orient of the past. That gave the coalition "wrecking crew" a freer hand, as well as a cover-up, for its current legislative actions endangering Europe under the false guise of "economy."

In such an atmosphere, it is not surprising that absenteeism in the 82nd Congress reached the highest point in history. The do-nothing program was a paradise for loafers, and liberal Congressmen understandably — although inexcusably—were prone to stay away in disgust.

The votes 10 days ago on many crucial sections of the economic controls law show that less than half of the House was present and at least 100 were absent on nearly all of them. Only 18 Senators were on the floor when the Senate passed and sent to the White House the "iron curtain" immigration bill which will impose inestimable hardships and discriminations on literally millions of persons.

And only three Senators were present when—for the first time in history—the nation witnessed the shocking spectacle of a registered lobbyist being admitted to the floor of the Senate to advise and conferring with Sen. Holland (D. Fla.) during his remarks on the tidelands oil "steal" measure.

The latter action was typical of the general subservience of the 82nd Congress to special interest pressures. A few of the many lobbies that had outstanding success in their maneuvers against the public interest were:

The gas and oil interest, which got Congress to pass a "States rights" tidelands oil grab bill, vetoed by the President, which would have enabled them to "rob" the people of natural resources worth $40 billion.

The Association of American Railroads, which successfully killed off this country's last chance to participate with Canada in developing the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project, despite agreement by all military experts that it is needed for defence.

The National Association of Real Estate Boards and other landlord and mortgage interests, which succeeded in virtually killing rent controls and all but scrapping the defense housing program.

The drug lobby and big chain stores, which got Congress to vote a price-fixing bill that would cost consumers at least $2 billion a year in higher prices.

The meat and packing lobbies, which won and maintained a ban on livestock slaughter quotas, thereby boosting the price of meat and bringing back widespread blackmarketing of beef.

The many agricultural lobbies, which killed price ceilings on fresh fruits and vegetables and prevented action on a sound migrant labor law so that big corporation farms could continue to exploit illegal Mexican "wetbacks."

The American Medical Association, which prevented action on all public health measures, killed a pending proposal for aid to medical education, and succeeded on the first round in persuading the House to kill a bill for a small increase in social security payments to the old and disabled.

The steel industry, which persuaded Congress constantly to meddle on its side in the dispute with the CIO Steelworkers, to slap down the Wage Stabilization Board when it dared to try to recommend a fair settlement, and to deny the President adequate seizure powers while urging use of the discredited Taft-Hartley Act against the union.

Behind these lobbies in nearly all of their drives against the general interest for private gain stood the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers. Together, they made up the real important policy-makers of the "Horsemeat" Congress.

The most dangerous shortcomings of the Congress, however, were probably its failure to understand the serious world situation and take all the steps necessary to insure national survival. It cut military appropriations for U. S. forces by $5 billion beyond the point regarded by competent authorities as the absolute minimum for safety.

At the same time, it butchered the administration's foreign aid program so drastically that even Gen. Eisenhower called the cuts "uneconomic." It took this step despite warnings that the action leaves this country in much greater danger of attack.

The Congress, giving in to Dixiecrat pressure, struck another blow against U. S. prestige abroad by voting to shelve the long-overdue bills to confer statehood on Alaska and Hawaii. It also gave the Communists added ammunition for their misleading propaganda attacks on American democracy by burying all civil rights legislation and bottling up a bill to give home rule to the District of Columbia.

Rep. Bolling (D. Mo.) summed up the 82nd Congress aptly as "a case of the most backward part of the Democratic Party leading the whole Republican elephant around by the nose."

American voters next November will have a chance to show they have a much more sensitive sense of smell than an elephant.

What It Did . . .

PRICE CONTROLS: Passed a "fraud on consumers" economic controls bill that guarantees still higher profits through further inflation of prices to business while keeping wages frozen. The inflated prices brought on by the Capehart, Herlong and Butler-Hope Amendments enacted in 1951 are estimated to cost consumers more than $35 million.

HOUSING: Virtually wiped out the public housing program by reducing the number of units authorized from 75,000 to 35,000 for all succeeding years, despite urgent needs of defense workers. At the same time lifted federal rent controls from all but areas declared "critical."

TAXES: Passed a "tax-the-needy, spare-the-greedy" tax law that places big tax increases on low incomes and lets incomes over $50,000 and corporations off with small hikes. After voting only a 5% increase in the normal and surtax rates of corporation profits (individual income taxes under $50,000 went up at least 11%), it gave the corporations back most of this hike by making an unprecedented "gift" exempting them from paying the higher rate during the first three months of the year.

BUDGET: Despite record tax hike on poor and needy, Congress wrote so many loopholes into the tax law that it didn't raise enough to balance the budget and the government went in the red for the first time since 1946. It used phony cries of "economy" and grandstand hatchet slashes on key appropriations bills to cover up the fact that its favoritism to the rich and corporate interests meant it couldn't balance the books.

IMMIGRATION: Passed over President Truman's veto "Iron Curtain" immigration bill which imposes new restrictions on aliens and citizens alike, subjects them to thought control, and will work undue hardship on millions.

TIDELANDS: Voted to give to three states, and through them to the oil and gas interests, rich natural gas and oil deposits belonging to all the American people and worth more than $40 million. In doing so it rejected proposals that the income from this resource be used by the federal government to improve educational facilities in all 48 States.

. . . And Didn't Do

MUTUAL SECURITY PROGRAM: Failed to provide adequate funds to permit the U. S. to live up to commitments made at the Lisbon Conference for the building up of military and economic resources of friendly nations abroad. At the same time, slashed appropriations for U. S. armed forces to a point where military leaders say American security is threatened.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AND POWER PROJECT: Passed up what is probably its last opportunity to participate with Canada in developing the St. Lawrence Seaway, despite the fact that the joint project would have cost taxpayers nothing and brought untold benefits to the nation.

MONOPOLY: Took no steps to check widespread growth of monopoly which both the Federal Trade Commission and congressional committees warned was one of the dangerous results of defense spending. Continued many legislative loopholes benefitting big corporations despite corporation profits after taxes last year of nearly double the average for 1942-45.

CIVIL RIGHTS: Took no action on FEPC, anti-lynching, anti-poll-tax or anti-filibuster proposals, and shelved proposals for statehood for Hawaii and Alaska and home rule for the District of Columbia on racist grounds, despite the fact that Congress knew Communist cold war propaganda would make effective use of its failure to act.

LABOR: Did not repeal the Taft-Hartley Act, which the American people repudiated when they elected the 81st Congress to replace the 80th which enacted it, but voted instead to recommend that the President use T-H against the CIO Steelworkers, despite the fact that the union voluntarily postponed its strike longer than the 80-day period specified in the law.

FLOOD CONTROL AND CONSERVATION: Did nothing to promote the Missouri and Columbia Valley Authorities, despite serious floods along the former and a critical Northwest power shortage caused by a dry spell along the latter. Instead, merely poured hundreds of millions of dollars more into the patchwork program of emergency repair and piecemeal dam construction.

Murray Demands U. S. Smash 'Big Six' Steel Conspiracy

IT COMES IN HANDY—Little Kenneth Toozko, 4, tries to reach for his father's check as Louis Toozko, a striking CIO Steelworker, rolls jubilantly on the ground. Toozko was among 1000 USA-CIO strikers at the Crucible Steel Co.'s Harrison, N. J., plant who received two-weeks vacation pay, which came in handy in the sixth week of the nationwide strike. Last week the USA-CIO fired a double attack on the conspiracy of the "Big Six" steel companies which has blocked major contract settlements. It asked NLRB and Justice Dept. anti-trust action.

The steel strikers swung a double punch last week at the Big Six steel companies.

The CIO Steelworkers demanded the government crack down on the "veto" by major producers which has blocked fair settlements between the union and many steel firms.

Here's what the union did:

1. Through Pres. Philip Murray, asked Atty. Gen. James P. McGranery to direct the Justice Dept. Anti-Trust Div. to take "prompt and vigorous action" to break up a "combination and conspiracy" of the country's six largest steel producers to block settlement of the walkout.

2. Filed charges with the National Labor Relations Board accusing each of the same six companies of violating the Wagner Act by similarly entering into a "conspiracy and combination" to prevent collective bargaining with the union by both themselves and other producers.

Named in both instances were U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Republic, Jones & Laughlin, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, and Inland Steel.

This double-punch action brought a resumption of negotiations at Pittsburgh. The first meeting was held July 11, and sessions were continuing the next day at deadline for the CIO NEWS. The meeting was held at the request of industry representatives to discuss resuming iron ore production, but a union spokesman told a reporter that he might "assume" that all issues in the basic steel dispute were being discussed as well.

Murray, in making his request of McGranery, pointed out that the industry is shut down "due to the inability of the employes, represented by the United Steelworkers of America, CIO, to negotiate new collective bargaining agreements."

The fault, he maintained, is entirely that of the six industry leaders.

"It is my belief," he wrote, "based on the facts

Steel Union Strikes At 'Big Six' Conspiracy

available to me, that new collective bargaining agreements could be reached, and would have been reached, between the union and several of the companies but for a combination and conspiracy which the six largest steel companies have entered into to prevent any of them, or any of the smaller steel companies, from separately reaching agreement with the union."

Murray cited two main charges to the Attorney General:

1. "The six largest steel companies have entered into a combination and conspiracy to prevent any of those companies from reaching separate agreements with the union."

2. "These six companies have prevented and are preventing other companies which desire to consummate agreements with the union from consummating such agreements."

Murray continued:

"This conspiracy and the acts committed pursuant to it have prevented any one of the separate companies from settling the dispute with the union. If genuine collective bargaining were to take place between the unions and the several companies, the dispute, or a major portion thereof, would be promptly settled.

"The continuance of the present steel strike is a direct and immediate result of the unlawful combination and conspiracy between the six major companies, under which each of the companies is given a veto power over the collective bargaining of each of the other companies.

"You will appreciate that any combination which prevents a steel company and the union from putting into effect an agreement which is satisfactory to them, and thus deprives the nation of steel production, has an even greater impact adverse to the national welfare than it would have in normal times."

The bargaining sessions which took place in Washington June 5 to 9 at the behest of President Truman, Murray wrote, made it "additionally clear" that the six firms would not settle any disputed issue "unless other companies, many of whose employes are not represented by the union, consented to such agreement."

He cited the National Steel Corp., whose principal subsidiary is Weirton Steel, and the Armco Steel Co. as such firms.

"The union has at all times been prepared," he continued, "to meet with the representatives of any one of said companies and to reach and to put into effect an agreement which is mutually satisfactory.

"The purpose of the conspiracy between the companies is to prevent this from happening."

Murray accused the Big Six of threatening smaller companies, not parties to the conspiracy, with "economic warfare" to deter them from settling with the union.

"The companies party to the conspiracy," he explained, "control the major portion of steel production in the United States.

"They are the only producers of certain materials used by other small companies in the industry and they compete with these other smaller companies in the sale of steel products.

"By virtue of their dominant position in the industry, their tie-in with major sources of industry financing, and their control over essential materials, the leading companies can conduct economic warfare against the smaller companies.

"They have used the threat of such warfare to prevent any of the smaller companies from engaging in collective bargaining with the union in an effort to settle the current dispute . . .

". . . There are smaller companies in which the differences as to a new contract now existing between the six major companies and the union do not exist.

"In these cases both the union and the companies are in agreement as to the terms of a new contract. The companies, however, have been economically coerced by the larger companies into refusing to settle the current dispute with the union on such terms."

The NLRB charges were substantially the same as the accusation filed with the Justice Dept. They were filed by Arthur J. Goldberg, union general counsel, with George J. Bott, NLRB general counsel, and with NLRB regional directors in the areas where the firms have their headquarters.

The conspiracy and combination with which the Big Six are charged before the NLRB, the union maintained, is a direct violation of the duty of each company to bargain collectively in good faith as provided in Sec. 8(a) (5) of the National Labor Relations Act as amended. This also involves a charge of violating Sec. 8(a) (1), which protects employes from restraint or interference in the exercise of their rights.

The union asked that the NLRB, through Bott, issue complaints against the six companies and promptly seek an appropriate restraining order or injunction forcing the firms to end their violations of the law.

Bott began an investigation of the union's charges as a prelude to taking action.

The very day the union went to the NLRB, President Truman accused some steel companies, which he did not name, with "a conspiracy against the public interest." The result, he added, has been to prevent many producers from settling individually with the union.

And because of the conspiracy, he declared, he will not invoke the Taft-Hartley Act against the steel union.

'Nobody Is Strong Enough To Lick Us,' Murray Says

"The union is going to win this fight. Nobody is strong enough to lick us."

That prediction by CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray brought a roar of approval from 11,000 steelworkers at a strike rally last week in Duquesne, Pa.

Only time stands between the Steelworkers and victory in their fight for a 1952 contract, he said.

Murray accused Big Steel of "hypocrisy" and "misrepresentation" in their propaganda warfare against the union.

Waving copies of Big Steel's newspaper ads, which claimed only the union shop issue was at stake, Murray noted the industry had union shop agreements with the United Mine Workers and the Railroad Brotherhoods.

But Big Steel refused to sign such contracts with the Steelworkers, Murray noted, calling the union shop "un-American."

"I wonder if, when the miners' contract expires, it is the purpose of the steel industry to take the union shop provisions out of the new agreement?" Murray speculated aloud as the strikers cheered.

USA-CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes told the rally the steel companies "have already lost the fight."

"It is only a matter of time," he added.

How The Big Six Steel Firms Conspired To Block Pacts

The CIO Steelworkers, in charges filed with the National Labor Relations Board, has accused the country's six largest steel producers with conspiring and combining to prevent collective bargaining with the union, a violation of Sec. 8(a) (5) of the National Labor Relations Act as amended.

The charges were made against U. S. Steel, Bethlehem Steel, Republic Steel, Jones & Laughlin, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, and Inland Steel. Pertinent parts of the charge, identical in each case, follow:

ON MAR. 28, 1951, the Union received an invitation from the six companies for a joint collective bargaining session in New York City on Mar. 31, 1952.

The union has since learned that this joint meeting was called pursuant to an agreement between the six companies to the effect that none of the companies would be permitted to negotiate an agreement with the union unless this agreement was satisfactory to each one of the other companies entering into the agreement.

Meetings with the representatives of the six companies which had entered into this agreement failed to produce a settlement in the meetings which were called by the companies for Mar. 31 and in subsequent meetings, after the President had seized the industry, between Apr. 9 and 14.

Additional joint meetings were held in Washington on May 3 and 4, and on June 5 through June 9.

At each of these meetings the six major producers who had entered into this agreement refused to bargain with the union except on the premise that any agreement reached would have to be satisfactory to each one of the six companies.

In the bargaining sessions which took place in Washington between June 5 and June 9, it was additionally made clear to the union that the representatives of the six companies would not reach agreement with the union on any issue in dispute unless other companies, most of whose employes are not represented by the union, consented to such agreement.

These other companies are the Armco Steel Co. and the National Steel Corp. (whose principal subsidiary, the Weirton Steel Co., is not organized by the United Steelworkers of America).

The effect of this agreement between the six companies whose employes are represented by the union and the two companies, most of whose employes are not represented by the union, has been to prevent any one of those companies from meeting with the union to determine whether terms of settlement agreeable to the union and the particular company can be negotiated in collective bargaining, as required by the NLRA as amended.

Although the union participated in the joint collective bargaining sessions in an effort to reach an agreement, it did so without knowledge of the conspiracy herein set forth.

The union has at all times been prepared to meet with said companies and to reach and put into effect any agreement which is mutually satisfactory to the company and the union.

Meetings between representatives of the companies engaged in this conspiracy have taken place in New York City as recently as June 20 and in Cleveland, as recently as July 2. These meetings took place in pursuance of the conspiracy and at these meetings the companies participating in the conspiracy examined various proposals which had been tentatively agreed upon between the union and individual companies and resolved that since those proposals were not acceptable to each one of the conspiring companies, none of the companies would be permitted to agree to such proposals with the union.

The companies have further combined and conspired to prevent other companies, which are not parties to this conspiracy, from bargaining with the union.

THE COMPANIES party to the conspiracy control the major portion of steel production in the United States. They are the only producers of certain materials used by other smaller companies in the industry and they compete with these other companies in the sale of steel products.

By virtue of their dominant position in the industry and their control over essential materials the leading companies can conduct economic warfare against the smaller companies. And they have used the threat of such warfare to prevent any of the smaller companies from bargaining with the union in an effort to settle the current dispute.

The result of the conspiracy between the major steel companies has been, therefore, not only to prevent each of these companies from engaging in collective bargaining with the union, but also to prevent other smaller companies, not party to the conspiracy, from settling the current dispute with the union.

Thus, there are smaller companies in the industry in which the differences as to a new contract now existing between the six major companies and the union do not exist. In these cases both the union and the companies are in agreement as to the terms of a new contract. The companies, however, have been economically coerced by the larger companies into refusing to settle the current strike with the union on such terms.

The continuance of the present steel strike is a direct and immediate result of the unlawful conspiracy between the six major companies, under which each is given a veto power over the collective bargaining of each of the other companies.

Steel Ad Barrage Costs $50 Million

The steel companies' "saturation barrage" of full page anti-union newspaper ads has cost some $50 million—and the American people will pay the bill.

Forbes, a management magazine, gave the estimate of $50 million as to what the 63 steel companies have spent in their newspaper, radio and TV campaign to bamboozle the public. It estimated the cost of full page ads at a half-million dollars a day. And another $1 million has been spent on five million pieces of direct mail.

Actually, the public will foot the bill for the steel propaganda barrage, since the companies can charge it off on their income tax as "a cost of doing business."

(LPA)

Its' A Secret In Steel Towns

The steel industry carried the fight against the steel union into the newspapers again last week in a series of full page ads, but apparently kept it secret from Bethlehem employes in the East.

At any rate, the ads ran in a large number of papers in many cities. They did not, however, appear in newspapers in Bethlehem, Pa., the company's headquarters; Baltimore, where its Sparrows Point is located; Johnstown, Lebanon or Williamsport, Pa., sites of other plants, nor in Harrisburg and other Pennsylvania cities whose papers circulate widely in Bethlehem Steel communities.

Nobody bothered to explain.

Chicago Story: One Machine vs. Another

(By a Special Correspondent)

CONVENTION HALL, Chicago—The Republican party launched its drive for a 1952 victory in an atmosphere of personal bitterness almost without precedent in its party history.

It nominated—on the first ballot and after a bit of fast political footwork—General Dwight D. Eisenhower, a professional soldier, whose political lieutenants now call him "Mister."

And it presented to the American electorate a 6000-word platform which represented approximately halfway progress from the dinosaur age to the spirit of modern America.

Eisenhower's quick victory over the old guard Taft machine came as something of a surprise even to his confident backers, whose most optimistic estimate had been 580 Eisenhower votes on the first roll call.

When the clerk intoned "Virgin Islands—one vote for Eisenhower," the end of the official roll call, the vote stood this way:

Eisenhower 595
Taft 500

Gov. Warren of California had 81 votes, Harold Stassen of Minnesota 20, and Gen. MacArthur, the fading soldier, 10.

Stassen's Minnesota backers immediately changed the 19 votes they gave their one-time governor, in the race for what he could get out of it, to Eisenhower. That was the margin of victory.

Other states, quick to desert the sinking Taft ship, rushed to change their votes.

For Taft, senior senator from Ohio and co-author of the Taft-Hartley Act, the convention spelled finish to 12 years of presidential ambitions.

Taft fought for the nomination in 1940 and lost to Wendell Willkie, fought in 1948 and lost to Thomas Dewey, fought this year and lost to Eisenhower—and three strikes are out.

Eisenhower's convention victory means he'll run on a platform noteworthy for:

1. Bitter accusations alleging the Democrats to be responsible for everything from the First World War to the high cost of living.

2. A complete retreat from the GOP's civil rights stand of recent years for "adequate enforcement" by means of federal legislation of the "right" to non-discriminatory employment "in all the Republic." Southern opposition—plus negative stands by both Eisenhower and Taft—forced the retreat.

Almost from the opening gavel, the Republican convention was marked by bitter wrangling.

On one side was the tough old guard of Sen. Taft—the hard core of primitive Republicanism in the isolationist Midwest and the "rotten borough" South.

On the other was a coalition of Eastern and West Coast "internationalist" Republicans.

Eisenhower, while frankly admitting ignorance on most domestic issues and experiencing obvious discomfort in dealing with things political, had the expert backing of the Dewey machine.

Even before the nomination roll calls, the Eisenhower coalition and handed Taft three terrific lacings—despite old guard control of the convention machinery.

They walloped Taft in the first showdown rules test on the opening day, and twice walloped him again by voting to throw out his rotten-borough delegations from Georgia and Texas and to seat pro-Eisenhower factions. Then they tightened the rules to reduce power of Southern GOP elements in the future.

They gave Taft one consolation—the platform specifically named the Taft-Hartley Act, favored its "restoration" and recited its alleged virtues for "the working man" and unions. It didn't mention any of its benefits to employers who don't like unions.

With Taft in ironclad control of convention machinery—but not the delegates—practically every speaker was a Taftite, and McCarthy-like assaults on Democrats as connivers with treason were frequent.

That's another problem Ike will have to deal with in the future.

GOP In 6000 Words Hands Labor Bum Deal

By BOB SENSER
Special Correspondent

THE REPUBLICAN National convention last week came up with a platform that lambasted the New Deal and the Fair Deal—and then offered the American worker and his family a Bum Deal.

To explain this, superstitious people can point to the place where the hearings of the platforms "Labor and Welfare" subcommittee were held: In the Conrad Hilton Hotel's Meeting Room 13.

But it was a different kind of number jinx that kept the platfrom from being improved. Delegates were so busy making tabulations in the race for the presidential nomination that they scarcely paid any attention to Sen. Millikin (R. Col.) as he droned out the 6000 words written by the platform committee.

But, listening or not, the 1206 delegates gave their unanimous endorsement to a program which praised the do-nothing GOP record in the "awful 80th Congress" and put the Republicans:

●—Against rent control, except for "defense production" areas where there are "critical housing shortages."

●—Against repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

●—Against "the president's seizure of plants and industries to force settlement of labor disputes."

●—Against "all-powerful federal socialistic valley authorities."

●—Against national health insurance.

●—Against federal aid to education. (Here the platform writers forgot the voting record of "Mr. Republican" himself.)

●—Against "injurious price and wage controls."

●—Against the federal government keeping the off-shore oil reserves.

The Republicans were in favor of some things too. Among these was a proposal for "a more efficient and frequent mail delivery service."

They also came out in favor of statehood for Alaska and Hawaii (a perennial plank regularly ignored by most Republicans in Congress) and added statehood for Puerto Rico.

They likewise favored extension of some social security benefits (ignoring the record of many GOP lawmakers who have consistently voted to the contrary); called for "equal pay for equal work regardless of sex" but failed to mention race, religion or nationality; and called for a "thorough study of universal pay-as-we-go pension plan," an obvious attempt to woo Townsend Plan backers.

The platform was silent on many pressing workers' problems which the CIO had pointed out in pre-convention hearings.

Completely ignored in the platform were:

● The pressing need for public housing.

● The need for increasing the federal minimum wage from 75 cents an hour to a more realistic figure. CIO had urged $1.25 an hour.

● The plight of thousands of migratory farm workers.

Biggest retreat came in the field of civil rights. CIO had urged the GOP to "make a real pledge of human rights and carry it into effect."

But the platform draftees chose instead to offer a flimsy plank.

The Republicans declared the protection of civil rights was the "primary responsibility of each state," but that the federal government "should take supplemental action," especially for "just and equitable treatment in the area of discriminatory employment practices."

Carefully designed to mean whatever any candidate wanted it to mean, this plank drew the backing of southern Republicans, who hailed it as a victory over those who wanted enforceable FEPC. It was also backed by New York delegate Harold Burton, leader of the pro-civil rights caucus, who said it could be interpreted as meaning just what the southerners said it didn't mean.

Further proof of the extent of the GOP retreat on this issue comes from comparison of this plank with the 1944 and 1948 platform. In 1944, the platform proposed a strong FEPC. In 1948, the platform asked "enactment and just enforcement" of a law against job bias.

There was no mention, in the current platform, of Senate Rule 22—the rule which permits a filibuster and thus effectively blocks all civil rights measures.

When the pro-civil rights delegates announced their support of the "mean-anything-or-mean nothing" plank, a vote on the entire platform was taken immediately.

Chairman Joe Martin ruled the platform had been adopted unanimously.

The only banner at the convention that made any reference to labor was a sign in the Ohio delegation. It said: "Bob Taft—A Real Friend of Labor." Three times the Ohioans tried to wave it on the convention floor. Three times it fell off its long pole. Finally they left it down.

Truman Pledges No-Quarter Fight On Dem. Platform

PRESIDENT Truman will give no quarter in fighting for a strong federal civil rights program in the Democratic Party platform.

His stand was reported by Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers, who said that the President promised to fight for the program he outlined last month at a speech at Howard Univ., Washington. Truman then called for FEPC, a federal anti-lynching law and a poll tax ban.

Reuther acted as spokesman for a committee of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights which is seeking the inclusion of a compulsory civil rights plank in the Republican and the Democratic platforms. The group already has appeared before the GOP Platform Committee and will appear July 17 before the Democratic committee.

Hate Mongers Busy In Background

PROFESSIONAL hawkers of hate were busy on the fringes of the Republican National Convention in Chicago.

But they were so unpopular with police, party officials and the delegates themselves that they couldn't distribute much of their literature.

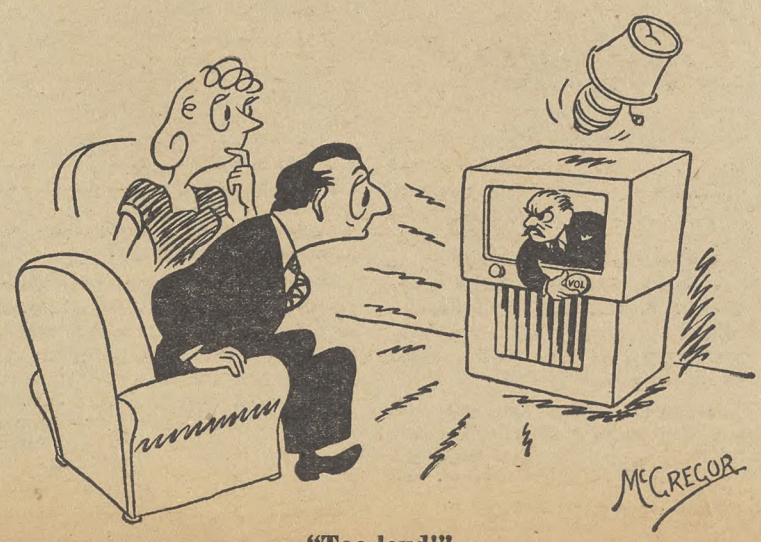
They had done their most systematic work, however, in the weeks before the convention. At least five groups of professional bigots mailed propaganda to all 1206 GOP delegates. Included in these mailings were anti-Semetic slurs directed against Gen. Eisenhower.

One of the hate groups, led by Gerald L. K. Smith, St. Louis bigot, held a big rally near the convention headquarters just before the sessions got under way. Smith's stooges attracted 400 persons to a "Draft MacArthur rally."

Smith himself carefully stayed out of sight, letting his top associates—Opal Tanner, Don Lehbeck, Renata Legamt and Fred George—run the show. They carefully avoided any racial or religious slurs at this rally, concentrating on blasting the Truman administration for "internationalism."

Gen. Douglas MacArthur was urged to make a public statement denouncing the backing of Smith and other bigots, like Joe Kamp, Robert H. Williams and the Rev. Gerald Winrod, who have latched on to him as their candidate.

MacArthur made no such direct statement.



"Too loud!"

How Cabbie Picks Winner, While Bertie Bats Zero

Here's some sage political advice for Chicagoans:

It was given a visiting CIO'er last week by a Chicago cab driver.

"I always decide who I'll vote for by reading the Tribune," he said, referring to the arch-reactionary paper of Col. Robert McCormick.

"Then I vote for whoever they oppose. That way we get good guys in office."

He paused a moment, then added, "Guess lots of folks must do the same. I can't remember when they ever backed a winner."

P.S.—The Tribune was backing Taft.

The Real Monopolists

For months the high-priced press agents of the big steel companies in their full page ads, the "me too" editorial writers of 99.44% of the daily press, and the labor-hating members of Congress have been trumpeting charges of "labor monopoly" to the heavens.

But the real monopoly in the eight-month-long steel deadlock is the combination that goes back 50 years to Andrew Carnegie, J. P. Morgan and Judge Gary—and it is a power that has grown stronger with each decade, despite all anti-trust laws to the contrary.

That monopoly is the tight alliance of industrial, financial and political power represented by the huge steel companies.

Here are some of the ways the steel monopolists have operated in contempt of the American people and of the steel workers:

- An unconcealed and arrogant demand for unjustified steel price increases of $12 a ton—a demand which amounts to nothing less than attempted extortion.
- An "I-am-the-king" defiance of all efforts of the government, first through the Wage Stabilization Board and later in White House sessions, to gain a fair steel settlement.
- And, now, a "blackball" veto by the Big Six steel companies of any and all basic steel producers or fabricators who independently seek to reach agreements with the CIO Steelworkers.

This stand of steel management is just what USA-CIO Pres. Philip Murray called it: a "combination and conspiracy against the public interest."

The facts of the Big Six steel conspiracy were in public view before the union requested corrective action by the Justice Dept. and the National Labor Relations Board. These facts demand that the government act.

Two Meetings In Berlin

Berlin, the bomb-scarred first city of Germany, was host to two meetings early in July. One was the General Council of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, representing most of the union members of the free world; the other was the "World Peace Council," whose delegates all parrotted the same Kremlin line of propaganda.

Berlin, though surrounded by the Soviet occupation forces and all but cut in two by Russian directives, is a strong union town. Its people, having lived through the hell of Nazi dictatorship and war, have had some experience —both pre-war and post-war—with dictators and dictator-propaganda.

In the ICFTU, they saw friends bringing hope and strength for the principles of democracy, of independence, of economic progress through strong trade unions.

In the World Peace Council, they saw the phony propaganda of an international movement that says "peace" when it means "war."

The abyss between the two meetings was more than one of politics—it was a separation between honesty and insincerity; between the constant hope of free men for a better life, and, on the other hand, a scheme to spread false and divisive lies about the democratic world.

The ICFTU, meeting at Berlin, offered challenge to the totalitarians and set forth a constructive program for free peoples. It is the moral obligation of democratic unions throughout the world to rise to the needs of the time—to translate those blueprints into the actuality of a better life, of rising living standards, of human dignity.

The Other Issues In Steel

(From Steel Labor, official organ of the CIO Steelworkers)

DON'T LET ANYONE tell you the United Steelworkers of America and the steel industry are in complete agreement on all the "economic" issues in the current dispute.

They're not!

And don't be kidded by industry propaganda that the sole point at issue is the union shop.

It isn't!

The industry has been trying to "sell" that line to the American people and to its own workers. It's typical of the deliberate misrepresentation that has marked the industry's campaign throughout the steel dispute.

Of course, the union shop is an important issue.

It should be!

But—despite the industry's propaganda—there are other issues involved, issues the industry fails to tell the people about.

And, perhaps, most important of all, are a couple of other "bread and butter" issues involved that every working man and woman in America should know about.

For instance:

Should the steel companies—after all these years of operating under union agreements—now have sole power to rule on a man's seniority, which affects him every day while he's on the job and it is so important when it comes time to retire and compute his pension?

Should the steel companies be permitted to impose vicious speed-ups?

Should management be permitted to cut crews and cut rates at will, combine jobs, eliminate rest periods and overthrow other local conditions that have been accepted for many years as a matter of right?

And while all this is taking place, should the Steelworkers' Union be shackled in its bargaining with the industry while the workers themselves are left with no recourse but to "take it and like it"?

It would have to be a weak, vacillating union that would bow down to management on those terms. And we've never heard anybody accuse the Steelworkers of being weak and spineless!

It is the management rights clause which, Big Steel piously says, it merely wants to "clarify."

What does the corporation really have in mind? R. Conrad Cooper, U. S. Steel's big gun in the industrial engineering field, let the cat out of the bag in his testimony before the WSB.

He said the union "should withdraw any of its proposals that run to abridgment of the company's management functions."

The core of his argument was the desire to speed-up, combine jobs and cut wages. And management, he indicated, wanted no interference from the union.

MANAGEMENT wants the union to use its no-strike clause to protect management in chiseling which management itself did not dare to undertake before there was a union. What it would like to do is kill off the effectiveness of the union in fighting to protect Steelworkers, but it wants to keep the union around in order to shoulder the blame while it undermines wages and working conditions.

The industry would like to have the public believe that clarifying the management right clause is a perfectly innocent gesture. But it's a hard-rock, money-in-the-bank proposition with U. S. Steel.

First, the corporation wants to give Steelworkers a raise that would run to no more than 10%.

Then, under its "management rights," it would have the union roll over and play dead while it whacks off crew members, imposes speed-ups on those left, and installs a company-dictated incentive system.

In other words, U. S. Steel—and apparently the rest of the industry follows blindly along—wants a management rights clause that would completely undercut every other important contract section affecting wages and working conditions.

Steelworkers think these issues carry more than enough importance to justify the strike they have been waging.

You see, there's more—much more—to this fight than a union shop, important as that factor may be.

'Subtle Suppressions' Used Against Free Speech

"WE ARE in the midst of a period of Renewed Struggle and Subtle Suppressions," Prof. Zechariah Chafee, Jr., of Harvard Law School concluded after examining the state of freedom of speech in the U. S. during the past 35 years.

Chafee capitalized the words as a chapter heading in his booklet, "Thirty-Five Years With Freedom of Speech." The booklet contains his lecture at Columbia Univ. under the auspices of the Roger N. Baldwin Civil Liberties Foundation.

Chafee said that the present period began in 1945. He compared it to the period beginning in 1917, when he first became interested in free speech, and ending in 1920, when widespread raids were made against alleged subversives by Atty. Gen. A. Mitchell Palmer. He said:

"We still do have criminal trials, with an even greater scope than in 1920 because of the Smith Act and the new McCarran Act crime of facilitating a totalitarian dictatorship; but there is even more suppression today through proceedings which have no juries, no substantial supervision by judges, and vague definitions of wrongdoing."

He was referring not to the McCarran "Iron Curtain" immigration act which Congress recently passed over the President's veto, but to another law—to which CIO also objected—which provides for outlawing of organizations by a five-man board.

"Run rapidly over some of the current methods of suppression and see what persons do the deciding and penalizing instead of jurymen," the law professor said.

"In the legislative investigation, the denouncing and the ousting from jobs is done by legislators with an eye on re-election and party axes to grind. Loyalty programs in federal and state government are run by administrative officials, who can drive men out of their careers and often make it hard for them to get any private work."

Chafee concluded "anything which is found to be 'subversive' can be penalized in some way or other, and 'subversive' is rapidly coming to mean anything which the powers that be don't like."

He denounced the practice of glorifying the spy and the renegade. "The renegade has to make a good story in order to obtain immunity from his own admitted misconduct," he declared. "Hence there is great temptation to exaggerate or falsify the behavior of his former associates."

Chafee said he is "disturbed by the strong tendency to establish an American party-line."

"It is becoming a tenet of the American party-line," he explained, "that there is only one right policy in the frightful angle of Chinese affairs. If I were a cartoonist, I would picture a new recruit to the State Dept. holding up his right hand and swearing to defend the Constitution of the United States and Chiang Kai-Shek."

The very last two paragraphs of the 34-page book stated "it is very fruitful to keep discussing, in season and out of season, the great advantages of open discussion. Of all the arguments against restriction on speech, the strongest of all is that it gives us a better country to live in, with fewer suspicions, animosities, informers, heresy trials, and more scope for initiative and originality.

"Although freedom cannot be maintained by expositions alone, in the end they maintain the main strength of liberty," Chafee continued. "A people sooner or later gets as much freedom as it wants. This want is partly created by prophets off and on the bench, but partly by constant discussions from plain citizens like us. The best safeguard against the inroads on freedom of speech lies in the ferment in the thoughts of the young and of those who will not let themselves grow old."

Chafee praised Charles Evans Hughes for his liberal influence on behalf of free speech on the Supreme Court and as a lawyer.

And in telling how Hughes aided in liberalizing the Supreme Court, the Harvard law professor mentioned a ruling in favor of the CIO in Jersey City. The decision told Mayor Hague that he could no longer ban meetings which he did not approve.

Behind The Headlines—

'Know-Nothings' Are On Rebound

By IRVING FAGAN

For Labor Press Associated

THE OTHER day a Senate Committee slapped a rider on an appropriation bill to forbid the use of any funds "by any international agency that directly or indirectly promoted one-world government or world citizenship."

That move was a reflection of the increasing "know nothing" sentiment in this country—a sentiment that is reaching into the schools and the colleges, cowing educators and hurting your children.

For that rider was aimed at the United Nations, and especially at its educational arm—the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. The rider was the reflection of a rising tide of isolationism.

BEHIND IT are self-appointed guardians of our schools, who favor the "thought control" methods of the totalitarian nations.

These self-appointed guardians charge that teaching about UN and UNESCO is un-American, is subversive, is atheistic, and Communistic. If they had their way, our school children would be taught nothing about international relations.

The American Association for the United Nations used to run an annual essay contest in the high schools. In 1951 such contests were conducted in 2700 schools; this year, in 2600. Some school officials had suddenly found the contests "controversial."

In Houston, Tex., for example, the school board barred the essay contest as "un-American." A group of private citizens took over and held the contest at the YMCA. Nobody was corrupted.

Super-duper patriots forced the abandonment of the essay contest in the Los Angeles high schools. Earlier they had charged that anything that had anything to do with UNESCO was harmful to this nation, that UNESCO would destroy this country's sovereignty, and one speaker even said UNESCO was "more dangerous than communism."

The Univ. of Florida arranged a seminar on teaching the role of UNESCO, but reports got around about "subversive" motives, and the seminar may not be held.

The principal of a Pawtucket, (R. I.) high school suspended "UNESCO Thinkers," a student club, because he suspected UNESCO itself "had atheistic and communistic leanings."

At least one publisher has been bulldozed into withdrawing a social studies text dealing with UN.

The facts are that neither the Soviet Union nor its satelites are in UNESCO; that Catholics, Protestants, Jews and Moslems take part in its work; that UNESCO has not sponsored nor propagandized for world government; that UNESCO believes the teaching of national history should be put ahead of the teaching of both local and world history.

These people now attacking UNESCO do not really believe in democracy. They do not believe in education. What they want is indoctrination—thought control.

Today it is UNESCO. Tomorrow it may be labor unions. Watch out for these thought-controllers in your community.

Wage Gains To 14c Won By UWUA

Wage increases ranging up to 14c hourly have been reported by the CIO Utility Workers in recent major contract negotiations.

The 14c figure was reached at the Consumers Power Co. in Michigan, after a state fact-finding panel investigation, and after a strike vote at the West Penn Power Co. At Boston Edison, an arbitration panel awarded a 9% general increase.

"Before you squawk, 'I smell something burning,' please change your clothes."

Benton Hits McCarthy For 'Spirit Of Fascism'

SEN. McCARTHY represents "the spirit of fascism" and is engaging in "blackmail" tactics.

Those charges were leveled against the Wisconsin Republican last week by Sen. Benton (D. Conn.), who has been engaged in a running battle against McCarthy's smear tactics.

Benton's charge came after McCarthy introduced a bill to bar interstate shipment of educational films by script writers with records of Communist front activities. It would forbid the State Dept. to purchase such films.

Obviously aimed at Benton's firm, Encyclopedia Britannica Films, Inc., the bill resulted from what McCarthy called a random check of 17 script writers for educational films and the "discovery" that eight of them had a "fantastic record of Communist activities."

BENTON snapped that the bill was an attack on freedom of the press and freedom of speech. He accused McCarthy of trying to "blackmail" newspapers which oppose him "by threatening their advertisers."

Benton said the Senate was witnessing "a new form of direct blackmail and intimidation in the greatest deliberative body in the world."

He then went on to show the educational film, on which McCarthy charged the scrip writers had been employed, were made by, and purchased from, Western Electric Corp. — a Bell System subsidiary — and that one of the script writers was a Columbia Univ. employe of Dwight Eisenhower, university president on leave.

Benton asked sarcastically whether McCarthy meant that Western Electric, American Telegraph & Telephone Co., its parent, and Eisenhower constituted a nest of Communists.

The Senate Elections subcommittee, which has been weighing Benton's resolution calling for McCarthy's ouster from the Senate for this "pattern of fraud and deceit" put off a decision for many weeks at least.

As a result of McCarthy's counter-charges, the subcommittee now intends to probe Benton's past, despite Benton's point-by-point refutation of McCarthy's charges and his demand that the Justice Dept. determine whether he, or McCarthy, committed perjury in testifying.

'Rightists Do Dirty Work For Commies'

COMMUNISTS rely on extreme rightists, superpatriots, the ignorant and the prejudiced to aid them in fifth column "dirty work" in the U. S., according to Norman Cousins, editor of the Saturday Review.

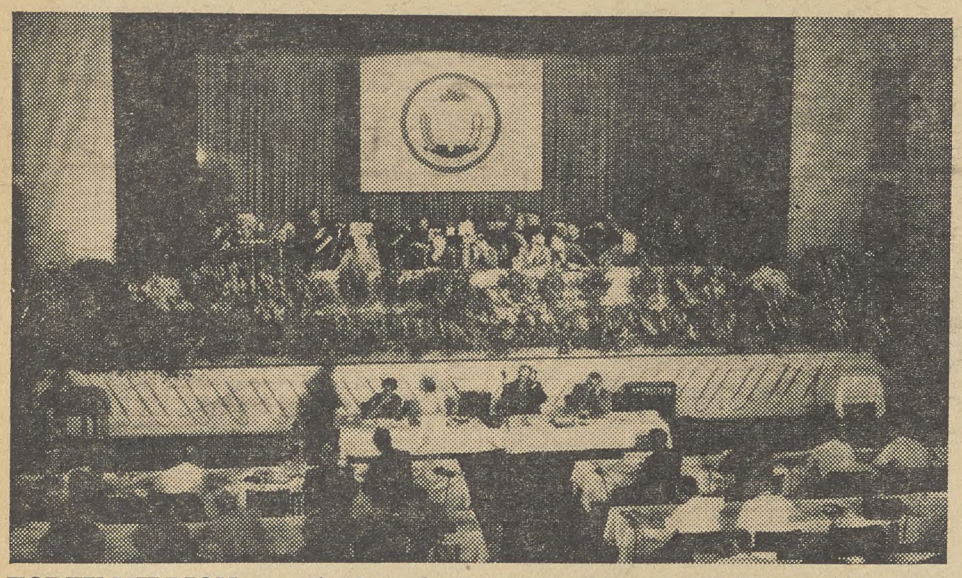
Cousins told the American Library Association, meeting in New York City, that "profound uneasiness and insecurity" caused pressure on libraries and indiscriminate attacks on schools, the United Nations and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

He warned that threats to these institutions will increase.

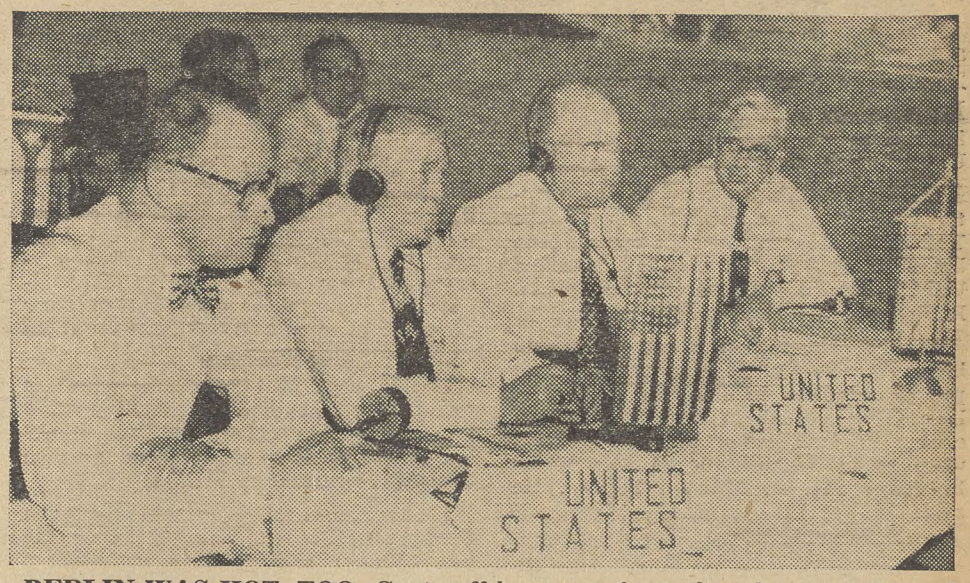
"Communist strategy calls for collaboration with the extreme right wing," he said. "It counts on the right wing to do its dirty work, and counts on superpatriots to destroy the American middle ground, to deprive America of its strength which is its confidence in our government, our community, our neighbors and ourselves."

Meeting In Berlin—

ICFTU Builds For Growth In City Of Ruins



FORTY MILLION organized workers were represented as General Council of Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions met in western sector of Berlin. Shown presiding is Sir Vincent Tewson, ICFTU chairman, with J. H. Oldenbroek, ICFTU general secretary, at his side.



BERLIN WAS HOT, TOO: Coats off because of weather, here are four of the CIO group. Left to right, Victor Reuther, CIO European representative; Exec. Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood; Pres. Michael Quill, Transport Workers, and James J. Leary, on leave with ICFTU office.

INTO BERLIN—a city of ruins, division and challenge—the world's free labor movement came during the first week in July to map a course of "organizing the unorganized" and beating down the Communists' world-wide challenge to democratic institutions.

The meeting was the first session of the General Council of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. To it came some 70 delegates and observers from every continent for five days' discussion of "ways and means"—the ways and means to build stronger labor unions in every free nation.

It was a working meeting—with little difference of opinion over the challenge to workers to build and improve their organizations—both in the heavily industrialized areas and in the so-called under-developed areas, where exploitation and hunger have long held sway.

Berlin is a city where that challenge to democracy cannot be ignored.

Many Refugees

A hundred miles or more inside the Soviet zone, the city is divided into western and Soviet-controlled occupation sectors. From each day's newspapers, from the mouths of refugees who flow in an endless stream into the former German capital, from the sight of hordes of Communist police across the sector borders, Berliners—and visitors—get a constant ration of first hand stories of life in the totalitarian world.

And wherever the eye roams, one finds grisly memorials—in wrecked and twisted buildings—of the results of a war launched by another dictator state, Hitler's Nazi regime.

At many labor meetings, delegates are apt to plod between hotel room and meeting hall with little concern for the local sights. In Berlin, that just isn't possible. Every delegate was conscious, during every minute of his stay, that in this city devastated by war, the sparring battles of a new crucial cold war are being fought—with words and pressures taking the place of military weapons.

That thought was in the mind of Sir Vincent Tewson, British chairman of the ICFTU, when he declared in his keynote address:

"We have practical work to do in this outpost of democracy . . . We seek an end to road blocks and barbed wire, so that the ordinary decencies of human relationships may be enjoyed. We seek to raise living standards everywhere.

"We shall achieve our aims by making the ICFTU an even greater inspiration to the workers of the world."

And referring to the Russian "peace" propaganda campaign, Tewson said:

"Those who created the fear in men's hearts now mouth the slogans of peace and freedom. Here in this land . . . they could give a sign of the sincerity of their slogans by freeing the fathers, sons and sweethearts who are still held as prisoners of war on Soviet territory and who long to return to their own families."

Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice-president and head of CIO's delegation at Berlin, dwelt on the same problem of Soviet threats to democracy.

Haywood promised the delegates he would tell the working people of America of the "incredible heroism" of the free people of Berlin. He promised to return to Berlin at some future date, and predicted that the workers of the city "will not forever have to live in the midst of a totalitarian sea."

There was unanimous agreement among the delegates that constructive programs, rather than mere anti-Communist policies and slogans, will provide a foundation for free world strength.

Lengthy Program

So, during the five-day meeting, the ICFTU's general council adopted these general programs:

1. A statement on wages, prices and productivity that stresses need for unions to roll up their sleeves to win higher standards of living for workers everywhere, by insuring fair division of the benefits of production among employers, workers and consumers of the products of industry and agriculture.

2. An intense "organize the unorganized" campaign, particularly in areas of Asia, Africa and Latin America where unions now are weak. The campaign will be financed by the special $700,000 regional organizing fund collected by the ICFTU during recent months.

3. A warning that unions everywhere must place new stress on education, publicity and publications to get their message across to members, potential members and the general public.

4. Renewed endorsement of programs—both political and military — to strengthen democratic institutions, build a strong common front of the free peoples, and insure that growing military power does not weaken the economic status of free peoples or prevent the development of higher living standards.

The ICFTU, in addition, "noted with deep regret" the repressive policy of the French government in Tunisia, and "strongly protested" the violation of "democratic and trade union" rights in that North African area.

The ICFTU also issued a counter-blast to the Communist-sponsored World Peace Council, meeting not more than four miles away in the Soviet sector of the city.

The free union group denounced "malicious, slanderous charges of germ warfare" spread by the Soviet Union and its satellites. It voiced labor's "determination to fight by the side of the United Nations in Korea for the victory of liberty and democracy over totalitarian aggression."

Liang Yung-Chang of the anti-Communist Chinese Federation of Labor—with headquarters in off-shore Hong Kong—had angry words of criticism for Communist policies in Asia.

He charged that the "germ warfare" accusations were "forgeries" and a "prostitution of science." The real germ warfare, he said, "are the germs of falsehood spread by the propaganda artists of the Kremlin."

Throughout the session, speakers from big countries and small took part in the discussions on every major item. It was, in clear fact, an "undominated" meeting; and it focused attention on the need for "undominated" unions to move ahead rapidly in the face of big and complex problems.

Speakers were agreed, for instance, that in seeking to build the unions of southeast and southern Asia, the ICFTU's aid—in finances and "organizer-teachers"—should help the local unions, not run them. On that point, speakers like A. Ali of Pakistan and those of the CIO and of members in other "metropolitan nation" unions were in full agreement.

CIO delegates played a major role in the meeting. Executive Vice-Pres. Allan Haywood, who headed the CIO group in Berlin, led frequent delegation meetings to work out "CIO policy" on the questions up for discussion.

Committee Posts

Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers Union was a member of the Council's Standing Orders Committee—a European equivalent of a combined program-and-resolutions committee. Michael Ross, CIO international affairs director, served on the Prices-Wages-Productivity Committee, and worked with Quill on the Standing Orders group.

Victor Reuther, CIO European representative, reported to the Council on the work of the ICFTU education conference; served on the committee on North Atlantic Treaty Organization problems; and played an active part in the committee on problems of colonial areas.

Henry Fleisher, CIO News editor, attended the meeting of ICFTU union editors and publicity directors, and worked with the delegation throughout the week. Also attending the Berlin meeting were James J. Leary, veteran CIO official now working for the ICFTU in the New York United Nations office; and Miss Rosemary Ruane, secretary to the CIO international affairs director.

Throughout the week, the CIO group worked in close cooperation with the more than 50 delegates present. The Council delegates represented over 39 million union members, about 75% of the total membership.

Most important absentee among the affiliates was the American Federation of Labor. ICFTU Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek, expressed regrets that the AFL was not represented.

CIO Honors Anti-Hitler Heroes

CIO DELEGATES to the ICFTU meeting in Berlin marked the Fourth of July in tribute to the men who gave America the Declaration of Independence and to the anti-Nazi Germans who gave their lives for freedom during the Hitler era.

The scene was a grim little shack in the Plotzensee prison yard—a building where 2000 anti-Nazis met death during the 12 years of Hitlerism. The spot has become a shrine for German democrats since 1945.

Before movie cameras and mikes of the Berlin radio, CIO Executive Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood placed a giant wreath of red, white and blue flowers on the floor of the prison shack.

It bore the inscription: "In honor of the victims of dictatorship, who fought for liberty. The American CIO, July 4, 1952."

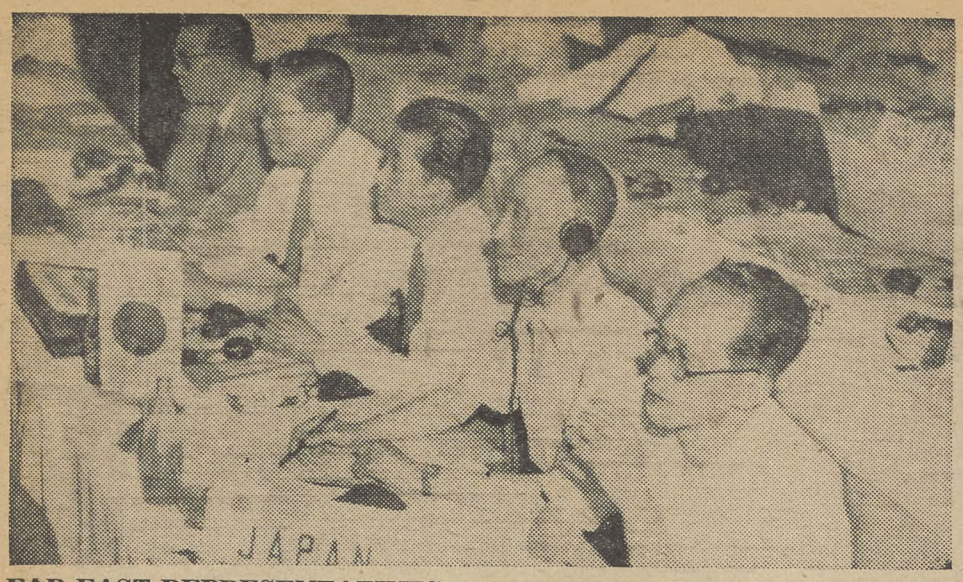
Then Ernest Scharnowski, leader of Berlin's democratic unions, placed a companion wreath beside it.

Speaking in solemn tones, Haywood said that "it is entirely fitting that I, as an American, should honor this Fourth of July at this spot in Berlin . . .

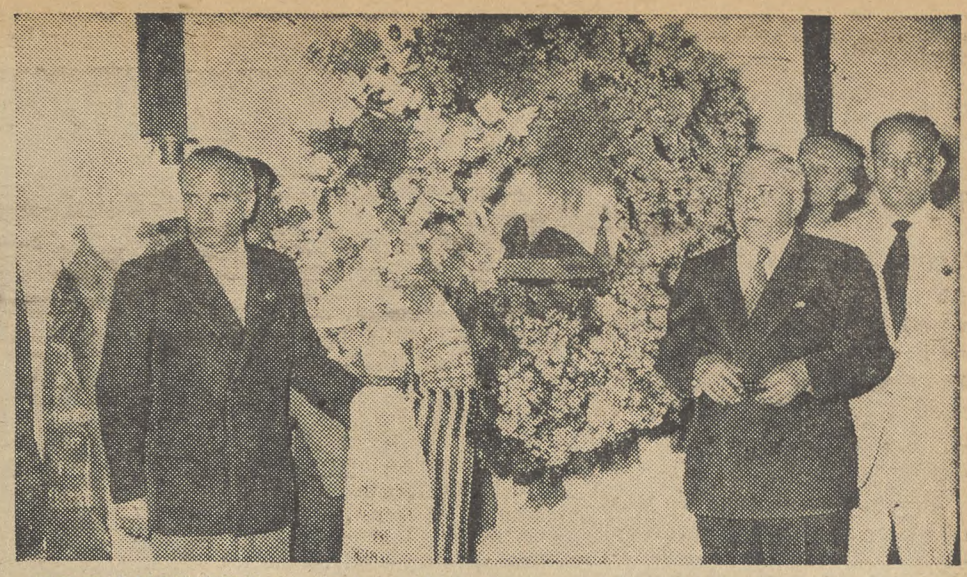
"The principles of liberty, of democracy, of Independence belong to every people throughout the world. Brave men like William Leuschner (a German union leader who was executed there in the July 1944, after the bomb plot against Hitler's life) who died fighting dictatorship, fought the same good fight as our 18th century Americans."

Haywood said the spirit of liberty and independence "knows no national boundary. No Iron Curtain, no repression, no police state can bind them or stifle them."

"At the grave of these heroes of independence and freedom, I pledge once again the strength of the democratic workers of America to the cause of freedom . . ."



FAR EAST REPRESENTATIVES were numerous and took active part in discussions. Shown are five delegates and observers of Joint Council of Japanese Trade Unions, representing more than three million workers who are fighting strongly against repressive labor legislation at home.



JULY 4 TRIBUTE to victims of Nazis was paid in joint ceremony by CIO and German unionists on spot where foes of dictatorship were murdered. Left to right, Ernst Scharnowski of West Berlin unions; CIO Exec. Vice Pres. Haywood, and Ludwig Dietrich, Berlin union official.

Red Berlin: City Of Cops, Slogans, Beaten People

Suppose, for instance:

1. That you couldn't phone Chicago's south side from the north side?

2. That cops stood along New York's 42nd St. at every corner, sometimes letting you walk by or drive by, and sometimes not; that those same cops wouldn't let you take pictures of them and might search your clothes and handbags — without a warrant—for "incriminating" material that could get you in the hoosegow?

3. That St. Louis newspapers were illegal in half the city, and possession of one copy of them led, directly or indirectly, to your arrest?

4. That money used in downtown Boston wasn't recognized in South Boston and East Boston — and that each South Boston dollar was worth only 25c in the center of the city?

5. That you couldn't go from Los Angeles out into the countryside without a pass—and that if you lived in certain sections of L.A., the chances are you'd never get a pass?

Take all five situations—multiply them by a hundred others — add the terrible destruction caused by war—and sprinkle on the fact that you're surrounded by a hostile military force.

At that point, you may get some idea of how a typical Berliner in the western, democratic half of the city lives—or tries to live.

There are whole blocks on end in Berlin where nobody lives, because there's nothing standing but ruins—a weird combination of building skeletons, piles of bricks and rubbles.

In other blocks, you'll find two or three apartments able to be occupied—in buildings that once must have been occupied by 30 or 40 families.

There's practically not a single spot in the built-up areas of the city where you can forget for a moment that this one-time capital of Hitler's Nazi empire took a terrible beating. It should be a warning to aggressors that the crime of war does not pay.

Yet seven years after World War II, the Soviet Union has embarked on a cold war course, which, if it ever turns to world-wide hot war, may provide even more destruction, all over the world.

Cut off from the western zone of Germany by a strip of Soviet-occupied territory of more than 100 miles, western Berlin is an island in a hostile sea.

Trade and industry in the western sector of the city are limping; one out of three wage-earners among the western sector's 1.8 million population are idle and without much hope of work.

But the spirit of hope and determination runs strong, and there is real appreciation for American help — without which western Berlin would collapse into economic chaos in a matter of weeks.

City One In Theory

Divided as it is into western and eastern sectors, Berlin in theory at least is one city. You drive across a square like the Potsdammer Platz—where East and West meet in a mixture of propaganda signs and blaring loudspeakers—and in a moment move into a different world.

It's a world of slogans—Communist slogans. Slogans are strung across buildings; they're stencilled on houses and fences;

You see lots of police — the East German People's Police, an outfit which seems to collect the same type of toughs who 15 years ago would have joined the SS; in fact, say western Germans, there are lots of ex-Nazis in the police outfit.

It's a drab area; the people on the street look grim and beaten down.

How do East Berliners react to this life of rationing, of secret police, of increasing isolation from western life and democratic ideas?

A West Berlin trade union leader, a veteran in the anti-Nazi movement, had this to say:

"These people from eastern Berlin are silent, but the Communists haven't won them over. It's like Nazi times; the ordinary man and woman try to see nothing, hear nothing, do nothing—in order to keep from going to jail.

"Sometimes old friends come over to the western sector, and we spend an evening talking. And when they get up to leave, they say 'it's so good to be able to talk in peace without worrying about what we say or who will hear us.' "

'We Won't Rest On History, We Will Help Forge The Future'—Haywood

Following are excerpts from a major speech by Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice-president, at the ICFTU General Council in Berlin. He stressed the need for unions to rely on their own strength, rather than favors from governments, to win a fair share of national income for the workers. Haywood said in part:

ON BEHALF of the six million members of the CIO and, I am sure, of every free trade union in the United States, I bring you these words of our warmest friendship and fraternity.

Berlin is a symbol of freedom and independence. It will live forever in the minds of mankind everywhere as a symbol of the free and brave human spirit. It is entirely fitting that the ICFTU should be meeting in this great city.

The problem of prices, wages and productivity is not a subject just for the professors of economics. It affects and it must affect every phase of trade union work, for our trade unions exist primarily to build a better life for working men and women.

We Had To Fight

The union which ignores the problems of prices, wages, and productivity — the union which does not place these matters first on its working agenda—that union cannot in the long-run provide service and progress for its members and for the community in which it lives.

The CIO is less than 20 years old. But during these few years, our unions have made tremendous progress for the workers of America. They have increased wages, improved living conditions, and given American workers a new sense of human dignity.

But I ask that you understand one simple fact.

America is not a land of millionaires. It is not a land where workers automatically get a decent life and a fair share of our worldly goods. We have had to fight for what we get.

Some of our friends in other countries, I think, believe the CIO was born with a silver spoon in its mouth. The fact is that the CIO was born in an atmosphere of hunger and poverty —yes, and desperation.

We organized, and we went on strike, we challenged the great corporations, and we resisted the nightsticks and the tear gas of the police. Our members were wounded and killed in this fight.

Today the trade unions of America have fought their way to acceptance. But, friends and fellow delegates, keep this fact in mind: the CIO does not curry the popularity of corporations and politicians.

We know that when we are popular with our members we will win the respect of our foes. We win the confidence and the support of our members by our constant fight on these major problems of prices, wages, and productivity.

How do we approach these problems?

We do not oppose economic progress—in fact, we encourage it, but on one point we stand firm as the Rock of Gibraltar. We insist that economic progress must be for the benefit of the many, not for the few.

We insist that through the collective bargaining processes, there be a fair distribution of the products of our economic system between the workers and the corporation.

We have met with considerable success in that task—the real wages of American workers have never been higher, despite the price increases of the post-Korean inflation.

During the past few years productivity has become a household word. As a trade unionist, I had lived a majority of my life without ever hearing it. But as our industrial society becomes more complex, productivity problems have risen to a place of prime importance.

Our unions know that to fight the introduction of new productivity machinery is as futile as to tilt at windmills.

Our Fair Share

We want new machinery; we want new processes; we want new capital investment; we want more production — for only through effective use of new machinery, can we produce the material needed for a higher living standard.

But, say we, the fruit of that new productivity of new machines and new processes must be fairly shared among workers and consumers.

Do we fight for that belief? Do we accept the employer's judgment as to what is our fair share?

I need not answer that. It is being answered today by the strike of 650,000 heroic Steelworkers fighting for higher wages and greater security—in essence, for a larger share of the increased productivity in steel.

Against them stand the united forces of capital and corporation power. The steel barons are rich, powerful, and arrogant—but the steel union under the great leadership of our president, Philip Murray, will win this strike.

Our unions, as you can see from the history of American labor and from this strike of the Steelworkers, live by action—not by words or theories.

We refuse to rest on the great events of history. We are determined to help forge the great events of tomorrow — events which are steps in the forward movement of workers everywhere.

Joint Session Of Union Groups Due

The Intl. Federation of Christian Trade Unions, holding its 11th triennial congress at the Hague while the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions was meeting in Berlin, accepted an invitation from the latter to discuss common Schumann Plan problems of a session in Brussels.

The invitation came after the IFCTU passed a resolution renewing its proposal to the ICFTU for an alliance without a merger, and proposing the formation of a joint committee to "study the problem of cooperation."

The two groups have cooperated in some endeavors, but have been unable to do so in others. The IFCTU is the oldest international labor organization, having been founded in 1920. At the 1952 congress were 232 delegates representing about 3.5 million members in 14 countries.

Arbitration Agreed On Aircraft Pay

THE CIO Auto Workers and North American Aviation last week agreed to submit to binding arbitration a four-month pay dispute.

The dispute involves approximately 28,000 workers in plants at Inglewood, Downey and Fresno, Calif., and Columbus, O. North American produces all of the nation's F-86 Sabre Jet Fighters.

Agreement on arbitration was reached at Washington, where UAW and company representatives had met several days with federal mediators.

It also was agreed that the raise be retroactive to last Apr. 28, and to include in the base pay 12c an hour, a cost-of-living bonus the workers now receive.

The sole condition that the union attached to the company's proposal to submit the case to arbitration was that the company agree to include the employes at the Fresno plant in the company-wide bargaining structure. UAW won bargaining rights at this new plant last April.

This decision was made by the UAW Policy Committee, which at the same time authorized strike action requested by local union officials at the North American plants.

UAW Vice Pres. John W. Livingston emphasized that substitution of arbitration for collective bargaining in determining wage rates is contrary to the "historic position of the union."

The UAW committee said that it took such action because of its "reluctance to cause the curtailment of . . . the steady flow of Sabre Jet Fighters to our forces in Korea."

"Destruction of its collective bargaining freedom is the last, and only, step which the UAW-CIO will not take in its effort to maintain the steady flow of Sabre Jet Fighters to our forces in Korea," the union committee warned.

"North American Aviation, Inc., producers of the Sabre Jet, has traded upon this sense of responsibility on the part of the union. It has maintained such a position of rigidity in its resistance to the demands of the union that negotiations are already in their fourth month.

"The union can legally strike. But the union is reluctant to cause the curtailment of this vital military project."

The company's proposal was that the parties agree to allow President Truman to establish a special fact-finding arbitration board.

The UAW's action came after union and management representatives had been meeting several days with federal mediators in Washington.

The union is asking that North American wages be brought up to those paid in auto plants under UAW contracts. The company is having some of its work done in auto plants, where the higher rates are paid, according to the union.

WARM WELCOME was given delegates at opening session of CIO Newspaper Guild convention by Larry Howes (right), president of the Portland, Ore., host local. Awaiting their turns to speak are Mayor Dorothy McCullough Lee of Portland and ANG Pres. Harry Martin. Flower in outline is symbol of Portland Rose.

Guild Meets In Portland, Votes $25,000 To Aid Steel Strikers

DELEGATES to the 19th annual convention of the CIO Newspaper Guild last week unanimously voted a contribution of $25,000 to the striking CIO Steelworkers.

Action of the convention, held in Portland, Ore., was taken on recommendation of the international executive board as one of the first pieces of business.

The resolution also carried out the recommendation of ANG Pres. Harry Martin, voiced in his opening speech, to notify the Steelworkers that "all of our resources are at their disposal."

"The Steelworkers are fighting for all of us and for the survival of all trade unions," he declared.

TO PRESIDE over the convention, Martin returned to the United States from Paris, where he is chief of the Mutual Security Agency's European Labor Information Div. In his keynote address, he reviewed the fight against communism in Europe, and declared:

"The success of the Communist threat to the West lessens with every passing day."

He described some of the work the MSA has done in trying to help build up the economies and armed strength of European nations, and told of its role, along with that of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, in the battle against the Communists.

"Give us a little more time," he predicted, "and I will say to you without hesitation that any army which starts trouble in Europe will be stopped in the heart of that continent, and will be thrown back into the shadows of the darkness from whence it came."

Martin also urged Guild members to participate more widely in political action, but recommended that the union simply publicize the records of political candidates instead of openly endorsing them. To refrain from political action, he asserted "would be suicide for the Guild as a trade union."

He rapped the Taft-Hartley Act as an instrument that has been used against the Guild.

A resolution on civil rights, calling for fair play in congressional investigations, was approved by the delegates. It demanded full protection of the rights of all persons "no matter how repugnant their beliefs may be," and an end to persecutions for "speech or advocacy as contrasted with overt acts."

In his report to the convention, Exec. Vice Pres. Ralph B. Novak told the delegates that when reason and logic fail in negotiating contracts, they must be prepared to use economic force.

Ronald Regan, president of the Screen Actors Guild, in a banquet speech urged Guild members to fight with his group in a common front to preserve freedom of expression.

The delegates voted unanimously to subscribe, for the convention period, to the Tacoma Reporter, a daily publication being issued by locked-out Tacoma, Wash., Guild members and other newspaper craftsmen.

Internal political peace settled on the Guild when the Free Guild caucus, which had been anti-administration, voted to dissolve and its members moved en masse into the administration-supporting Pro-Guild caucus. Edward Easton, Jr., of New York, a member of the dissolved group, was elected chairman of a committee to unite the two factions.

Big Steel Taps 'Tax Bonanza' As Small Firm Contracts Lag

BIG STEEL, which does not see fit to grant its employes the recommendations of the government's Wage Stabilization Board, does not hesitate to get "tax bonanzas" from the government —at the taxpayers' expense.

A U. S. Steel subsidiary, Orinoca Mining Co. in Venezuela, headed the newly announced list of certificates for rapid tax write-offs issued by the Defense Production Administration during the week of June 20.

During the week before, U. S. Steel got a rapid write-off on 25% of $20,888,539 to be spent to improve its coke production facilities at Clairton, Pa. DPA rejected that application for a tax bonanza on June 14, 1951.

The value of the two projects totals $175,488,539.

Up to June 26, DPA granted rapid tax write-offs on new or expanded plants valued at $20.5 billions.

Among other rapid write-offs granted during the two weeks in June to steel corporations and related companies were:

Humboldt Mining Co., Humboldt, Mich., iron ore, $8,062,000; Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., Calumet, Minn., iron ore, $1,060,720; Hanna Ore Milling Co., Virginia, Minn., iron ore, $275,000 and $922,000; Bethlehem Steel Co., Lebanon, Pa., precision parts for military end items, $1,240,000, and Republic Steel Corp., Port Henry, N. Y., iron ore, $300,000.

THE SENATE Small Business Committee has pointed its finger at the military for the decrease in the percentage of defense contracts going to small business since the Korean conflict began.

Committee investigators found that for the year ended June 30, 1950, 24.4% of the military dollar went to small business firms, but that the amount has been dwindling since.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1951, small business firms got only 20.9% of the defense dollar, and for the first nine months of the fiscal year which ended June, 1952, they got only 18.4% of that dollar.

The committee reported that the lack of coordination was most strikingly demonstrated in the failure of the Army and the Navy to work jointly with the Small Defense Plants Administration in earmarking contracts.

This "inexcusable" omission, the report said, "amounts to flouting a congressional intent." The committee recommended that the head of the Office of Small Business in the Munitions Board should be designated as vice chairman, and similar heads in the Army, Navy and Air Force should be similarly raised; wider use of pooled efforts of small firms, and allowing small contractors enough time for bidding.

Big Business Is Doing O.K.— Profits Double In 8 Years

THE NATION'S corporations have been doing fine despite "creeping Socialism," according to the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The SEC report showed corporations increased in net worth, and net profits based on net worth after taxes. Data from 1354 identical companies showed that their net sales in 1942 were $65 billion, and in 1950 were $123 billion.

Net profits after taxes were $3.1 billion in 1942, or 4.7c on each dollar of sales. In 1950 net profits were $9.3 billion, and 7.5c on each dollar of sales.

Their net worth was $32 billion in 1942 and almost $56 billion in 1950. Return on net worth after taxes was 16.7% in 1950, compared with 16.8% in 1947 and 17.9 in 1948. In 1942 the figure was 9.6%.

For 977 manufacturers, net sales in 1942 were $54 billion, and in 1950 were $101 billion. Net profits, after taxes, were $8.2 billion compared with $2.6 billion in 1942. Return on net worth after taxes was 18.3% in 1948, and 17.3% in 1950. In 1942 and 1945 it was 9.6%. Net worth climbed from $27 billion to $47 billion.

In the "trade" category, reports of 150 companies showed net sales in 1942 of $8.5 billion, and $17.5 billion in 1950. Net worth climbed from $2.5 billion in 1942 to $4.3 billion in 1950, and return on net worth after taxes gained from a low of 9.4% in 1943 to 20.6%.

Corporations issuing public reports paid out $234 million in cash dividends in May. This was 10% over the May 1951 figure.

For the first five months of 1952, cash dividends were 6% above the same period last year.

Dividends paid by the oil refining companies jumped 28% over 1951. Finance companies did better by 27%, but food, beverages, and tobacco payments dropped almost 50%. The government attributed the changes in these groups to changes in regular dividend payment dates. (LPA)

150 Yanks, Canadians Join In School At FDR Center

AMERICAN and Canadian union members shared classrooms and recreation at two weeks of summer school conducted at the FDR-CIO Labor Center of the Michigan State CIO Council at Port Huron, Mich.

The Americans are members of the CIO, the Canadians of the Canadian Congress of Labor, with which CIO unions are affiliated in Canada. About 150 students attended each session, approximately divided between the two nationalities.

During the school the two groups celebrated their national holidays—the Canadians marking Dominion Day on July 1 and the Americans Independence Day on July 4.

The school was under the direction of Howard Conquergood, CCL education director, and William McDonald, education director for the CIO Auto Workers Region 7. Don Stevens, Michigan CIO Council education director, is institute director, with Henry Nickelberry, UAW education and political action representative, acting as UAW co-director.

Guest speakers included Roy Reuther, UAW political action director, and George Burt, UAW Canadian director.

U.S. Names 115 duPonts In Trust Suit

UNCLE SAM has discovered that the fabulously wealthy duPont family is a small-sized army.

But that did not stop the government from filing a motion in U. S. District Court in Chicago naming 115 members of the family in an anti-trust suit against E. I. duPont de Nemours & Co., of Wilmington, Del., General Motors and U. S. Rubber.

A federal judge earlier had ruled the family could not be named class defendants in the suit.

The government charged in the suit, which was brought in June, 1949, that the three corporations made secret rebates and divided fields of manufacturing among themselves to eliminate competition.

The suit, which is a civil action, asked that the duPont family members and the duPont firm be ordered to sell controlling stock in General Motors and U. S. Rubber.

J. O'Connor Dies; Veteran Of UPWA

James O'Connor, secretary of CIO Packinghouse Workers Local 214, North Bergen, N. J., and a veteran of the North Jersey labor movement, died June 26 in Christ Hospital, Jersey City.

O'Connor was respected and revered by his fellow union members for his unselfish devotion to the union and the long hours he spent in its work.

Store Union To Hold Two-Day Conference

Local 1-S of the CIO Department Store Workers will hold a conference July 19-20 at the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations at Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. Richard Pastor, the local's education director, assisted the school staff in planning the program. The local represents employes at Macy's, New York City.

CWA Backs Civil Defense

PRES. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers last week called on the union's 690 locals to cooperate fully in "Operation Skywatch," the civil defense aircraft spotting program.

The program is scheduled to get under way July 14 in 27 states.

"Since speed is of utmost importance, prompt handling of calls over specially designed circuits and swift repair if they get out of order can assure quick detection and capture and destruction of enemy aircraft which tries to cross our border," Beirne wrote CWA locals.

"Civil Defense officials tell us that these summer months with their long daylight hours can make attacks more likely to occur."

Beirne urged CWA locals to recruit additional volunteer personnel from among their members to take a direct part in the project.

Limp To Adjournment—

$5 Social Security Boost, 35,000 Housing Units Voted

AS THE 82d Congress limped toward adjournment last week, it voted to raise Social Security benefits about $5 a month and boost public-assistance payments $3 to $5 a month.

Approximately eight million people will benefit from the action, once turned down by the House because the American Medical Association falsely claimed the measure was "socialized medicine."

Under the social security section, about 4.5 million now receiving old age or survivors insurance benefits will have their payments increased by $5 a month or 12.5%, whichever is greater.

Workers retiring in the future, or their widows, or other dependents, will receive $5 increases. The bill also permits retired persons to earn up to $75 a month, instead of the present $50, and still receive benefits.

Final adjournment of Congress—with only a handful of members present—came last Monday after lengthy sessions over the holiday weekend.

In other last-minute actions, the Congress:

1. Approved 35,000 low-rent public housing units for the coming fiscal year. This was a distinct slap in the face for the real estate lobby which had twice succeeded in getting the House to insist on a maximum of 5000 units.

Proponents said the final action meant the principle of public housing had been saved. Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) put it this way:

"This is not only a question of appropriations, it is also a question of good faith toward hundred of thousands of people in our country in the low-income brackets—people for whom the problem of housing is among the most urgent and pressing of any that they confront."

Sen. Tobey (R. N.H.) had branded the real estate lobby's move to limit construction to 5000 units as "a program of slums for the many and crumbs for the few."

2. Allowed President Truman's veto of the tidelands oil bill to stand, when proponents of the measure were unable to muster enough votes to override the veto.

Proponents gave up when they found themselves five votes short of overriding Truman's second veto of this attempt to hand valuable off-shore oil lands (which the Supreme Court has repeatedly ruled belong to the federal government) to the various states.

3. Sent to the President a watered-down mine safety bill. The measure would encourage joint inspections by state and federal authorities but would permit a federal inspector to close a mine where there is imminent danger of loss of life through fire, explosion, flood or accident. Exempt are strip mines and those employing 14 or less.

The United Mine Workers called it "better than nothing" and the Senate, which had adopted a far tougher bill than the House, agreed to the compromise.

Mine owners had fought even the weak House measure, claiming the bill would enfringe on state's rights.

Proponents pointed to the West Frankfort, Ill., disaster, which took 119 lives in December, 1951, and other mine accidents, which annually take a terrible toll of lives.

House sponsor Rep. Price (D. Ill.) read the record of 12,171 violations of the presently unenforceable federal mine safety regulations and revealed that 7435 of these were repeat violations, where mine owners had failed to correct violations when federal inspectors reported them.

4. Voted a $45-a-month combat pay bonus for men serving on Korea's front lines, and made it retroactive to June, 1950, when the fighting started.

5. Voted nearly $2 billion less for foreign aid than Truman had asked. It was a billion below what Gen. Eisenhower had said would be "a safe minimum."

6. Conceded victory to Truman in the final fight of the session—a billion-dollar battle over atomic expansion.

Congress voted nearly $3 billion for secret atomic energy projects. This sum was approximately twice as much as the House had earlier voted in its economy-at-any-price mood.

Maybank Didn't Get That Dam

Some said "dam." Others cried "pork barrel."

But whatever the name, it kept Congress in session 48 hours longer than the members had wanted to stay around Washington—what with election battles coming up.

Sen. Maybank (D. S. C.) bore the major responsibility for the delay. He wanted a $4 million dam built in his home state. Opponents called it just another "pork barrel measure."

The Senator insisted the dam was needed to provide enough water to cool atomic piles at the new AEC plant.

For 48 hours the lawmakers squabbled. Then they compromised. The AEC will make a study of the need for the dam.

Correction On Paired Votes On Controls

INADVERTENTLY, the three-way House roll call on prices, wages and Taft-Hartley published in the last issue of The CIO News incorrectly explained symbols listing votes of absent congressmen paired for and against the amendments.

The three issues were the Tulle, Smith and Lucas Amendments to the Defense Production Act. In all cases, a right vote was against the amendments.

In all three tabulations, R is a vote against the amendment, W is a vote for the amendment, Z is a vote paired against the amendment, X is a vote paired for the amendment, and A is absent or not voting.

The correct votes of the congressmen affected follow:

	No. 1	No. 2	No. 3
COLO. Aspinall (D)	Z	Z	Z
FLA. Herlong (D)	X	X	X
GA. Vinson (D)	Z	X	X

Anti-Union Textile Firm Found Guilty Of Contempt

THE U. S. Second Court of of Appeals, New York City, has decided to give Michael Bergin, manager of the Israel Putnam Mills, Inc., Wilsonville, Conn., another chance.

The court recently found Bergin guilty of civil contempt of its order, issued in January 1950, to bargain in good faith with the CIO Textile Workers.

But it held in abeyance for 30 days its decision on the charge of criminal contempt while it gave the firm a chance to clear itself on the civil charge brought by the National Labor Relations Board.

TWUA said that the Putnam Mills pays its 50 to 75 employes about the legal minimum of 75c an hour to rework used fabrics. Plants in this category usually pay close to the standard woolen industry minimum of about $1.265 per hour.

Stalling occurred before and after the court order to bargain. Bergin told the court that the firm was so poor that it could not even afford to buy paper on which to write a contract.

During 1950 the firm met with the union three times, but insisted that it could not enter any kind of an agreement.

After two conferences with Bergin in 1951, the workers struck in July. The strike was called off a month later after the Connecticut Mediation Board arranged a meeting at which nothing was accomplished.

In letters to the NLRB, Bergin said that the court order did not apply because he couldn't afford to deal with the union. But a TWUA accountant found that the corporation's books displayed unusual bookkeeping practices which made it possible that the firm was concealing its assets.

PAC In Action—

2 Big Steel Locals Boost Dollar Drive

PAC's DOLLAR drive got a recent boost in the Cincinnati area when every Steelworkers local union in District 25 pledged to follow the lead of Locals 310 and 1728.

These two locals—each with more than 1000 members—have set 100% records in their voluntary PAC buck drive, Al Whitehouse, district director, reported.

A district-wide meeting of 400 officers and committeemen of Cincinnati area USA-CIO locals unanimously adopted a political action resolution which warned that election of reactionary forces in November would result in "more repressive, anti-union legislation."

★

PRESIDENTS of Milwaukee County CIO locals met to map political strategy for the fall battle.

First in a series of meetings, the Milwaukee session stressed the need for making every CIO member aware of the important issues in the campaign, and the truth about each issue. Plans for an all-out registration campaign were also high on the agenda.

★

RODNEY C. Jacobson, secretary-treasurer of the Minnesota CIO Council, will be a candidate for state treasurer on the Minnesota Democratic - Farmer - Labor party ticket.

Jacobson received the unanimous endorsement of the DFL state executive committee and only one opposing vote was recorded when his name was presented to the much larger central committee.

The State CIO executive board, which was meeting at the same time as the DFL executive board, also acted quickly on a frank request from William E. Carlson, U. S. Senate candidate on the DFL ticket, for CIO backing. It voted to set up a statewide CIO Carlson-for-Senator committee to work with the candidate and help him in every way possible.

Carlson's opponent, Sen. Thye, has a voting record which Minnesota CIO considers "just as vulnerable as the voting record of Joe Ball," anti-labor Senator defeated by Hubert Humphrey in 1948.

★

THE MISSOURI CIO Council has endorsed Stuart Symington for the Democratic nomination for U. S. Senator.

In backing Symington, the Missouri CIO pointed to his background and training as a Washington administrator. His last Washington job was as clean-up administrator of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

★

THE INDIANA CIO-PAC reports 100% success for the four candidates it recommended to the State Democratic convention.

At a statewide PAC conference, Indiana PAC voted to back the candidacies of Henry Schricker for U. S. senator, John Watkins for governor, Spencer Walton for lieutenant-governor and Tom Calahan for secretary of state. All are Democratic nominees.

★

NEW JERSEY State CIO-PAC uncovered important information from its 55-point questionnaire to congressional and senatorial candidates.

For example, Sen. Smith (R.) is opposed to repeal of Taft-Hartley. But his Democratic opponent, Archibald S. Alexander, thinks it is "wrong in principle and in detail."

Alexander further pledged, if elected, to "sponsor legislation based on the proven ability of labor and management to settle their differences around the conference table."

As a result, Alexander received the unanimous endorsement of the State PAC.

Soldier Vote Bill Killed By House Group

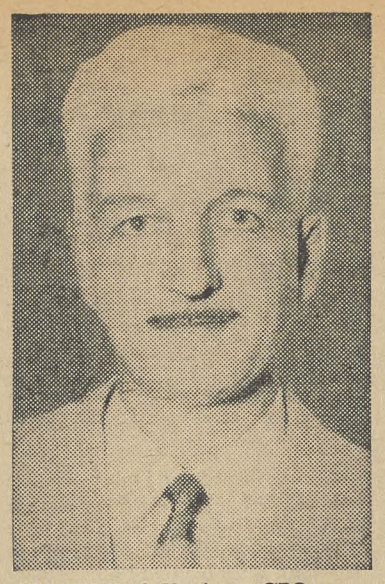
U. S. SERVICEMEN lost their chance for a guaranteed vote in the 1952 elections, as Congress adjourned last week with the GI bill buried in a House committee pigeonhole.

Intent of the bill, repeatedly urged by President Truman, was to make sure all servicemen, plus federal employes living abroad, did not lose their right to vote because of red tape in their home states.

Adopted unanimously by the Senate, the bill would have required all states to accept absentee ballots in presidential and congressional elections from these citizens.

Some of these servicemen and federal employes can vote now, but an estimated 650,000 come from states where registration requirements will prevent their voting in the presidential election.

Thus the House had killed their chances of voting in 1952, unless a special session is called later this year, which is highly unlikely.



NAMED full time CIO consultant for the Denver Area Community Chest, Clarence G. Van Deren (above) has long been an active member and officer of Communications Workers Local 8412 and is a trustee of the Denver CIO Council.

'Shocking' School Fund Cut Reported

IN 259 CITIES, the amount of money spent on the education of the average child was less in 1951 than in either of the two prior years, in terms of uniform purchasing power, Dr. Earl James McGrath, U. S. commissioner of education, reported last week.

In the same period, every person in the country had an increase of $55 in income after taxes, he said in commenting on the "shocking" condition.

"The nation's need for responsible citizens in the crucial years ahead calls for the most effective education within our means," he said.

"It must be provided now. We cannot afford a further reduction in educational standards in our public schools. The actual educational investment in each boy and girl attending school last year dropped by $6 in terms of uniform spending power as shown by the Consumers' Price Index, 1950-51 base."

Churchmen Warn 2 Parties To Stamp Out Bias Pleas

BOTH major parties last week received strong appeals to stamp out racial and religious prejudices from the 1952 campaign and to set up machinery to police any violations.

The plea came in identical telegrams to Democratic and Republican party leaders. The telegrams were signed by six of America's most prominent religious leaders.

Advocating a "fair elections practices code," they urged establishment in each community of committees "to keep a watchful eye on campaign activities and to call to the attention of political leaders any instances of appeals based on religious or racial prejudice."

Almost immediately, Frank McKinney, Democratic national chairman, pledged that his party "will not inject racial prejudice or religious bigotry" into the campaign. "The Democratic party will not condone any such activity in behalf of any of its candidates. It will vigorously condemn and disavow any such activity should it develop," he said.

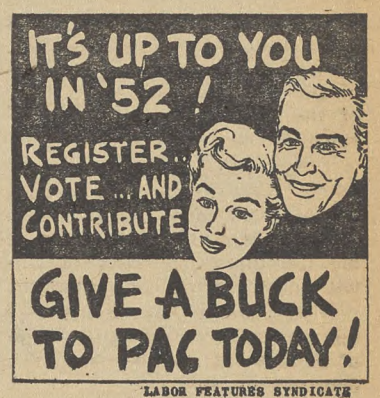
McKinney praised the idea of non-sectarian committees to combat such prejudice and added he was "sure the Democratic National Committee will join completely in cooperation and support.

There was no answer from Republican top brass meeting in Chicago at the GOP convention.

The six religious leaders had noted that "nothing is more harmful to a self-governing people than confusion of issues by base appeals to racial and religious bigotry."

Their plea came after reports that 1952 "may match the 1928 Hoover-Smith campaign in published and whispered defamation."

Signing the telegram were: The Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, president of the National Council of Churches of Christ; the Most Rev. Edwin V. O'Hara, bishop of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Kansas City; Rabbi Simon G. Kramer, president of the Synagogue Council of America; Dr. George N. Shuster, president of Hunter College and a prominent Catholic layman; Dr. Arthur S. Fleming, vice-president of the National Council of Churches; and Jacob Blaustein, president of the American Jewish Committee.



Unionism Is 'Better Buy,' Guild Tells Co-op Outfit

CONSUMERS Union of the U. S., Inc., a cooperative founded to do a good turn for the public by telling which commodities are the "best buys," isn't so friendly with its employes.

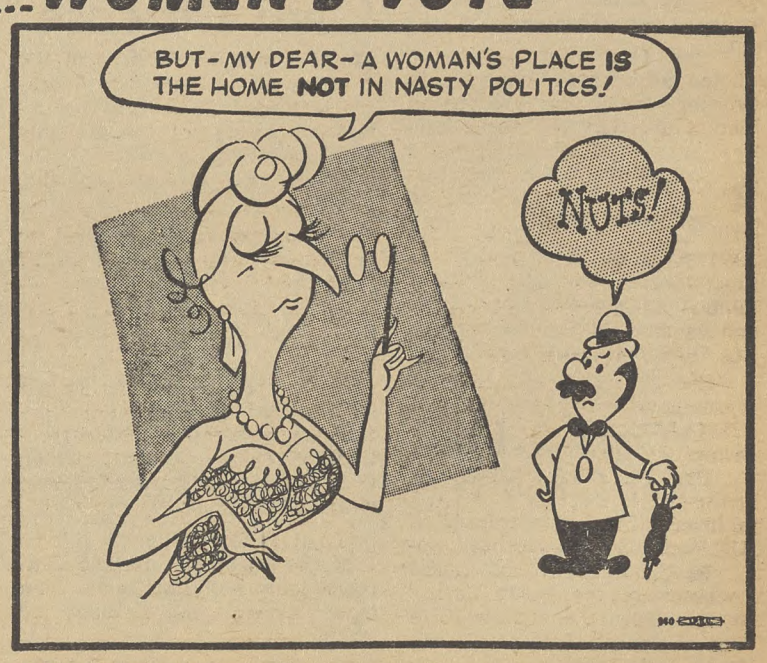
To get its finding abroad in the land, Consumers Union publishes Consumer Reports, whose editorial, technical and business employes are members of the Newspaper Guild of New York, CIO.

Consumers Union last week locked out the Guild members after a management spokesman, Sidney L. Cahn, flatly refused to discuss any of a half dozen major violations of the contract, the Guild reported.

Unwilling to work without a contract, the Consumers Union unit met at the New York Guild headquarters and decided to remain in session until the grievances have been settled satisfactorily.

FACT AND FANCY....ABOUT.....WOMEN'S VOTE

VAIN AS A PEACOCK—It's a popular notion that the peacock is vain. The fact is the peacock is a modest unassuming creature and his colorful plumage is merely for mating.



WOMEN'S VOTE—The fact is that there are more women eligible to vote than men. If women all voted, they could elect the President and a majority in Congress.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

Berlin, Germany, July 5

FOR A WEEK, the writer has been in Berlin attending the General Council meeting of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. It has been a fine meeting, at which delegations from practically all the democratic labor unions in the free world have been working in friendly cooperation on the development of programs.

The program boils down to a job that we in the CIO know very well—the job of "organizing the unorganized." There is tremendous work to be done in Asia, in Africa, in Latin America, and in places like Italy and France, where the Communists still control the biggest union centers.

It seems to me that considerable attention is being given to the sort of ideas held by the CIO. The CIO delegation at this conference has stressed what we have learned in America: that unions which don't fight for their rights and their just goals aren't going to go anywhere or get anything for their members. Free collective bargaining, rather than reliance on any government officials, is the best road to economic improvement; and the democratic unions know it.

★

SO LONG AS I LIVE, Berlin during this summer of 1952 will always stay in my memory. It is hard to describe this mixture of war ruins, of the tremendous courage of the democratic people in the western section of the city, of the brutality and arrogance of the Communist police state, which surrounds all of Berlin and controls the eastern half of the city.

The trade unionists and the people of western Berlin as a whole have shown outstanding bravery in keeping their nerve through this long, difficult period, when the Communists have tried to cut them off from the world and make them bow under to dictatorship. But I think that the West Germans have faith that they will come through this all right, and some day again be free.

Meanwhile they value the help they have received from America; and the CIO has a fine reputation over here, as in other sections of Europe, for helping keep bright the torch of trade unionism and democracy.

★

THE STEEL STRIKE is a matter of great interest not only to the workers of Berlin but to the leaders of unions throughout the world. At the ICFTU meeting we were asked many questions about the strike, and the writer has predicted that the steel union, under Pres. Murray's leadership, will achieve victory in the end.

The ICFTU General Council adopted a fine resolution of support; and on behalf of Pres. Murray I voiced the Steelworkers' thanks and determination to win economic justice.

NATIONAL DIR. John Riffe of the CIO Organizing Committee reports the CIO Steelworkers won election victories at the Columbus Iron Works, Columbus, Ga., eligible 283, USA-CIO 118, no union 37, challenged 26; Alladin Industries, Inc., Nashville, Tenn., eligible 142, USA-CIO 95, no union 30, challenged 12, void 1.

Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner reports that in a representation election at the Mueller Macaroni Co., Jersey City, N. J., the workers favored LIU 262, United Bakery & Confectionary Workers, CIO, by a vote of 157 to 33 for the AFL, 2 for no union. Local Pres. Anthony Auriema and Bus. Agent George Braverman were in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Nicholas Dragon reports that CIO-LIU 78 won bargaining rights for employes of the Zimel Co., Tolleson, Ariz., without an election, as they favored the CIO. This is the first potato shed to be organized by Local 78. CIO Staff Rep. Ann Tinnon and Jack Garrett, executive officer of Local 78, directed the drive.

Reg. Dir. Ben Henry reports that in a representation election at the Horn Manufacturing Co., Fort Dodge, Ia., the CIO Auto Workers won by a vote of 116 to 81 for the AFL. Credit for this victory goes to Intl. Rep. Bob Roberts.

★

REG. DIR. George DeNucci reports that in a representation election at the City Ice & Fuel Co., Marion, O., the workers favored the CIO Retail & Wholesale Employes Union by a unanimous vote. RWDSU State Dir. Gerald Hughes handled the drive assisted by Staff Rep. Gene Ingles. The Allied Beverage Distributing Co., Columbus, O., agreed to recognize Local 47, CIO Brewery Workers, and sign a standard agreement. The negotiations were handled by Bus. Rep. Arthur Poppenhaeger.

Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett of the IUE-CIO reports the following representation election victories: Ideal Clamp Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., IUE-CIO 104, no union 0, AFL withdrew; Seeger Refrigerator, Co., Evansville, Ind., IUE-CIO 1196, no union 1024.

Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports that in a representation election at the M. L. Dague Co., Muncie, Ind., the workers voted unanimously in favor of the CIO. Credit for this victory goes to officers of the IUC, who were responsible for the organization.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports the following representation election victories for LIU-CIO 78 in Blythe, Calif.: Eaton Farms, CIO 40, no union 14; King Maljan Co., Inc., CIO 38, no union 4; P & C Produce Co., CIO 55, no union 4; L. M. Ashderian, CIO 61, no union 10; Colorado River Farms, CIO 25, no union 2, and Wilco Produce Co., CIO 79, no union 4. Local 78 Rep. Clayton Coon was in charge.

Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes reports the CIO Oil Workers won a representation election for office employes at the Pan-Am Oil Co. Refinery, St. Rose, La., by a vote of 19 to 8 for no union.

Inquiry Asked On 'Dumping' Of Farm Help

A FULL investigation of the over-supplying of Mexican farm laborers to the big corporation farms of the Southwest is urged by Nicholas C. Dragon, CIO regional director for Arizona and New Mexico.

In his report as CIO representative at the Mexican migratory labor negotiations in Mexico City, he says, "the abuse of certifying and the over-supply of foreign workers is very detrimental to local farm communities."

Pointing out that many U. S. farm hands thrown out of work by Mexicans depend upon extra earnings during peak harvest time, Dragon adds:

"When local citizens do not earn this extra money, they become state and federal relief burdens."

Dragon's report is critical of procedures used during the negotiations of the new treaty between the U. S. and Mexico providing for the importation of additional Mexican farm hands.

"Neither CIO or AFL or farm representatives sat in on the discussions that took place," he reports. "The State and Labor Depts. would tell labor and grower representatives what recommendations had been presented."

DRAGON objected particularly to the government's ignoring of his request for joint briefing sessions.

"At no time was there a joint meeting with the growers," his report states. "I did not know whether the labor representatives received one story and the growers another."

Despite operational handicaps, Dragon believes that CIO efforts at the conference resulted in real improvements in the U. S.-Mexican agreement. Efforts by farm lobbyists to secure even lower wage rates for Mexican nationals were beaten back, and the Labor Dept., which is responsible for determining prevailing wage rates, assured the CIO that no workers would be paid less than last year.

Dragon said that his talks with Mexican trade union leaders at the meetings disclosed that they also are "positively opposed" to the current agreement permitting Mexican "braceros" to work on U. S. farms.

Arrogant Stand Of Big Steel Hit By Panama Local

THE ARROGANT attitude of the magnates of the steel industry was scored last week by Local 900 of the CIO Government & Civic Empoyees Organizing Committee, representing 5000 workers employed by the U. S. in the Panama Canal Zone.

The local's executive board, in a resolution, went "on record as being in sympathy with, and standing fully behind, the United Steelworkers in their valiant fight for the improvements which they seek."

Copies of the resolution were sent to CIO and Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray, all chapters of the local, and the Panama press.

Labor Overseas

Productivity Gains Backed By Big Italian Auto Firm

SUPPORT has come from an unexpected source for the demand of American unions that U. S. aid to foreign nations be reflected in better wages and higher living standards for the great mass of workers.

The board of directors of the Fiat Automobile Co. of Turin, one of the largest industrial operations in Italy, called for a "productivity policy" for the entire country in their recent annual report, and predicted that it would bring not only a "significant rise" in living standards but also lower prices for consumers.

The report acknowledged the lessons on productivity European industry has learned from the Mutual Security Agency and American industry, and stressed the benefits in increase could bring to both industry and labor. It said:

"The entire country—all economic productive forces, labor, finance, commerce, the government fiscal authorities, all public administrations—must join forces to reach the collective goal of strengthening production and widening consumption, in order to stamp out unemployment, increase work opportunities and raise the standard of living . . .

"It is obvious that productivity must reach out in three ways:

1. "Give the consumer better quality, larger quantities, lower prices.
2. "Diminish the labor of the worker through the use of constantly improved tools.
3. "Increase the remuneration of labor to improve the purchasing power of the working classes . . .

"New markets must be created through a constant acquisition of new and deeper strata of consumers. Where from? From the low-income groups and from the underdeveloped regions and continents. How? Increase the purchasing power of these masses."

THE COMMUNISTS whose Soviet masters share in the Allied occupation of Austria appear to be getting even less and less popular—if that were possible.

The World Federation of Trade Unions, the Communist stooge organization that has been quartered in Vienna, is getting ready to move, according to the Vienna newspaper Presse.

There is some ground for believing that its departure is inspired by politics, said the Presse, inasmuch as the view has been expressed in WFTU circles that it is made necessary by the fact that "an entirely new political situation had arisen, the first signs of which would become apparent in the near future."

However, equally responsible Austrian circles think the move is an outgrowth of the WFTU's failure to build up its activities in Vienna, and of the complete failure of the Communist hope that its presence in the capital would open a breach in the ranks of the country's unions.

New headquarters of the WFTU, according to the Presse, will be in one of the Soviet satellite countries. Most frequently mentioned have been Prague, Czechoslovakia, and Breslau, Leipzig and East Berlin in Germany.

★

IF THE WFTU moves to Prague it isn't likely to be welcomed with open arms by Czechoslovakian workers. Their living standards, once about the highest in continental Europe, have been steadily debased by their Communist masters.

A recent German study showed that a German coal miner would have to work 75 minutes to earn enough to buy a pound of bacon, but his Czech counterpart would have to stay in the mine face for five hours—300 minutes—before he could earn enough to make a similar purchase.

Prices High? You Ain't Seen Nothing Yet

IF YOU THINK prices are high now, you ain't seen nothing yet!

Within a fortnight after Congress enacted a weak price control law, congressional economists predicted that consumer prices—now at an all-time high—will climb even higher during the next six to 12 months.

Staff members of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report last week forecast that "moderate inflationary pressures" will result during the 1953 fiscal year that started July 1.

The economists based their prediction on these reasons:

- Continuance of the recent rising trend in rents and services. (Congress ended rent controls as of Sept. 30, except where local governing bodies act to extend them to Apr. 30, 1953.)
- Recovery of clothing and apparel prices from a low point.
- Recovery of consumer durable goods from recent lows.
- General average stability in food prices, with some ups and downs.

And the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last week that retail food prices increased an average of .3% between May 26 and June 15.

Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall earlier had revealed to an unheeding Congress that the BLS consumer price index had climbed beyond the 189.1 all-time high of mid-January.

The BLS retail food price index, which was issued last week, was based on a survey of eight cities and stood at 231.6, about 14% above pre-Korean war levels.

High prices of eggs, fruits, vegetables, meats and fish helped push up the index.

The increase was registered while price controls were in effect on fresh foods. (Higher fresh food prices are likely because under the new controls law, fresh foods are exempted.)

One business group—the National Industrial Conference Board—reported that the cost of living hit an all-time high in May, with the highest increase in the grocery bill.

Even the U. S. Chamber of Commerce—which is among the groups that have been lobbying the hardest for the end of price controls—admitted in its July issue of Economic Intelligence that prices would go up. This is the way the Chamber put it:

"Whether by design or stumbling, the steps taken in recent months are likely to put our economy under upward price pressures in the period unless counteracting steps are taken."

CWA Gets 10c In 2 Big Settlements

TWO NEW contracts bringing wage hikes of 9.2 to 10c an hour to 73,000 employes of the Bell Telephone System were announced by the CIO Communications Workers last week.

The new pacts bring to 36 the total number of settlements won by CWA-CIO since the union's strike against the system in a number of states last April. The 36 contracts cover a quarter million CWA members.

The newest pacts are with the Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. and the Long Lines Dept. of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., parent company for the Bell System.

The increase for the 52,000 Southwestern Bell employes averages 9.2c an hour and will total approximately $12 million during the life of the one-year agreement. Workers in some 500 towns in Kansas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Missouri and part of Illinois are covered.

Twenty-one thousand CWA members employed by the Long Lines Dept. in 42 states are covered by the other contract. They won increases ranging from $2.50 to $6 a week and averaging 10c an hour. Parts of both increases must be approved by the Wage Stabilization Board.

Some upgrading and fringe benefits also are included in both settlements.

Contracts covering an additional 75,000 Bell System employes are being negotiated or are about to be negotiated by CWA and the companies.

Approximately 4500 CWA members have been on strike since July 1 against the Associated Telephone Co. Southern California, the largest independent telephone firm in the country.

The union has filed unfair labor practices charges against the company, accusing it of coercion in threatening to fire five strikers and refusing to bargain on all issues, which include wage increases, union security, differentials and reclassifications.

Boulware Of GE Spanked At Hearing

GENERAL ELECTRIC was spanked last week before a Senate Labor subcommittee for its "Plague on Both Your Houses" statement lumping Communist-dominated unions and free, American unions in the same category.

Sen. Humphrey (D., Minn.), subcommittee chairman, angrily charged the GE statement did a "great disservice" and illustrated "one of the great tragedies of our time."

Testifying for GE was Vice Pres. Lemuel Boulware, who was armed with a 64-page, 12,000-word attack on James B. Carey, president of the CIO Electrical Workers.

It was General Electric's answer to Carey's carefully-documented charges before the subcommittee that GE had given "active assistance and encouragement" to the United Electrical Workers, kicked out of CIO in 1949 for Communist domination.

When Boulware attacked the IUE-CIO, Humphrey snapped:

"I'm getting fed up with this constant lumping of sincere persons of every diverse political opinion into a single category . . . and then tying them to Communism."

Carey commented that Boulware, as an answer to the IUE-CIO's testimony, had engaged in "mud-slinging, McCarthy-like character assassination."

Buchanan Renamed

Thomas C. Buchanan, chairman of the Federal Power Commission until his term expired June 22, was sworn in last week as an interim member and designated again the chairman. The Senate did not act on his reappointment by President Truman.

Relief Hurdles For Steel Strikers Hit By 2 State CIO Councils

RESENTMENT against injustice knows no barriers of language or geography, as these striking members of a CGT-CIO union in San Juan, Puerto Rico, attest. Recently organized into an office workers' union, they walked out 33 strong when one of their fellow workers was unjustifiedly discharged. About twice that number of mechanics, members of another CGT-CIO local, have refused to cross the picket line.

THE PENNSYLVANIA and the Minnesota CIO Councils last week protested hurdles placed in the way of striking CIO Steelworkers seeking relief.

The Keystone State council called on the Pennsylvania Dept. of Public Assistance to "humanize" its procedures. The request was made after the department announced that all steel workers, and others idled by the strike, must dispose of autos, TV sets, war bonds and life insurance before applying for relief.

Council Pres. Harry Boyer wrote Mrs. Eleanor G. Evans, department secretary:

"It is obvious that there has been an unusually great tightening up taking place in the department with respect to the consideration of the essential needs of these people. Especially is this true by comparison with the handling of similar situations in recent years.

"The strikers themselves are doing such a fine job of screening their own people in order to minimize the problem that the department has highly praised this effort. However, this has not contributed toward making possible speedier decisions to render needed aid . . .

"We seek no favored treatment for strikers. At the same time when qualifying standards are made so rigid as to bar many applicants, wholesale discrimination and severe hardship are bound to occur and should not happen.

"Just because the applicant is a striker, he should be required to establish such destitution as to come up in hand before being given consideration as to his needs."

Minnesota Labor, the official State CIO paper, protested the difficulty of getting relief in the Duluth area, where 9000 iron ore miners who belong to the CIO Steelworkers live.

A Minnesota striker seeking relief must turn over to the county welfare commission the license plates of his auto if it is valued at more than $350, the paper reported.

Some strikers who drew pay checks early in June are not considered eligible for relief for at least three months.

Food Local Gains To 12c

WAGE GAINS of from 7.5c to 12.5c an hour have just been negotiated by CIO for 4000 food packing workers in California and Arizona.

The increases were negotiated by the United Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers, Local Industrial Union 78, in bargaining with 65 melon and vegetable shippers in the Imperial Valley and the west side of the San Joaquin Valley of California and the Yuma, Ariz., area.

LIU 78 Pres. J. E. Frost reported the contract settlement, and said the wage increase will be retroactive to Apr. 15.

The local now is negotiating for pear and tomato packers in Northern California.

Chicago To See CIO Video On 'Issues Of The Day'

CIO'S NEW TELEVISION SERIES is scheduled to move into the Chicago-Lake County, Ind., area in mid-summer.

Arrangements have been completed for sponsorship of the 13-week series, "Issues of the Day," by the CIO unions and councils both in Chicago and in neighboring Lake County, Indiana, which is in the Chicago television area.

Plans call for launching the series early in August over one of the major stations in the Windy City, thus putting the CIO series on the air during what television experts expect will be the "hottest months of '52"—the election campaign months.

Presently the 13-week series, produced jointly by the CIO and the CIO Political Action Committee, is either on the air or scheduled in Washington, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Dayton and Chicago. Plans for airing the films in other cities are now being completed.

Big Six Scuttles Peace Talks, Steel Union Policy Body Meets

NON-YIELDING ATTITUDE of the Big Six steel companies last week again sank efforts to settle the steel strike now in its eighth week. CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray is shown leaving a day-long negotiating session, flanked by USA-CIO Vice-Pres. James G. Thimmes (left) and USA-CIO Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald.

The dove of peace hovered fitfully and briefly over the country's steel industry last week, then flew off indignantly when spokesmen for the six largest mills offered the striking CIO Steelworkers a watered-down version of the Bethlehem union security plan.

The offer was repected by USA-CIO Pres. Philip Murray and his fellow officers. Murray thereupon called a meeting of the 175-man USA-CIO Wage Policy Committee for Pittsburgh for July 21.

Negotiations, at which two Bethlehem executives carried the ball for the Big Six of the industry, were held in Pittsburgh. The meetings were resumed at the behest of Dr. John R. Steelman, acting director of defense mobilization, who kept in close touch with the conferees and, as he had requested, was finally notified that the impasse he sought to break down was standing as firmly as ever.

Murray was sharply critical of the companies' offer in a brief statement he issued after the breakdown of the latest negotiations.

"I regret that the long pending steel dispute still remains unsettled," he said.

"The strike was forced upon the union by the industry. It continues because an unholy alliance within the industry remains unwilling to permit a fair settlement of the various issues in dispute.

"In accordance with the mandate of the union's international convention, I and my fellow officers have rejected the industry's falsely publicized last offer as inadequate and unsatisfactory.

"It is appropriate, however, that the facts, rather than the industry's distorted propaganda about this offer and the various meetings which have taken place between representatives of the industry and the union, be reported to the Intl. Wage Policy Committee of the union.

"This committee, as is well known, consists of approximately 175 democratically-elected representatives of the union's membership, including workers in the mills and mines involved in this dispute.

"The meeting will be held in Pittsburgh on Monday, July 21, at 10 a.m.

"On the basis of the facts, the Intl. Wage Policy Committee will decide the union's future

Civil Rights Top '52 Issue, CIO Warns Democrats

DEMOCRATIC Convention politics finally became as hot as Chicago's muggy weather when the fight over a strong civil right plank in the 1952 platform, opened last week.

The Dixiecrats' delegations, among the earlier to arrive for the big show opening July 21, had captured the first round of publicity by misrepresenting their demands for back-treading on civil rights as a "compromise."

It wasn't until July 17, when the CIO and other groups made a special appearance before the Democratic platform committee on this issue alone, that the Dixiecrats were set back firmly.

THE PHONEY olive branch—meant only a watering down of civil rights proposals on their terms—was rejected flatly on behalf of American workers by CIO Sec.-Treas James B. Carey. He and other spokesmen representing 54 national organizations comprising the Leadership Conference on Human Rights, demanded that the 1948 platform not only be retained but strengthened through the addition of new provisions to make its realization possible.

On the issue of FEPC legislation, Carey told the platform committee that workers of the United States, and no one else, would decide the rules under which they will work. Politicians and employers, he said, have no right to make rules restricting opportunities for employment because of race, creed, color or national origin.

"It is high time," he said, "that everyone understood that workers make their own determinations and voice these determinations through spokesmen of their own choosing. We reject the efforts of a number of people who claim to speak for labor. We speak for ourselves."

Carey pointed out that CIO members have decided what fair employment practices are and just how they expect them to be carried out.

"Our decisions are set forth in the constitution of the CIO, and they have been reiterated with greater and greater emphasis by each of our 13 constitutional conventions since the CIO was formally established in 1938," Carey said.

A STATEMENT by CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther, also president of the CIO Auto Workers, was read to the drafting committee by William Oliver, co-director of the UAW fair employment practices department.

"The civil rights issue is the most important issue in the 1952 campaign," Reuther said. "it is plain that the Republican Party, in its platform and its candidates, has sold civil rights down the river."

If the Democrats adopt a stronger civil rights plank, and "if you nominate candidates true to the spirit of the New Deal and the Fair Deal," they and "all the American people and free men everywhere will win Nov. 4," he predicted. "The past 20 years have proved that it is politically smart to be morally right." he added.

Paul Sifton, UAW legislative representative in Washington, drew a round of applause from the overwhelming majority of the members of the platform committee when, after demanding that the platform contain a pledge to amend Senate rules so that filibusters could be stopped, he asserted:

"THE REPUBLICAN Party has outfumbled the Democratic Party on civil rights, including Rule 22 on filibusters, and—as of new has lost the 1952 election."

He pointed out that the GOP vice presidential nominee, Sen. Nixon (R. Calif.), helped the Republicans lose by joining Sen. Taft (R. O.) in casting the only Republican votes against FEPC legislation in the Senate Labor Committee last session.

As things look now, it is almost certain that the preliminary drafting committee will write at least as strong a civil rights plank as that of 1948. The committee members' applause July 17 indicates that a majority will favor strengthening it.

The platform committee, numbering 108 members, is a significant indication of delegate sentiment. Reuther and Carey will appear before it July 21 to present CIO views on the entire platform.

One of the persons helping to shape the final draft will be Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers. A member of the committee, he made it clear by his smile throughout last week's hearing that he was getting a real sense of personal satisfaction out of the good fight his CIO colleagues were waging in the witness stand below the committee podium.

The chairman of the delegation from the Leadership Conference on Human Rights is Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People, who offered a nine-point civil rights plank carrying full CIO endorsement.

Carey said that the platform committee should adopt the principles set forth in this program "unanimously" and that any politicians who refuse to support it "should eliminate themselves."

"The political leader in the U. S. has an obligation to represent people—not a set of prejudices," he said.

"If he cannot divest himself of his prejudices, he should be honest enough to eliminate himself from political consideration. If he lacks that honesty, then his political associates should themselves eliminate him, if they are to escape the stain of his dishonesty."

Demos' Civil Rights Fight Rates Top News Coverage

A key to the importance of the civil rights issue in the coming elections is found in the attendance at the opening testimony on this subject before the Democratic platform committee last week.

Word that the issue was coming up brought so many newspapermen in to cover the testimony that press facilities were totally exhausted, even though the Democratic committee's publicity men took the unprecedented step of checking press credentials before allowing reporters seats at the press table. This is never done at preliminary hearings.

And in happy contrast to the vacant seats in the House and Senate throughout last session, every single seat reserved for committee members was occupied. The crowd of interested observers also got so big that, when extra seats failed to hold them, the committee staff rushed off in desperation to have the hotel attendants enlarge the ballroom by removing a temporary wall at one end.

CIO Top Leaders Hit Eisenhower, Nixon

GEN. Eisenhower, Republican presidential candidate, is "a rank amateur in the field of civil government and a prisoner of his own advisers."

Sen. Nixon (Calif.), GOP vice-presidential nominee, will be an "albatross around the neck" of Gen. Eisenhower in the campaign.

These were the opinions of top CIO leaders, as they gathered in Chicago last week for the Democratic National Convention.

Jack Kroll, national director of CIO-PAC, told Chicago newsmen that Eisenhower lost all hope of winning any substantial labor support when he picked Nixon as his running mate.

"Nixon will be an albatross," Kroll commented, "because he was a member of the House Labor Committee which in 1947 wrote the Taft-Hartley act."

In Coleridge's poem, "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner," a sailor who killed an albatross was blamed by his mates for causing a calm that left the vessel "a painted ship upon a painted sea." The dead bird was hung about his neck as a punishment.

Kroll added that Nixon's labor voting record closely parallels that of Sen. Taft.

As the opening date of the Democratic Convention drew near, CIO-PAC opened headquarters in Chicago's Palmer House and planned a caucus of CIO members who are delegates and alternates to the convention.

Joseph A. Beirne, president of the Communications Workers and a member of the Democratic platform drafting committee, noted that Gen. Eisenhower was "unquestionably a great military leader."

BUT, he added, "if he is elected he will be helpless on great domestic issues facing the nation and dependent on his advisers for decisions."

CIO leaders who are convention delegates include:

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, an alternate from Pennsylvania. David J. McDonald, Steelworker secretary-treasurer, a delegate from Pennsylvania. O. A. Knight, Oil Workers president, a delegate from Colorado. Tilford Dudley, assistant PAC director, a delegate from the District of Columbia.

A number of CIO state council presidents and secretary-treasurers, as well as a number of regional and district directors of CIO international unions, are included in the list of delegates and alternates.

Photogenic Nixon's Vote Record Against Labor, For Reaction

THE NOMINATION of Sen. Richard Milhous Nixon (R. Calif.) as the Republican candidate for Vice President obviously wasn't contributing to the peace of mind of some supporters of Gen. Eisenhower.

Even the influential Republican newspaper, The Washington Post, which backed Eisenhower, editorialized last week that "Senator Nixon engaged in some pretty questionable attacks in his 1950 campaign against Helen Gahagan Douglas . . ." and "has often adhered to the Old Guard line on China."

"With no disrespect to Senator Nixon," the Post continues, "we think the Republicans overlooked an opportunity to recognize the mistakes of 1944 in not treating the vice presidential nomination with the seriousness it deserves."

Behind the glamorous personality, however, is a political record that, except for questions of foreign policy, runs a close parallel to the reactionary Taft wing of the Republican Party. The last CIO News voting guide, covering his first year as a Senator, shows that he voted wrong or was absent on all of the key domestic issues and was right only on the Mutual Security Act proposals.

Nixon's voting record in all CIO News voting guides since his first term in the House in 1947 shows that he has voted overwhelmingly "wrong" on most legislative proposals. The few exceptions have been chiefly on foreign policy and anti-polltax issues.

The current Congressional Quarterly compares Nixon's record on 50 key votes during the six years he has served in Congress. It reveals that his votes closely paralleled those of Sen. Taft (R. O.) in the Senate, and of Reps. Martin (R. Mass.) and Dirksen (R. Ill.) in the 81st and 80th Congress, respectively, with but few exceptions. In the "terrible" 80th, he did not cast one vote differing from Dirksen on any of the key issues.

In the 80th Congress, as a member of the House Labor Committee, Nixon helped draft the Taft-Hartley Act. He still publicly supports it and opposes its repeal, although, like Taft, he has been forced by the law's many weaknesses to concede that amendments are needed.

Even on foreign policy, Nixon has lent much support to the isolationist cause, particularly through his wild charges of Communist influences in the Administration program. In his first year in the Senate, he charged President Truman with a "smear campaign" because he found it necessary to recall Gen. MacArthur as supreme commander in the Far East.

Nixon's reputation as an investigator began on the House Un-American Activities Committee.

In the 80th Congress, as a member of the Un-American Activities Committee, Nixon was co-author with Sen. Mundt (R. S. D.) of the Mundt-Nixon Communist Control Bill.

The Mundt-Nixon proposals later were adopted, in the main, and written into law over President Truman's veto as part of the McCarran Internal Security Act. The CIO, along with most liberal anti-Communist organizations, opposed both of these measures as a dangerous violation of civil rights and promoter of smear techniques.

Nixon is against the Brannan farm plan, federal health insurance, and "wild spending and high taxes." He voted to give the rich tidelands oil lands to the states, and has supported moves to wreck price and rent control, public housing, social security and nearly all other progressive measures.

That is the record behind the young, handsome, smiling face that will soon be beaming at you from countless GOP campaign posters. What has the political experts on the Republican side worried is that not even this pretty physiognomy can cover the reactionary and anti-labor career it represents.

Puerto Rico Unit Has TWU Charter

The CIO Transport Workers have announced the chartering of a Puerto Rican division at the request of the 7000-member Chauffeurs & Mechanics Union of Puerto Rico.

Members of the new unit are employed by the San Juan Transportation Authority, or drive and service private bus lines, taxis, jitneys, trucks and other vehicles for hire.

course of action."

The "unholy alliance" to which Murray referred is the "conspiracy and combination" the Steelworkers charged to the Big Six in allegations filed with the National Labor Relations Board and the U. S. Dept. of Justice.

The union charged the six companies with agreeing among themselves — and with some others whose employes the USA-CIO does not represent—not to agree to a settlement satisfactory to one unless it is satisfactory to all, and with using economic threats to prevent smaller companies not parties to the agreement from signing contracts except on terms approved by the big firms.

Union and management spokesmen went back into negotiations when Steelman declared that the national welfare demanded a prompt resumption of steel production.

The national welfare, however, did not prevent the industry from continuing its campaign to pry out of the government price increases to which it is not entitled under price control laws and regulations.

Price Administrator Ellis G. Arnall thus far has stood out against any price boost of more than about $3 a ton, which he says is all the industry can be allowed under the Capehart Amendment.

There were many indications, however, that the industry and the White House were near agreement on a raise substantially higher than $3.

"NO" CONTINUES to be the answer of the big steel companies. CIO and Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray (right) reads a statement saying that he and Vice Pres. Joseph M. Larkin of Bethlehem Steel (left) were unable to reach an agreement.

Arnall was still sticking to his guns last week. On July 14 he released copies of letters to three steel producers rejecting petitions for approval of price hikes in excess of the Capehart allowance.

The Pittsburgh Steel Co., with which the USA-CIO has signed, asked $5.32 a ton on top of the $2.84 it was allowed under the Capehart amendment and had already put into effect.

The Armco Steel Co. sought $5.50 and Weirton Steel Co. $6. Neither had put a Capehart increase into effect—and neither has relations with the Steelworkers.

The collapse of last week's negotiations followed quickly upon the breakup of prior efforts to settle the dispute as the previous week drew to a close.

Murray and Arthur G. Goldberg, general counsel of both the union and the CIO, represented the Steelworkers at both sets of negotiations. Industry spokesmen last week were Joseph M. Larkin, Bethlehem vice president in charge of industrial relations, and John H. Morse, the firm's general counsel.

At the time the previous negotiations collapsed—also largely on the question of union security —the industry was represented by Larkin, John A. Stephens, U. S. Steel vice president in charge of industrial relations, and Ben Moreell, chairman of the board of directors of Jones & Laughlin.

The other firms involved in both sets of negotiations were Republic, Youngstown Steel & Tube, and Inland Steel.

The steel strike entered its eight week on July 19. The industry has made no effort to operate, and there have been few picket line incidents. The strikers were holding firm.

However, several pickets were injured slightly when a truck driver used an iron bar to bat his way through their lines at Jones & Laughlin's Aliquippa, Pa., plant on July 17.

The driver, carrying a shipment for the Atomic Energy Commission, raced his trailer truck through the skeleton picket line when asked for his credentials on his arrival. By the time he left the line had been reinforced. When he was again stopped, he swung the bar and sped away.

Several thousand strikers in the Pittsburgh area got a financial shot in the arm last week when U. S. Steel distributed vacation pay checks to employes who had made arrangements to take their annual holidays between June 2, when the walkout started, and July 16.

CIO Riddle Dept., A Summer Feature

Thoughts on a hot summer day:

1. The steel companies have been fighting the union shop, on grounds that it violates American liberties.

2. The steel companies are strong supporters of the Republican Party.

3. The Republican Party platform hails the Taft-Hartley Act —because it allegedly guarantees to unions the right to establish "union shop" agreements.

4. Who was it—either in the Republican Party or in the steel industry—who got the signals mixed?

CIO Vice Presidents Give Steel Union Full Support

Following is the complete text of a statement adopted by the executive officers and vice presidents of the CIO, meeting in Chicago on July 18:

To the United Steelworkers of America, now in the seventh week of a bitter strike to win economic justice and fair working conditions, the Congress of Industrial Organizations pledges its full-hearted support.

The facts are incontrovertibly clear that justice and equity are on the side of the Steelworkers. In arrogantly refusing to reach an agreement on the basis of the compromise proposals of the Wage Stabilization Board, the steel companies have done a major disservice not only to their employes but to all the people of America.

Had the steel companies bargained in good faith, had they been willing to recognize the need for bringing wages and working conditions up to date, had they been willing to accept the WSB's recommendations based on an exhaustive study of the case—then this strike need never have occurred.

It is now time that the steel companies, which are in the strongest financial position in their history, should quickly reach agreement with the United Steelworkers, to permit the reopening of the steel mills and the production of goods so vital to the nation's welfare and defense.

The blame for the present stoppage rests now, as it has since the beginning, on the stubborn and short-sighted attitude of the steel companies.

We commend the Steelworkers for their discipline, their fortitude and their courage in this battle for economic justice—a battle which affects the welfare of every worker in the nation. Speaking for the millions of members of the CIO, we pledge our full moral and financial support to the United Steelworkers of America.

It was signed by Pres. Philip Murray, also president of the Steelworkers; Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, also president of the Electrical Workers; Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, and the following CIO vice presidents:

Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers; Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers; Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers; Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers; Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers; Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, and Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the Clothing Workers.

U. S. Steel Signs Union Shop For Rail Line

CIO Steelworkers late last week signed a full union shop contract with U. S. Steel corporation's railroad subsidiary.

The agreement covers 2000 employes of the Union Railroad Co., U. S. Steel's rail line providing mill and switching service for Monongahela Valley plants.

Steelworker Pres. Philip Murray pointed out this was the second such agreement signed by U. S. Steel and contained no clause providing a 15-day "escape period" such as the companies demand in the basic steel contract.

"The question of the so-called principle to which this industry clings must now make U. S. Steel and the industry the laughing stock of the nation," Murray said.

Murray also pointed to U. S. Steel's contracts with the Railroad Brotherhoods, which contain union shop clauses.

Company spokesmen minimized the importance of the contract, saying it merely brought a small segment of railroad workers into line with others in the same industry.

29,000 Can Get Relief

Striking members of the CIO Steelworkers in New York—some 29,000 of them—on July 22 became eligible to file unemployment insurance claims.

The law requires a seven-week waiting period before claims can be filed during a strike. About 24,000 other workers in the state have been laid off because of the steel walkout. Hardest hit is the Buffalo-Niagara Frontier area, with 22,000 USA-CIO members on strike in six plants and 11,000 other workers laid off in 11 factories.

CIO to Meet with AFL On New WSB Set-up

THE CIO executive officers and vice presidents on July 18 named a special committee to confer with the American Federation of Labor on problems posed by the new Defense Production Act.

Specifically the seven-man CIO committee will discuss the advisability of joint action in view of the new Wage Stabilization Board which will take over on Aug. 1.

At the same time, the vice-presidents and executive officers, who met in Chicago, adopted a statement pledging "the full hearted support" of the CIO to the striking Steelworkers.

Placing the full blame for the strike on the shoulders of the arrogant steel companies, the statement concludes:

"Speaking for the millions of members of the CIO we pledge our full moral and financial support to the United Steelworkers of America."

In a press conference following the July 18 morning session, CIO Pres. Philip Murray told newsmen, "A good candidate and a good platform means a rousing victory for the Democratic party."

In setting up the special committee to meet with the AFL, the vice presidents considered in detail the picture posed by the revamped WSB. Labor had fought bitterly against the amendments to the Defense Production Act which Congress adopted in the closing days of the session.

Briefly, these amendments strip the WSB of its dispute-settling power under which it had operated and under which its World War II counterpart operated so successfully.

Named by President Murray to the committee were:

Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Vice Presidents Walter Reuther, Emil Rieve and Joseph Beirne and the three CIO members on the present WSB, Joseph Childs, John Brophy and Benjamin Sigal.

In commenting on the Steelworkers strike, the vice presidents noted that "the facts are incontrovertibly clear that justice and equity are on the side of the Steelworkers. In arrogantly refusing to reach an agreement on the basis of the compromise proposals of the Wage Stabilization Board, the steel companies have done a major disservice not only to their employes but to all the people of America."

Pres. Murray met the press following the morning session, and in advance of the vice-presidents' consideration of the Political Action Committee report.

He expressed his hope that the Democratic Party would adopt a "good, strong, wholesome and sincere civil rights program."

In response to newsmen's questions on CIO's endorsement of a candidate, Pres. Murray said, "After the convention, it is reasonable to assume the CIO will endorse a good candidate with a good platform."

He noted, however, that labor can not endorse either Gen. Eisenhower or the Republican platform

The GOP Platform

Is it a "new" Republican Party? Has it broken with the empty record of the GOP of past? Does it hold promise of producing a better life for Americans?

A sober look at the platform and the record of the Republican convention leads to only one possible conclusion. It's the same old GOP; it's the same old ultra-conservative approach; it's the same old boasting about a shoddy record of performance in the Congress.

Some sections of the GOP press—those in support of Eisenhower—talk glowingly of a rebirth of Republican liberalism, of a new spirit of progress in the party. But the record belies the claim. The prime mover, the winning force at Chicago, was the Dewey machine—a machine which also won at GOP conventions in 1944 and 1948, but failed to win the people.

The Dewey machine—though it looks modern in contrast with the dinosaur thinking of the Taft crowd—has no claim to liberalism. Dewey's record in two previous campaigns, and as Governor of New York, is a record of "me, too" to the big corporations which support him.

A candidate—be he an Ike or a Dewey or a Taft—must be known by the platform he takes. The 1952 platform of the Republican Party is a collection of statements and insinuations that serve, not to break with the GOP spirit of the past, but to reinforce its old prejudices.

That platform baldly takes pride in the terrible record of the "Awful Eightieth" Congress of 1946-48—a Congress that was severely repudiated by the voters four years ago, when its record of hostility to progressive government was fresh in the public mind.

But the 80th Congress looks no better today than it did four years ago, and the GOP's efforts to rewrite history by changing the reputation of the Awful 80th can end nowhere but in failure.

On civil rights, the GOP swung away even from its timid program of 1948. The labor plank, equally important, has received far less attention.

The GOP has placed itself on record squarely as a Taft-Hartley party—yet it dares appeal to voters as deserving the support of union men.

When the Republicans pushed the Taft-Hartley Act through Congress, they did so on a frank and open basis of attacking the strength of America's democratic unions. Today, even that frankness has disappeared.

At a touch of the ghost-writer's typewriter, the Taft-Hartley Act emerges, in the GOP platform, as a document of "freedom" for unions; one would believe, after reading the GOP's platform language, that T-H in fact represents the greatest advance for liberty since the Declaration of Independence!

These ridiculous claims may salve the conscience of some GOP labor-haters, but they cannot change facts, they cannot make a pro-labor law out of a law drafted and designed to hurt unions and hurt union members. These are not the petty distortions of a campaigning super-salesman; they are major falsehoods, the product of a cynical rewriting of American history.

They cannot disguise the facts; and the facts show that through its 1952 platform, the Republican Party would lead America back to 1922 Harding or 1932 Hoover. We don't think they'll get away with it.

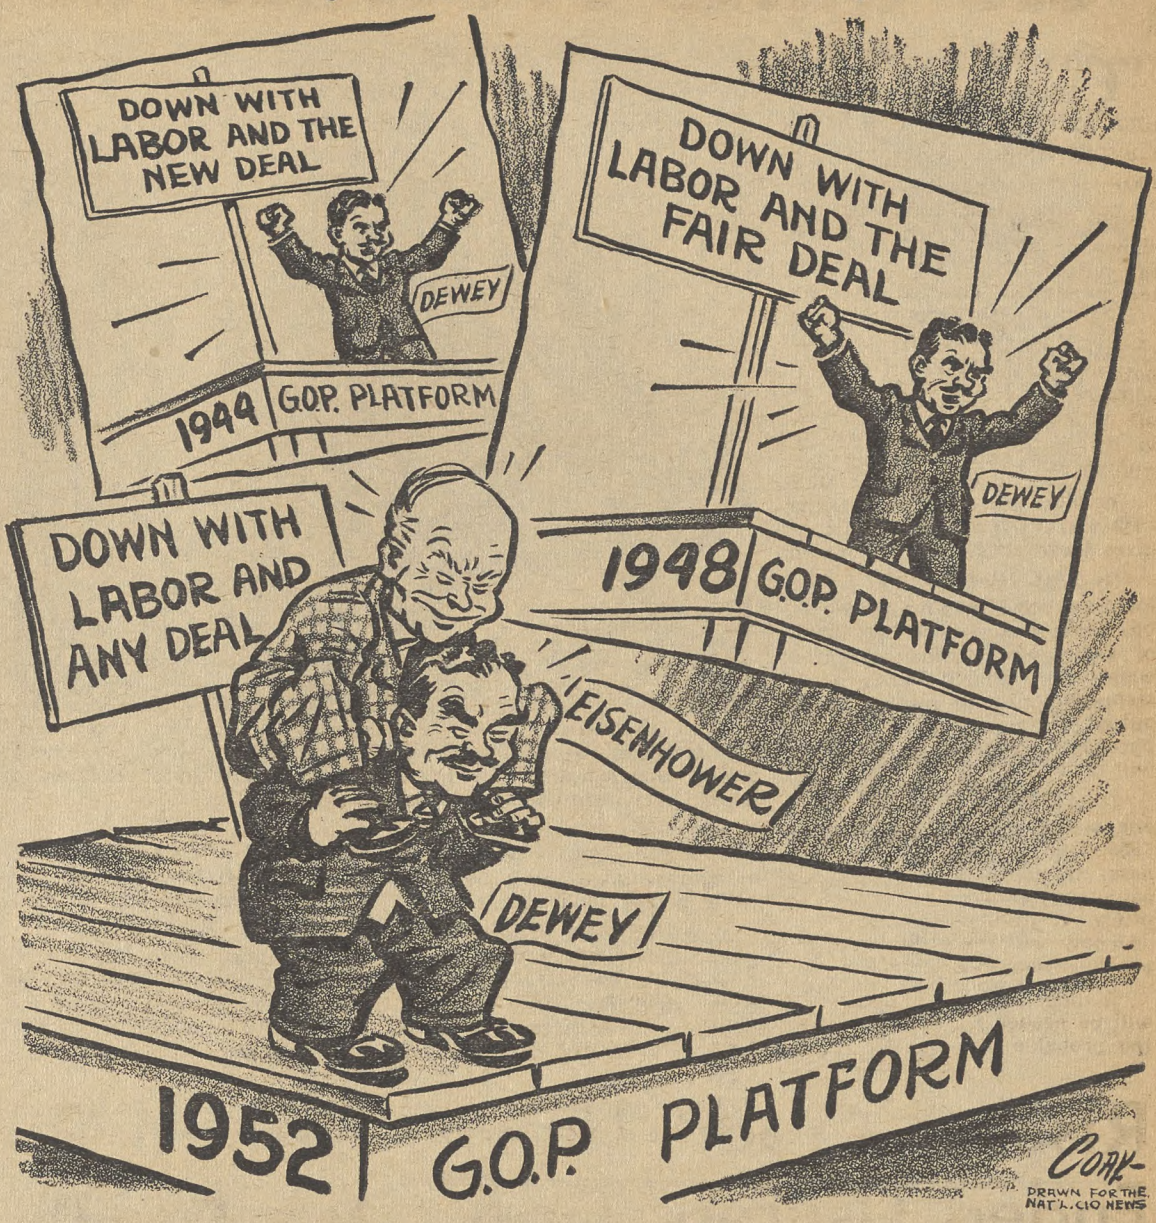
History Repeats—And Repeats!



People's Stake In Conservation

The following article by the economic consultant to the Public Affairs Institute appeared in the current issue of the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science.

By STEPHEN RAUSHENBUSH

WHAT HAPPENS to our natural resources determines how well we live. When resources are wasted or mismanaged, the public, including the worker, pays for it in higher costs or in some other way.

Everybody who has thought about buying a house recently knows that he has to pay more than before because the destruction of the forests has raised the price of lumber.

Now comes another increase in the price of pulp, which is used in newspapers. That increased price makes it much harder for the small independent newspapers to survive. It opens the way for chain-papers to take them over. It strikes a blow at freedom and independence in getting information, basic to our democratic system.

Here is coal, for another illustration. In Western Europe as little as 40 million tons of coal stood between democracy and communism twice since the end of the war. Yet that is only a month's work for the miners in this country to produce and the railroads to haul.

Nobody doubts that more coal, not less, is going to be needed in this country in any one of three cases. First, in case of a war when Middle Eastern oil and some or all the Venezuelan oil will be cut off. Second, in case Iran goes Communist and the Russians get to be powerful there, and then in all the rest of the oil-rich Middle East. Finally more coal will be needed as our American oil supply is eaten up. But meanwhile we let oil take markets away from coal.

An approaching crisis in our mineral production is predicted by Prof. Alan M. Bateman of Yale. We are getting more dependent on foreign sources. Today, for example, we import about a third of the copper, lead and zinc we use, but in another 25 years we will have to bring in two-thirds, or even three-quarters, of them.

He points out that Russia is the only great nation in full control of adequate minerals of her own, and that this makes her "potentially a colossal industrial giant of the future, and perhaps of the world."

Without reasonably low-cost and plentiful minerals, our American factories cannot operate at full blast. The workers are consequently involved in American efforts to get adequate supplies from abroad, at the same time that our own mining industry is kept operating.

They are also interested in seeing to it that the workers in the South American or African resources get adequate pay and union conditions. Both the CIO and the AFL have been active in trying to get these protections for workers in all free countries.

River basin developments are important. . . . Too often there has been competition between separate agencies of the government as to who would get most of the jobs.

THE HOOVER COMMISSION and the recent Cooke Commission recommended that river basins be developed only on a unified basis. On the Missouri, for example, the Dept. of Agriculture with its proposals for soil and forest conservation was frozen out completely. This was a deplorable mistake.

What happens today is that our natural resources conservation and development program is handicapped by the fact that it is financed only out of current taxes. Every project for soil conservation work or flood control has to compete with every other one for an appropriation. The Public Affairs Institute has proposed that the basic forest and soil conservation work be financed on a repayable basis, instead of coming out of taxes.

In an article on the California redwoods in The Annals, Dr. Dewey Anderson, director of the Public Affairs Institute, said:

". . . The U. S. treats its investments in foreign resources quite differently. It authorizes the Export-Import Bank to lend sums abroad up to a certain amount. The bank then makes loans. But none of these loans shows up in the annual budget, because they will be repaid.

"Whenever necessary public loans in soil or forest conservation in our country can be repaid, it would seem reasonable to put them in the same class as our investments in foreign resources."

CIO Warns Of Possible Recession Next Year

"THERE ARE SIGNS of economic danger ahead for 1953 and 1954," the CIO warns in the current issue of the Economic Outlook.

"The national economy has repeatedly shown its ability to produce an expanding output—the potential for rising living standards," the Outlook says.

"Yet we may encounter an economic recession next year—if consumer buying power and consumer spending do not rise sufficiently to make up for the leveling off of defense spending and the decline in the construction of new plants and equipment."

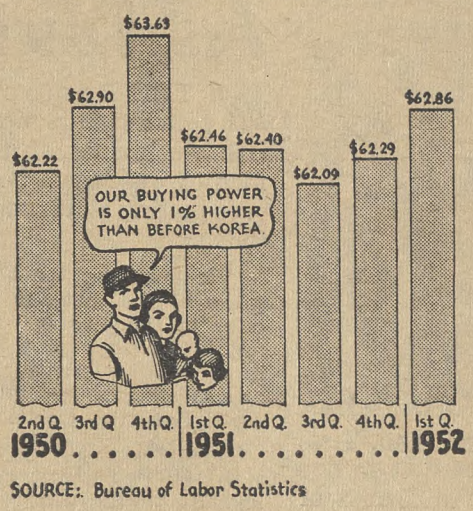
The Outlook, which is published by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, gives the following basis for its fears:

"By next year—mid-1953—the government's expenditures are scheduled to level off. There will be an increasing amount of goods and services for the civilian economy, if the defense program is not stepped up. Unless the rising volume of output of civilian goods and services is purchased, production and employment will decline.

"It is reasonable to expect a dip in one sector of the civilian economy by 1953. The post-Korean high level of business expenditures for new plant and equipment cannot be maintained indefinitely. A decline in this sector of the economy will mean the weakening of a previous source of strength.

"Rising levels of consumer spending will be needed to fill the gap created by the probable leveling off of defense expenditures and the decline in business spending for new plants and equipment. But consumer buying power and spending have already shown signs of weakness in the past year.

"There is no widespread backlog of pent up consumer demand now as there was after World War II. Consumers do not have substantial liquid savings as they did on V-J Day. And price increases in the coming months—resulting from congressional scuttling of even a pretense of controlling living costs—can further weaken consumer buying power.



A WARNING SIGN

"There is no indication that business will change its pricing policies—to reduce prices that produce lower profit margins per unit—as a basic means of bolstering consumer buying power. And Congress has shown a disregard for price control despite the possibility of pressures on prices."

Signs of weakness are apparent in the economy, the Outlook declares.

It says that the buying power of wages has failed to grow. The CIO publication points out:

1. "The buying power of average weekly earnings—after taxes—of manufacturing workers with three dependents was only 1% greater in the first quarter of 1952 than it had been in the pre-Korean second quarter of 1950. But it was below the level in the last three months of 1950 . . .

"The buying power of per capita personal income, after taxes, had failed to keep pace with the rise in the output of goods and services available for the civilian economy—a sign of danger, if maintained in the future . . .

2. "It is not surprising, then, to find that total consumer expenditures—in constant first quarter 1952 dollars—have not held up. The annual rate of total consumer spending—in constant dollars—rose from the pre-Korean quarter of 1950 through the first three months of 1951.

"It declined during the rest of 1951. And in the first quarter of this year, the annual rate of total personal consumption expenditures—in constant dollars—was no greater than it had been in the period just before Korea."

3. Because consumers began to cut their expenditures in the spring of 1951, the Outlook says, "many new orders to manufacturers were cancelled in mid-1951. Businessmen have been cautious about placing new orders.

"The value dollar of manufacturers' new orders, in March 1952, was $2.2 billion greater than in June 1950. But that rise reflected higher prices. The real value of manufacturers' new orders, in March 1952, was about the same as in the month the Korean War started—despite increased government defense orders."

4. The Outlook also finds . . . "the figures on total employment and unemployment conceal signs of possible weakness.

"In the week of Mar. 2-8, 1952, 78.2% of the civilian labor force was employed 35 hours or more. But over 15% of the civilian labor force was employed part-time—34 hours or less . . . while another 3% was unemployed—in a period of high level activity and defense emergency.

"Unemployment and under-employment have been concentrated, to a great degree, in the past year. They have been concentrated in industries and areas affected by material curtailment orders—autos and electrical appliances—and in such non-durable goods industries as textiles, clothing and shoes.

"Many cities and towns in which such non-durable goods industries predominate—such as New York City and the New England textile and shoe centers—have been hit in the past year, by unemployment and part-time employment."

Rise of Credit Unions Ended Usurers' Grip

PROBABLY the first significant reform against usury—the charging of excessive interest on loans—was taken in 594 B. C. by Solon, the great lawgiver of Athens.

The legislation, however, failed to strike at the basic root of the problem. It canceled all debts made on the security of land and forbade the making of loans on the bodily security of the debtor, but it left the interest rate to free contract.

While Solon's action prevented bodily slavery, it did nothing to stamp out economic slavery. The great masses of Greece and Rome gradually lost their independence through the usury of a small plutocracy. The problem remained serious in our own country even through the early decades of this century.

The history of the crusade on behalf of cooperative credit—the first effective remedy to usury—is told out of his rich first-hand experience in a new book by Roy F. Bergengren.

One loan shark case he cites is that of a Chicago railroad worker who less than 30 years ago paid back $1080 in interest before he was sued for the $30 comprising the full amount originally borrowed.

The rate of interest in this case figures almost 3400%. Yet despite public indignation at many similar abuses, the first Uniform Small Loan Law legalized as legitimate interest a rate of 42%.

Every man and woman who borrows today owes the lower interest rate largely to the credit union movement. Bergengren pioneered it in this country in cooperation with Edward A. Filene, a successful businessman who at times personally financed the early establishments. For many, the crusade they waged meant the difference between certain ruin and economic rehabilitation.

Filene hired Bergengren as the manager of the Credit Union National Extension Bureau when it was set up in 1921. Together they made cooperative banking possible by securing legislation in 40 states, culminating in the Federal Credit Union Law passed by Congress in 1934.

OUT OF Filene's bureau emerged the Credit Union National Association, which unites seven million people, in 15,000 different organizations, having assets of $1.5 billion.

Bergengren sees the success of the credit union crusade as having demonstrated (1) that the principle of democracy can be applied to the management of money, and (2) that the people are capable of managing their own money — something which most employers seriously questioned when they opposed the movement in its early days.

These achievements, from the long view, loom as of even larger significance than the millions of dollars in interest now saved annually by millions of people with limited incomes.

"Economic democracy," Bergengren sums up, "is attained by applying the principles of political democracy to the affairs of the market place." —M.P.

Gallup Proves Barnum Wrong; It's Really MORE Than One

By BRADFORD CARTER
For Labor Press Associated

LABOR'S statisticians must be all wrong about how much people make, and the Bureau of Labor Statistics also must be way off the beam.

For the latest Gallup poll shows that 68% of the nation's population is in favor of a 25% limit on federal income taxes. (Last September the number was only 59%.)

Now, since a 25% limit would not cut the taxes of a single man unless he had $8000 net income, and would not lower taxes for a family man unless he had $20,000 net income, we must have an awful lot of people in the chips.

Well, that's not true, of course. But how explain that 68% are in favor of a proposal that will:

1. Not cut their taxes at all;

2. In fact, increase their taxes.

Less than one percent of the people would benefit (450,000 out of a total of 42 million).

On the basis of 1951 income, a 25% limit on federal income taxes would cut the total take 31%, or a little over $16 billion. Of that, the income tax cut for individuals would account for only $2 billion; the income tax cut for corporations would account for $14 billion.

Now, if you're single and make over $8000, or a family man and making over $20,000, go look at the comics. The rest of you, gather around for a good look at the hard facts.

The lowest present federal income tax rate for individuals is 22%. So, if you're at the bottom of the heap, that 25% limit would do you no good. But a family with $25,000 income would save $754 or 11%; with $50,000 income, $7588 or 41%; one with $1 million income, $621,224, or 71%.

It's the corporations that would benefit. The present 30% tax on profits would be cut to 25%; the 22% surtax would be eliminated, and so would the excess profits tax. That would mean a tax cut of 17% for a firm with $25,000 profit; 46% at $100,000 profit, and 52% at $1 million.

THAT would be fine for the big boys, tough on the small boys. More small businesses would go to the wall, the big boys would get bigger.

Under the proposal, federal revenue would drop by $16 billion. The government would have to cut defense spending, or borrow more and thus mortgage your children's future, heavily. Borrowing increases the public debt, feeds inflation, and makes it harder than ever to balance the budget.

The federal government would have to cut down on grants to the states for health, welfare, hospitals, the aged, the blind, the incapacitated. (The states would then have to find the money, and the only way would be to increase your state, country and municipal taxes.)

(It is not for nothing that the Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers are for that 25% limit—and for a sales tax. They know what that 68% polled by Gallup do not realize—that the proposal means a shift of the tax burden from the rich to the poor.)

To recover that $16 billion lost by the 25% limit, it would be necessary to raise—raise—not lower, your income tax from your present 22% to 25%. It would be necessary to cut the exemption for each of your dependents from the present $600 to $200. And it would mean a sales tax of at least 10% on all retail sales, including food.

Do you still think its a great idea?

(In case you doubt old man Carter's figures, they are all in a government pamphlet called "Constitutional Limitation on Federal Income, Estate, and Gift Tax Rates" prepared for the Joint Committee on the Economic Report and the Select Committee on Small Business of the House.)

The gamblers say "there's a sucker born every minute." The number evidently is growing. It was 59% last September, and 68% the other day.

Do you know what economists call that 25% proposal? They call it "the millionaire's amendment." That's exactly what it is.

Apprentice Heads CIO Lithos Local

PROBABLY for the first time in the history of American labor, an apprentice was elected president of a union local. When Edward V. Donahue was chosen to head Local 10, CIO Lithographers, in St. Paul, Minn., he still had three weeks to go to earn his journeyman's card.

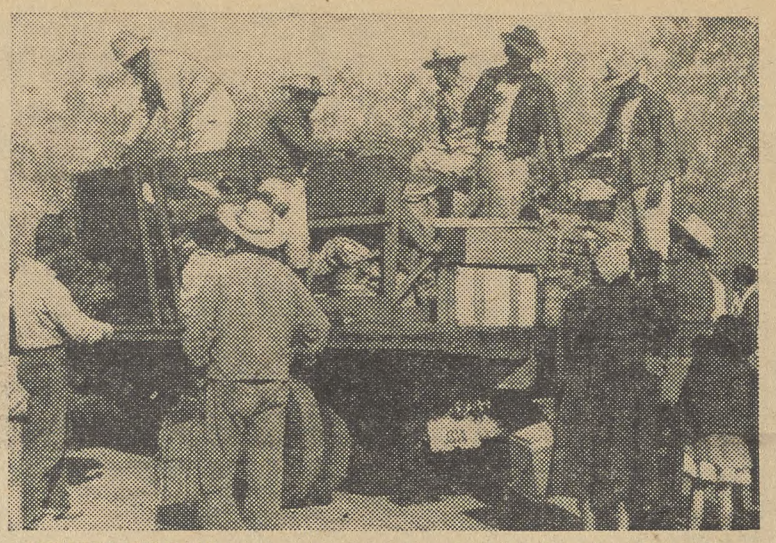
Texas Oil Millionaires: Tools Of The Boodle Boys

By MILTON PLUMB

THE EYES OF America have been focused on Texas politics by the so-called "stolen delegates" fight at the Republican national convention. That battle brings to mind other facts of political corruption in the Lone Star State, today the spearhead of the Dixiecrat movement.

Behind the Texas situation is a story of fabulous fortunes being built up by oil, agricultural and other interests which have managed to capture control of, and to use for their own ends, a large part of the state's political machine.

Their operations, usually although not always within the technical limits of the law, are conducted in the comparative open and make the facts of political degradation clear.



WETBACKS, like these apprehended at Monte Alto, Tex., provide cheap, exploitable labor for the huge corporation farms near the Mexican border. They make thousands of American farm hands idle.

Hands Always Out

The picture that emerges indicates that the Dixiecrats, who profess to want to stop spending by the federal government, really want only to stop the benefits of such spending for others. They have been busy in Texas taking a large share of federal funds and special tax benefits for themselves.

One of the great Texas scandals has been the drive led by the big corporation farmers there to force Congress to continue permitting them to exploit cheap Mexican labor. Not only have they succeeded in blocking effective legislation to control illegal "wetbacks," but they have also made American taxpayers subsidize the legal importation of cheap foreign labor for their farms.

While this widespread labor exploitation — and the lack of concern over the fate of millions of native American workers thrown out of jobs by the imported Mexicans—is symptomatic of the moral decay that has overtaken certain elements in Texas politics, it is far from being the most startling—or even the costliest—form of corruption.

Prod Congress

Texas oil interests are credited with being the most influential in the lobby which persuaded the last Congress to vote to give the rich tidelands oil and gas deposits worth $40 billion to Texas, California and Louisiana, denying the 45 other states their share. President Truman vetoed the measure, calling it "robbery in broad daylight—and on a colossal scale."

Over the years, the Texas oilmen succeeded in getting special — and unprecendented — tax concessions from Congress in the form of the so-called depletion allowance. This permits them to deduct 27.5% of their gross income before taxes each year, regardless of the amount they have invested in their property.

Thus, if $1 million is invested in an oil well which produces $5 million worth of oil for 10 years, the owner can deduct tax free $1,375,000 each year. He would deduct a total of $13.75 million in the 10 years, or almost 14 times his original investment, before he became liable for taxes of any kind.

Except for mining, which also is permitted depletion exemptions (but in considerably smaller amounts) no other business shares this bounty. Depreciation allowances given to most businesses permit deductions only on the amount equivalent to that portion of the total capital investment used during the year.

Usually it takes a manufacturer about 20 years to get back his original investment, and he never is allowed to deduct more than the actual expenditure. According to the Treasury Dept., however, 12 millionaires owning oil wells paid an average income tax during the years 1943-47 at a rate that was even lower than the wartime rate on the first $2000 of taxable income.

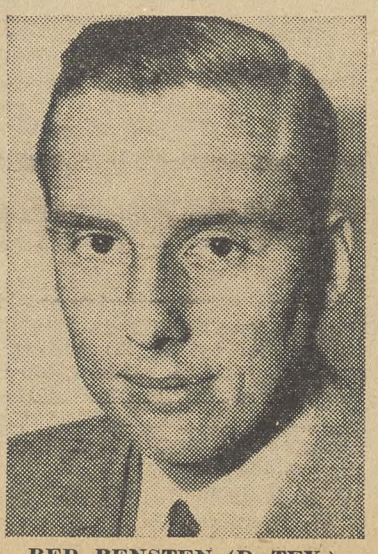
The Treasury, which is prevented from disclosing names, said that one oil operator was able to develop properties yielding $5 million in a single year and yet didn't pay a cent of income tax that year. Another Texas oilman is said to have taken in $12 million free of taxes.

Tax Load Shifted

While there is nothing illegal about such deductions, they have shifted the burden of billions of dollars which these oilmen otherwise would have paid, onto the backs of low-income taxpayers.

Even more immoral than the selfish motives behind an oil lobby that could persuade Congress to "spare the greedy but tax the needy" in its tax laws are the uses to which a large part of these funds are being put.

For these same Texas oilmen are providing most of the millions of dollars that have gone to finance the Dixiecrat political machine throughout the South, and to promote and foster the racial hatreds upon which it thrives. H. L. Hunt, Dallas oilman, for example, is the financial backer of the reactionary Facts Forum in Dallas; H. R. Cullen, of Houston, reportedly sank $1 million into the recently suspended Liberty radio network.



REP. BENSTEN (D. TEX.)
Fights to Keep Wetbacks Here

The latter, dedicated to "upholding constitutional liberty and economic freedom," provided a nightly sounding board for John T. Flynn, the renegade liberal whose recent books attacking labor and the New and Fair Deals have been printed and circulated in millions of copies with the financial underwriting of big business. The network was also supported by Gen. R. E. Wood, chairman of the board of Sears, Roebuck & Co., a Taft backer.

Responsible, liberal Texans in politics deplore what is happening in their State. But they acknowledge frankly that they fear the powerful financial forces behind the group controlling Texas' political life.

Those forces, they point out, are not confined to Texas, but are reaching across the nation with the same corrupting power.

Surprising as it sounds in the light of the known reactionary activities of the multi-millionaire Texas oilmen, the liberal Texas politicians say that actually the right wing movement is controlled and directed by Eastern banking interests, including the du Ponts.

Tied In With CCG

Many evidences of these lobbies' efforts to exert influence in Texas were brought to light during the recent Buchanan Committee investigations. Typical is a letter from Edward A. Rumley of the Committee for Constitutional Government, which the du Ponts supported, to Rep. Gwinn (R. N.Y.) in which he proposed setting up a special "front" in Dallas.

Rumley said he hoped to enlist up to 8000 members there to fight public housing. He spoke of a budget of $100,000.

Viewed in this light, the reactionary, Dixiecrat, "white supremacy" movement in Texas is nothing other than the taking over of the Lone Star State's political machine for the ultimate benefit of, and use by, men of wealth in the East.

Such "foreign" control of the economy of the South and West is an old maneuver, but it is doubtful if it ever before has been carried as far to the right as it now has been in our largest state.

Texas' Shivers Looms As Dixiecrat Leader

AS THE Democratic convention progresses this week, one of the key men to watch will be Texas' race-baiting Governor, Allan Shivers.

"We must see the black and white of the platform and the color of the eyes of the nominees," Shivers recently warned in a "white supremacy" speech at a meeting of the State Democratic Executive Committee.

Threatening an open break with the Democratic Party unless its platform provides for turning the tidelands over to the states, Shivers also assailed "all legislation that seeks to move a step closer to the welfare state." His bitterest attack, however, was on civil rights.

"Just as our Texas Democratic congressional delegation has always done," he declared, "the Democratic Party stands resolutely opposed to any and all attempts to impose and enforce by federal law any compulsory Fair Employment Practices Code or any similar hate-breeding and trouble-making legislation."

Big Shot Dixiecrat

In Shivers and his political cohorts, Texas reaction has been brought to a focus. He has become probably the most important leader of the Dixiecrat movement, and since 1951 apparently has been carefully building a movement for another walk of Southern extremists from the Democratic ranks.

Shivers is a product of the new feudalism that has grown up in Texas on the state's corporation farms and other great landholdings.

One of the high potentates at Shivers' court is a high-powered public relations man named John van Cronkhite. Officially, his title is executive director of the Texas Good Neighbor Commission, a state agency supposed to be trying to reduce discrimination against minorities.

Van Cronkhite led the campaign that launched Rep. Bentsen (D. Tex.) on his career in the 80th Congress at the age of 27. Bentsen's 1948 campaign is said to have cost heavily both in money and concessions to Texas politicians. He defeated Phillip Kazen, a strong liberal.

The Bentsens are a family with rich land and business holdings in South Texas, located in the lush natural splendor of the Magic Valley of the Lower Middle Rio Grande.

In many ways the Bentsen empire resembles the most famous of the Texas baronies, the King Ranch, which took the lead in sending its own special "ambassador" to Washington.

The Bentsen enterprises, like the King Ranch and most of the other big Texas "farming" corporations, are a hodgepodge of basic economic factors. These include land, crops, cattle, gas and oil wells, construction, finance and other interlocking interests. Bentsen's father, Lloyd Bentsen, Sr., and his uncle, Elmer Bentsen, preside over the family holdings.

The Lower Middle Rio Grande Valley along the Mexican border, where the Bentsens hold thousands of acres, is one of the most prosperous farming regions of the world.

Despite these blessings, the rich corporate farmers of the Magic Valley have led in pressuring "wetback" legislation through Congress so they may continue to build fortunes on the deliberate exploitation of their fellow men.

Exploit Wetbacks

Texas sources say that U. S. immigration officials have apprehended wetbacks on the Bentsen properties, and last year they were also caught on a farm owned by Shivers. The League of Latin American Citizens (comparable to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) has passed resolution after resolution urging the border patrol to apprehend wetbacks on the Bentsen and Shivers properties.

The conspiracy of the South Texas Association to obstruct the enforcement of the immigration laws, as well as illegally to try to influence the Mexican government to permit the exploitation of Mexican nationals, also originated in this area. When this group was exposed last October by Rep. McCarthy (D. Minn.) the organization promptly changed its name to the American Agricultural Council.

Bentsen has shown an anti-labor bias in other ways besides his effective blocking of legislation to stop the exploitation of wetbacks. In the last session, he voted to request the President to use the Taft-Hartley Act against the CIO Steelworkers, and he has consistently voted against all efforts to repeal this law.

While fighting relief for unemployed workers, Bentson has worked actively to secure millions of dollars in federal funds for the erection of dams in his district. A major project, for which Congress this year alone appropriated $1.5 million, is the Anzalduas Diversion Dam, at Bentsen Park, near Hidalgo.

Sued In Land Deal

The House Appropriations Committee this year, wrote into the bill language delaying the construction of the dam "until suitable arangements have been made with prospective water users for repayment to the government of such portions of the costs of said dam as shall have been allocated to irrigation or water supply purposes by the Secretary of State."

No mention was made of the fact that the Bentsens were already in hot water over irrigation problems. Bentsen's father and uncle were named defendants last February in a Federal Court suit filed at Corpus Christi, Tex.

The suit was brought by eight persons who charge that land they bought from the Bentsens near Edinburg, Tex., as "irrigated land" actually was "dry acreage."

Apparently the only place in the world where water and oil mix is in Texas politics.

Yugoslav Unions Lack Democracy, ICFTU Says

THE ORGANIZED labor unions of Yugoslavia are under totalitarian control and should not be admitted to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions because they do not qualify for affiliation, according to the ICFTU Executive Board.

The board's stand was made known in a 30-page report to the ICFTU General Council meeting in Berlin. Copies will be sent to all affiliates.

The report was compiled by Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbrook. The people of Yugoslavia have more freedom than before Marshal Tito broke with the Soviet Union, he said, but "conditions are, however, far from satisfactory from the democratic point of view."

Both the government and the unions are still modeled after those of Russia, according to the report. People are still persecuted for criticizing the government; the government controls religion; forced labor exists; the right of the workers to organize is stringently limited, and their right to strike or bargain collectively is radically curtailed.

The report ridiculed Yugoslav claims that its workers' councils are democratic, and that workers own and manage the economy.

"The rights of the workers," it said, "are limited to a very fixed formula, i.e., they have to fulfill the production plans dictated by the regime at a maximum cost which is fixed by the Communist government."

OLDENBROOK pointed out that Yugoslav workers have to belong to one national labor organization whether or not it is the union of their choice.

The unions have never called strikes "despite the very low standard of living," he said, there are no collective bargaining contracts in force, the unions "do not protest against forced labor" or "so-called 'voluntary work,' which is done for very little if any payment," and they support a system under which "a worker has to sign an obligation to stay at his particular job for at least six months and some times for several years."

"Judging on the basis of information now available," the report concluded, "there seems to be no doubt that the aims and functions of the Yugoslav trade unions are at present not in accord with the requirements and aims of the ICFTU."

The report also presented conflicting views of the future of democracy in Yugoslavia. On the one hand it indicated that Tito's break with Russia might not be permanent, and on the other expressed the thought of some labor leaders who have visited there recently that present trends "will bring gradually more freedom and democracy to the people."

The report also said that a reconciliation between Tito and Stalin had never been ruled out by the former. About the time it was made public, Tito in a statement declared there was "no possibility" of a rapprochment.

6 Company Unions In One Firm Hit By NLRB Order

SHARPLES Chemicals, Inc., of Riverview, Mich., has been ordered by the National Labor Relations Board to abolish its six company unions, because of charges brought by the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers.

The firm's "Employe Representative Group" was set up by the company in 1941. Subsidiary to the Group were a Grievance Committee, Job Evaluation Committee, Clothing Committee, Employes Benefit Fund Committee and Elections Committee.

The NLRB found them all to be unions under a definition of the law since they handled matters properly within the function of a union. Management had argued that, since decisions on these matters were made unilaterally by the boss, the organizations were not unions, there being no bargaining.

ICFTU Asks Equal Sharing In Cost Of Rearmament

A FAIR SHARING of the sacrifices necessary to help rearm the free world was demanded by the General Council of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Winding up a five-day meeting at Berlin, Germany, the ICFTU group voiced "fervent hope" that the need for rearmament will soon be ended through a system of international control of weapons, universal disarmament and collective security within the United Nations.

Pending such developments, the ICFTU reaffirmed earlier statements of support for the strengthening of defenses by the free nations. It "insisted" that such defenses "can be achieved most effectively and with the least possible economic and social burdens on the free world by intelligent economic planning."

The council adopted a detailed statement on prices, wages and productivity problems, which had been under serious consideration in a special committee throughout the session.

The statement emphasized that trade unions "must rely primarily on their own organizing capacities and on their own strength" to win better standards of living for workers.

Trade unions—except in exceptional circumstances—are opposed both to inflation and deflation, the statement pointed out.

Unions "are opposed to high prices, and to low prices due to low wages; they are in favor of moderate prices combined with wage rates high enough to ensure a high share of wages in the national income," the ICFTU declared.

"If anti-inflationary policies are not pursued effectively, and prices are rising, trade unions will insist that workers' living standards be protected by increases in money wages at least proportionate to the rise in the cost of living."

Pointing to the benefits of rising productive efficiency, the ICFTU noted that "trade unions will usually agree to, or even foster, the introduction of better methods, provided that the wage and employment interests of the workers are adequately protected."

But, it pointed out, joint production committees or other methods for improving productivity can function "only in an atmosphere of good industrial relations."

In a series of resolutions, the ICFTU lashed out at reactionary political groups in various parts of the world. It reaffirmed a policy of non-collaboration with Falangist Spain, and voiced "deepest abhorrence" of the efforts of the Malan government in South Africa to impose "a master race society inspired by totalitarian motives."

It protested the harsh jail sentence imposed on M. Pissas, the leader of the free unions of Cyprus—an island in the eastern Mediterranean controlled by Great Britain—and called for his immediate liberation.

ANOTHER resolution voiced criticism of the Japanese government for "intensifying the already existing restrictions of full trade union freedom." The ICFTU will give "every possible assistance to the Japanese workers in their legitimate struggle in defense of their rights to organize, to bargain collectively and to strike."

In a statement on Latin America, the ICFTU noted the existence of "reactionary and oppressive governments, in a number of countries." In order to combat these dictators, the ICFTU said, "the opposition forces must carry on collective and coordinated action, with clearly defined aims and methods."

Representing CIO at the Berlin meeting were Exec. Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood; Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers Union; Michael Ross, director of international affairs; and Victor Reuther, CIO European representative.

CP As Cupid: Makes Member Marry 'For Good of Party'

When the Communists get hold of a person they really use him—not only body and soul, but heart as well.

That's what John Lautner, a former party member, testified last week at the conspiracy trial of 15 second string CP leaders in New York.

In 1931, he explained, party leaders instructed him to get married and picked his bride, whom he identified as Gladys Roth. She was an alien, he said he was told, and the marriage was to be "for the good of the party." He never saw the woman until just before the ceremony. He never saw her after it until 1945, when she had divorced him and remarried.

That wasn't the only time the party involved itself in his love life, Lautner added. When he was expelled in 1950, his wife left him and later got a divorce because he was "an enemy of the people," he testified.

Cleveland CIO Office Gals Form Clerical Union

OFFICERS OF CIO local unions in Cleveland will find themselves on the far side of the bargaining table when the CIO's newest organization starts negotiations with its bosses.

The new union is the United Office and Clerical Workers, composed of girls employed by locals and CIO district offices there and in Lorain.

Starting out with 10 members, the girls obtained a charter and immediately elected officers, which added up to just 10 with trustees. Next step was to set up contracts and negotiating committees.

President of UOCW-CIO is Marian Sponseller of the regional office, who's the wife of the "boss" there. He's Regional Dir. Sam Sponseller, and it was he who presented the girls with their charter. (LPA)

Maybe He Should Have Walked

Employers make wonderful characters—sometimes—the National Labor Relations Board finds in the course of its work.

Take the Hattiesburg, Miss., American, for instance, which objected to an election won by the AFL Printing Pressmen. Among other things, the paper charged that one of the employes was "so humiliated and ashamed" of the election that he tried to get to work through a dummy elevator shaft "to avoid meeting his superiors."

The NLRB regional director found out that the man used the dummy elevator shaft to get to his work. So, he also found out, did the rest of the employes—regularly.

'Inventive' Red Editor Seems Headed For The Salt Mines

THE SALT MINES in Siberia have a new candidate—the editor of the Hungarian newspaper Magyar Nemzet, which has the authority of the Hungarian Natural Science Society behind it.

The poor fellow dug up a story about one David Schwarz, who "was not appreciated in Hungary."

"His inventions on aviation preceded those of Count Zeppelin," it read. "Schwarz died, and his widow sold his invention and his patent . . . to Count Zeppelin, who issued them under his own name."

What is likely to send the editor to the coldest reaches under the Soviet flag is the fact that more than a year earlier, the following had appeared in the Moscow Red Fleet, the journal of the Russian navy:

"As a result of historical research . . . we have recently succeeded in unearthing material proving that the Zeppelin constructed in 1900 was built according to designs stolen from Ignatii Stepanovitch Kostovich, a deep-sea captain and well-known Russian inventor of submarines . . .

"A man named Schmidt stole Kostovich's design and sold it to Count Zeppelin who, not having won fame as a soldier, decided to obtain it by realizing the brilliant design of another in the field of aeronautics."

CIO Brewery Union Set To Halt Teamsters' Raids

By GEORGE WARTENBERG

FIRM ACTION to prevent future raiding by the "dues-hungry, boss-ruled Teamsters Union" featured last week's "special" convention of the CIO Brewery Workers.

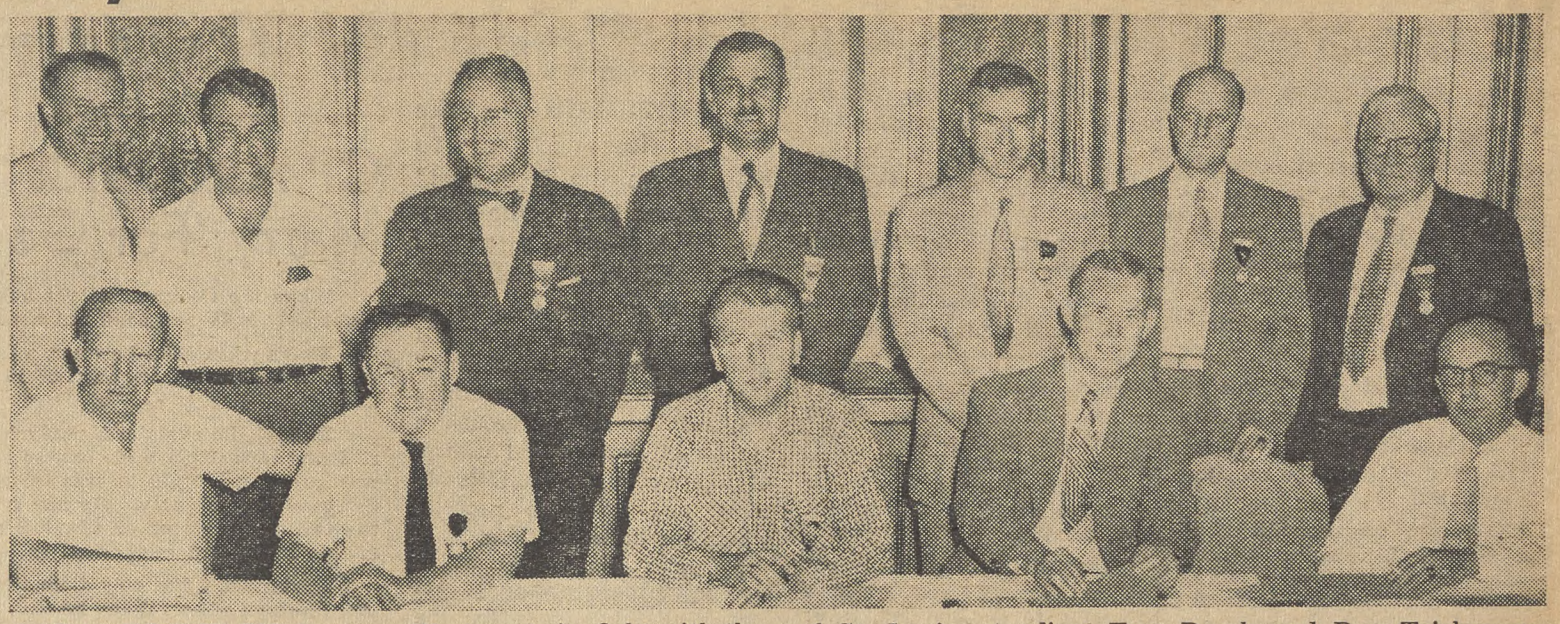
Meeting in Cincinnati's Sinton Hotel, in a convention called originally for the sole purpose of dealing with the threat of raids, the delegates voted to make the Cincinnati session a "regular" convention and postpone the date of the next scheduled convention from September 1952 to September 1954.

BW Pres. Karl F. Feller called for firm action to meet these attacks from either the Teamsters or disgruntled factions. It was, he said, necessary that all Brewery Workers be united on principles of honest unionism against Teamsters or union-busting employers.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, in a fighting speech, promised the backing of National CIO against any outside raiding efforts. His pledge aroused the enthusiasm of the delegates.

CIO Executive Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood, just back from Berlin where he served as chief of the CIO delegation to the General Council of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, addressed the convention.

For years the Brewery Workers, a pioneer industrial union which in 1886 adopted its slogan of one union for "every-body from the cellar to the roof" has been harassed by Teamsters' raids. Except for one short period of peace, the raids have been continuing since 1900.



LOYAL TO THE CIO Brewery Workers in its fight with the AFL Teamsters are these delegates to the special BW-CIO convention at Cincinnati shown here with top international leaders. Left to right, seated, John Griesedieck, Vince Stiebel, Nick Ludwig, Elmer Rohrbach, Cliff Schneider, all of St. Louis; standing, Tom Rasch and Ray Teichmann, international representatives; General Organizer Charles Lindberg; Pres. Karl Feller, Corresponding-Recording Sec. Ed Hughlett, Board Member Arthur Gilara and Sec.-Treas. Joseph Hauser.

Recently, in St. Louis, these raids came to a head, when Robert Lewis, business agent and secretary of Local 6, led a group into the AFL. Reports from some members, disgusted with the Lewis-engineered move, have been received by the Brewery Workers and two St. Louis locals voted overwhelmingly to remain loyal to the CIO Brewery Workers.

Representatives of the majority of the brewery workers in that city attended the convention as loyal delegates. They represented over 3000 of that city's 5000 brewery workers.

In the Cincinnati convention, the delegates swung hard at their ancient enemies, charging them with "raiding and interference" which played into the hands of anti-union employers.

In its first resolution, the convention pledged itself to reestablish its jurisdiction, and to examine every phase of its work in order to weld an effective organization for the task at hand.

The hard-working convention, noteworthy for its lack of fanfare, fun and frolicking, heard a frank discussion from Feller on the three basic problems facing the union.

Besides the Teamsters' threat, Feller pointed to the need for rendering maximum service to all local unions. He urged the convention to consider a system of regional directors who would bring locals and the international union into closer contact and would make systematic programs and improvements possible.

Just as vital, he said, was the need for strengthening and solidifying the organization in its service and organizational efforts. In his report to the delegates, Feller suggested an increase in per capita tax as a necessary step toward organizational stability.

It was another historic step in the 62-year-old history of a union which has always clung to its industrial unionism.

A Red-Headed Textile Worker Is 'More Than Picket-Line Priscilla'

"GOD'S gift to the labor movement" — that's what William B. Taylor, CIO regional director in Louisville, Ky., says.

Proof that "frailty, thy name is not necessarily woman"— that's what the Louisville Courier-Journal says.

They're both talking about Lillian Yadon, red-headed manager of the Louisville Joint Board of the CIO Textile Workers.

In a recent feature story by Don Freeman, the Courier-Journal told the story of Miss Yadon, a familiar figure on picket lines.

"But Miss Yadon is more than a picket-line Priscilla, to borrow a phrase from an old song," the Courier-Journal said. "She has a considerable reputation in collective bargaining and other less-dramatic elements of unionism.

"She also has been active in civic functions. As a member of the Louisville War Manpower Commission during World War II, she was helpful in getting women to fill vital places on the production lines.

"She formerly was on the executive board of the Louisville Chapter of the Urban League. She now is on the executive board of Americans for Democratic Action here."

Tracing Miss Yadon's career, the Courier-Journal reported that she "came up the hard way from a family who were as poor as Job's turkey." Today she's proven herself "in a field where many a stouthearted man has folded," the paper added.

LILLIAN YEADON
Softball Changed Her Life

Miss Yadon started to work in a soap factory at the age of 12. Later she did a stint in a candy factory, was a baby-sitter and became a professional basketball player.

In 1937, the newspaper recalled she took a job running a women's softball team for Louisville Textiles. Two things happened abruptly, and just as abruptly changed her career.

First was a disastrous flood, which closed sports arenas and put the damper on her softball team. To keep from going broke, she got a job as a winding machine operator in the textile mill.

The second event was a sit-down strike. "Before it," said the Courier-Journal, "she knew little about unions. By the time it was over, she knew plenty."

"The excitement got me," Miss Yadon said.

She began attending union classes, was elected a steward and later financial secretary of her local. In 1941, when the TWUA set up a joint board, she became its secretary-treasurer. A year later, she was the joint board manager.

Relations with Louisville Textiles have "become pretty good," she told Reporter Freeman. She recalled that, except for a two-hour work stoppage last year, the last strike there had been in 1941. Meanwhile, minimum wages have risen to $1.15 an hour.

Miss Yadon was active in forming the Jefferson County, Ind., Political Action Committee and the Louisville CIO Council.

Recalling the fights against left-wing elements expelled from CIO because of Communist domination, Reporter Freeman noted:

"It is easy to visualize Miss Yadon's behavior in the face of the leftists. When aroused, she has a sharpness of tongue that has made men twice her size say, 'Golly,' or stronger words to that effect.

"Under other conditions, she can be as gracious and smiling as the next woman."

When she was a child, Reporter Freeman found, neighbor kids teased her by hooting:

"Redhead, gingerbread,
Fire on a coal shed!"

"That taunt got her into fights," the Courier-Journal noted, "and she has been in plenty of scraps since. Truly, she has been a fire on a coal shed."

'Smiling Treachery'

Dixiegops To Blame For Price Hikes Coming

FULL responsibility for the inevitable inflationary spiral—touched off by the newly-weakened Defense Production Act — falls squarely on the shoulders of the reactionary bloc of Republicans and Southern Democrats.

That's the opinion of Rep. Shelley (D. Cal.), who fought vigorously against weakening of the law, which President Truman signed with the greatest reluctance.

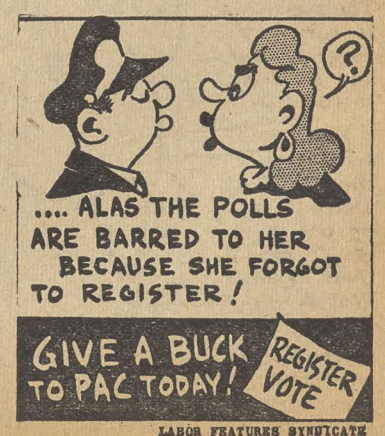
"Rarely has the work of the advocates of profiteering been done so thoroughly and so well," Shelley said in fighting the measure on the House floor.

"I am not shocked to find that the gentlemen on the Republican side of the House are up to their old tricks of defending the schemes of privileged business, to get rid of price controls. I expect this. What horrifies me is the smiling treachery behind this particular attack, and its callous disregard of the economic facts of life."

Turning to the Lucas Amendment, which strips the Wage Stabilization Board of effective power, he said, "the House has ripped out of the act the only means we now have for getting a quick settlement of labor disputes threatening stoppage of defense production."

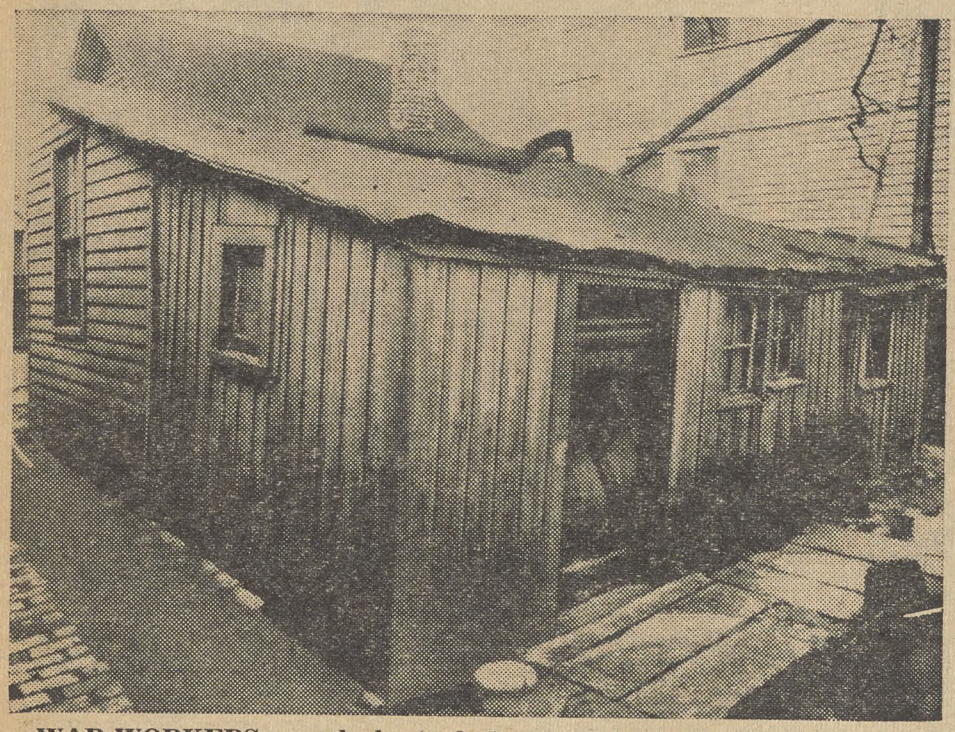
"The Republican friends of Big Business," Shelley declared, "have again joined forces with the reactionary elements from the South to put a halter on the wage earner and the people on low, fixed incomes.

"I believe a firm and fair system of controls to be an urgent necessity now, but I cannot and will not be a party to passage of a bill controlling nothing but the price of labor, and, at the same time, handcuffing labor against any effort to keep its standards up to what is referred to as the 'American way of life.'"



'Blind Spots'

Willow Run: A Lesson America Still Ignores



WAR WORKERS were lucky to find even a shack like this to live in.

A FEW of the many thousand Willow Run workers lived in trailers.

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE STORY of Willow Run, once "the biggest mass-production bomber plant in the world," has pretty much been forgotten by the general public.

But it must be a vivid memory for thousands of workers who rushed there during World War II to do war work—and found they had to live in chicken coops, tents, trailers, tar paper shacks and other improvised and unsanitary shelters, just as many defense workers must today.

Worst Headache

There are many officers and members of the CIO Auto Workers, too, who will never forget Willow Run, for it was one of the UAW's worst headaches during the war—not to mention the bitter memory it must have left with some government officials dragged into endless squabbles between conflicting groups, for a harassed Washington housing official at the time called it "the worst mess in the whole United States."

It was in April, 1941, that the Army Air Corps began construction, near Ypsilanti, Mich., of the Willow Run bomber plant for the Ford Motor Co., and within a year turned five or more square miles of woods and farmers' fields into a huge airport—now Detroit's main airport. Some $100 million of public funds were invested in the plant.

On Dec. 1, 1941, just a week before the Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor, Willow Run began to hire production workers. The super-duper plant was ready to turn out bombers at a rate never before dreamed possible, and an urgent call for workers to run the machinery went out.

From midwestern and southern states especially, families by the thousands headed for the Detroit-Ypsilanti area, making up one wing of the huge army of 17 million people who left their homes during the World War II period to go to war production areas to work.

At Willow Run, as at other war plants, workers found when they arrived that little or no provisions about housing them had been made. Brought into an already overcrowded area where there were no vacant homes and where the regular residents did not want them, they were expected somehow to find places to live.

Even those who came in trailers found themselves in difficulties for they needed ground, water, sewage, electricity and other facilities besides a roof over their heads, and such trailer camps as were available were soon jammed—and ground rent often atrociously high.

Like the pioneers, the families who trekked to war production centers in the '40's, for the most part had to fend for themselves with rugged individualism.

It seems incredibly shortsighted to think of all the brains and money that went into perfecting machinery and plant equipment while so little consideration was given to the workers needed to run the machinery.

Man-hours required to build a bomber were cut from 200,000 per ship—the average in 1941—to less than 18,000 in 1945 by improved technology — but no serious steps were taken on a large scale to make the workers more efficient by providing convenient housing for them, and absenteeism became a critical problem. From 8 to 17 out of every 100 workers were absent daily.

Let 'Em Eat Cake

A Willow Run plant executive expressed the prevalent attitude of private enterprise toward the housing problem when he said: "Ford Motor Co.'s business is to build the best bombers in the world . . . how our workers live off the job is a community problem, not ours." But the community was hog-tied by real estate interests, and the pressure they brought to bear on local and federal officials to oppose government-built housing.

The story of what went on at Willow Run and other war production centers in America during the '40's in a way is a 20th Century epic that belongs in the class with the westward journeys of some of our forebears in covered wagons, and the ocean voyages of early immigrants to this country. It would make fine dramatic material for a movie. Perhaps a Hollywood writer will discover it some day.

'Cultural Lag'

Meanwhile two professors interested in the sociological aspects of the Willow Run story, have written a book just published by Harper & Bros., which gives a case study of the big bomber plant as an outstanding instance of our cultural lag as compared to our technological progress.

"Willow Run—A Study of Industrialization and Cultural Inadequacy," by Prof. Lowell Juilliard Carr, Univ. of Michigan, and Prof. James Edson Stermer, Detroit Institute of Technology, analyzes the conflicting interests which made Willow Run a "social fiasco;" tells the housing troubles of some of the workers in their own words; and explains why things happened the way they did.

"The issue actually posed was which interest group should bear the major burdens of the drastic changes under way, the Folks in Possession or the bomber workers," they write. "And here as elsewhere the decision ultimately came not in terms of equity or of the technological needs of worker efficiency in a rural suburban area but in terms of social conflict and of a political power-struggle that reached all the way to Washington."

What happened at Willow Run was typical of what happened in many other war production centers. The situation was treated "by local leaders not as a technical problem," the sociologist say, "but purely as a problem in protecting local vested interests by shifting the cost of social change to the weakest party. . . . Technology stopped at the gate. The problem of developing the necessary shelter facilities and community services for the work force was never regarded as a technical problem at all."

Henry Ford and the U.S. government, "with the fine impersonality of Fate in a Greek drama," simply imposed "the biggest bomber plant in the world" upon a "pleasant semi-rural neighborhood of comfortable sturdy individuals intent on going their own way," say the writers.

Yet a housing job at Willow Run could have been done successfully. "Thousands of men in the United States were perfectly familiar with the technical details of such a task," write the professors.

Brains Not Used

"It is a safe bet that within 30 miles of Willow Run there were at least a score of men who could have organized that community down to the last doorknob—and what is more, could have made it meet the needs and wishes of the bomber workers themselves. There was plenty of capacity right at Willow Run, for that matter, had the brains been put to the test. But they never were."

The reason? The "blind spots in the industrial culture." The behavior of propertied interests, however, "stems straight from the compulsions and permissions in the industrial culture determining the use of privilege," the sociologists maintain.

"And until Americans clear up their minds about the use and abuse of privilege in their society . . . it is useless to prattle about the 'selfishness' of business interests," the authors say, for our American industrial culture "has not yet defined the point at which the legitimate use of privilege ends and misuse begins. This is one of the lessons of Willow Run. . . ."

Society To Blame

Dismissing the notions that the wasteful muddle of Willow Run was brought about by bad or stupid men, or by individual incompetence, as insufficient and without sound basis, the writers offer the "theory of cultural inadequacy" as the real explanation.

"The social fiasco at Willow Run happened the way it did," they say in conclusion, "because Americans haven't yet given thought to making such things happen any other way; because in a disturbed situation we still prefer to rely on the political power struggle rather than to subordinate our own interests and prejudices to the technological needs of a common objective, and because we have not yet learned how to live with social change."

Gals Set Pace In CARE Drive

THE GALS are setting the pace for New Jersey CIO in the current CIO Community Services Committee campaign for CARE aid to Korea.

Card parties, plus street corner and plant gate collections, have netted the CIO Women's League $1000 for the CARE fund.

In less than three years, the State CIO Women's League has established a record of civic activities of which it is proud, Mrs. Molly Brady, co-founder and past president of the League, and chairman of the CARE drive reports.

The league's purposes are "to integrate women into the social, economic and political structure of the CIO and, by keeping them constantly informed, provide a better understanding of citizenship and enable them to take an intelligent part alongside their menfolk in CIO and public affairs."

Membership is open to all New Jersey women who themselves are members of CIO unions, or whose husbands, fathers or brothers are CIO members.

Breweries Yield 15c In Milwaukee

Local 9 of the CIO Brewery Workers has won a 15c an hour wage increase in the country's brewing center, Milwaukee, Wis., just as long months of negotiation under a wage reopening clause appeared on the verge of a breakdown.

The workers, who last month asked strike sanction of the union's general executive board, accepted the wage offer by a secret vote at two meetings, one for day workers and the other for the night shift. About 8c is subject to Wage Stabilization Board action.

FCC Asked To Review Radio Blacklisting

THE American Civil Liberties Union has aksed the Federal Communications Commission for a rehearing on its plea that major radio and television networks be denied license renewals unless they stop discriminating against performers on the basis of alleged political beliefs or associations.

The ACLU described itself as "puzzled" by the FCC order, which was handed down June 11. It denied the ACLU complaints against the American and National Broadcasting Cos., Columbia Broadcasting System and Station WPIX-TV, of New York. It did not rule on another ACLU request for a general probe of blacklisting practices in the industry.

The original ACLU complaint was filed April 9. The networks filed answers. What puzzled the ACLU was that on June 5 FCC had asked it to file a brief before June 16 discussing its charges and the networks' answers.

"We are most confounded," the rehearing petition said, "that an agency has denied a complaint before it has even received the brief which itself had requested.

"Doubtless this action of June 11 would, unless reconsideration is forthcoming, be considered—as indeed it has already been—a yielding to pressures of the very sort that have resulted in the blacklisting our complaint is designed to remedy."

To add to the ACLU's puzzlement, according to the petition, the FCC "obviously will consider the relevancy of similar instances of blacklisting" in determining if the licenses of other stations named in the Apr. 9 complaint are to be renewed.

"WE ARE particularly puzzled," it said, "that the commission has renewed the license of CBS, which admitted the basic allegation of blacklisting; of NBC, which failed to deny that it knowingly permitted Jean Muir's appearance to be cancelled because of her listing in Red Channels; and of WPIX, which admitted that blacklisting was in part responsible for its cancellation of a Charles Chaplin series of films."

When the FCC decided on May 29 to issue only temporary renewals while it further considered the ACLU's charges, it was strongly criticized by Counterattack, Broadcasting Magazine, and Fulton Lewis, Jr., a radio commentator.

When Counterattack printed an article about the full renewals in its June 20 issue, the rehearing petition pointed out, it commented that "Counterattack readers succeeded in influencing the FCC to reverse its earlier decision."

City Fathers Oppose Union; Chew Knuckles Over Plight

THE CITY FATHERS of Estherville, Ia., are gnawing on their knuckles these days and trying to figure out their next move.

It seems the city employes have wanted a union for a long time. So Intl. Rep. Hi Davis of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers organized them, then went to talk to the Mayor and City Attorney. They gave him the old stall about it being illegal for the city to bargain with its employes.

A search of the law books failed to show any such statute, but it seems another one popped up. It provides that a new city election must be held if enough of the voters want one.

So members of CIO Packinghouse Workers' Locals 79 and 383 started out, and under the direction of Barney Hassel collected in a few days some 800 signatures—more than enough to force an election.

The fledgling City Workers Union has again asked for negotiations.

Ohio Cities Fight Phone Rate Boost

OHIO BELL Telephone Co.'s earning rate—the wages of capital—was so high from 1946 through 1950 that is customers paid $25 million more for service than the customers of Bell companies in five nearby states.

That is what the city of Cleveland, and other Ohio cities, told the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio in hearings on Ohio Bell's application for another rate increase of $25 million a year.

The cities last month lost a three-year fight to head off a previous $8.5 million rate increase granted by PUCO and approved by the Supreme Court of Ohio recently.

They will base their latest fight on a study of Ohio Bell's earnings made by Edward J. Kenealy, city rate engineer, for the Cleveland city law department.

The proposed increase would, Kenealy said, add $10 million every year to the bills of telephone users in the Cleveland area, and $15 million in other parts of Ohio in the face of the fact that Ohio Bell and its sister company, Cincinnati & Suburban Telephone Co., are the most profitable of the 19 telephone companies in the A.T. & T. system.

In a report to Cleveland's Mayor Thomas A. Burke, the rate expert pointed out that Ohio Bell's earning rate from 1946 through 1950 amounted to 6.50%.

During the same period, the earning rate of 19 Bell System companies was 5.10% and the rate of the five neighboring Bell companies was 5.25%. Those five Bell companies are in New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Illinois, and Indiana. Said the rate expert:

"Had Ohio Bell's customers paid rates which yielded the same return as rates in the five neighboring states, they would have paid approximately $25 million less than the amount they did pay in 1946 through 1950."

Gov. Frank J. Lausche and Charles P. Taft, his Republican opponent, have said they favor a change in the law concerning utility rates.

Labor Drawn Into Greater NYC Fund

A program to acquaint organized labor with the facilities and service offered by the 423 agencies participating in the Greater New York Fund was announced last week.

The CIO will be represented on an over-all committee for the new project by Sec.-Treas. Morris Iushewitz of the Greater New York CIO Council; Pres. Matthew Guinan, Transport Workers Local 100; Exec. Vice Pres. Thomas Murphy, New York Newspaper Guild, and Pres. Andrew McMahon, Utility Workers Local 1-2.

MVA Drive Backed

A SCROLL OF TRIBUTE is presented by Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing (right) to Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) on behalf of his friends and associates in labor, farm and liberal organizations.

Labor, Farmers, Liberals Pay Tribute To Sen. Murray

JULY 14 was James E. Murray Day on Capitol Hill. Down the marble, mosaic aisles of the corridors leading to the Senate Labor Committee office swarmed many scores of friends of the senior Senator from Montana.

When the delegation, including nearly all CIO and AFL legislative representatives, members of the labor press, and representatives of the leading farm groups and liberal organizations had filled the committee's hearing room to overflowing, Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing arose.

"We have gathered here to pay tribute to one of the great leaders in one of the most momentous movements, not only in the history of government but in the history of mankind," he said.

Ewing outlined the "absolutely outstanding contribution" which Sen. Murray (D.) has made to social progress since entering the Senate in 1934. He said that the great things which the 76-year-old Senator has done include:

1. The fostering of a new concept of the way business should operate, so that now profits are plowed back to create better working conditions and to increase purchasing power of the poor.

2. The rejection of the old doctrine that cycles of "boom and bust" were inevitable, and the substitution for it of a new economic philosophy in the Full Employment Act.

"Not until the U. S. did so after World War II had any nation in history ever escaped a major economic depression after a war," Ewing pointed out.

Murray's legislative career is in large part responsible for this achievement, Ewing said, listing the score or more of great laws in the field of labor, social security, agriculture, public health and conservation for which he has been responsible.

"THESE measures have made our economic machine work better and better," he declared.

In reply to the tribute, Murray said that he was too deeply moved to do more than attempt to express his gratitude. He recalled that at the very outset of his own working career he had joined the copper miners union when he worked in the mines at Butte, Mont.

"I will never forget those days," he said. "I'm proud that I've supported liberal causes, and I will continue to the last to support the working people of this country. The poor and the underprivileged can always count on me."

Ewing then handed Murray a scroll to which all present had affixed their signatures. It read:

"To Sen. James E. Murray, courageous, able public servant, kind and generous friend, truly good Christian gentleman, we pay tribute."

Those who have signed, however, left behind not just a few scratches of ink, but a big portion of their hearts.

CIO Honors Turner On Leaving Post

CIO leaders from Washington and from three Southern States paid tribute at a testimonial dinner recently to Scotty Turner, CIO Maritime Union port agent in Charleston, S. C., who is returning to sea after four years of service on land.

While in Charleston, Turner worked closely with the CIO Organizing Committee and helped it to chalk up more election victories in that city than in the rest of the State. Speakers at the dinner included Loren Nelles, assistant director of the Organizing Committee; Lloyd Vaughan, CIO State director in South Carolina, and his assistant, Joseph Donovan; Vice Pres. Joseph Joy, CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers; John Ramsey, Organizing Committee community relations director, and Franz Daniel, State CIO director in North Carolina, who was toastmaster.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE WRITER returned to the good old USA last week. I had been in Berlin Germany attending the world meeting of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

I had the privilege and honor of addressing the delegates on behalf of CIO. The gathering was a success. All objectives of the agenda were accomplished. The ICFTU stands as a bulwark of democracy dedicated to improving the workers' living conditions all over the world.

The CIO delegation worked in complete unison in all matters before the conference and presented the CIO's views very ably. Victor Reuther, Michael Ross, Henry Fleisher and myself comprised the CIO delegation Other CIO representatives in attendance were Stanley Ruttenberg, James Leary and Rosemary Ruane.

★

Upon my return to Washington, I found that my assistant, R. J. Thomas, and my office staff had handled matters quite well in my absence.

This week will be a significant one in Chicago. The Democratic Party will nominate someone to carry the Democratic banner in the coming presidential election. Organized labor is looking forward to the convention with keen interest. Many of our members will in fact be present at the convention itself. I was in Chicago myself last week, attending a CIO vice presidents' meeting, about which more next week.

Don't Aid GE 'Runaways,' U.S. Is Told

"DEFENSE agencies should not finance a company in its attempt to run away from its collective bargaining responsibilities."

That is the position of the IUE-CIO, faced by a General Electric attempt to move South and thus evade union contracts —with the U. S. government footing the bill for new plant construction.

John Callahan, chairman of the IUE's General Electric Conference Board, took the union's case to the National Production Authority last week, urging the NPA to deny GE's plea.

The company is asking tax amortization privileges for construction of a new plant in Rome, Ga. Construction costs have been estimated at about $25 million.

GE wants to manufacture transformers at the proposed Rome plant. Callahan, who is also business agent of IUE Local 255 in Pittsfield, Mass., pointed out that the new plant would reduce employment substantially in Pittsfield by removing most of the work.

He told Henry H. Fowler, NPA administrator, that government agencies are obliged under the Defense Production Act to concern themselves with "the maintenance of collective bargaining relationships as a prime objective."

HE demanded a thorough investigation of idle plants capable of making transformers before the amortization privilege is granted.

The IUE official pointed out that there is "additional capacity that could be utilized for the production of transformers."

He referred specifically to Fort Wayne, Ind., where GE "made transformers in the past, and where employment is now about 2500 below the peak. There is a trained labor force available, and in the opinion of our people, production could be gotten under way without too much delay," he said.

D.C. Housing Body Ends Segregation

The traditional segregation policy of the National Capital Housing Authority was adandoned last week when three new housing projects in Washington, D. C., were thrown open to both white and Negro tenants.

However, segregation will be continued in other projects where is is now in effect. The three new projects contain a total of 1300 dwelling units. One designated for Negroes is due to open next month. The second, earmarked for white tenants, will be built next year. The third, in the planning stage, had been given no racial designation.

Reuther Lays Health Service Dearth To 'Tragic Campaign'

EFFORTS TO provide adequate medical and health services to the American people have been beaten down by a "tragic, corrosive, destructive, irresponsible campaign," according to Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers.

Reuther spoke in a post-panel discussion before the President's Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation, meeting in Washington.

The "whole machinery of propaganda grinds away," he said, to destroy every effort to let communities plan collectively on health problems in the same way a family takes care of its problems. Constructive steps are called socialism, he explained.

Reuther and Pres. A. J. Hayes of the AFL Machinists represent organized labor on the commission. Both expressed concern that improvements in industrial safety have not kept pace with technological advances. One trouble, Reuther maintained, is the "purely negative" approach to safety legislation.

There is no lack of knowledge about protecting workers and the public from industrial hazards, according to Chester I. Barnard, commission chairman and retired president of the Rockefeller Foundation. The trouble, he added, is a "lack of willingness to take care of the human side of the problem."

Dr. Gordon M. Fair of Harvard Univ. observed that there is "little incentive to do things" to make industry safer because there is no profit in it.

The critical shortage of medical services and practitioners in rural areas was emphasized by Dr. George F. Bond of Bat Cave, N. C., and Dr. Eugene Dibble, medical director of Tuskeegee (Ala.) Institute.

The problem is particularly acute, they said, among southern Negroes who are unable to support physicians in their communities because they have been kept in the lowest income group by segregation and discrimination.

EVEN if medical schools are willing to accept Negro students, Dibble said, such students often cannot qualify because of poor preparation in segregated schools.

If there is any place for subsidies in medical services, said Bond, they might well be used to get students, particularly Negroes, to become general practitioners in rural areas. In North Carolina, he pointed out, there are but 73 rural physicians for 2.75 million rural residents.

Reuther and Hayes will be among commission members to hold public hearings in several cities "to hear the voices of the people on health matters."

Reuther will conduct one session in Detroit on Sept. 23. Hayes will preside at another in Philadelphia on Aug. 11. Other members will sit in Houston, Tex., Aug. 18; Raleigh, N. C., Aug. 25; Minneapolis, Sept. 2; St. Louis, Sept. 15; Cleveland, Sept. 22 and San Francisco, Sept. 29.

TWUA Shows How To Do It

THE CIO Textile Workers' Passaic (N. J.) Joint Board negotiated a new signed contract with the Flintkote Co., containing major improvements over an agreement the firm signed with the AFL textile union and later repudiated.

The CIO pact yielded a general increase of 10c an hour and an additional 5c for maintenance workers, both retroactive to May 2, and an escalator clause. The AFL had settled for an 8c general boost.

The new agreement was negotiated by a committee headed by John Chupka, administrator of the joint board, on behalf of TWUA Local 655.

The escalator clause is tied to the old series of the Bureau of Labor Statistics' cost of living index. The jumping off point was Apr. 15. Wages will be reviewed every three months, and for each change of 1.18 in the index, rates will be revised by 1c an hour. However, they will not go below the job rates set up in the contract, which provides a $1.47 an hour minimum.

In addition, the contract includes the union shop, an increase in retirement severance pay from $40 to $65 for each year of service, easing of eligibility requirements for vacation pay, improvements in seniority provisions, and other benefits which were in the old contract.

Strikers Reject 7c At Mohawk Carpet

THIRTY-SIX HUNDRED striking CIO Textile Workers last week unanimously rejected a tentative agreement between the union and the Mohawk Carpet Mills, Amsterdam, N. Y.

Mohawk offered 7c an hour increase, along with a number of other changes designed to weaken the contract.

Mohawk and two other of the largest carpet mills — Bigelow-Sanford, Amsterdam, which employs 2400, and Alexander Smith, Inc., Yonkers, N. Y., which employs 4590, have been on strike since June 1.

However, smaller carpet firms were signing contracts with TWUA for higher wage scales and with none of the crippling provisions which the big companies are requesting.

The union negotiating committee—in taking the proposal to the membership at the Mohawk Mills—noted that it was a "toss-up" chance than it might be accepted.

No increase has been received since September 1950, and according to TWUA, the workers could be paid an additional 17.5c an hour under Wage Stabilization Board regulations.

'Medical' Dodge To Fire Unionists Swatted By NLRB

"MEDICAL" examinations virtually impossible to pass were a gimmick used by East Texas Steel Castings Co. to fire union members—until the CIO Steelworkers and the National Labor Relations Board caught up with the Longview, Tex., firm.

Among those in perfect health fired on the spot for "asthma" or "varicose veins" were not only those seen at an outdoor union meeting but four employes who attended an NLRB hearing on the representation election (which the USA-CIO won handily in spite of the terror tactics).

The NLRB ordered the reinstatement of 13 fired union members with back pay.

It also ordered the firm to stop discouraging membership with such or similar tactics, to stop its phony excuses for not bargaining and to stop spying on union meetings or third-degreeing employes on their membership. What's more, the firm may give no more physical examination in the future for any reason without negotiating them with the union. (LPA)

Chemical Workers Win 15½c Raise

A 15½c wage increase has been won for some 2100 employes by the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers in a new contract with the Laclede Gas Co., St. Louis. The hike brings average pay for production workers to $1.90 an hour.

BattleForRent Control Won In Newark

RENT CONTROLS will be continued in the Newark, N.J., area as the result of an all-out battle waged by the Essex-West Hudson CIO Council.

Acting under the authority of the new rent control law, the Newark city commission voted to extend controls until next Apr. 30. Action came following a plea by Joel R. Jacobson, executive secretary of the Essex-West Hudson council.

He cited statistics compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics showing a gain of only 7% in new building in Newark in a 10-year period ending in 1950.

This was the second lowest percentage increase for Jersey's 20 largest communities, Jacobson said. Actually, the "net gain," he added, is only 476 new units when veterans' housing and demolition of residential buildings are considered.

"These new units," he added, "are available only if you are able to spend $100 for three rooms, or $125 for four rooms."

Next Time, Just Wave That Cone Past Ice Cream

It just doesn't pay to be generous.

That's the opinion of Ohio workers following two recent cases before the Ohio Bureau of Unemployment Compensation.

One was the case of a girl fired by a drug store chain for "misconduct." The misconduct, according to the employer's testimony, was "putting chicken in the chicken soup."

The other case found a waitress fired because, according to the manager's testimony, "she puts too much ice cream in the scoop and she puts too much syrup on the sundaes."

In both cases, the employer claimed the discharge was "for just cause," thus attempting to deprive the workers of unemployment compensation.

In both cases, the board weighed the fantastic testimony, and came up with decisions favoring the workers.

City Income Tax Blocked By UAW

The CIO Auto Workers have won a long fight against imposition of a city income tax in Saginaw, Mich.

The State Supreme Court has ruled that such a levy violates the city charter. It had been pushed by business interests and was tied in with a cut in property taxes. The UAW showed the tax would amount to more than the saving except for those whose homes were valued at $20,000 or more.

Canners 'Fear' Skyrocketing Prices As Canned Goods Controls Are Lifted

THE INCOME of the average American during May was at the rate of $1678 a year, close to the all-time high, the Dept. of Commerce reported last week.

The average American worker, his solvency battered into a shadow of its former self, will need every penny of it, these other developments last week presaged:

• The Office of Price Stabilization in accordance with one of the costlier provisions of the price-freeing, wage-freezing Defense Production Act extension, lifted controls on practically all canned and frozen fruits and vegetables—items that account for about 20% of the average family's food expenditure and 7% of its total budget.

Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall predicted prices will soar almost immediately on many items. And vegetable canners, according to an article in the New York Journal of Commerce, "fear prices may get out of hand."

• The OPS, its budget request slashed by a Congress apparently unable to distinguish economy from extravagance, will have to furlough about 6150 of its 12,000 employes by Sept. 1. It just won't have the money to pay for them.

What consumers save in taxes will be more than made up by higher prices charged by profiteers who will be able to operate scot-free because the OPS won't have the manpower to keep them under control.

• President Truman, with some hesitation, signed the miscalled Fair Trade Act. This permits distributors and merchants within a state to set an agreed price on trade marked and name brand products that all retailers must observe. According to its opponents, it will add $2 billion a year to the cost of living.

• The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index jumped for the third successive week, gaining 10c and reaching $6.61. The index, which represents the total prices of 31 commonly used foods, has risen 22c in three weeks.

The lifting of price controls on canned and frozen fruits and vegetables was forced on the OPS by an amendment to the Defense Production Act sponsored by Rep. Harrison (D. Va.). It exempted from controls "fruits and vegetables in fresh or processed form," and was passed on the theory that prices were on their way down. The fresh items have not been controlled.

In actual fact, three days before Arnall acted the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported that retail food prices went up .3% between June 13 and June 30—due to boosts in the prices of fruits and vegetables and of eggs. Fruits and vegetables jumped 1.6% (green beans 55%; lettuce 23%; fresh tomatoes 10%), while eggs were up 7.8%.

The OPS said the order covers about 90% of the field—canned and frozen fruits and vegetables, including baby foods; fruit and vegetable juices, potato chips and dried fruits.

The other 10%, which the OPS is still studying, includes items which often are combined with other products that may or may not still be controlled. Included in this category are such dining room table standbys as vegetable soups, jams, jellies, preserves, catsup, tomato sauce and chili sauce.

ARNALL, in discussing the appropriation, said employes must be released "in spite of our great need for their help in the stabilization program, because our appropriation is not big enough to pay for them."

"We still intend to carry on the very best price control program we can," he added. "And we certainly don't intend to go into a willy-nilly rush of lifting price control ceilings just because our staff will be so reduced."

In a letter to OPS employes apprising them of the situation, Arnall said:

"With the cost of living at an all-time high and defense expenditures growing, we are determined to operate the most effective price stabilization program we possibly can under these new and more difficult conditions, and the staff remaining with the agency will play a vital role in accomplishing this aim."

When President Truman signed the so-called Fair Trade Act, he declared he didn't think it was the best answer to the problem that might be found. He urged Congress to investigate the whole field not only of fair trade laws, but "the related problems of price discrimination and anti-trust policy."

He said he signed the act because "it does have value in eliminating certain unfair competitive practices, and thereby will help small businessmen to stay in business."

"At the same time," he added, "I believe the 'fair trade' laws do remove some competitive forces which should be retained in our progressive economy."

While the act was being hotly debated in Congress, supporters claimed it would protect independent small merchants against cut-throat competition. Opponents attacked it as weakening the anti-trust laws.

Big Biz Fights Reapportionment In Michigan

BIG BUSINESS in Michigan is fighting to keep its grip on the Legislature.

Just before the deadline for filing petitions in the State's legislative reapportionment fight, an organization sponsored by moneyed interests showed up with a plan which would freeze the present inequitable distribution of seats.

Called a "balanced legislature" proposal, it nevertheless would freeze a situation where one senatorial district has 10 times the population of another district, and would permit a house district to contain up to three times the number of voters in another.

The Michigan CIO Council has supported the Michigan Committe for Representative Government, which obtained 270,000 signatures to a plan described by Pres. August Scholle as "the only one embodying the democratic principles of representation on which our country and State were founded."

Both redistricting proposals will go on the ballot.

$6 Pay Hike For IAWOC OK'd

The Wage Stabilization Board has given final approval to a $6.25 average weekly pay increase for Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. agents negotiated by the CIO Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee. The increase is retroactive to last Dec. 3.

Correction

A technical error in the July 14 issue of The CIO News served to distort a sentence in the story about the efforts of the Pennsylvania CIO Council to win better treatment for steel union strikers by the State Dept. of Public Assistance.

A letter from Council Pres. Harry Boyer to Mrs. Eleanor G. Evans, department secretary, was incorrectly quoted as a result of typographical errors. The sentence should have read:

"Just because the applicant is a striker, he should not be required to establish such destitution as to come cup in hand before being given consideration as to his needs."

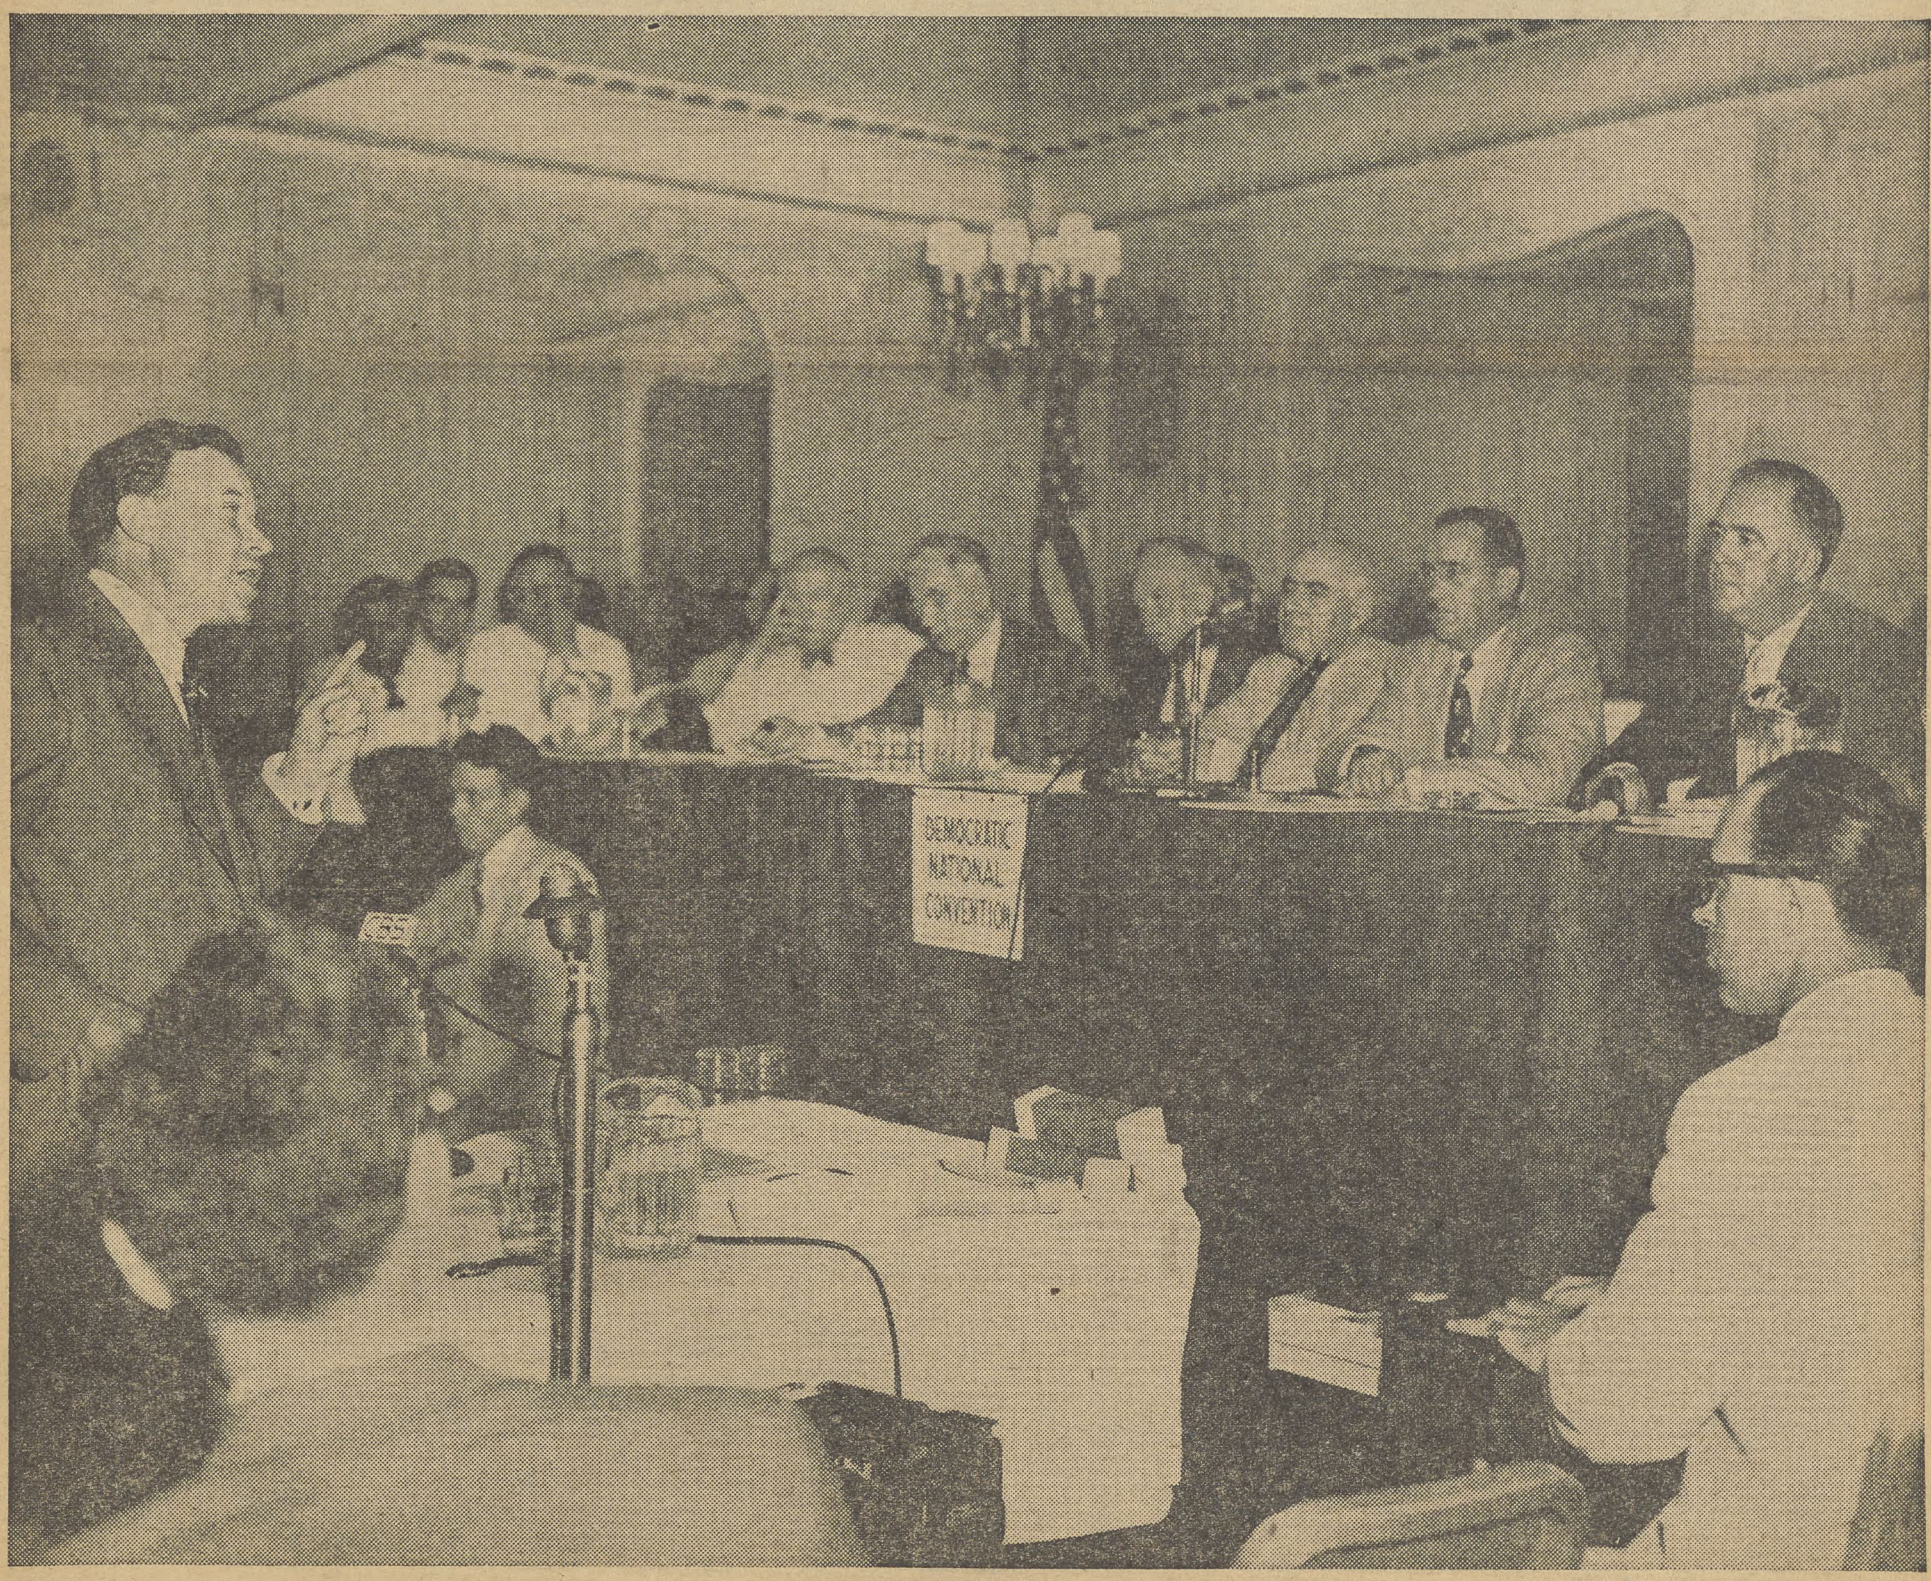
Demos Demand 'Unfair' T-H Law Repeal, Pledge Fair Deal Drive

—SEE PAGE 2



HOW TO WIN IN '52—A call to the Democrats to "get back in 1952 to the Roosevelt-Truman New Deal and Fair Deal policies that have conferred tremendous benefits upon all our people" was voiced before Democratic Platform Committee in Chicago. Walter P. Reuther (left), CIO vice president and Auto Workers president, warned Democrats cannot win unless they stand four-square for human rights. James B. Carey (back to camera), CIO secretary-treasurer and Electrical Workers president, expressed similar views at committee hearing. (Stories page 2.)

Crumpled Dixiecrats Fight For Lives

(By a Staff Correspondent)

CONVENTION HALL, Chicago—With all the excitement and fatigue of an extra-inning ball game, the Democratic convention wound up its Chicago stand last week—and wrote some major political history.

The history wasn't limited to the selection of a presidential candidate and a vice-presidential running mate, just after this paper went to press.

The story of the convention was written in perhaps the most thorough-going liberal platform ever adopted by the Democratic party; in the emergence of a group of younger liberals determined to make the party a better, more consistent force for progressive government; and in the last-ditch defense by the party's Dixiecrats and old guard political bosses.

The developing story of these new political forces was hazy at times, and often lost in the mass of oratory, political maneuvering and parliamentary infighting.

But, when it was possible to look through the haze, these facts emerged:

1. The Democratic platform goes down the line for a Fair Deal platform.

2. The Dixiecrat-old guard group, which in 1948 almost killed off the civil rights program, was unable to stop or even delay the adoption of a strong program for minority rights and for official Democrat sanction to break the filibuster hold of the Dixiecrats in the Senate.

3. The liberal bloc succeeded in writing into the convention rules a provision that will have the effect, in the years ahead, of forcing reactionary southern Democrats to either belong to the party and support it, or stop their southern Republican masquerade.

The adoption of that loyalty rule could—though it may not necessarily work out that way—give Southern voters a clearcut choice between liberal and conservative candidates and policies, a choice that they have not often had in the past.

Four years ago it was the liberal bloc in the Democratic party that was fighting for its life and its future. At Philadelphia, in 1948, it took a superhuman effort to write a real civil rights plank into the platform.

At Chicago, in 1952, the picture was turned around. It was the southern conservatives, like Gov. Battle of Virginia and Gov. Byrnes of South Carolina, who had their backs to the wall. They won a tactical victory in the seating of three southern state delegations which had not signed the loyalty oath.

It was a new and strange sight—to see die-hards like Battle and Byrnes and others of their group fighting for their right to vote, fighting for a voice in the convention, fighting essentially for their political future.

In 1952, that arrogance had crumpled. The three balky state delegations won their final voting status almost on their knees—for they had promised, in one form or another, that the Democratic slate would go on the ballot in their home states.

That slate—being chosen as The CIO News went to press—will have to campaign, whoever may be carrying the party's standard in the election, on a platform that minces no words in calling for repeal of Taft-Hartley, in urging a higher federal minimum wage standards, in striking at filibuster rules in Congress and in providing a strong and foresighted foreign policy program.

That platform will be largely ignored by the Dixiecrats in the next session of Congress, if history since 1948 has taught any lessons.

But the Dixiecrats know from the record of this convention that Democrats are supposed to be Democrats, and that the record will be under critical examination during the next two sessions of Congress.

Fair Deal Platform Reflects Labor's Goals

By MILTON PLUMB

CONVENTION HALL, Chicago—The Fair Deal is the goal for America.

Delegates to the Democratic National Convention in Chicago made this clear by adopting a hard-hitting program pledging their party's support to measures that will carry forward the great social and economic reforms of the New Deal and the Fair Deal and insure "world peace with honor."

In its positive reaffirmations, the Democratic Party's 1952 platform—adopted by voice vote shortly before 1 a.m. on July 24—contrasts sharply with the generally negative program which the Republican Party had approved in the same hall two weeks earlier.

The Democratic document reflects the careful consideration which the Democratic Platform Committee gave to the needs and wishes of the people, as expressed by representatives of labor, farmers, small business and the common people. The Republican Party's platform almost totally ignored the people's interests and gave preferred treatment to big business, special interests and reactionary pressure groups.

Where the GOP "commended" the oppressive provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, hedged on civil rights, and partisanly criticized the Roosevelt-Truman foreign policies which have done so much to build up the free world, the Democrats came out fighting on behalf of a people's democratic program on all these basic issues.

The Democratic Platform calls for:

1. Outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, which it unequivocably proclaims is unfair to labor.

2. A strengthened civil rights plank, hailed by Negro leaders as a "distinct advance" over the 1948 pledge, and buttressed by a supplementary plank calling for action as soon as the 83rd Congress convenes to end the Senate filibuster.

3. Continuation and strengthening of our foreign policy of aid to and alliances with friendly nations abroad and the building up—so long as necessary—of balanced forces for land, sea and air defense.

The Democrats declared forthrightly that taxes are high because of the military spending that is necessary if our nation is to remain strong, and honestly rejected making "reckless promises" like the Republicans to reduce them at the present time. They called, however, for elimination of loopholes in the tax laws which benefit special interests, and for a lowering of taxes on low incomes as soon as possible.

By coming out strongly in support of the United Nations as the world's best existing instrument for peace, the Democrats destroyed within their ranks all traces of the isolationism that is latent in the mealy-mouthed phrasing of the GOP foreign policy plank. They stood firmly behind the Administration's actions in Korea, and proclaimed that present foreign policies are halting Communist imperialism and winning the peace.

Taken as a whole, the platform represents a significant victory for the liberal forces within the Democratic Party. While it does not go as far or take as forthright a stand on some issues as had been called for by CIO representatives before the drafting committee, its general emphasis is one which labor can wholeheartedly support.

If adhered to legislatively, it will enable the party to "get back in 1952 to the Roosevelt-Truman New Deal and Fair Deal policies that have conferred tremendous benefits upon all our people." That was the basic request made before the drafting committee by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther when they testified July 21.

CIO's testimony before the platform committee was regarded by many members of the press covering it as one of the high marks in the history of American labor. The attention on the part of committee members and the ringing applause at its conclusion which it elicited were unequalled at any other point in the long hearings.

Carey, charged with responsibility for presenting a detailed statement of CIO platform recommendations, began by emphasizing that the CIO was there because "we want a government responsive to the needs of the people." He pointed out that CIO testimony on behalf of its 6 million members and the 18 million other members of their families summed up the views of at least one-sixth of the population.

CIO recommendations to the Democratic Platform Committee were almost identical with those presented before the Republicans. They were expanded, however, to include a new demand for reform of the present structure of congressional committees and a new paragraph on the subject of labor relations.

In regard to the latter, the CIO asserted that "collective bargaining is a fixture in all phases of American life. Our laws and practices should improve and extend its principles, not contract or restrict them. To single out labor for repression in the field of collective bargaining is un-American."

The proposal for congressional committee reform—part of the CIO effort to end Dixiegop coalition control of Congress—was declared "particularly applicable to the Democratic Party, which has far too often permitted its programs to be sabotaged in congressional committees by reactionaries from the South who feel free to repudiate their obligations to all the American people."

"It is time the Democratic Party realized," Carey said, "that the American labor movement views Congress largely through its committees. It breaks a labor leader's heart to sit before a committee that has a Barden or a Congressman Wood and other men not from industrial areas working with evil Republicans to sabotage the labor legislation program."

The CIO statement emphasized the need for a strong program in the area of human rights and hit the filibuster as the greatest obstacle to its realization.

It called for "economically sound" and "morally right" principles in regard to defense mobilization, control of inflation, housing and rent control, health, social security and minimum wage laws, development of natural resources, education and foreign policy.

Reuther said that the Democratic Party this November would be asking the American people to again bestow upon it tremendous power over their lives and futures.

"You will get it," he declared, "only if you demonstrate the sense of moral responsibility that ought to go with that power. No political party that compromises on fundamental issues when freedom is being challenged has a moral right to win. The Democratic Party has a right to power only if it stands four-square for human rights."

On the question of civil rights, Reuther called the Senate Rule permitting filibusters the gravedigger of civil rights legislation.

"Any civil rights plank that still lets the gravedigger remain would be not only an insult to the American people but a moral sin," he said. "The question of civil rights may be a minority problem in America, but in the world it is a majority problem. More than half the people of the world are affected by racial discrimination."

"If any labor leader says that he can deliver the labor vote, he is trying to kid you," Reuther declared. "What a labor leader can do, however, is to arouse the workers around issues, and they—the workers—will deliver their own vote."

Reuther said that in 1948 American labor had turned out and worked because the Democratic Party platform had offered them a basic program they believed in.

"But unless you give us the tools to work with, the kind of platform that workers can support in 1952, you can't win," he added. "All of the eloquence, all of the political oratory will not make one particle of difference in winning the struggle for men's hearts and minds."

The platform which the committee reported out three days later proved conclusively—and not by empty gestures—that those who drafted it had done more than merely hear the CIO presentation.

They also, unlike the Republican platform committee, had understood.

(The story of the talks with Vice Pres. Alben Barkley at the convention, Page 5; Platform excerpts, Page 4).

Reuther Had The Last Laugh

House Majority Leader McCormack (D. Mass.) and CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther marked one up against each other in a friendly exchange before the Democratic Platform Committee.

Reuther wound up an attack on the McCarran Immigration Act by asserting: "You either ought to repeal the McCarran Act or tear down the Statue of Liberty. They are incompatible in America."

"You're urging repeal, of course," McCormick, chairman of the platform drafting committee, quipped.

But Reuther got the biggest laugh a few minutes later when McCormack asked if he didn't think that Lincoln would be a Democrat were he alive today.

"I'll make that decision," Reuther answered, "after I see what you do with the platform."

Carey Had The Last Word

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey had the last word with a woman when he testified before the Democratic Platform Committee. He requested the group to reject a plank supporting the so-called "Equal Rights" Amendment.

Delegate Dorothy Satti, of New London, Conn., arose and asked, "Why is the CIO for equal rights for everybody except women?"

"The delegate misunderstands our opposition," Carey replied. "I assure her that I am deeply concerned over the welfare of my sisters, who come from a family whose women have had to work."

"Your sisters should have brought you up better, young man," Mrs. Satti sniffed.

But she remained quiet after Carey patiently went on to explain that the amendment would deprive women in industry of protection they now receive.

Steel Strike Ends; Union Shop Won

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE LONGEST steel strike in U.S. history ended July 25 when the CIO Steelworkers Wage Policy Committee, meeting in Washington, ratified a settlement worked out in the White House.

"This agreement symbolizes a mighty victory for the steel workers of the United States," the committee declared.

"It marks a great new forward stride in the efforts of the Steelworkers of this nation to achieve a decent life for themselves and their families; it provides for the total elimination, partially now and the balance at the end of a year, of the existing differential between iron ore wage scales and steel plant scales; it makes tremendous progress toward the elimination of all the other unfair differentials that have plagued this industry for many years; it provides the basis for working conditions on the job; and, by no means least, it provides a new foundation of recognition and security for our great union." (Text on Page 8.)

As soon as the committee acted, Pres. Philip Murray, head of both the CIO and the victorious Steelworkers, sent word to locals in all parts of the strike-bound industry to break up their picket lines and go back to work after nearly eight weeks of a walkout that had shut down more than 90% of the country's steel production capacity.

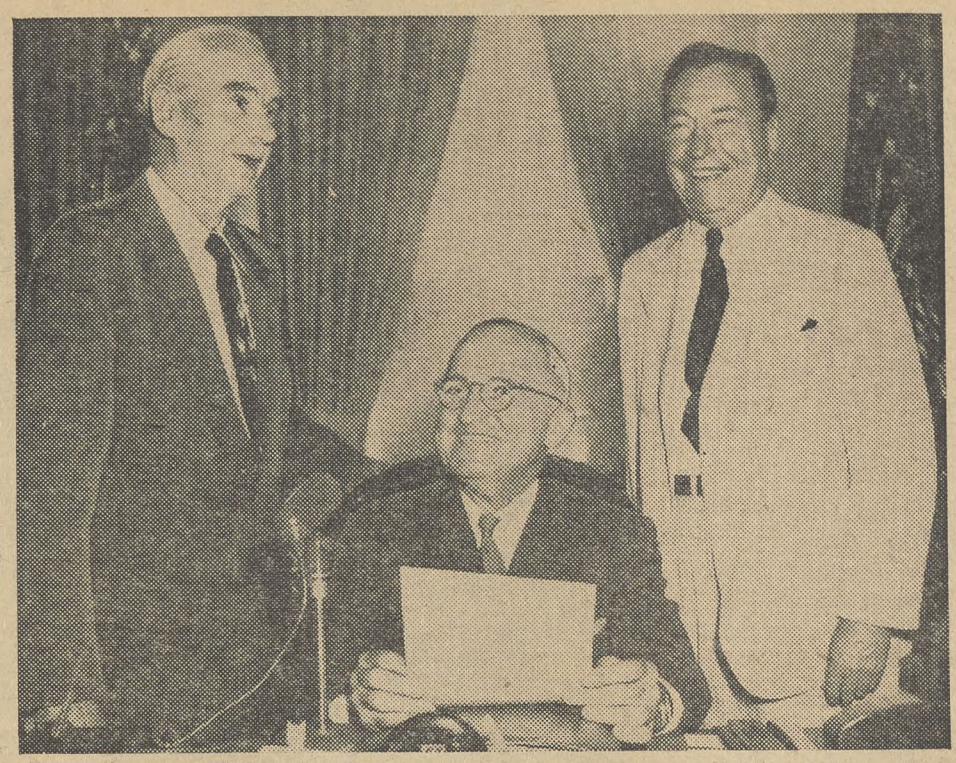
The settlement was negotiated principally by Murray and Pres. Benjamin F. Fairless of U.S. Steel at an all-day meeting in the White House after President Truman, according to reports, "laid down the law" and demanded that they come up with an agreement.

It was accepted by other union negotiators and by spokesmen for the other Big Six steel producers — Bethlehem, Jones & Laughlin, Republic, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, and Inland subject to approval by the union's Wage Policy Committee.

Basically, it provides for a wage increase, retroactive to Mar. 1, of 12.5c an hour in the rate for the Class 1, or lowest, job classification in the standard basic steel agreement, with the spread between the other job classes increased by a half-cent; a boost in differentials from the present 4c to 6c for the second shift and from 6c to 9c for the third trick; six paid holidays, with double time for holidays worked; three weeks vacation after 15 years' service retroactive to Jan. 1; decrease of the southern differential by 5c an hour, and a union security clause based on the modified Bethlehem union shop contract provision.

The new contracts to be signed with each producer will run to June 30, 1954, subject to reopening by either party as of June 30, 1953, on the question of general wage rates only.

The settlement also gave the iron ore miners of Northern Minnesota and Michigan something they have been seeking for many years—wage parity between mine and mill jobs in comparable classifications. The agreement provides that part of the differential be eliminated at the end of the strike, by negotiation, and the rest as of July 1, 1953.



IT'S ALL OVER NOW—Bitterness which marked eight-week long basic steel strike was replaced by these jovial smiles as President Truman, flanked by CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray (left) and U. S. Steel Pres. Ben. Fairless, announced strike settlement in which union won major union shop demand.

Dr. John R. Steelman, White House aide and acting defense mobilization director, announced that he had instructed Economic Stabilization Director Roger L. Putnam to authorize a price increase of $5.20 a ton in carbon steel. Some other types will go up more and others less, with the average estimated at about $5.60. The present average is $110 a ton.

The increase includes $2.84 allowable under the Capehart Amendment and 70c to offset a freight rate increase that became effective May 2.

The string of events that ended in settlement of the strike started on July 20, when at the behest of the government another in the series of negotiation meetings was held in Pittsburgh. Like those that preceded it, it failed.

The following day, the USA-CIO Wage Policy Committee met in Pittsburgh, praised Murray and other officers for their leadership, and demanded the contract improvements recommended by the Wage Stabilization Board as the price of peace.

An invitation was extended to top steel industry executives to meet with the committee. Unexpectedly, it was accepted by Stephens; Vice Pres. Joseph Larkin and John H. Morse, general counsel, of Bethlehem, and Ben Moreell, board chairman of Jones & Laughlin.

Before they spoke, Murray outlined the major obstacles to settlement—failure to give the Steelworkers the same type of union shop the industry gives its other workers; U. S. Steel's insistence on a management rights clause that could wipe out contract gains, and settlement of the iron dispute.

The producers were heard attentively and applauded politely—but they were not able to change the committee's stand.

Late on July 23, President Truman issued a call for Murray and Stephens to appear at the White House next day, meet with him, and then go into negotiations.

During the day other union and company officials joined in the talks—USA-CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald, Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, and several district directors for the union; and Larkin, Morse, Vice Pres. John A. Stephens and Board Vice Chairman Roger Blough of U.S. Steel, and spokesmen for the other firms.

When the settlement ending the long strike—two days short of eight full weeks—was finally evolved, the President himself made the announcement. He called reporters into his office and sitting at his desk, flanked by Murray and Fairless, he read the following statement:

"Mr. Murray and Mr. Fairless have just advised me that six major steel companies and the United Steelworkers of America have reached agreement on important basic issues. The union is calling its national Wage Policy Committee to meet in Washington tomorrow for the purpose of ratifying the agreement. This should lead to speedy resumption of steel production."

The six major companies represent about two-thirds of the country's basic steel production capacity.

Murray and Fairless smiled happily as they posed on the White House steps for photographers.

"Are you satisfied with the terms?" Murray was asked.

"I wouldn't be recommending them if I wasn't," he answered.

Both expressed the hope that there would be no bitterness as an aftermath of the walkout.

"I hope," said Fairless, "that it will be the last strike that we will ever have in our great industry and that our relationships in the future will prevent a recurrence of what we have just gone through."

"I echo the sentiments of Mr. Fairless," said Murray. "I express the hope that as a result of our negotiations here that we will be able to build up in the industry good friendly cooperative relationships between all of these companies and our union."

In keeping with their expressed hopes, Murray and Fairless said they will make a joint speaking tour of U.S. Steel plants as a step in helping promote better labor-management relations. The union and other companies, it was expected, would follow suit.

Thus ended eight months of the dispute between the USA-CIO and the basic steel industry. They were eight months which saw the union repeatedly postpone its strike—for a total of 99 days—at the request of President Truman, eight months in which the industry actually forced the issue by refusing to accept the recommendations of the Wage Stabilization Board.

The strike started June 2, when the Supreme Court ruled that the President exceeded his powers in seizing the industry to halt a walkout.

The eight weeks since then were weeks that saw the rank and file stand firm in the face of the bitterest and most virulent propaganda ever hurled against a group of workers who wanted nothing more revolutionary than better wages and working conditions for themselves and a little security for their union.

Meantime, the USA-CIO reached a settlement with the Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. in months of negotiations directed by the WSB.

The new agreement provides for a general wage increase of 12c an hour retroactive to Jan. 1 and another 4c effective July 1.

Workers in Kaiser plants at Newark, O., and Halethorpe, Md., get an additional 6.3c retroactive to Jan. 1, while at Trentwood, Mead and Tacoma, Wash., increments between job classes were boosted from 3.3c to 3.8c an hour, also retroactive to Jan. 1.

Effective next Jan. 1, the premium on the second shift will be increased from 4c to 6c an hour, and on the third shift from 6c to 9c.

The company also agreed to pay an additional 3c an hour toward the cost of an improved social insurance program which is to be negotiated. The contract runs to June 30, 1954, with a wage reopening on June 30, 1953 that gives the union the right to strike if no agreement is reached.

The union shop included in the previous agreement was continued unchanged.

In another branch of the same industry, union negotiators were trying last week to work out an agreement with the Aluminum Co. of America. The meetings, also ordered by the WSB, were being held in Washington.

Maimed Miner Helps As Picket

On Nov. 19, 1951, Nazzareno Romitelli, a member of CIO Steelworkers Local 2078 at the Oliver Iron Mining Co. taconite operation at Iron Mountain, near Eveleth, Minn., was almost blown to pieces.

A dynamite explosion ripped through a drift in which he was working. It left him with one eye blinded and only slight vision in the other, fractures of the skull, jaw, three ribs and right leg, both eardrums punctured, and his face and skull full of rock fragments. He was discharged as totally disabled and unable to work.

A few days ago another iron miner led him into strike headquarters at Eveleth, on Minnesota's Mesabi Range. To help out the boys he used to work with, he volunteered for picket duty.

Merchant Aids Steel Strikers

Who said that gratitude is a thin coin? S. J. Rudolph, Lorain, O., jeweler, doesn't believe it.

Many CIO Steelworkers used to patronize his store. After they went on strike, Rudolph remembered them, and last week announced that $1000 a week would be available for loans without interest to the steel strikers—and men employed in allied industries. Limit of each loan was set at $20 a week.

Contract Gains In Summary

Wage and other contract gains chalked up for nearly 650,000 members of the CIO Steelworkers covered by the strike settlement are:

The modified union shop.

An increase of 12.5c an hour in the Class 1, or lowest, job rate.

An increase in the spread between other job classes by one-half cent an hour.

General increases retroactive to Mar. 1.

An increase in shift differentials from 4c to 6c on the second turn and from 6c to 9c on the third trick.

A cut of 5c an hour in the southern differential.

Six paid holidays, with double time for those worked.

Elimination of the differential between iron ore mine and steel plant rates in the respective job classifications, in part at present and the balance as of July 1, 1953.

The Democratic Platform

The Democratic platform is a document which, if given a fair chance in Congress, will go far to carry out the programs of the Fair Deal.

On foreign policy, on Taft-Hartley, on civil rights, on farm problems, the Democrats drafted and accepted a document dedicated to the idea that government should serve all the people.

At almost every paragraph, it stands in startling contrast to the Republican platform adopted two weeks earlier in Chicago.

In Taft-Hartley, the Republicans professed to see a good law which might perhaps need only a few trifling changes, along the lines proposed by Sen. Taft himself a couple of years ago.

The Democrats, on the other hand, saw Taft-Hartley in its true light—a law "inadequate, unfair and unworkable" —and they "strongly" advocated its repeal.

Similarly, the Democrats took a realistic approach toward the civil rights problem. The platform acknowledges that state and local handling of discrimination matters is not enough, as the Republicans would like us to believe.

It calls not only for "equality of opportunity" legislation for jobs—a synonym for FEPC—but for federal strengthening of every phase of the civil rights structure.

Supporters of civil rights legislation likewise can take heart from the Democrats' belief that action must be taken early in the next session to change the Senate rules to curb the power of the filibuster crowd.

The platform is merely a document—a set of goals and aspirations. It takes full meaning only as it gets support from the men and women who gain office in the November elections.

The CIO will be on the job, in the months after the election, to make certain that Democrats who win office on the basis of that excellent document will remember it, live by it, and fight for the legislation which it promises to the American people.

Victory In Steel

The steel strike, settled just before this paper went to press, represents a magnificent victory for the United Steelworkers of America. Steel workers won substantial wage increases and the essentials of the union shop.

The victory was achieved only after some eight weeks of strike—a strike that reflected the determination and self-discipline of the workers and a deep-seated belief in the justice of their cause.

The strike occurred because stubborn management was insistent upon a strike, but management did not anticipate the solidity of the membership and it did not estimate the great sense of justice and fair play which has marked President Truman throughout the entire dispute.

Management-employee relations in steel can now be repaired and vastly improved. The responsibility lies on management to rise above the pettiness and irresponsibility of the past few months and to meet the union half way in building a better, more secure future for the men and women of steel.

Dial A Clear Picture

What The Demos Pledge

The text of the labor plank—"A Fair Deal for Workers"—in the platform adopted at the Democratic National Convention follows in part:

Good Incomes. There can be no national prosperity unless our working men and women continue to prosper and enjoy rising living standards. The rising productivity of American workers is a key to our unparalled progress. Good incomes for our workers are the secret of our great and growing consumer markets.

Labor-Management Relations. Good labor-management relations are essential to good incomes for wage earners and rising output from our factories.

We believe that to the widest possible extent consistent with the public interest, management and labor should determine wage rates and conditions of employment through free collective bargaining.

Taft-Hartley Act. We strongly advocate the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The Taft-Hartley Act has proven itself to be inadequate, unfair and unworkable. It interferes in an arbitrary manner with collective bargaining, tipping the scales in favor of management against labor.

The Taft-Hartley Act has revived the injunction as a weapon against labor in industrial relations. The act has arbitrarily forbidden traditional hiring practices which are desired by both management and labor in many industries.

The act has forced workers to act as strikebreakers against their fellow unionists. The act has served to interfere with one of the most fundamental rights of American workers—the right to organize in unions of their own choosing.

We deplore the fact that the Taft-Hartley Act provides an inadequate and unfair means of meeting with national emergency situations.

We advocate legislation that will enable the President to deal fairly and effectively with cases where a breakdown in collective bargaining seriously threatens the national safety or welfare.

In keeping with the progress of the times, and based on past experience, a new legislative approach toward the entire labor-management problem should be explored.

The text of the Democrats' civil rights plank follows:

IN ORDER that the will of the American people may be expressed upon all legislative proposals, we believe that action should be taken at the beginning of the 83d Congress to improve congressional procedures so that votes may be had and decisions made after reasonable debate without being blocked by a minority in either house.

The Democratic party is committed to support and advance the individual rights and liberties of all Americans.

Our country is founded on the proposition that all men are created equal.

This means that all citizens are equal before the law and should enjoy equal political rights. They should have equal opportunities for education, for economic advancement and for decent living conditions.

We will continue our efforts to eradicate discrimination based on race, religion or national origin.

We know this task requires action, not just in one section of the nation, but in all sections. It requires the cooperative efforts of individual citizens and action by state and local governments.

It also requires federal action. The federal government must live up to the ideals of the Declaration of Independence and must exercise the powers vested in it by the Constitution.

We are proud of the progress that has been made in securing equality of treatment and opportunity in the nation's armed forces and the civil service and all areas under federal jurisdiction.

The Dept. of Justice has taken an important part in successfully arguing in the courts for the elimination of many illegal discriminations, including those involving rights to own and use real property, to engage in gainful occupations and to enroll in publicly-supported educational institutions. We are determined the federal government shall continue such policies.

At the same time, we favor federal legislation effectively to secure these rights for everyone: (1) The right to equal opportunity for employment; (2) the right to full and equal participation in the nation's political life, free from arbitrary restraints.

The Story Of Labor's Meeting With Veep

ALBEN BARKLEY, a great public servant and a tested friend of labor, won the acclaim of the Democratic convention both before and after his speech last week—a speech that summed up his belief in a fighting brand of liberal politics.

It was a speech that filled the delegates and the nationwide radio-TV audience with memories of many years of faithful political struggle for the principles of the New Deal and the Fair Deal.

And as he spoke last Wednesday, the audience recognized the drama of the 74-year-old Veep, who had withdrawn from the presidential nomination race after a group of leaders of the CIO and AFL had told him they were unable to support his campaign.

That decision, transmitted to the Vice President during the course of breakfast on Monday, attracted wide attention and considerable discussion, both among union members and the general public.

It was a painful task for the union officials, each one of whom knew at first hand the Veep's long service to labor and to liberal politics in America. Yet, even after taking that admirable record into consideration, they felt they had no alternative in view of the Veep's 74 years—more years than any American President has had when moving into the White House.

On Saturday, July 19, and Sunday, July 20—the weekend just before the Democratic convention opened—Chicago was full of rumors that the Veep was winning strong support from curious quarters for his Presidential candidacy.

The support seemed to be coming from numerous Dixiecrats and from some of the "professional politicians" on the Democratic Party's extreme right wing—men like Jim Farley of New York, for instance, who had broken with President Roosevelt and never showed much warmth for Pres. Truman's Fair Deal.

The matter was discussed at length among the CIO top officials present in Chicago on Sunday, July 20.

Participating in those discussions were Dir. Jack Kroll of the CIO Political Action Committee; Executive Vice President Allan Haywood; Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey; Pres. Walter Reuther of the United Automobile Workers; Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers Intl. Union; Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers, and others.

Their conclusion seemed to be (1) that the Vice President's age would be a serious barrier to his success in the coming campaign, even making allowances for Barkley's extraordinary vigor; and (2) that the Dixiecrat wing might jump onto the Barkley coattails in the hope of strengthening their position within the party either in victory or defeat in November.

Conversations were held on Sunday, July 20, with leading AFL officials present in Chicago—among them Vice-Pres. George Harrison, who heads the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks; and Joseph Keenan, former director of Labor's League for Political Education.

Finding themselves in common agreement, a phone call was placed to the White House on Sunday afternoon. Both Kroll and Harrison spoke to a White House official — not President Truman — and expressed fear that the way the Barkley for President move was going, it might catapult anti-Fair Deal groups in the party into a position of control.

Both in this conversation and in every other discussion, the union officials emphasized their great devotion and respect for Barkley and the principles for which he personally stands. But, they felt, the other factors were of over-riding importance to the future of democratic trade unionism in America and could not be ignored.

Within an hour, Barkley—presumably having heard of the phone discussion with Washington—called both Kroll and Harrison, and invited a group of the CIO and AFL leaders to breakfast with him the next day, on Monday, July 21.

With more than 500 newspapermen on the convention scene, the hope that plans for the breakfast might not be made public, was soon dashed, and newspapermen learned the general outline of the story.

At that point, Kroll told newsmen:

"I have the utmost respect, admiration and affection for Vice-President Barkley. It's a matter of extreme and sincere regret that we're not able to support him because of his age."

The breakfast was held at Barkley's hotel suite the next morning. Among those attending, for the CIO, were Kroll, Reuther, Knight, Beirne, and Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Clothing Workers.

That night, the Veep withdrew from the Presidential sweepstakes. The Veep said he had felt his long experience in national and international affairs might prove of value to the nation, and that he had been urged by many citizens to run for the office.

Barkley said he would be "derelict" in his duty if he did not explain his reasons for withdrawing. He said he had always believed that the Democratic Party should favor all segments of the nation without favor, and that none should dominate.

He added: "Since arriving in Chicago, I have learned that certain self-anointed political labor leaders have taken upon themselves to announce their opposition to me as a Democratic nominee for President."

The Veep said that these union officials admitted to him that weeks ago they had committed themselves to other candidates in the Democratic race.

In fact, however, none of the CIO leaders who had met with Barkley was committed in any such way, and the CIO had made no commitment in support of any candidate.

'Dear Alben'—A Wire By Murray

The following message was sent to Vice-President Barkley by CIO Pres. Philip Murray on July 23, a few hours before the Veep addressed the Democratic convention:

Dear Alben:

I am writing you because in the heat and turmoil of current political development, events have transpired which are being used to come between us.

You and I, for a lifetime, have stood together for the things in which we believe, each in our chosen fields of endeavor. I will be satisfied if in my life as a representative of working people I attain a measure of their esteem and affection that you have gained through your magnificent efforts on their behalf in the halls of Congress and as Vice President.

Our fight has always been your fight. You have always been ready to listen to our problems, to assist us in winning economic justice, and your great heart has always been filled with sympathy and concern for all Americans of all stations. Our love for you is exceeded only by the overwhelming tide of affection for you which I know is in the hearts of all Americans.

I want you to know that for my part nothing will ever destroy that feeling.

PAC Comment On Barkley

A few hours after the Veep's statement, the CIO Political Action Committee issued this comment:

"Vice President Barkley's statement reflects his great and understandable disappointment over the failure of his candidacy. It is regrettable that in a moment of emotional stress, he has allowed the pangs of that disappointment to distort what transpired at our meeting with him on Monday morning.

"The facts are that he invited us to breakfast, together with representatives of the AFL and the railroad brotherhoods, at which time he asked for our support. We explained to him honestly and in all candor our reasons for being unable to give him the support which he sought.

"We felt he was too old to undertake the tremendous burdens of the campaign and of the Presidency, and that his great name and reputation were being used by those who have always opposed the policies he advocated.

"We explained that many of the CIO members who are delegates to this convention were 'committed to favorite sons or other candidates' by the voters who sent them to Chicago that they are morally and legally obligated to abide by those instructions.

"The program for which the CIO stands has been expressed publicly to the platform committees of both conventions and in many prior public utterances. It is the same program, in large part, for which the Vice President has fought during his long and honored public career.

"We are sorry that the Vice President, for whom we still have great respect and admiration, has permitted his disappointment to temporarily cloud his judgment. We are confident, however, that when his calmer judgment prevails, he will recognize the rightness of our position."

70 CIOers Were Demo Delegates

"THE CIO is not for deals," Dir. Jack Kroll of the CIO Political Action Committee told the more than 70 CIO members — from more than 30 states—who were delegates to the Democratic convention.

It was the largest delegation of CIO members to ever attend a Democratic convention.

In the pre-convention meeting in hall of the Chicago Joint Board of the CIO Clothing Workers, the delegates discussed the candidates, platform and policies. Kroll warned all kinds of "deals" would be offered and he warned against "all kinds of rumors" on CIO's position current at the convention.

Reiterating PAC's determination that labor's participation in politics be free of all unwholesome influences, CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther commented:

"Labor comes here not to try to capture the convention, but to exert the moral influence needed if the Democratic Party is to keep the people's support."

As the delegates outlined their individual positions and the positions of the state delegations to which they belonged, they had a few words of advice from CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allen S. Haywood and Kroll.

From Haywood it was: "Work for democracy everywhere."

From Kroll it was summed up this way: Live up to your individual commitments and any instructions you may have from your state group. Press for a liberal view on policies, rules, platform and candidates.

With CIO's position clear, the delegates agreed to skip further meetings and to keep each other informed through PAC's central headquarters, set up for the duration of the convention in the Palmer House.

PAC Says: 'Demo Program Is In FDR's Tradition'

The following is a statement issued by the CIO Political Action Committee at Chicago:

OFFICIALS of the CIO affiliated international unions who came to the 1952 national Democratic convention did so for the purpose of making our contribution to the drafting of a platform that would deal with the problems and meet the needs at home and abroad of the nation and the American people.

We were happy to be able to join with other labor and civic minded and liberal organizations in this effort.

While the platform adopted Wednesday night does not deal with all of the recommendations made by the liberal forces, the program as a whole is nevertheless the most liberal and forward looking ever adopted by either of the two major political parties.

It is in the Roosevelt tradition of banishing fear and looking into the future with confidence and boldness. Translated into legislation and administrative policy, this platform will equip America to meet our complex domestic problems.

It will also strengthen our position of economic, military and moral leadership among free nations in the common effort to resist Communist aggression and to build a better world in which peace and freedom can be made secure.

The delegates now have the responsibility of selecting candidates who are in harmony with the platform, who have the ability, the integrity and the stature to win the confidence and support of the American people. We believe that each of the serious contenders for the nomination — Averell Harriman, Estes Kefauver and Adlai Stevenson — meet these standards and can give America the leadership it needs in the challenging years ahead.

Members of CIO unions who are delegates to this convention come here as American citizens and as members of their various state delegations. In exercising their rights as citizens and as elected delegates they have variously expressed their individual preferences as to the three candidates named above. Some are for Harriman, some for Kefauver and some for Stevenson.

As far as the CIO leadership is concerned, these delegates will cast their votes according to their own individual judgment and conscience.

We would like to emphasize the fact that the selection of a vice presidential candidate has an importance equal to any other action of this convention. This matter should not be acted upon as a perfunctory anti-climax to the rest of the convention's business.

We urge all delegates to apply the same careful consideration to the selection of a vice presidential candidate as they do in the adoption and formulation of a platform and in the selection of a presidential candidate.

Wall Street's Favorite Son Runs Again - By Proxy

WALL STREET'S favorite son—Thomas E. Dewey—is making his fourth race for President by proxy.

Dewey made his first bid under his own name in 1940, but Wendell Willkie beguiled away his rich backers and brushed him to one side.

Dewey sulked until he was back in favor with the banks and the boards of directors. Then he paid Willkie back by denying him a delegate's seat in the 1944 convention where he came through with the nomination.

President Roosevelt snowed Dewey under, but he stayed loyal to Wall Street and the money market stayed loyal to him in 1948, giving him his second nomination and millions of dollars for his campaign.

Escorted by an honor guard of hand-picked miniature New York State policemen, Dewey toured the country talking windy generalities and confident of success.

When President Truman stopped him cold, Dewey realized at last that he was through as an aspirant for President—under his own name, at least. But inside of two weeks he was in General Eisenhower's office at Columbia University, urging him to run in 1952—with Dewey support and, of course, under Dewey guidance.

Eisenhower shied away for the time being, and Dewey and his machine settled down to wait, putting pressure on the General whenever they got the chance. For instance, Dewey's appointee as Republican National Chairman—Rep. Hugh "Best Blood" Scott (R. Pa.) went to Portland, Ore., in December, 1949, to predict that Eisenhower would be the man to take over the Republican Party in 1952.

A few months later, Dewey once more broke his regular promise to retire from public life and ran for re-election as Governor of New York. He took occasion in the campaign to declare he wouldn't dream of making another try for president, that Eisenhower was the man to nominate.

It was ironic that this time, when he really meant it, many people who knew him did not believe him.

All through 1951 the old gang of Dewey men sounded off about once a week, beating the drums for the General—who was tied down in his European headquarters.

With the fall of 1951, the Eisenhower campaign got going. It was in every line the old Dewey pattern, with Dewey himself kept offstage.

The top strategy board was led by Herbert Brownell, Jr.—Dewey's old campaign manager.

Seated around the table were men like J. Russell Sprague, the Dewey Machine's Republican Committeeman from New York; Harold Talbott, twice Dewey's campaign finance chairman; John Foster Dulles, Dewey's foreign policy spokesman; and most of the old Albany political professionals.

This was the group that whooped up the "spontaneous" demand for Eisenhower as a candidate. But from behind the scenes. Out in front for public view were shoved innocents like Senator Lodge of Massachusetts, Senator Duff of Pennsylvania and Senator Carlson of Kansas.

Brownell came out in the open when the campaign bogged down late last year. Talbott and the financial experts came from behind the scenes a few weeks ago when the campaign costs, according to U. S. News of July 18, 1952, piled up to six times what Dewey spent in 1944, three times his outlay in 1948.

With the opening of the Republican convention, the last camouflage fell away, and Dewey took personal command. The Taft organization suddenly found Eisenhower's "amateurs" out of the picture and instead of them the convention razzle-dazzle was being managed by Dewey's hardened professionals.

And pulling the strings, giving the orders, was Dewey himself, now smiling, now smirking as he nailed down his nomination by proxy.

The Taft gang knew it quickly. The convention delegates soon knew the truth as well. The public learned it; the press soon caught the trend.

The only man who still has to find it out seems to be General Eisenhower himself.

CIO Protests To HST On Tariff Boost Move

THE CIO last week asked President Truman to reject a recommendation of the Federal Tariff Commission to boost the tariff on imported Swiss watch movements under the escape clause of the reciprocal trade agreement with Switzerland.

"We have examined this situation and feel that it would do considerable harm to the position of the United States in world trade if such action were to be taken," Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Committee and president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, wrote Truman.

"We, therefore, urge you to reject the recommendation.

"While it is true that the importation of Swiss watch movements has created active competition with domestic watch movements, this competition has, however, resulted in many American workers being employed in the production of the cases which are used to encase the Swiss watch movements.

"In the light of this subsidiary employment, and in the light of the fact that imports of Swiss movements encourage American exports to Switzerland, and in the light of the fact that Swiss employment and the economic conditions of Switzerland would be adversely affected by an increased American import duty, we urge you to reject the majority recommendation of the Federal Tariff Commission and to justify your action to the American people, as required by law, with a strong, ringing statement of the need for promotion of international trade and the effect of such trade upon the maintenance of international understanding and world cooperation."

Potofsky recalled to the President that the CIO has strongly supported the promotion of international trade and the reciprocal trade agreement program. It also supported the escape clause in the Geneva Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, he added.

"We believe," he concluded, "that action by you rejecting the recommendation to increase duty on Swiss watch movements will greatly strengthen our whole reciprocal trade program, inclusive of the operation of the escape clause."

UAW Challenges Ford To Act On Voter Signup

PUT UP OR SHUT UP. That's the CIO Auto Workers' challenge to Ford Motor Co. which has been plugging increased registration of voters in its company publication.

It's a fine idea, Ken Bannon, director of the UAW Ford dept., wrote Henry Ford II, company president. "Let's have registration on company property and company time."

"Our experience," Bannon wrote, "in conducting joint surveys, elections under the NLRB, and solicitations for various civic organizations have been very successful. I am sure that with the recognition you have given to the principles contained in your article, and with the institution of the mechanics whereby registration can be made more convenient for your employes, better participation in the coming elections will take place."

But there was nothing but silence from the Ford company office.

Judge Upholds State FEPC Order Against Union Bias

A CONNECTICUT judge has handed down one of the first court rulings upholding an order of a state Fair Employment Practices Commission.

The precedent-making decision by Superior Court Judge Abraham Borden ordered Local 35 of the AFL Electrical Workers to admit two Negro applicants to membership.

Judge Borden upheld last year's decision of the Connecticut State Commission on Civil Rights.

The union had appealed the commission decision, claiming its findings were advisory only and that in ordering the Hartford local to admit the applicants the commission was acting illegally and unreasonably, and abusing its discretion.

The order puts the force of law behind the commission's findings. Should the local continue its refusal to grant membership to the pair on the same terms as white applicants, its officers can be cited for contempt and face the penalty of fines and jail sentences.

IN NEW YORK, 50 delegates to the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials agreed that enforceable FEPC laws serve not only as corrective measures but as aids to authorities in educating the community to the benefits of fair hiring policies.

The delegates concluded that forceful community education campaigns were needed to get employers to hire qualified workers, regardless of race or religion.

But, they said, their experience proved that they could do the job well, only if they had the authority of law.

Mile A. Manley, a member of the Philadelphia Commission on Human Rights, explained the matter this way:

"Before we had fair practices laws we talked and talked to employers without result. But now we have frequent meetings with company heads and often can improve conditions even before complaints are filed and processed."

IN WASHINGTON, the President's Committee on Government Contract compliance met with state officials in a move toward getting better compliance with federal contract clauses forbidding discrimination by employers getting government business.

This committee, on which Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey represents the CIO, was established by President Truman last year in line with the government's policy of eliminating discrimination in connection with its activities.

IUE Offers To Poll 3 Dixie Districts On Civil Rights

THE CIO Electrical Workers has challenged three Dixiecrat Congressmen to promise to vote on civil rights issues in accordance with the majority sentiment expressed in proposed polls of their congressional districts.

The challenge was issued to Reps. Rankin (Miss.), Cox (Ga.) and Barden (N.C.) by the IUE Civil Rights Committee.

IUE guaranteed it would underwrite the full cost of the civil rights polls, which would be taken by an impartial national opinion-taking organization, if the three Congressmen would agree to abide by the majority sentiment of residents of their districts.

The IUE committee declared the election of "race-hating" congressmen in districts predominantly Negro has been made possible by poll taxes and other means used to deprive "hundreds of thousands of American citizens in certain southern states" of the right to vote.

"No rational person," a resolution said, "can contend that a congressman elected from a district in which Negroes are a majority really represents the people of that district when he votes against federal prohibition of poll taxes, against anti-lynch legislation or against a fair employment practices law." (LPA)

CINCINNATI CIO and AFL unions are united in support of the election of Frank Simpson (left), an AFL Painter, to the Ohio Senate, and Joe White, CIO Auto Worker, to the Ohio House.

Jacobson Decides Not To Campaign

Sec.-Treas. Rodney C. Jacobson of the Minnesota CIO Council, who was endorsed by the Democratic-Farmer-Labor State Central Committee for State Treasurer, has decided not to enter the race.

In a letter of declination to DFL State Chairman Karl Rolvaag, Jacobson cited "circumstances directly and indirectly related to my official position in the CIO, as well as my personal considerations."

One Third Didn't Vote—

How To Get All Of Labor To The Polls

ALMOST a third of the members of American unions did not vote in 1948—the last presidential election.

That's what the Gallup poll reports in a recent copyrighted survey to determine those who voted and did not vote in 1948.

The poll shows that 68% of union members went to the polls, while 32% ignored this most precious right of American citizens. This finding was confirmed by statistics compiled by other public opinion surveys and bore out independent surveys conducted by union groups.

Actually the union voting record was slightly better than that of the nation as a whole, the Gallup poll reported. The survey, which excluded persons in hospitals, institutions and the armed forces, as well as those ill or bed-ridden and non-English speaking groups, reported that 65% went to the polls, while 35% didn't.

However, surveys which did not exclude these groups show that only about 52% of the eligible vote was cast in 1948.

The current Gallup survey underscores the need for the all-out registration and get-out-the-vote drives conducted annually by the CIO Political Action Committee, and scheduled to be stepped up in the crucial 1952 election.

Among the other statistics disclosed by the poll were that more men than women voted—72% to 58%; and that those in higher-income groups, who normally vote for conservative candidates, were more regular voters than workers.

Publication of the Gallup poll came as CIO unions and Political Action Committees dug into the important task of getting voters registered and thus eligible to vote in November.

Typical of this interest was announcement last week of formation of the New Jersey Non-Partisan Register and Vote Council, made up of labor, civic, veteran, church, business and other groups.

Elected as chairman of the Jersey group was Henry Reed Bowen, executive secretary of the New Jersey Council of Churches. Harry Kranz, legislative and public relations director of the State CIO, will be secretary of the new council, while the treasurer will be George Robinson, chairman of the New Jersey State Council of Urban Leagues.

Membership in the group is open to "all bona-fide New Jersey statewide organizations which are not affiliated with a political party and which are dedicated to non-fascist and non-communist American ideals."

Among the Council's purposes are:

1. Encouragement of full participation in all elections.
2. Utilization of all mediums of communication to carry on a non-partisan register-and-vote campaign.
3. Campaigning for more convenient hours and places of registration.
4. Collection, dissemination and coordination of information, techniques and activities for non-partisan registration and voting campaigns.
5. Organization of county and local units to campaign along similar lines.

Meanwhile, CIO-PAC was reminding councils and local unions of its "Registration Manual." This publication outlines simply and clearly the "A-B-C's" of checking union membership lists to determine un-registered members, plus a simple, but effective, campaign to get those members registered.

Copies of this publication can be obtained from the CIO Political Action Committee, 1346 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

PAC was recalling CIO Pres. Philip Murray's terse observation:

"The registered voter is the man or woman who makes democracy work . . . The unregistered voter is a liability to his country and his union."

IWA President Says—

Old Guard Won GOP Battle; Still In Control

OLD GUARD Republicans won in the Chicago convention and retain firm control of the party.

That's the opinion of A. F. Hartung, president of the CIO Woodworkers.

"Though the defeat of Taft was generally looked upon as a defeat of the Hoover-MacArthur wing of that party, the party's new platform and choice of vice-presidential candidate shows the very opposite to be true," said Hartung in a statement from the union's headquarters in Portland, Ore.

"Eisenhower's choice of Senator Nixon as his running mate is highly ironic to say the least," the Woodworkers president continued.

"After General Eisenhower's pleading for Senate approval of our sending troops to Europe a year ago April, Senator Nixon—along with Senator Taft—was among the majority of Republicans who voted against it.

"Nixon is a junior Taft."

Checking the GOP vice-presidential candidate's voting record, Hartung charged he "also voted against aid to India last year, which is directly opposite to the so-called GOP policy in regards to increased aid to Asia. Nixon is a true example of the majority of anti-labor Republican legislators in our Congress."

He also charged the Taft-Nixon forces with managing, in December 1949, "to cut funds which the Democratic administration advocated for arms and economic expenditure to aid South Korea."

"And then," Hartung continued, "the Republicans had the effrontery to accuse the Democrats of leaving the door open for the Communist attack the following June. The Republican plank on foreign policy is a sham front put up to deceive the voters into thinking the Administration and Eisenhower views on aid to Europe and Asia will not be dumped."

On domestic issues, the IWA president charged the Republicans appear to have all but "abandoned labor. The contributions made by organized labor in the struggle against the totalitarian forces were completely ignored by this so-called rejuvenated political party."

"If Eisenhower is elected to the White House," he predicted, "Senator Taft likely will be head of the Senate labor committee as well as GOP policy chairman in Congress.

"According to the Wall Street Journal, Taft has pledged to obtain passage of laws to further restrict labor's civil liberties as to free collective bargaining.

"So far as I can see, General Eisenhower is in perfect agreement with Taft and Nixon in this field. And none of these men have repudiated the Hitler-Stalin methods of smear technique as identified by the word McCarthyism."

On civil rights, Hartung expressed the belief that the Republicans had doomed themselves to "lose most of the Negro and labor vote because of their failure to adopt a platform which would call for elimination of the congressional filibuster which has prevented passage of an enforceable fair employment practices law."

1000 To Join In Jersey CIO Rally

A STATEWIDE conference of more than 1000 delegates from every CIO local in New Jersey to chart "another political victory for progress in the 1952 elections" has been called by the Jersey CIO Council.

State President Carl Holderman said the all-day session will be held in the Essex House, Newark, on Sept. 7.

In the conference call to the 400 locals, representing 250,000 members, Holderman assailed Gen. Eisenhower, GOP presidential nominee, and U. S. Sen. Smith (R.), candidate for re-election. Holderman also is State PAC director.

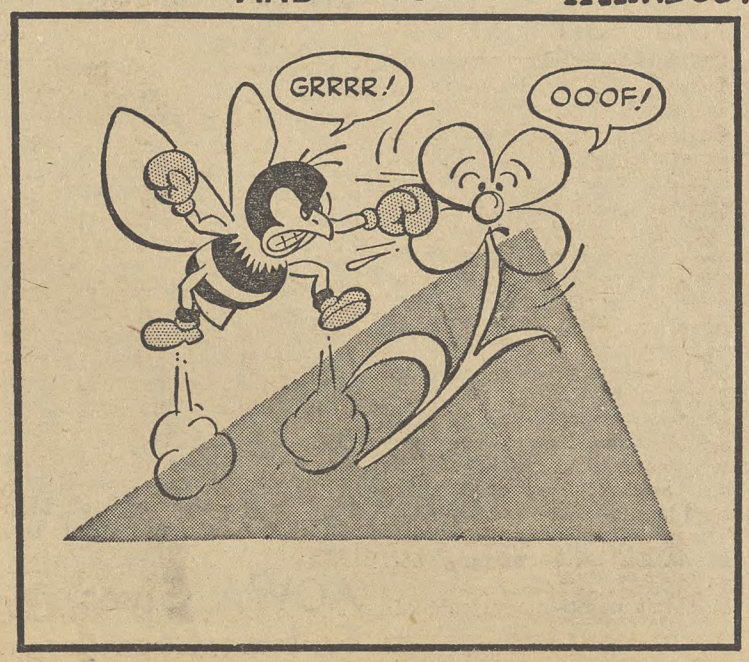
"The issues of the 1952 campaign are now clear," Holderman said.

"The Republican party has nominated for president a military candidate who is opposed to price control, favors the Taft-Hartley Act, opposes an effective civil rights program, supports peacetime universal military training, and favors turning over to three states billions of dollars in off-shore oil resources that belong to all the people.

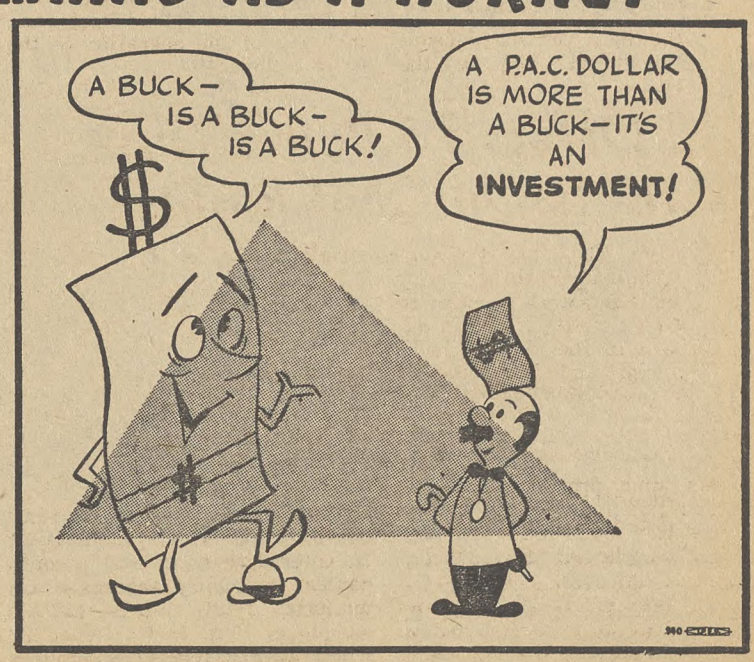
"While he has taken a reactionary stand on these issues, he admits that his years of military training and service have left him with little or no knowledge of the major issues of the day.

"As their U. S. Senate candidate, the Republican party has again nominated the pious hypocrite who gives lip service to the needs of the people, but invariably votes with the Taft Senate faction against the people. When he wasn't voting 'wrong' he was usually absent from the Senate, compiling one of the worst absentee records in the Congress."

FACT AND FANCY ....ABOUT.... MAD AS A HORNET



IT IS a popular notion that the hornet is irritable and bad-tempered. The fact is the hornet is calm, even tempered and rarely gets angry. It will sting only in self-defense.



IF YOU'RE mad as a hornet at your congressman or senator, you can sting back with a buck to PAC. It's your best investment in good government and honest officials.

Morgan Is Behind War On Industry Bargaining

J. P. MORGAN and Co. wants an end to industry-wide collective bargaining.

That, says the Washington Report of the Public Affairs Institute, is what's behind a current drive to hamstring unions, and compel bargaining on a single plant or single company basis.

And it was a major issue in the recent steel strike.

Pointing to a recent editorial in Guaranty Survey, monthly publication of the New York City Guaranty Trust Co., which is "in the Morgan financial interest group of companies," Washington Report finds it tips the hands of the Morgan interests.

The trust company letter deplores industry-wide bargaining and claims that "the only solution of the problem that is in harmony with the basic American principles of free labor and free enterprise is to limit the size of the bargaining unit."

In rebuttal, Washington Report points out that industry-wide bargaining was labor's inevitable response to a situation created by the "number of plants under single control, and most often under absentee control in a distant financial center such as New York."

It quotes authoritative studies showing that "the control and direction of vital economic policies of the companies making up such great industries as steel are in the hands of a few insiders directly or indirectly representing banking interests. Those few men make decisions that affect the lives of millions of workers, consumers and investors."

Outlining the way industry-wide price policies are imposed, Washington Report asks: "Should anyone be surprised when the labor unions adapted themselves to these facts as they existed in the steel industry?"

The report points out that industry-wide "blacklists" and industry-wide personnel policies have been the rule in steel, and adds:

"In short, by cutting down the size of the bargaining unit of the steel unions as requested by the Guaranty Trust Co., the bargaining power of the unions would thereby be reduced. Steel industry employers would deny the demands of unions and there would be no way of unions getting compliance with its program."

Washington Report also doubts the genuineness of the Guaranty-Morgan group in its demand for plant or company-wide bargaining. It quotes the New York Times of July 12, which reported that a compromise formula on the union shop had been negotiated between the Steelworkers and Bethlehem Steel, but the compromise "was killed when the other major companies pronounced the arrangement unacceptable."

Tracing the ties of Guaranty Trust to the Morgan interests, Washington Report recalls that the Morgan company has long dominated the affairs of U. S. Steel and notes, " we may conclude that this publication of the Guaranty Trust Co. is representative of dominant interests in the steel industry."

Concluding, Washington Report says:—

"Industry is no longer made up of single aggregates of capital but is a vast complex in which subsidiary raw material industries, the processing industry itself, and customer industries are tied together in an elaborate system of interlocking directorates between the companies themselves on the one hand and the companies and their banking institutions on the other.

"The propaganda for collective bargaining on a plant or company basis would lead us to believe that the separate physical units are independent and their decisions are arrived at by themselves.

"No one is in a better position to know the unreality of this view than the Guaranty Trust Co., sitting as it does in the heart of the Morgan industrial-financial empire of companies and entire industries.

"The Morgan group's roots are deep in steel and railroads; the chairman of the General Motors Corp. is a Morgan director. Both railroads and motors are important steel-using industries and the rails get much revenue from hauling steel and its products. The prospects for future profits are beginning to be adversely affected by the steel shutdown.

"No wonder the Guaranty Trust wants the elimination of industry-wide collective bargaining."

Steel Text: 'We Have Won A Mighty Victory'

The following is the text of the statement released by the Intl. Wage Policy Committee of the United Steelworkers, meeting in Washington on July 25.

IN SPECIAL meeting assembled, the Intl. Wage Policy Committee of the United Steelworkers of America has received from President Philip Murray the terms of the memorandum of settlement signed on July 24, 1952, at the White House between the United Steelworkers of America and six steel companies: U. S. Steel, Bethlehem Steel, Republic Steel, Jones & Laughlin Steel, Youngstown Sheet and Tube, and Inland Steel.

We hereby ratify and accept that memorandum of settlement as the basis for ending the steel dispute of 1952.

This agreement symbolizes a mighty victory for the steelworkers of the United States.

It marks a great new forward stride in the efforts of the Steelworkers of this nation to achieve a decent life for themselves and their families: it provides for the total elimination, partially now and the balance at the end of the year, of the existing differential between iron ore wage scales and steel plant wage scales; it makes tremendous progress toward the eventual elimination of all the other unfair differentials that have plagued this industry for so many years; it provides the basis for working conditions on the job; and by no means least, it provides a new foundation of recognition and security for our great Union, the United Steelworkers of America.

This victory for the steelworkers substantially embodies the recommendations offered by the Wage Stabilization Board earlier this year. The memorandum of settlement supports the argument of the United Steelworkers that the Wage Stabilization Board recommendations provided a basis for an agreement fair and equitable, both to the members of our Union and to the employers.

It is unfortunate that during the eight-month period since November 1951, the attitude of the steel corporations was such that this Union was forced to strike for eight weeks to win acceptance of this agreement.

This Union, devoted to its democratic objectives and loyal to the aspirations of the Steelworkers, resorted reluctantly and only after every effort at peaceful settlement had failed, to calling a strike.

This Union, when it strikes, strikes to win. Our success in these negotiations shows clearly that we have won this strike. From this settlement, tremendous benefits will flow to every worker in the steel industry, regardless of geographical location, job classification or length of service on the job. The steelworkers of America can well be proud of their victory—a victory which will benefit not only the steelworkers but all the workers of the nation.

Words cannot express our appreciation of the magnificent leadership provided this Union by President Philip Murray as well as the other officers of our organization. Without the cool-headed, intelligent, patriotic, devoted and sagacious leadership of Philip Murray, this victory would not have been possible.

Equally, we would never have achieved victory in this great and far-reaching dispute without the solid support of our members—men and women loyal to our Union, devoted to the welfare of their nation and determined to carry on this fight for a better America.

We commend also the entire staff of this Union which has worked so devotedly to assure the effectiveness of our strike and the protection of our members during the entire period of negotiations and strike.

It is the hope of the International Wage Policy Committee that the scars of this industrial battle will quickly heal. The United Steelworkers of America has a great and deserved reputation as a supporter of the concept of industrial peace. During the two years of these new agreements, we look forward to a period of harmony and cooperation with the management and the ownership of the steel industry, in the interests of providing maximum benefits to the industry and the workers, and full service to the nation and the democratic world.

At this time of victory, we extend the hand of peace and cooperation to management in the hope that in the steel industry of the future strike and lockouts will be unnecessary.

Harding College Nailed By NLRB For Union Busting

HARDING College, of Searcy, Ark., notorious as the source of anti-labor propaganda, has been found guilty of some unfair labor practices of its own.

The National Labor Relations Board has issued an order telling it to stop third-degreeing employes at its radio station, WHBQ, in Memphis, Tenn., on their union opinions.

It also told the so-called educational institution to stop interfering with its employes efforts to organize, to quit making threats and promises to discourage union membership, and to reinstate with full back pay its senior transmitter engineer, Frank T. Edwards.

Edwards was fired Nov. 2, 1950, for heading organizational efforts of the AFL Electrical Workers.

The college's chief defense was that notice of the charges was served on "Radio Station WHBQ." It argued that the station was a "mythical and nonexistant entity," and that the charges should have named the college, which owns and runs it. The objection was dismissed as frivolous.

Harding College is headed by Dr. George S. Benson, who makes captive audience speeches against labor, the New and Fair Deals, social legislation and other forms of progress. His audiences consist of workers forced to listen by their employers—unless it's the employers themselves sitting at his feet and absorbing some of his know-how.

Much of the college's anti-labor propaganda can be found in the literature racks of big companies employing thousands of workers. (LPA)

For Sale Cheap: All The Fixin's From Taft's H.Q.

A "LARGE national organization," with headquarters in Washington, last week advertised a sale of office furniture "almost as good as new" and "at sacrifice prices."

That's what the ads said. What they didn't mention was that the headquarters were those of Sen. Taft, whose third campaign for the GOP presidential nomination fell apart in Chicago two weeks ago.

Up for sale were a walnut flat top desk, Bank of England chairs, steel legal and letter-size file cabinets (but not the secrets these files once held), typewriter tables and a "secretarial with turned legs, only six months old."

The ad said the "large national organization" was "closing offices."

It didn't mention any sale of worn-out political speeches or rejected political philosophies. These are probably being retained for use in the present campaign and later on the Senate floor.

Klan Wizard Admits Guilt

THE IMPERIAL Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan in North and South Carolina pleaded guilty while on trial last week in Whiteville, N. C., on charges of conspiring to kidnap and assault.

The holder of the title, Thomas L. Hamilton, and six of his henchmen had pleaded not guilty, three others pleaded guilty and one offered no defense. All were charged in connection with an attack by "40 or 50 men" on Mrs. Evergreen Flowers, a Negro woman; her husband, Will, and another resident of their home, Mrs. Bessie Page, both of whom escaped the mob.

The flogging of Mrs. Flowers was one of a long series of kidnapings and beatings of both white and Negro men and women in North Carolina. Ten in one group of klansmen were found guilty in June and sentenced to from one to five years in prison. Sixty-five others, many of whom have said they will plead guilty, face the court at Whiteville after Hamilton is tried.

Robert Brown Of Guild Dies

Robert D. Brown, for 10 years executive secretary of the San Francisco - Oakland Newspaper Guild and one of the key figures in reorganization of the California State CIO Council, died last week in San Francisco after a short illness.

Brown had a wide acquaintance in California trade union circles and among ANG members throughout the country. He had been treasurer of his local before becoming executive secretary, and formerly was an accountant on the San Francisco Examiner.

Special Report—

Industrial Unions Gain Importance As Dutch Labor Aids Nation

(Jan de Kok, author of this article on labor in The Netherlands, is assistant editor of The Metal Workers Courier, organ of the General Dutch Metalworkers Union. Member of a MSA Technical Assistance group of Dutch labor journalists, de Kok last week was "sitting in" on editing of The CIO News.)

By JAN DE KOK

THERE ARE great differences—and yet a parallel—between the trade union movements in America and The Netherlands.

In our country, about 50 years ago, the workers first organized themselves into craft unions, of plumbers and of smiths.

In the course of the years, all of these groups have come together and out of all these different, small unions the General Dutch Metalworkers Union— at the heart of the metal industry—has grown.

The same pattern of industrial unions has developed in other branches of industry, as for example, the bricklayers, carpenters and painters came via separate small unions to work with each other.

After the Second World War, this development has continued and in the general trade union movement in Holland, we are busy trying to organize the craft unions into industrial unions. For all the workers, from the youngest white collar clerk in the office on down the line, are interested that the trade union in which they are organized is able to discuss all issues with management.

The general trade union movement in The Netherlands is called NVV — Nederlands Verbond van Vakverenigingen, or Netherlands Association of Trade Unions. Based on a democratic-socialistic foundation, it seeks to organize all of the workers, irrespective of their religion, and since the last war the NVV counts many Protestant and Roman Catholic members.

Besides the NVV general trade movement, which is the largest, the Netherlands has three other labor movements, namely the Protestant Christian, the Roman Catholic and the Communists. The last movement—luckily—is a small one and it not very important.

The NVV cooperates with the Protestant Christian and the Roman Catholic movements in a Special Council, in which all important labor issues are discussed. This council in turn cooperates voluntarily with employers' organizations in a master organization, called the Foundation of Labor.

Through the Foundation of Labor, cooperation in labor-management relations has grown and has worked satisfactorily in aiding the reconstruction of our heavily-damaged country since the last war.

THE whole trade union movement in The Netherlands is based in large part of the idealism of its members.

The time of "one cent more and an hour less" is far behind us. Now is the time that we are seeking to raise social security as high as possible, to gain full employment, a carefree old age, still better sickness and accident insurance, and a right to a voice in industry.

Several of our goals already have been reached, and others are in sight. But the principle of social security is growing, thanks to a trade union movement that has accepted full co-responsibility for the course of events in our country. The reality of co-responsibility has found its expression in the fast recovery of The Netherlands.

THE Dutch trade union movement has no direct links with the political parties. It is not active in politics.

However, there is contact between the various union movements and the various political parties, although they are organized entirely separately. Also, some trade union men of the NVV are representatives of the Dutch Labor Party in the House of Representatives.

That—in a nutshell—is a picture of the trade union movement in The Netherlands, a movement which has made itself indispensable in its nation and has made a very large contribution to the reconstruction of our country and to a better life for our people.

Guild Strikes In Tacoma, Fights Lockout In N. Y.

A STRIKE by the CIO Newspaper Guild kept the Tacoma (Wash.) News Tribune closed last week despite the settlement of a 14-week lockout of the AFL Pressmen.

The Guild strike was called over management's refusal to bargain for departments covered by previous contracts. CIO pickets promptly formed lines around the still-closed newspaper building. The AFL Typographical Union has rejected management contract proposals, but has not called a strike.

The Guild also has struck the Nashua (N. H.) Telegraph after a year of unsuccessful negotiations for a first contract. Local Pres. John Barry said the paper offered less money for experienced reporters than unskilled labor is receiving in Nashua. Present editorial scale ranges from $44 to $59 a week. Management has offered $66 "at the most" for top editorial workers and $72 for advertising men. The Guild is seeking a top minimum of $90.

The lockout of members of the Newspaper Guild of New York by Consumer Reports went into its third week with publication of the nationally circulated magazine carrying information for consumers completely suspended. The dispute centers around management's refusal to live up to its contract. U. S. Conciliator Jack Mandelbaum has been assigned to the case.

More than 100 Guildsmen are involved in the lockout by Consumers Union management, and are picketing the two New York City offices of the organization.

Support for the Guild has been offered by members of other printing trades unions, the NYNG reported.

"While some negotiations have been held," the Guild said, "management still has made no offer for a settlement. The Guild is sticking by its guns that Consumers Union has a contract and must live up to it."

Twin Legal Moves Ordered Against World Oil Cartel

A DOUBLE-BARRELED investigation designed to break up an international oil monopoly ruled by seven giants of this vital industry was ordered last week by the new attorney-general.

Both criminal and civil proceedings against five American and two foreign oil companies have been begun, Atty.-Gen. James P. McGranery announced.

Action is being brought under anti-trust laws forbidding monopolistic practices, price fixing and restraint of trade.

Justice Dept. action followed charges by Sen. Hennings, Jr. (D. Mo.) that the five American companies are gouging American taxpayers and that the cartel operates as an "independent world government."

He charged the cartel sold oil to foreign consumers for $2 a barrel, when it cost only 10c a barrel to produce. These foreign countries, he pointed out, get economic aid from the United States and thus, in effect, the cartel is exploiting American taxpayers.

During the past six years, Hennings declared, the cartel has made "excessive profits" of around $13 billion and current excessive profits are around $3 billion a year.

On the same day, Chase National Bank released a survey showing the nation's petroleum industry had its best year in 1951.

Although income rose only 17.5%, while taxes were up 45% and expenditures for plants, property and equipment went up 34%, the net profits jumped 20.2%. Dividends rose from $152 million in 1950 to $838 million in 1951.

Meanwhile, Hennings continued his months-long fight for release of a 900-page report of the Federal Trade Commission on this oil cartel. Publication of the report has been withheld at President Truman's request. He said publication would not be in the national interest.

Hennings said the oil cartel report "would set off a powder keg in the Middle East" and possibly in the United States.

His own investigations, the Senator said, disclosed "some very shocking facts." For example, he said, his study reveals the "cartel corporations own and control, lock, stock and barrel, practically the entire world oil industry outside the U. S."

"All seven work in the closest harmony and accord," he continued, with a pricing system directed from London and New York, which runs with "regularity and precision of a fine Swiss watch."

The State Dept. said there had been a "widespread effort" since World War II to deal with the "abuses" of international cartels. But, it added, it was still too early to say whether such steps were effective.

WILLARD L. Therp, assistant secretary of state, admitted to a Senate subcommittee on monopoly that prices of Middle East oil "are not related to the cost of production." He said he thought a system similar to the "basing point" system in the U. S. was used.

Sen. Long (D. La.), subcommittee chairman, pointed out such a system had been declared a violation of the anti-trust laws by the U. S. Supreme Court.

The seven companies named by McGranery as involved in the probe and federal grand jury consideration are: Standard Oil of New Jersey, Standard Oil of California, Texas Oil Co., Socony-Vacuum, Gulf Oil — all United States owned—and two foreign firms dominated by the British Royal Dutch Shell and Anglo-Iranian Oil Co.

Doctor Lobby's 'Delaying' Victory Hit By Truman

PRESIDENT TRUMAN last week signed into law the bill increasing Social Security benefits at least $5 a month.

At the same time, he blasted the American Medical Association for endangering "insurance protection for millions of disabled Americans."

The new benefit schedule for the more than 4.5 million persons affected will go into effect Sept. 1, Oscar Ewing, Federal Security Administrator, said. First checks under the new scale will be mailed about Oct. 5.

Under terms of the bill, once rejected by the House because of AMA lobbying, Social Security benefits go up at least $5 a month, and more in some instances, and retired workers are allowed to earn $75 a month instead of the present $50, without impairing their benefits.

The President's attack on the medical lobby resulted from its victory which at least delayed a plan to preserve the rights of persons who become disabled. The AMA objected to the system set up for certification of disability, using their well-worn "socialized medicine" battle-cry.

"What the lobby could not engineer outright, it won by delay," Truman said. He added:

"And be it noted that this victory for the lobby, at the people's expense, was accomplished by a great majority of the Republicans in the House. They were perfectly willing to deny to millions of Americans the benefits provided by this bill in order to satisfy the groundless whim of a special interest lobby—a lobby that purports to speak for, but surely fails to represent, the great medical profession in the United States."

Long Stalling By NLRB Rapped By Senate Labor Group Report

A SENATE Labor subcommittee last week said that it is "concerned" over the delay of the NLRB and the courts in handling cases under the Taft-Hartley Law and promised to issue corrective recommendations.

What stirred the committee to action was its study of the 15-year-old dispute of the CIO Steelworkers with Reed & Prince Manufacturing Co. The plant at Worcester, Mass., manufactures screws and bolts, and the NLRB has conducted lengthy hearings on the case.

"Admittedly, 15 years which have run without a resolution of the issues in dispute in this case do not constitute a typical situation, just as Reed & Prince Co. is not typical of all employers," said the subcommittee, which is headed by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.).

"Yet while it is possible to assert that no case should take 15 years to close, and that, whatever the extenuating circumstances are, there must be something wrong with the law, its administration or both . . .

"While 15 years is unusual, lapses of two to three years from filing of a charge to ultimate enforcement are not. The subcommittee has been concerned with elements of delay in the processing of National Labor Relations Board cases by the courts in other investigations and will shortly issue a staff report that will seek to suggest some remedies."

The subcommittee also found:

1. "The Labor-Management Relations Act (Taft-Hartley) with all of those many limitations of which the subcommittee is aware, still constitutes the statutory recognition of the rights of workers to organize and engage in collective bargaining. While it is the law, it ought to be honored by obedience. It will work better it is obeyed, if its announced objectives become the objectives of employers and employes . . ."

2. The determination of Reed & Prince to keep its employes from having the benefits of collective bargaining "is little different" from "that of the typical law breaker."

3. It was unable to understand why the NLRB did not seek to have Reed & Prince cited for contempt of court during the 1950-51 period when it committed "unlawful acts" similar to those which the board had ordered it to stop in 1937. A court of appeals had confirmed the NLRB order in earlier case.

Sen. Taft (R. O.) took exception to the report of the subcommittee, of which he is member. He said that the subcommittee assumed that the employer was guilty.

Taft took particular exception to the subcommittee's statement: "The Labor-Management Relations Act, with all of those limitations to which the subcommittee is aware . . ."

To which the subcommittee majority retorted:

"As for assuming the guilt of the employer, it should be said that the two decisions of the National Labor Relations Board, a court of appeals decree enforcing one of the Board's orders, and a denial of certerori (review) by the U. S. Supreme Court support the assumption of the employer's guilt."

PREPARING to leave on a trip to Israel, Sec.-Treas. Morris Iushewitz (right) of the New York City CIO Council purchases scrip gift certificates from Lew Shilgasser of Sova Israel Stores for distribution on his arrival. He will carry greetings from the New York CIO to Israel's labor unions.

Labor Splits With Adenauer; Schuman Plan Role Set

THE GERMAN Federation of Labor (DGB) last week ended the informal but close working relationship it had maintained since 1949 with the coalition government of Chancellor Adenauer.

The break came over the co-determination law passed by the Bundesrat on July 12. The union had fought it because it sought to separate the workers from their bargaining representatives and did not give labor as great a share in management as had been promised.

DGB leaders, after two days of conferences, issued a proclamation that in effect was a declaration of war against Adenauer and his government. Adenauer is a Christian Democrat.

In it, the unions pledged themselves to work to defeat the Chancellor and the deputies who support him in the general elections scheduled for next year.

It made use of strong words which observers said had not been utilized by the DGB since the end of the war. It called on the workers to "struggle for a new social order" and attacked the "powers of reaction."

The Social Democratic Party, second largest in Germany, took heart from the fact that it emphasized the joint fight of the two organizations for a codetermination law more to the liking of labor, and in the coming struggle.

The DGB has never been dominated by the Socialists, although individual Socialists have been important factors in it. The Socialists now see this as a distinct possibility. They also feel it will enable them to pick up many of the votes of the DGB's 6.5 million members next year—enough, they hope, to give them control of the next government.

A Socialist government could have important reverberations in world affairs. German Socialists are strongly opposed to rearmament and to military alliances with other Western European countries.

THE Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and the Intl. Federation of Christian Trade Unions, representing the overwhelming bulk of the anti-Communist workers of western Europe, have worked out plans for labor representation in the Schuman Plan.

The agreement came at a meeting in Paris on July 17 at which they reaffirmed their view that full labor representation is essential to the success of the plan.

The plan, a novel venture for the frequently warring economies of European countries, provides for the pooling of coal and steel supplies of member countries so as to assure an adequate supply for all.

At the Paris meeting of the two international labor groups, the conferees nominated Paul Finet, former ICFTU president, for membership on the High Authority of the plan, the top administrative body.

P. J. S. Serranens, who completed 30 years of service as secretary general of the IFCTU at its convention earlier this month, and was not a candidate for re-election, was nominated for the Court of Justice, which is supposed to settle disputes among member nations.

The conference agreed that the ICFTU should be represented by 12 delegates and the IFCTU by five on the Consultative Committee, composed of representatives of workers, employers and consumers of the member nations.

The Consultative Committee will advise the High Authority and also the Council of Ministers, which, in effect, will periodically review the work of the High Authority.

Tax Bonanza Up Another $350 Million

THAT TAX bonanza just "grows and grows and grows."

This time, there is another $350 million in rapid tax amortizations that the Defense Production Administration reports were granted in a two-week period.

Included were two major railroads, two large oil companies and a gas pipeline company, which were handed tax write-off favors.

In a nutshell, this means the taxpayers are footing most of the bill for new facilities for corporations well able to build their own plants.

Meanwhile, the CIO Electrical Workers denied a report by Rep. Lanham (D. Ga.) that General Electric Co. had been given a tax amortization certificate for its Rome, Ga., transformer plant.

IUE has vigorously protested granting of this certificate, pointing out GE already has sufficient transformer production capacity in existing plants where workers are now laid off.

It has charged GE with attempting to "run away from its collective bargaining responsibilities."

In denying the Lanham report, John Callahan, chairman of the IUE-CIO GE conference Board, said the DPA promises no decision on the Rome matter, until it has investigated the IUE's charges that GE does not need the additional transformer production capacity.

TWUA Safeguards Local Funds In Secession Fight

FUNDS and property taken over by the CIO Textile Workers to block the AFL "secession movement" in some local unions and joint boards will be held in trust for eventual return to local control.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve said this policy was confirmed last week by the TWUA executive council in a mail vote and all TWUA administrators were so notified.

"We have no intention of permitting the property of our members to fall into hostile hands," he said, "but this property is not being added to the general funds of TWUA. It is being held in seperate accounts."

When local unions or joint boards rid themselves of dual-unionism or new charters are issued in place of a dual-union group, he said, "all assets taken over for the sake of protection will be returned to local custody."

In New Jersey, quick legal action by TWUA uncovered keys to a secret safe deposit box in which $150,000 worth of bonds, property of the Passaic Joint Board, had been hidden.

Turned up after several hectic days of search, the keys were turned over to lawyers for both sides, appointed by the court to inventory the recovered bonds.

In earlier court action, it had been agreed that all properties, records and funds should go to the TWUA, and all except the bonds were turned over. TWUA had expressed anxiety over the missing bonds, when bank accounts showed $20,000 had been withdrawn from a Passaic bank on May 14, by the then officers, without authorization from the joint board members.

The threat of renewed legal action turned up the keys to the hidden safe deposit box and the inventory was ready to proceed, TWUA said.

CIO Brewers Defeat IAM

THE CIO Brewery Workers last week defeated the AFL Machinists 15 to 6 in a second NLRB election among machinists at the Anheuser Busch brewery, Newark, N. J.

The AFL union tied 12 to 12 with BW-CIO in the first election among the same group last December, but the NLRB ruled the vote out after upholding the BW-CIO contention that the firm conspired with the Machinists.

This is the brewery where BW 2 last spring won a strike and brought the wage scale up to $2.10 an hour. Following the recent victory, the CIO Brewery Workers Organizing Committee forecast that other brewery workers in the city would decide to join the CIO union. It pointed out that the other brewery workers "are presently denied any union representation because of the conniving of the Teamsters locals who once represented these workers."

Chicago TWUA Gains Back Pay

Back pay checks totaling approximately $111,500 have been distributed to 380 CIO Textile Workers at two Chicago plants.

Payments result from Wage Stabilization Board approval of increases negotiated early this year by Chicago Joint Board of the union.

Two hundred and forty employes at Johnson & Johnson Ethicon Suture plant received checks averaging $275 each. At Johnson & Johnson Personal Products plant, 150 received checks averaging $305 each.

At another Chicago plant, Western Felt Works, the union won a $40 Christmas bonus for 850 employes and an average 1c an hour to correct intra-plant inequities.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

LAST WEEK the writer attended the CIO Brewery Workers convention in Cincinnati, O. While called as a special convention, the delegates decided that it be a constitutional convention. I had the privilege and honor of addressing this convention.

The delegates were enthusiastic in support of their great union and pledged both to resist and defeat any and all attacks upon it and to continue and advance in organizing campaigns.

The CIO Brewery Workers is one of the oldest and most respected unions in America and many of its people have been members for more than 30 years. Pres. Karl Feller and his associate officers have always cooperated with National CIO and supported CIO policies. It is a great organization and CIO is proud to have it as an affiliate.

★

FROM CINCINNATI, I travelled to Chicago where I met with other CIO officers and vice presidents. Following this meeting I stayed on to watch the political happenings of the Democratic Convention. By the time this reaches you, we will know who the Democratic nominee will be.

The Dixiecrats were in evidence, busy trying to disrupt and split the party. However, there were healthy signs that many Southerners are rising to oppose the backward, reactionary views of the Dixiecrats.

The Steelworkers won a magnificent victory over the arrogant steel barons, with the final settlement coming at a White House meeting called by President Truman. The President certainly proved his belief in fair play by his conduct throughout the dispute.

All CIO members can be proud of the inspiring leadership of Pres. Murray in this crisis and the courage and fortitude of the Steelworkers, who won a tremendous victory not only for themselves and their families, but for every CIO member and every worker.

CIO FIELD REP. T. J. McCarthy reports a successful representation election among the building service employes of the Central Bldg., Washington, D. C. The workers favored the CIO Retail Wholesale & Department Store Union by a unanimous vote. This is the second building service employe election victory in two months.

Natl. Dir. John Riffe, of the CIO Organizing Committee, reports two CIO Steelworkers' election victories in the South: Gary Carolina Steel Products, Inc., Rocky Mount, N. C., eligible 50, USA-CIO 39, AFL 2, no union 2, challenged 8; Warrior & Gulf Navigation Co., Chickasaw, Ala., eligible 90, USA-CIO 77, no union 2, void 1.

Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner reports that machinists at the Anheuser Busch Brewery, Newark, N. J., favored the CIO Brewery Workers by a vote of 15 to 6. Agent Ben Merker of Brewery Workers' Local 2 was in charge of organization.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that the Steelworkers were victorious in a representation election at the Byron Jackson plant, Vernon, Calif., by a vote of 345 to 335. Intl. Rep. Robert Porch handled the campaign.

C. Jerrell Co., Humboldt, Tenn., IWA 85, no union 57, void 2, challenged 3.

Reds Lose In French Plant

THE FRENCH Communists lost control of one of their greatest assets—the huge nationalized Renault auto plant in Paris — when free labor unions won a majority on the works council in the annual elections recently.

The Red stooge union, the General Confederation of Labor (CGT), previously had five of the nine council seats, enough to give control. Through this majority, the Communists had been able to use the council's strength and funds for party purposes, and until a few months ago had been able to call its 40,000 workers out on strike at the drop of a red hat.

The plant election followed a series of Communist attempts to intimidate workers who refused to be intimidated and who chased a couple of the Red goons right into the Seine.

Their stand was attributed to the steady campaigning of the free unions against the CGT

The new works council, according to word from Paris, will be composed of three members of the free Force Ourviere and its allies among plant unions, one member of the Christian union (CFTC), four representing the CGT, and the plant director.

U.S. Has Strength To Build For Peace, Truman Says In Economic Review

THE COUNTRY is in better shape than ever in spite of the impact of rearmament on the economy, President Truman said last week in his midyear economic report.

The U. S. has the economic strength to handle its domestic responsibilities and at the same time to build "with other free nations the conditions for a more enduring peace," he maintained.

"America cannot afford to relax in this effort, in the false fear that we do not have the strength to carry through," he added.

"Yet every day one hears some expression of opinion that our security efforts are weakening us at home, and that we must reduce them in order to save ourselves. Many who hold this view are entirely sincere. The trouble is that they have not examined the facts.

"I am confident that, when they do so, they will join in the realization that danger lies in believing that we are weak. Our strength commences with knowing that we are strong—and becoming stronger.

"The facts reveal beyond question that the security programs now being undertaken are not even threatening—much less depleting or impairing — the strength of our economy.

"Despite the burden of these programs—and they are a real burden—our business system has been doing better and our people have been living better than ever before."

During the last two years, according to the President, the country's output has risen from an annual rate of about $300 billion in the second quarter of 1950 to almost $340 billion in the second quarter of 1952—both in terms of 1951 prices.

This increase, he continued, "has been greater than the expansion of all our security programs," which rose at the same time from an annual rate of about $19 billion to $50 billion.

"The net consequences of this is plain," he added. "It means that today, despite the expanded security programs, we are producing more for other purposes than we were two years ago."

Private business investment during the same period and measured likewise in 1951 prices, "has risen from an annual rate of $35 billion to about $38 billion."

"The general conditions of civilian life have also continued to improve," the President wrote.

"The annual rate of personal incomes, after taxes, measured in 1951 prices, has risen $10.5 billion since the second quarter of 1950.

"The annual purchase of goods and services by consumers — again in 1951 prices—has risen by $5 billion. Yet, because incomes after taxes have risen more than expenditures, the annual rate of saving has increased from less than 5% to about 7% of income after taxes."

2 U.S. Agencies Differ With HST

Some government agencies apparently do not agree with President Truman, who in his midyear economic report to Congress said the country is better off than ever before, that living standards, purchasing power, savings and dividends all are increasing.

The Federal Reserve Board reported that in 1951 the average "spending unit" income increased 9% to $3840 from $3520 in 1950. That kept them abreast of the higher cost of living, the FRB said, BUT along came higher taxes and tipped the scales the wrong way.

The Securities & Exchange Commission reported that in the first three months of 1952 people had $2.3 billion less in cash and bank deposits than the year before and mortgage debts jumped $1.2 billion.

The Commerce Dept. came through for the President, however. Corporations paid out an average of 6% more in dividends in the first six months of 1952 than in the same period last year, it reported.

It's Official Now—BLS Price Index Sets Record

THE COST of living jumped to another all-time high in the month ending June 15—the first new all-time high since Jan. 15—the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last week.

The consumers price index soared in mid-June to a record-breaking 189.6 in the "new" series, the BLS said. It was just at that period that reactionary forces in Congress, in their successful drive to scuttle price controls, were proclaiming that the cost of living was on the way down.

The new figure compares to 189 on May 15 and to 189.1 when the last fragile record was set in January. It is 11.4% higher than just before the outbreak in Korea and 2.4% above the reading on June 15, 1951.

The increase means pay increases of 1 to 2c an hour to more than 35,000 workers covered by escalator clauses—24,000 of them employed by Douglas Aircraft in California. Adjustments under other large contracts, including those of the CIO Auto Workers and CIO Electrical Workers, are made at other dates.

The BLS attributed the jump in the index figure to higher prices for miscellaneous services,such as trolley fares, laundry services, physicians' fees, etc.; and for food and rent.

Here are the cumulative figures for the "new" BLS Index:

Period	Index	Period	Index
1939 monthly average	99.4	1950: June 15	170.2
1943 monthly average	123.6	1951: June 15	185.2

NLRB Nails Furniture Firm For 'Flagrant' Union Busting

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board has found a Massachusetts firm doing business under two names guilty of violating the Wagner Act even though a State court had enjoined picketing by striking CIO Furniture Workers.

The walkout in 1949 was against the H. N. Thayer Co. and the Thayer Co., of Gardner, Mass.

The NLRB ordered that 17 discharged employes be reinstated with back pay and that 85 strikers be compensated for losses suffered after they were refused reinstatement when the courts broke their strike.

Pres. Morris Pizer of the UFWA estimated the board's order will yield the workers more than $700,000 in back pay plus a 1948 Christmas bonus the firm was ordered to pay.

The firm also was ordered to cease and desist from its unfair labor practices, which the NLRB described as "flagrant."

The firm had obtained its injunction from a judge in Worcester after a Suffolk County Superior Court in Boston refused one.

All picketing was forbidden on the ground that the strike was "illegal" because it violated an alleged contract the company had written for its company union. The State Supreme Court sustained the injunction.

NLRB Trial Examiner Martin S. Bennett found that the company unions, Thayer Employes' Councils 1 and 2, were formed when the Furniture Workers were organizing. They had no constitutions or by-laws. The employer wrote the contracts. The firm counted ballots at its own poll, the winners being unaware of their elections until the company posted the results. Dues were checked off.

Late in 1948 the company cancelled its group insurance plan and told the two presidents to sell a 10% pay cut to their members. At a mass meeting, the employes rejected the wage slash and voted to join the UFWA. The strike started in January 1949.

6 Million U. S. Families Warned Of Rent Boosts

THINK RENTS are high? Well, brother, you ain't seen nothing yet.

For more than six million American families face sharp increases in rents on Sept. 30—unless their local governments act promptly.

That's the prediction of Tighe E. Woods, rent stabilizer, as he reported on the messy situation achieved by the lobby-bossed 82d Congress.

Under the new law, rent control expires on Sept. 30 in all communities, except:

1. Those declared critical housing areas.
2. Those where local governments specifically request an extension.

Translated into harsh pocketbook terms, that means rent increases ranging from 20% on higher-priced homes to 50 to 100% increases in lower brackets, according to Woods' prediction.

In official language, Woods says such raises would produce "serious economic shock and hardship."

In blunter language, it would be sheer hell.

Woods warned there was no chance of last-minute action by Congress, as had been the case in the past when rent controls seemed doomed. Congress has adjourned and only a special session, called by the President, could bring it back to Washington.

Excluding the 115 critical housing areas near defense installations, where controls will automatically continue, there are 2300 incorporated communities now under rent control. Altogether, experts say, 53 million persons live in these communities.

Among these major cities, not in critical housing areas and where no local action has yet been taken, are Philadelphia, San Francisco, Cleveland, St. Louis, Pittsburgh and Louisville. Communities in New York are governed by a state rent law which remains in force.

At the last count, only 18 communities had requested extension of controls, the rent stabilizer reported. Included in this group were Boston and Newark, N. J., where CIO Councils had led the fight for continuation of this protection for tenants.

In other major industrial cities, like Chicago and Detroit, local CIO councils are already mobilizing their strength for the battle to continue controls. The Wayne County (Detroit) CIO Council asked Woods for a survey of that area, so local officials could see just how bad the situation would be if controls were to be dropped.

They pointed out that 8675 families were now waiting accomodations in Detroit public housing units, after having been declared eligible for those low-rent projects.

It would be workers in the low and middle-income groups, who would be hardest hit by the end of controls.

CIO EXECUTIVE officers and vice presidents at their Chicago meeting gave full support to striking Steelworkers and named a committee to confer with the AFL on possible joint action on the new Wage Stabilization Board. Left to right, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Pres. Philip Murray, Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who also is Auto Workers president, and Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood.

Pizer Protests Island Wages

MORRIS PIZER, president of the CIO Furniture Workers, last week lashed out at the new 38c an hour minimum wage for Puerto Rican furniture workers.

It is "shockingly low," Pizer said in a protest wire to the Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Division of the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

Charging the new minimum subjects workers on the island to "starvation wages," the UFW official added it "seriously undermines the wages of furniture workers in the United States."

He called for imposition of the 75c minimum now effective on the mainland.

Pizer's protest came after it was learned that the special industry committee, appointed to recommend a new minimum wage, had disregarded the opinions of its labor members and had recommended only a token rise in minimum wages.

He told William McComb, administrator of the Wages and Hours Division, "unless the disparity between the unconscionably low minimum hourly wage established for Puerto Rican furniture workers and the existing wage rates in the furniture industry in the United States is eliminated or at least reasonably narrowed, it can only result in the transfer of furniture manufacturing operations from the United States to Puerto Rico, thereby exposing thousands of American furniture workers to loss of jobs and livelihood."

Indianapolis Joins List Of CIO Video

CIO'S NEW television series, "Issues of the Day," has moved to Indianapolis as the result of unanimous action by the Indianapolis CIO Council.

The council last week voted to sponsor the 13-week series produced jointly by the CIO and the CIO Political Action Committee.

In Indianapolis, the series will start on Sunday, Aug. 3, over Station WFBM-TV. Broadcast time will be 5 to 5:15 p.m.

As it voted to sponsor the series, the Indianapolis council invited other central Indiana CIO Councils, in the WFBM viewing area, to join in sponsorship. Representatives of other councils, present at the last week's meeting, expressed great interest in such a joint undertaking and planned early action in their home cities on the proposal.

Dayton's programs will be seen over WHIO-TV on Wednesday nights from 10:15 to 10:30, starting on Aug. 6.

Rieve Hits 'Mockery' On Textile Contracts

THE CIO Textile Workers last week called a Munitions Board plan to award contracts to textile plants in distressed areas a "mockery."

Emil Rieve, TWUA-CIO president, said the proposal would "incite depression in labor standards" and "is likely to serve as a significant depressing influence upon the industry."

Rieve's protest was addressed to Dr. John R. Steelman, acting defense mobilizer.

He again urged defense mobilization authorities to adopt the TWUA proposal, voiced in hearings some weeks ago, that government textile orders be given only to plants now operating less than 80 hours (two shifts) a week. Rieve wrote:

"Under the proposed procedure, mills submitting bids of more than 20% above the low bids are to be excluded. In effect, only the lowest cost mills, with the more extreme warloads and the most unfavorable working conditions are to be allowed to participate in governmental work . . .

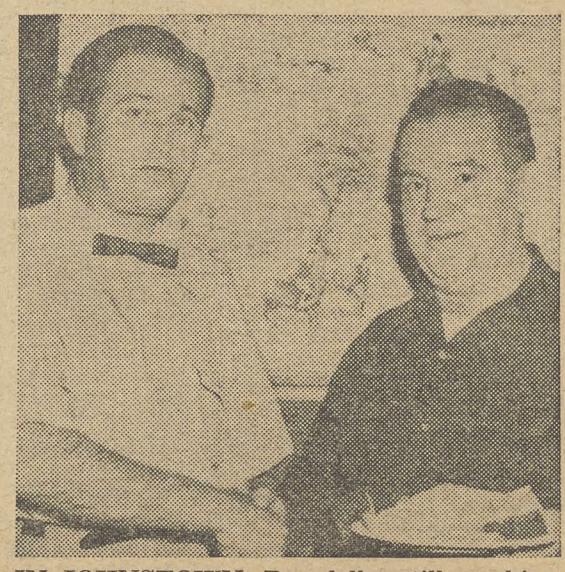
"While the Wage and Hour Division of the United States Dept. of Labor is considering raising the current prevailing minimum wage for the textile industry established in 1949, the National Munitions Board is inciting depression in labor standards.

"We protest such action as unworthy and improper and in conflict with the very purpose of the aid which the proposed plan was contemplated to give.

"We have urged bids on government orders be limited to companies operating less than 80 hours a week to the extent that they can meet government needs and such portion as they cannot manufacture should be open to bids by other plants.

"Such a program can provide help to distressed areas. The present program is a mockery of the entire idea of assistance to distressed areas and is unworthy of a government which is aiding underdeveloped and distressed foreign areas and has erected trade barriers to protect employment in this country."

THAT NEW LOOK on the picket line in Niles, Ohio, is just an old city bus. But USA-CIO Local 1338 pickets find the seats are soft and it keeps the rain and wind out.



IN JOHNSTOWN, Pa., folks still working dug down in their jeans to make sure striking steelworkers had a good meal. Right, Pres. J. R. Brown of Local 2634, gets his.

Curran, Other Top Officers Of NMU Re-elected

PRES. JOSEPH CURRAN and all other top officers of the CIO Maritime Union were re-elected in nation-wide balloting.

Others re-elected were Neal Hanley, secretary; M. Hedley, Stone, treasurer, and Adrian L. Duffy, Hulbert B. Warner and John B. McDougall, vice-presidents. Only McDougall had opposition, defeating Madlyn Ford by 11,211 to 7027. She was one of the few women in the organization's history to seek high office.

According to Honest Ballet Association, which conducted the three-month election, there were 26,209 votes cast. Of these 564 came from the Great Lakes, 840 from the rivers, and 24,805 from the deep-sea branches.

CIO Joins In New Wage Board, Hits Butchering Of Price Curbs

LOOK AT THAT GRIN—Like more than 600,000 other workers in the basic steel industry, Carmello Startari had a grin a yard wide when he got the news of settlement of the eight-week strike by CIO Steelworkers. Startari works in Jones & Laughlin's South Side plant in Pittsburgh. Negotiations between USA-CIO and steel firms were getting under way to iron out contracts, as workers returned to the mills. Precedent Setting—

CIO Brewers Get Okeh Of 35-Hour Week In N. Y.

A PRECEDENT-setting reduction in their work week from 37½ to 35 hours with no cut in pay has been won by 6000 CIO Brewery Workers in New York City.

Approval by the Wage Stabilization Board made the shorter work week a certainty. This is the only decision reducing the work week below 40 hours in the history of the board, before it was reorganized last week, according to the BW-CIO New York Joint Board.

The fight of the seven BW-CIO locals who belong to the joint board had the support of the CIO unions in the New York City area.

The cut in hours was contained in a contract negotiated last December with the Brewers Board of Trade. The shorter hours were to become effective June 1, but WSB approval was necessary.

During the two months that the problem was before the regional office of WSB in New York City, it was deluged by requests for action from CIO unions and virtually every congressman in the New York City area.

The case went to WSB in Washington July 10. The four labor members and the four industry members agreed in the decision, with the industry members protesting bitterly.

THE INDUSTRY members accused the other WSB members of establishing a new policy "in the dying days" of the board and declared that the ruling would open the flood gates for reduction in the work week.

With the decision, the New York Brewery Joint Board received congratulatory telegrams from CIO unions all over the State. Typical was one received by William Greenstein, the board's executive secretary, from Pres. Louis Hollander of the New York State CIO Council:

"The labor movement owes a debt of gratitude to all those of your organization whose vision, courage and sincere dedication to the interest of the membership has made this great victory possible.

"Your achievement sets the banner of the CIO and all labor at a new height. Others will follow in the trial you have blazed."

The Brewery Workers have led the fight for short hours. Back in 1886 a few of the locals who won the rcent victory signed the first agreement for a 10-hour day in New York City, according to the BW joint board.

When the brewers broke the agreement two years later, the locals struck for a year to regain the 10-hour day. The Brewery Workers also were in the forefront of the fight for the eight-hour day. The new agreement won the first 35-hour week in the nation's brewing industry.

Tune In 'Issues Of Day' . . . CIO-TV Listed For 6 Cities

TWO MORE major industrial cities will be added to the CIO's television "network" in the near future. In Minneapolis and Columbus, Ohio, arrangements were completed last week to televise the 13-week series, "Issues of the Day."

Exact program schedules for these cities will be announced in the near future, the CIO Publicity Dept. reported. Presently, "Issues of the Day" is being televised in six cities. Following is the present program schedule:

City	Station	Day	Hour
Chicago	WBKB-TV	Tuesday	10:45 p. m.
Cincinnati	WCPO-TV	Sunday	1:00 p. m.
Dayton	WHIO-TV	Wednesday	10:15 p. m.
Indianapolis	WFBM-TV	Sunday	5:00 p. m.
Pittsburgh	WDTV-TV	Sunday	2:15 p. m.
Washington	WMAL-TV	Sunday	4:45 p. m.

3 Aluminum Firms Settle USA Pacts

THE NATION'S three biggest aluminum companies have made their peace with the CIO Steelworkers.

The new agreements cover 30,000 USA-CIO members employed by the Aluminum Co. of America, Reynolds Metal Co. and the Kaiser Aluminum and Chemical Corp.

Nathan Feinsinger, outgoing chairman of the Wage Stabilization Board, announced "complete settlement" of the dispute between the USA-CIO and Alcoa July 28, the day before a strike was scheduled to begin.

THE AGREEMENT with Alcoa provided a wage boost averaging 15c an hour, retroactive to Mar. 10, with 4c an hour additional effective July 1.

Also provided are improvements in a number of "fringe" benefits, such as paid vacations, group insurance, and a modified union shop as in the steel settlement.

Under the agreement the 7c an hour differential in the South was cut to 4c, retroactive to July 1, and will be pared down to 2c Jan. 1. The contract runs until July 31, 1953.

Covered by the agreements are plants at Bridgeport, Conn.; Edgewater, N. J..; New Kensington, Pa.; Badin, N. C.; Alcoa, Tenn.; Bauxite, Ark.; Mobile, Ala.; Detroit, Mich., and Richmond, Ind. Fifteen thousand workers are involved in the settlement with Alcoa.

THE NEXT DAY, Reynolds settled on terms generally the same as those in the Alcoa pact. It covers 8000 workers in plants at Troutdale, Ore.; Phoenix, Ariz.; Corpus Christi, Tex; La Grange and McCook, Ill., and Bauxite, Jones Mill and Hurrican Creek, Ark.

Kaiser—the first of the big three to settle—came to terms with the union two weeks ago.

Alcoa and Reynolds have asked the Office of Price Stabilization to boost aluminum price ceilings 10%, and Kaiser wants a 12.5% ceiling boost.

McMahon Mourned For 'Always Liberal' Views

SEN. McMAHON

SEN. McMAHON (D. Conn.), the fighting New England liberal who played a major role in the successful fight to make atomic energy available for peacetime service to all the people, died July 28 in Georgetown Hospital, Washington.

Bed-ridden for weeks with cancer, the Senator failed to rally from an operation.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray wired Mrs. McMahon that "members of the CIO are deeply shocked by the tragic and premature death of Senator McMahon. His great intelligence, his always liberal outlook and his unceasing endeavor to achieve a world of peace won him respect and affection from the working people of America."

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers said McMahon died before his "single-handed fight in the Senate to keep control of atomic energy in the hands of the people, through civilian administration, and to keep the military from making atomic energy their privileged domain, became the nation's fight. "This will be his monument; and few would ask anything greater.

McMAHON, a former Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Justice Dept.'s Criminal Division, was Connecticut's "favorite son" candidate for the Democratic Party's 1952 nomination for President. He was 48.

As author of the McMahon Act for the Control of Atomic Energy and chairman of the Joint Congressional Atomic Energy Commission, McMahon, more than any other man, was chiefly responsible for the development of this country's policies with respect to atomic energy.

He vigorously beat down strong efforts to limit it to military purposes, and the passage of his bill providing for civilian control was a major victory for the people.

He was equally insistent that the benefits of atomic energy—which had been discovered by the expenditure of monies belonging to all U. S. taxpayers—should not be exploited for private gain at the public's expense.

ON OTHER issues, he was devoted to the welfare of the nation. He was given a near-perfect score on his votes on major legislative issues in The CIO News voting guides issued since his election to the Senate in 1944.

Tributes to McMahon came from other public leaders throughout the country. Vice President Barkley said McMahon was "one of the great products of American public life" and that "America has lost a great servant." President Truman declared the nation has suffered a "tremendous" loss and predicted that "future generations will be grateful for his wisdom."

Sen. Benton (D. Conn.), who placed McMahon's name in nomination for the presidency, said that "for his successful fight to retain control of atomic energy and for his leadership in the struggle for disarmament and peace, Brien McMahon was known the world over." The world, he added, has lost "one of its great citizens."

UPWA Begins Talks With Big Packers

CIO PACKINGHOUSE Workers opened contract negotiations last week with two of the "Big Four" packing firms.

Talks began in Chicago between union representatives and the Armour and Cudahy management. Negotiations with the Wilson and Swift packing companies will open later.

The UPWA-CIO is demanding a general wage increase, a guaranteed annual wage, company-paid pension, health and welfare benefits, a union shop, and a cost of living bonus. The talks cover the entire contract.

The union's current contract with the firms expires Aug. 11. It covers about 30,000 employes in 24 Armour plants and 10,000 in 10 Cudahy plants.

URW To Talk Pay With General Tire

Already negotiating with the industry's Big Four, the CIO Rubber Workers will open wage negotiations this week at Akron, with the industry's largest independent, the General Tire & Rubber Co., according to URW-CIO Pres. L. S. Buckmaster.

URW-CIO — in keeping with its 1952 program—will seek an equitable wage increase, and improvements of existing health, pension and welfare programs. Involved are Locals 9, Akron, and 312, Waco, Tex.

ARA-CIO Pickets 4 Pacific Ships

The CIO American Radio Association—in a move to preserve its jurisdiction — last week threatened to picket all ships on the West Coast using members of the AFL Masters, Mates and Pilots to operate radio telephones.

ARA-CIO members set up picket lines at four ships using AFL deck officers for the job. Many ships will not be affected because ARA-CIO members man the radio phones.

Steel Dispute Tapers Off As Union, Big Six Firms Set Contract Talks

THE EIGHT-MONTH steel dispute was tapering off, late last week, into a final round of contract negotiations aimed at writing formal language to buttress the White House agreement between CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray and Ben Fairless, head of U. S. Steel.

The 170-man Wage Policy Committee of the United Steelworkers voted on July 25 to "ratify and accept" the White House agreement of the day before "as the basis for ending the steel dispute of 1952." The pact was ratified with the oral condition that the north country iron ore miners must be fully protected before the agreement went into effect.

It took another day of negotiation with the iron ore firms—operating principally in northern Michigan and Minnesota — to wrap up that agreement.

The companies had been trying for some time to work out a separate and weaker agreement for the ore miners. Under the final terms, however, they win, by next July complete abolition of the lower-wage differential which they have had for many years.

Throughout last week, plans were made for negotiations with the various Big Six companies, to work out the final language of the new contracts. These talks —with U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Republic, Jones & Laughlin, Inland, and Youngstown Sheet & Tube—have been scheduled for Pittsburgh, New York, Cleveland, Youngstown and Indiana Harbor, Ind.

(The new basic agreements will run for two years, with a wage reopening period—in which the union has the right to strike —in 12 months. The union won a major series of improvements, including a basic 12.5c wage boost, retroactive to March 1, increased spread between job categories, much increased shift differentials, six paid holidays, the union shop with some modifications, and other benefits.)

As the settlement was announced, the government announced a $5.20 a ton price increase for carbon steel.

The increase, which OPS Director Elliott Arnall granted on directions from the White House, was exacted from the government as the industry's price for settling the long walkout, even though government economists had strongly argued that it was far more than necessary to meet the increased wage costs.

The strike's end brought an unusual degree of hope for better labor-management relations in steel.

Accepting an invitation from Murray, Fairless of U. S. Steel appeared at the Wage Policy Committee meeting with a box of cigars for Murray, words of praise for the way the strikers had left their jobs and permitted full maintenance of the plants, and a strongly expressed hope for a better future relationship between management and the union.

Fairless told the union officials the company knows the union does not want to take over the management of the corporations, and he said the industry fully recognizes the union and wants to see it strong and responsible.

"We must find ways to live together and work together," Fairless said.

Murray praised Fairless's attitude, and reminded the Wage Policy Committee that the union's agreements with the company over the 15 years have "vastly outnumbered the disagreements."

He pledged full cooperation in working out better relationships with the companies, but emphasized it wouldn't be in any "company union way. It's more fundamental than that."

Murray and Fairless will make a tour of U. S. Steel plants this fall to talk with the workers and local management, and to seek better working relations at the plant level.

Steel Dividend Paid As Usual

Steel stockholders are still getting theirs.

Last week—while steel mills were just getting back into operation after the eight-week strike by CIO Steelworkers—the U. S. Steel Corp. announced its regular 75c dividend and Bethlehem Steel voted a $1 dividend.

CIO Joins New WSB, Hits Gaps In Price Controls

(See Editorial, Page 4.)

THE CIO last week agreed to participate in the new, reorganized and greatly-weakened Wage Stabilization Board.

At the same time, it struck out at the 82nd Congress for "the inherent weaknesses which have been written into the price sections of the Defense Production Act and by its unfairly rigid wage sections."

And CIO Pres. Pres. Philip Murray called on the 83rd Congress—which will be elected in November and come to Washington next January—to "give heed" to President Truman's "obviously sound recommendations for strengthening the Defense Production Act in the . . . fight against inflation."

Four CIO members and alternates recommended by Murray were named to the new board by Truman. He appointed Archibald Cox, Howard Law professor, as chairman, succeeding Nathan P. Feinsinger.

Recommended as WSB members were Joseph Childs, CIO Rubber Workers vice president; Ben C. Sigal, CIO Electrical Worker general counsel (both old board members); and John Brophy, veteran CIO official. Delmond Garst, CIO regional director in St. Louis, was proposed as an alternate.

Murray said the CIO had "hesitated" to serve on the new WSB because of the many weaknesses in the new law, but had agreed "in the national interest." He spelled out the weaknesses as lack of adequate price-rent controls, "rigidity of wage formulas," stripping of the WSB of dispute powers and limitation of its functions.

THE congresional assault on the WSB came, in part, because of its recommendations in the steel dispute.

Murray branded this attack a "political football" and praised the public members of the old board for their service both in the steel and related aluminum cases.

The board's last act was to approve the steel settlement.

Feinsinger reported that the board had settled 60,000 wage cases "without a strike" except in the basic steel dispute—where industry boycotted the board's recommendations and forced an eight-week strike.

Truman praised the outgoing WSB for a "grand job under the most trying of circumstances."

Here Are Members Named By Truman To New WSB

President Truman last week named these 14 members of the new 18-man Wage Stabilization Board:

PUBLIC: Archibald Cox, Harvard Law School faculty, chairman; Paul N. Guthrie, former professor of economics and sociology, Univ. of North Carolina; Thomas F. Coman, former newspaperman; Harold L. Enarson, member of the staff of Dr. John R. Steelman, assistant to the President.

LABOR: CIO, Vice Pres. Joseph Childs of the Rubber Workers; Ben C. Sigal, general counsel, Electrical Workers; John Brophy, veteran CIO official; (alternate, Delmond Garst, regional director, St. Louis, Mo.)

AFL, Vice Pres. Elmer E. Walker of the Machinists, Pres. Harry C. Bates of the Bricklayers Union; Pres. William C. Birthwright of the Barbers Union.

INDUSTRY: Malcolm L. Denise, public relations office, Ford Motor Co.; Hiram S. Hall, consultant, Bigelow Carpet Co.; Hoey A. Hennessy, assistant to the managing director, National Association of Manufacturers; Millard E. Stone, director of industrial relations, Bendix Aviation Corp.

A Letter By Murray

In his letter to President Truman on the new WSB, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said in part:

THE CIO, after giving considerable study to the amended law, is genuinely concerned about the inherent weaknesses which have been written into the price sections of the Defense Production Act and by its unfairly rigid wage sections.

We are also concerned and disappointed by the decision of the majority of the Congress to divest the WSB of its disputes powers and to limit its authority in a number of other ways.

The steel industry and large segments of the press, which have been antagonistic to any form of controls during this period of great national emergency, launched a stream of bitter criticism against the WSB for its handling of the recent steel dispute. The fact is that the public members of the WSB acted with great fairness in the steel dispute.

Events during the past fortnight, however, have clearly established that the steel industry has accepted the basic proposals of the WSB in the steel case and have thereby given the lie to those groups which maintained that the WSB's proposals were not in accord with economic justice.

So, as the old WSB goes out of existence, I feel that the public should acknowledge the service rendered in the national interest by the public members of the WSB.

The weaknesses in the new (defense production) law are many: Its failure to provide for adequate price and rent controls, the limitations on its functions, the rigidity of its wage formulas, and the absence of dispute powers are among the most serious of these weaknesses.

However, Mr. President, you have asked for our cooperation in the national interest.

At the same time, however, we express the strong hope that the 83rd Congress, when it meets in 1953, will give heed to your obviously sound recommendations for strengthening the Defense Production Act in the interest of continuing the fight against inflation.

A New Wage Board

To mix a metaphor, the new Wage Stabilization Board starts operations with a couple of strikes against it. The strikes, in this case, are not industrial disputes but the defects of the new Defense Production Act, passed shortly before the 82nd Congress adjourned.

The new WSB has no power to handle disputes cases. It is hampered also by what CIO Pres. Murray described as "unfairly rigid wage sections" and "inherent weaknesses" in the price control sections of the law.

The CIO and the AFL, in agreeing to recommend labor members for this board, recognize the national emergency problems that remain with us; and they are determined to try to make the new set-up work as fairly as possible for the workers of the nation.

Industry and its front groups have done much to undermine the anti-inflation fight, on one sector of which the WSB tries to operate. Theirs was an unprincipled and baseless attack on Chairman Nathan Feinsinger and the other public members of the WSB, whose only "crime" was to recommend what they believed to be a fair and equitable settlement of the steel dispute. And the steel companies eventually came to terms with the union on the basis of those recommendations—without observable harm to the companies.

Nathan Feinsinger has had a long and honorable career in both the academic and practical aspects of labor-management relations. In the WSB he filled a difficult spot and filled it meritoriously. The multi-million dollar propaganda campaign of industry groups during the steel dispute will have done still another disservice to the nation if it leaves the general public with any attitude but appreciation for Feinsinger's constructive work during the past 12 months.

New Leaf?

There were welcome indications, in the speech of Ben Fairless of U. S. Steel to the USA-CIO Wage Policy Committee, that Big Steel is turning a new leaf in its relations with the union.

The response of the group, and their official statement, left little doubt that the union looks forward to helping establish an era of "harmony and cooperation" in the industry.

U. S. Steel management, at every echelon and in every plant, it is to be hoped, will give the same thoughtful attention as did the union delegates to Ben Fairless' words.

The Landlords' Game

The landlords' lobbyist are up to their same old game. They see a gold mine just ahead: the automatic wiping out of rent ceilings in almost all big cities on Sept. 30, unless communities act affirmatively to keep controls.

All of the tactics of heckling, browbeating and disruption which landlord-real estate groups have used from coast to coast in past community rent battles are being employed again.

The landlords aren't playing for peanuts. In the past four years, average rents have gone up almost twice as fast as other items in the BLS consumer price index, which now is at an all-time high. Decontrol now, as CIO revealed in the Chicago hearing, would mean rent boosts up to 100%.

That's fair warning to all CIO Councils and local unions to get on the job of protecting community rent control.

Out Damn Spot!

Stevenson On Labor's Task

These views on labor are from a speech given by Adlai E. Stevenson, the Democratic candidate for President, at the Illinois AFL convention last year.

By ADLAI E. STEVENSON

TODAY, the practices and policies of labor organizations are invested with a public character they did not have in years gone by. No longer are your deliberations, and your decisions, of concern only in union halls. Organized labor today exerts an enormous influence in almost every area of American life.

The outcome of this war for peace means far more to every man and women who works for wages than any temporary ebb and flow of labor fortunes. It seems to me that is the all-important fact for us to remember. And it is almost equally important to remember that we cannot fight Russian expansionism with more guns and more production alone. We could gain these ends and still lose everything if we fail to win the fight against inflation.

I don't presume to say on what date wages could be frozen or on what date prices should have been stabilized. But I do say that prices and wages chasing each other upward are like a dog chasing his tail, and if we don't watch out we'll get dizzy and topple into the abyss.

Unfortunately, Congress hasn't paid any more attention to organized labor's warnings and appeals for stronger price controls and a realistic tax program than it has to the President's. We are speeding along with bad brakes, and it isn't a prudent, safe way to travel . . . But as of today we are falling back on the inflation front while we advance on the military front.

We have made some noteworthy forward steps here in Illinois this year. We succeeded in substantially increasing unemployment-compensation benefits. The Workmen's Compensation and Occupational Disease Act was improved. Illinois was the only state that did not show any increase in industrial accidents this year.

There have been notable failures too. The Legislature again failed this year to enact a fair employment practices law. It again refused a state minimum-wage law. And it again refused to extend the benefits of unemployment compensation to employes of establishments hiring six or fewer workers.

In my message to the General Assembly I urged that that consideration be given to establishing in Illinois a system of temporary disability insurance. The most recent available estimates indicate that fewer than one-fourth of the workers covered by the Unemployment Compensation Act are protected by any kind of group health insurance. I believe Illinois should, and I hope will, soon take its place among the progressive states recognizing the need for disability insurance.

IN MY message to the Legislature, urging a more workable minimum-wage act, I said, "the Legislature should give attention to broadening and strengthening our present law which is cumbersome and obsolete." Our present act was passed in 1933. It applies only to women and minors.

It does not establish, for intrastate workers, a flat minimum wage as the federal law does for employes in interstate industry. I hardly need say more about the existing law. But the bill introduced at the last session, proposing a flat minimum wage of 75c an hour for intrastate workers, was defeated by seven votes in the House of Representatives.

Organized labor can exert a useful influence in public affairs. A broad view of its public responsibility is the handmaiden of public influence. It must not be afraid to recognize and correct abuses in its own sphere. It can no longer content itself with unthinking and combative reflex actions. To sacrifice sound principle for immediate advantage is to injure the people it serves.

Booklet On Stevenson Offered By New Republic

The speech above is contained in a booklet giving a summary of Stevenson's views on loyalty, foreign policy, McCarthyism, and crime and local self-government. The booklet may be obtained from the New Republic, 1416 F Street, Washington 4, D. C., at the following rates: Single copy—10c; 1000 copies, $30; 5000 copies, $150.

Booklet Barrage—

More Sugar Coating For 'Cafeteria Education'

THE SUGAR-COATED frosting is up on top—in the form of multi-colored booklets on "How To Pick A Used Car" and "What Makes People Successful."

But farther down the wall racks by the factory gate is the propaganda poison—booklets on "Why Kill the Goose?" and "Free Men vs. The Union Closed Shop."

Together they add up to the booming system of "cafeteria education" by which business firms—big and little—are dishing out anti-labor politics and economics all wrapped up in deceptive tinsel about how to knit or plant a garden or decorate your home.

It's not just the "blue chip" firms like General Motors (one of the first to bombard its employes), U. S. Steel Corp. and Western Electric (the Bell System subsidiary) which are pouring out propaganda booklets to their workers.

Plenty of medium-sized and smaller outfits have joined in the drive, and the campaign by management to "condition" workers' minds and opinions will continue to grow.

Last week the Wall Street Journal gave a lengthy, and frank account of "cafeteria education." It noted:

"As recently as 1948, for instance, only a handful of companies—one of which was General Motors—gave away booklets on a regular basis through 'self-help' reading racks. Today, as many as 1500 companies have reading racks in their plants."

GM alone pours out a million separate pieces of "literature" a month, according to the Journal. It estimates the annual total for all firms at more than 30 million copies.

The Journal also revealed that more fluff is being mixed with the "heavy stuff" in the management barrage.

ONE OF THE big pamphlet peddlers, Good Reading Rack Service of New York, gives 20% each to booklets on home and recreational health and safety, inspirational and self-help and then—this is what it is all about—10% to "Americana" and 30% to social and economic issues.

Another outfit, the National Research Bureau of Chicago, splits it 30% "socialism and communism," 30% "government," 20% "management problems such as taxes, profits and productivity," and only 20% for employe welfare and recreation.

"While corporate users," the Journal says, "aim to get workers to read the so-called 'heavy stuff' such as 'Inflation Concerns Everyone' and 'Why Kill the Goose?', a pamphlet on capitalism, most agree privately it would be unreasonable to ask employes to read nothing but economics, government controls and sociology.

"A General Motors official asserts: 'Any overdoing of the economics material would be a quick way to kill off interest. We try to mix in pamphlets that have no relation to business or economics, but are personally interesting and helpful to employes and their families.' "

So the reading racks are crammed with booklets on "Ker-choo and You" and "Delicious Chicken Recipes" and "Home Garden Guide."

But then come the clinchers, like "Free Men vs. The Union Closed Shop," which was plugged by Yale & Towne plants.

One of the favorite sources of reprints for "cafeteria education" booklets, according to the Journal, is Reader's Digest magazine, which regularly features the works of reactionaries like John T. Flynn. Other sources, not mentioned by the Journal but revealed in previous reports from CIO Auto Workers members to The CIO News, are outfits like the Committee for Constitutional Government and the Foundation for Economic Education.

BY ISSUING new booklets frequently, by limiting the number o fcopies of a single pamphlet, by using attractive photography, "cafeteria education" is giving management a hand in spreading the gospel according to the National Association of Manufacturers.

Two or three million workers a month, according to the Wall Street Journal's estimate, are beguiled by titles on "Used Cars" into reading screeds against the "Union Shop."

Thirty million pamphlets a year—that's how fast employers are dishing it out via "cafeteria education." What with the elections in November, the biggest "servings" are still to come.

Profit Reports Going Up, With Utilities In Lead

By Labor Press Associated

"IT'S MURDER," big business says daily, claiming taxes are driving it to bankruptcy—but the profits figures read otherwise.

Plenty of them—particularly utilities—are doing better than ever before in 1952 earnings, particularly some of the biggest utilities, while others have more working capital than ever before.

Here are some representative utilities earnings for the year ended June 30:

	1951	1952
Atlantic City Electric	$ 2,376,074	$ 2,602,556
Central Power & Light	4,240,897	4,429,288
Consumers Power	19,907,679	19,946,709

'Tax Bonanza' Still Flowing

THE "TAX BONANZA" is shooting into the stratosphere—with much of the "take" going to big corporations.

Speeded-up amortization — out of the taxpayers' pockets—have been granted for 12,517 new or expanded facilities worth $21,266,837,663.

Yolo Steel & Metal Co., Sacramento, Calif., led the procession announced last week by the Defense Production Administration. It was granted a 55% tax "write-off" in five years instead of the normal 25 years on steel production facilities costing $81,250,000.

Second on the list was the Pennsylvania Electric Co., Clearfield County, Pa., with write-offs on electric power developments costing $39,775,700. The Pennsylvania Railroad, which has been granted many "write-offs," was third with 55% allowance in five years on $30,036,760.

Big Utilities Shift Smear Words But Not Tactics In Power Fight

By IRVING FAGAN
For Labor Press Associated

THE FRENCH have a saying that the more things change, the more they remain the same. So it has been with the public utilities and their attack on public power.

Today they charge "creeping Socialism." In the 1920's the smear words for those who tried to see that the public is not robbed were "Bolshevik, red, or parlor pink."

It's all there in the records, but there is always a new generation, and this one does not know, and their fathers have forgotten.

The Federal Trade Commission investigated the public utilities, starting in 1928. A staff of 50 economists, lawyers and accountants dug into what the utilities were doing to pervert public opinion, hang on to their monopoly, and their high rates.

The probe took seven years. This is what the FTC found, according to a recent statement by Sen. Magnuson (D. Wash.):

Since 1919 the utilities had carried on an aggressive publicity campaign, through 28 publicity bureaus.

"The private utilities influenced schools, colleges, and universities in numerous effective ways. School men were influenced to favor the private utilities through jobs, speaking engagements, planning utility courses, making utility studies, writing articles, by having direct money payments made to many educational institutions, through favorable textbooks, by eliminating matters in publications deemed unfair or prejudicial by the utilities, or by bringing pressure to bear on the largest publishers for the effect it would have on the smaller ones."

The utilities attacked every public power project, including the proposed Muscle Shoals and Boulder Dam. (If the utilities had had their way, we would not have the Tennessee Valley Authority, we would have lacked the electrical energy we needed so badly during the war for aluminum for planes, and the electrical energy we needed for atomic energy development.)

The favorite method of attack was not to answer the public-ownership arguments, but to smear people as Bolsheviks, reds or parlor pinks.

The utilities insisted state regulation was doing fine, whereas the FTC found that only in a few instances was state regulation effective. (State regulatory bodies are usually very nice to the utilities.)

WHAT HAS been eating public utilities: With the advent of public power, this nation for the first time had a sharp yardstick on actual costs, to compare with what the utilities were charging.

Said Magnuson on this point: "The private utilities are like the private conveyors of mail before the Federal postoffice system was established—or the private owners of roads and pikes that preceded our present public-roads system — or the railroad buccaneers of the nineteenth century—or the private suppliers of city power that preceded the municipal ownership of our water services.

"Similarly, the private utilities have long regarded their monopoly to supply electric service as an exclusive domain in which they could operate pretty much like private enterprise."

But, Magnuson pointed out, it is not — the public interest is affected. For these utilities get an exclusive monopoly privilege, without any competition, and are guaranteed, by law, a profit on their investment.

You can shop in one market or another. But you can't shop around for electricity, or gas, or transit, or telephone service. Each is a monopoly, each guaranteed a profit—and that is why they must be regulated, and that is why the yardstick of public power is important.

"I still say you've got the wrong slant on total home front mobilization."

Rochester Meet Was Like A Big Family Conference

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

TWO CRYSTAL chandeliers hanging from the ceiling of the big ballroom in the Seneca Hotel in Rochester, New York, where the opening session of the CIO Glass Workers convention was in progress, sparkled down brightly on a number of round tables covered with white cloths.

Faces of the 133 delegates clustered at the tables and the several dozen visitors sitting around the sides and back of the ballroom were all turned toward the low platform up front, where Burl Phares, the boyish-looking international president of the union—a lock of hair falling low across his glistening hot forehead—was talking to them.

One of the youngest of the CIO union presidents, Phares is 39, but you might take him for no more than 25.

Elected to a two-year term by a referendum vote in May, 1951, this was Phares' first convention as international president.

He was formerly president of District 1, with headquarters in Charleston, W. Va. International Union headquarters are in Columbus, Ohio, and Phares now lives there with his wife and family.

Active Officer

Seated in front of the rostrum at a long green felt-covered table, were the union's eight other international executive officers. Seated that is, except for Leland Beard, the huge tall first vice-president in charge of education and research—who is seldom seen without one or more cameras and flash light equipment hanging to him—kept heaving his bulky frame up from his chair to shoot a picture, or supervise the running of the tape recording machine, or tend to other of his manifold duties.

At the table was Second Vice-Pres. Ralph Reiser in charge of organizing, a big broad-shouldered fellow with close-cropped dark hair; and Lewis McCracken, the union's tall, slim and smiling secretary-treasurer.

Then there were the five District presidents—Herman Leiner who has the longest seniority of the five; Don Berger and Neil Brower, both strapping big men; Henry Wingert who takes kidding about his bald head good-naturedly, and smartly dressed Willard Pelican, whom Phares called "the Casanova of the Federation," when he introduced him. All the officers made short talks at the opening session.

On the right of the officers' table a huge metal fan on a high steel pole hummed softly as it swirled the too warm air in its vicinity and now and then gently rippled one of the heavy blue draperies at the row of windows on that side of the ballroom.

On the other side of the platform, an American flag with the union's blue emblem beside it, hung down limply, untouched by any breeze.

A delegate seated on the window-side of the room got up and tried to tie back one side of the heavy curtain with a cord from the long venetian blind that shuttered the center part of the high window—to let in some outside air that might possibly be cooler.

"Why do we have to hold our conventions in July," muttered a young man in a white open-neck shirt, mopping his wet face with his handkerchief. "It oughta be a mighty good reason."

"It is," whispered an older delegate at the table. "July is vacation month in many of the glass plants, and it's easier for more delegates to get away to come to the convention."

Like a large part of the rest of the country, Rochester was sweltering under a heat wave the week of July 21-28 when the CIO's Federation of Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers held its tenth biennial convention there.

Luckily on the second day the delegates were able to move their meetings to the hotel's air-conditioned Ontario room where they could listen more comfortably to the prolonged floor discussions that took place during the remainder of the convention.

For the CIO Glass Workers pride themselves above all, on their democratic procedure, and zealously guard the right of their delegates to speak freely from the floor. This sometimes means that it takes hours to pass a motion which might seem unimportant and boring to an outsider uninformed on the background and ramifications of the issue involved.

But the Glass Workers, themselves, were intensely interested in convention discussions. They listened closely and took sides heatedly in contested matters. Sometimes when a roll-call vote was being taken, their excitement and tension couldn't have been greater if they'd been watching a horse race on which they had bet.

During floor discussions on an especially hot issue, four or more delegates would jump to their feet and clamor at once for recognition and the right to get what they had to say off their chests in front of a mike.

Even an unfriendly critic of unionism, if he could have been there, would have had to admit that the rank and file delegates to this convention—the elected representatives of some 45,000 union members in hundreds of plants in the nation's glass industry—were not at all the apathetic unwilling victims of "labor bosses" as so often claimed.

Lively Discussion

Such a critic would also have been surprised to find out how the delegates felt about those so-called "labor bosses," their officers. A good part of the convention's time, for instance, was spent on arguing about how much of an increase in pay and expense money these officers were to be given, in view of the continued increase in the cost of living.

In some ways, this discussion as it came out on the floor, was rather like a big family conference, with the delegates playing the part of parents toward their officers. Some were kindly and indulgent and wanted to be generous. Others were the stern, strict type who didn't want to "spoil" the officers.

Another attitude was expressed by a young man who reminded the convention that the officers were the employes in this situation, and that the delega speaking for the membership as the ployers, were obligated to drive as h a bargain as they could—just as mana ment did at wage negotiations.

Some of the delegates, of course, m have had ulterior motives, but the b of the vote that decided the issue v cast by the rank-and-filers who clea were concerned only with deciding u what they thought was fair and to best interests of the union.

It took several sessions to resolve conflict. Finally the recommendation the constitutional committee was uph and the four top international offic and the five district presidents were gi a yearly increase of $1800, plus an incre in their expense accounts from $30 to a week.

This brought the president's pay $8400, and that of the two internatio vice-presidents and of the secretary-tre urer to $7000. The pay of the five distr presidents was increased to $6500.

The majority of the delegates felt t these increases were moderate in view the heavy responsibilities the officers c ried and the rise in living costs. Some them also pointed out how very sm they were in comparison to the h salaries and unlimited expense accou paid to management in the glass indust

Another misconception about unio which the Glass Workers convent offered an outstanding example to d prove is that "foreign ideologies" s have a strong influence in CIO un policies, despite the ousting of Commun dominated unions.

As the officers' report to the convent pointed out, the glass union was ne "confronted too much with this issu The strong stand the union takes agai communism is an endorsement of gene CIO policy rather than the expression a problem affecting it.

'Ike Is Front For Wall Street'

"If I were Sen. Taft, I'd be so d mad at the way the forces of Wall St in the Republican party double-crossed that I'd go back to Washington and everything I could to get the Taft-Har law repealed."

R. J. Thomas, CIO assistant directo organization, offered this suggestion "Mr. Republican" in his speech to Glass Workers convention in Rochester

"It was Wall Street that won the publican convention," Thomas told delegates, "and Eisenhower is the too Wall Street. He is not a free man. H a front for Wall Street and he will hav carry out the orders of Wall Street."

s American as apple pie. The convention elegates comprised a cross-section, not nly of the labor force in the nation's glass ndustry, but also of the American work- ng class as a whole. A quick, convenient nd reliable sampling of workers' opinion the United States could indeed have een made there.

An observing foreigner, for instance, if e understood English, could have ob- ained a pretty accurate idea, by listening o the discussions and talking with the elegates, of what American workers are ke in the main and "what makes them ick."

He would have found for one thing, that n politics, the large majority of the dele- ates were liberal Democrats tremendous- y interested in the outcome of the Demo- ratic convention then going on in Chicago t the same time as their own convention but that not all backed the same can- idate. He could also have found a few epublicans—somewhat on the defensive.

If he had inquired, he would have earned that with a very few exceptions ll the delegates were American-born but hat their names showed a wide diversity f national origins. Besides the Smiths, ones and Browns present, he would have ound such names as Brady, O'Neill, Mc- abe, Daugherty, Klein, Diederich, Schm- heim, Ziemianski, Raykovics, Zieroff, iardino, D'Orazio, Spacaccino, Collodi, rickson, as well as Hunt, Love, Judge, ird, Kirk and Evans.

Like Their Jobs

And perhaps he would have been sur- rised to learn that a lot of workers really ke their jobs, even those who work in he big mass production plants. Delegates om locals in the two big glass concerns —Pittsburgh Plate Glass and Libbey- wens-Ford—made up the large propor- on of the 133 voting delegates from the 5 locals represented. The rest came from oth large and small plants in the various ther branches of the industry.

He could also have gotten an idea of the mplexity of American industrial produc- on as typified in the glass industry by lking to workers from these widely di- rsified plants. Besides those employed the big plate, safety and window glass ctories, a number worked in sand, brick, le, ceramic, container glass, mirror, lastic, chemical and hundreds of other inds of plants in the industry.

And any delegate he might have talked who worked in any one of these numer- us plants could have overwhelmed him ith a wealth of detail not only about his wn particular job but also about the verall operation. From which he might ave concluded that it isn't always true hat workers know only what goes on in onnection with their own job and have o idea of how it connects up with the aking of the completed product.

Delegates at the Glass Workers con- ention, anyway, were well informed about heir union, their plant, and their industry.

Here's A Typical Glass Worker

CARL MARTIN

AT THE DOOR of the Glass Work- ers convention hall, keeping an eye on the badges of delegates and visitors as they came in, stood a big fellow who looked something like William Bendix of the movies.

Carl Martin, convention sergeant-at-arms, belongs to Toledo Local 9, the Glass Federation's biggest local. It has some 4200 members who work in four Libbey-Owens-Ford plants in the Toledo, Ohio, area.

More than 4000 members of other locals work in big L-O-F plants in Charleston, W. Va., Ottawa, Ill., and Shreveport, La.

Martin has worked for 12 years at L-O-F's Rossford plant. During World War II, he was in the Marines. He is married and has two young children. Carl's father also worked at Rossford until his death and he has three brothers still employed there.

The Martin family, with several members working in the same plant, is quite typical of Toledo's big glass industry, Martin said. And many have seniority records of 20 years or more.

For the past two years, Carl Martin has been the union's plant chairman at Rossford. He is paid by the company. A pipe fitter by trade, Martin is stationed in the pipe department, but he spends all his time on his job as plant chairman, and works at his trade only occasionally.

Martin takes care of grievances brought to him by union members and these keep him pretty busy. The main complaints are over seniority violations and bonus pay, he said. A grievance is taken up first with the foreman concerned, and if it can't be settled there, it starts through a four-step procedure, coming before the grievance committee and the plant manager.

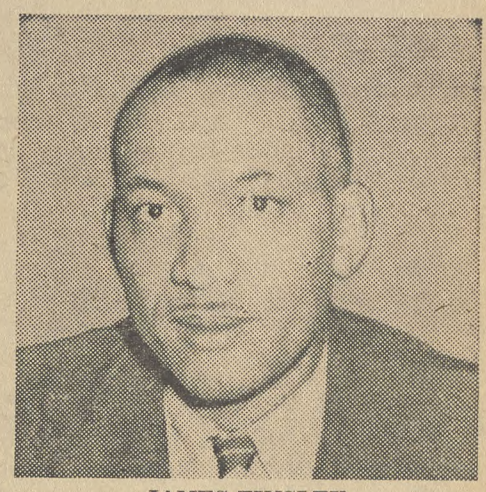
Most grievances are settled at the foreman level, but difficult cases may go as a final step, to the impartial arbitrator who has the last word. Martin spoke highly of L-O-F's labor policy, which he said had the special merit of working toward a quick and uncomplicated settlement of grievances.

Six Feet Plus

WHEN JAMES TINSLEY stood up on the floor at the CIO Glass Workers convention in Rochester, N. Y., seeking recognition from the chair, he never had any trouble being seen. Six feet plus several inches tall, Tinsley towered over the heads of most of the delegates.

One of the most popular and active unionists at the convention, Tinsley headed a delegation of five from Muncie Local 93 at the big Ball Bros. glass container plant in Muncie, Ind.

Now serving his second term as president of the local, Tinsley has more than 15 years seniority at Ball Bros., and has a large fund of information about the huge plant which covers 40 to 50 acres.



JAMES TINSLEY

The other four delegates representing the Muncie Local were Margaret Lee, local secretary; Gypsy Hayworth, a chief steward, and Margaret Brady and Helen Keeley, both trustees.

Ball Bros., one of the largest glass container plants in the country, makes not only the famous Ball fruit jars known to practically all women who do home canning, but also turns out millions of glass bottles and miscellaneous glass containers of all kinds.

Next time you buy a bottled soft drink, or a jar of salad dressing, or something else put up in glass, take a look at the container. It was probably made by some of the 1900 CIO members who work at Ball Bros. More than a thousand of them are women.

Women make fine union members, Tinsley said. "If the company starts messin' around with seniority rights, they don't take it meekly, the way some of the men do."

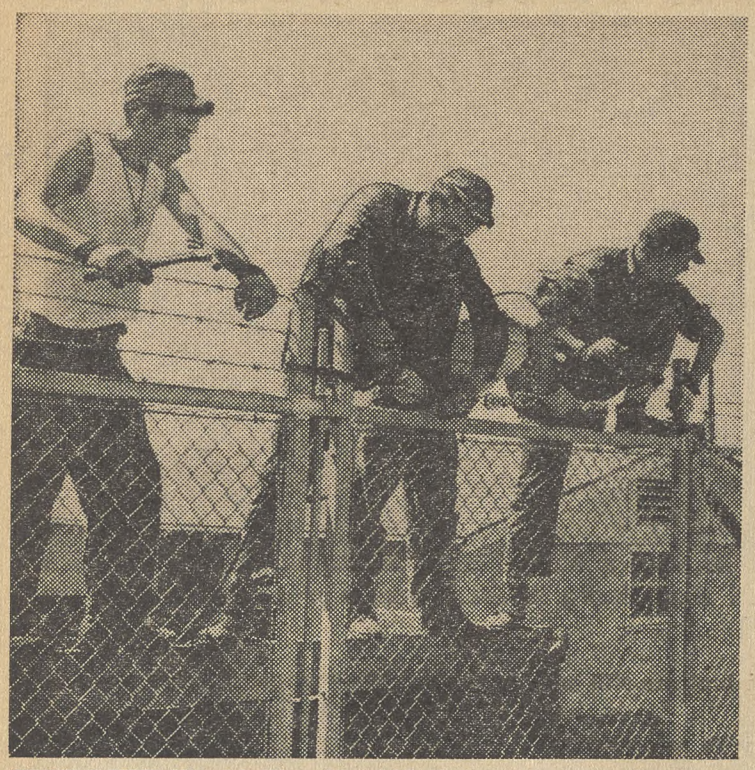
'Can Do'—Steel Workers Give Seabees A Hand



JUST LIKE World War II, skilled American workmen are signing up in the Navy's Seabees to help in defense construction jobs. R. H. Becker (right), a CIO Steelworker from Johnstown, Pa., is in this group.

VETERAN workers are joining with young Seabee recruits in building inter-continental Naval station at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. Among workers on this housing unit is L. W. Ogden, a USA-CIO member from Centerton, Ark. Seabees are building fuel storage facilities at U. S. base in Cuba. This looks like hot work.

UPA Wins Long Strike At Newark

EIGHT HUNDRED CIO Paperworkers last week won their year-long strike at three plants of the Whippany Paper Box Co. in the Newark, N. J., area, despite violent opposition of AFL strikebreakers.

The strikers won a 10c an hour pay increase.

UPA-CIO also gained a semi-annual cost-of-living increase based on the consumers price index, but with no deduction if the index falls.

The UPA members will receive half of their vacation pay for the year they were on strike, and an additional 1½c an hour to be paid by the firm into the company-paid insurance and hospitalization program.

The company, which operates one plant at Clifton and two others at Whippany, also agreed there will be no discrimination against any of the strikers. The terms of the old contract—which contained a union shop clause and several liberal features on vacations, holidays, payments for shift differentials and for overtime Saturday and Sunday work—were retained.

UPA-CIO Sec.-Treas. Frank Grasso participated in the final negotiations for the agreement, which has been ratified by Local 300, Clifton, and Locals 297 and 301, Whippany.

Efforts of the AFL to break the strike reached a climax last April.

Lead pipe, stones and baseball bats were used by the strikebreakers as they sought to reopen the Eden plant of the firm at Whippany.

During the day-long battle at least four persons were injured, including two of the strikebreakers and two older UPA-CIO members.

A month earlier the AFL paperworkers made an unsuccessful effort to open up the plants. When that failed, Steve Wilson appeared on the scene bearing what he claimed was an AFL federal union charter.

Wilson's efforts likewise flopped, and then the strikebreakers went to work. The resulting battle only served to rally the support of all CIO unions in the Newark area behind the UPA-CIO strikers.

IUE Local Gets 70c Hike In 2 Years

IN LESS than two years the CIO Electrical Workers have won for the 5300 employes of the Arma Engineering Corp., Brooklyn, N. Y., wage and fringe benefits totaling almost $1 an hour.

Since the IUE-CIO organized the plant in September 1950 over the opposition not only of the company but of the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers, the CIO union has obtained a 96c an hour total package. Of that, 70c has been in straight wage increases.

In recent negotiations IUE-CIO gained a 10c across-the-board raise, an additional 1c for the inequity fund and a 22c an hour increase in the minimum rate, boosting it from $2.50 to $2.72.

The Arma employes also gained in the recent negotiations a vastly improved pension and welfare program — worth 6½ cents an hour—and a half-day additional holiday, which makes a total of 10 paid holidays.

Sick leave was brought up to 15 days a year with the workers being paid at straight hourly rates for any portion of their sick leave they do not use.

'Timber!' IWA Shares Honors In Musical Show

THE CIO Woodworkers shared honors with a theatrical production on opening night of the musical comedy "Timber" at Vancouver, B. C.

IWA-CIO Sec.-Treas. Carl Winn, who was introduced to the audience of 6000 by Vancouver's Mayor Frank Hume, presented an ax bearing the union's official crest to the producers as a symbol of the IWA-CIO's endorsement of the musical. The show is based on the lumber industry in British Columbia.

Joseph Donati, a member of IWA-CIO Local 1-127, is a member of the show which was presented in the Theater Under the Stars. As a result of his fine work, Donati won the lead tenor role in the theater's production of "Waltz in Old Vienna."

Many IWA-CIO members were in the audience, including a number of loggers dressed in their work clothes including hard hats and cork boots. Others present included Pres. Stewart Alsbury of B. C. District Council 1, IWA-CIO, and the council's First Vice Pres. Stu Hodgson.

Job Level Steady

Industrial employment remained unchanged at 46.3 million in June, after climbing 400,000 in the previous month, according to the U. S. Labor Dept.

UAW Pushes Grievance For Women, Gets $37,000

BECAUSE the CIO Auto Workers went to bat for them, 120 women janitors at Allis-Chalmers have won $37,000 in back pay and a wage increase of 10c an hour.

The back pay average $311 per person for workers in the West Allis, Wis., plant.

In August, 1951, Theresa Weeks and Mary Ujchich filed grievances. The union insisted that women doing the same work as men were entitled to the same pay, and when the company balked, took the case to arbitration.

When the union showed the referee that the contract called for a single classification and job description for male and female janitors, the company shifted its ground and argued for "a common sense or horse sense" approach, saying women just couldn't perform comparably to men.

Countered the union: Even where a woman might be unable to physically perform the same tasks as men, so also were aged men unable to perform certain jobs. The union argued that a woman, 24, weighing 140 pounds, could do as much as a man, 64, who weighed 134 pounds.

Charles Schultz, president of Local 248, UAW-CIO, in announcing the victory at a local meeting, said: "It is conceivable these women when they receive their checks will take at least a half day off to go shopping to spend the checks, but when they are asked to attend a monthly meeting, which is about two hours, they forget." (LPA)

NLRB Stalls Auto Election

THE CIO Auto Workers are still trying, after 15 months, to get a fair election at Spengler-Loomis Mfg. Co. in Rockford, Ill.

There was one April 11 last year, but it had to be set aside because of the company's misbehavior. Another was set for Sept. 12, and again the company began offering benefits that the workers had needed but didn't get before the union began organizing. Again the union had to object, and this time to file unfair labor practice charges.

NLRB Examiner Ralph Winkler found that the company had indeed committed unfair labor practices, and he recommended a cease-and-desist order—but he declined to set aside the election. The NLRB is due to rule in about six months or so.

TWUA Gains 7c In Dyeing Shops

Despite the employers' demand for a 10% wage cut and elimination of the insurance plan, the CIO Textile Workers won a 7c hourly wage increase and other gains for 800 workers in nine New York and Philadelphia skein dyeing shops.

TWUA-CIO also kept the insurance program, extended health benefits to those laid off up to three months, and won eight hours' pay for any day in which four or more hours are worked. The nine plants constitute the majority of the industry which dyes sweater wool prior to knitting.

Landlords Holler As Chicago CIO Fights Decontrol

(See Editorial, Page 4.)

THE LANDLORD LOBBY in the nation's second largest city shouted and booed when the CIO testified in favor of continued rent controls in Chicago last week.

Nearly 700 agents of the property owners jammed the city hall in rowdy disorder. Despite warnings and gavel pounding by Alderman Robert Merriman, chairman of the Chicago Council's Housing Committee, their jeers and stamping of feet drowned out part of the testimony on behalf of tenants.

They failed, however, to keep CIO's revelations of the Chicago landlords' plans to boost rents between 50% and 100% from being printed in nearly every newspaper in the city.

At stake in the fight are the rents paid by tenants in more that 650,000 units. Under the law passed by Congress last session, all rents except in a few critical defense areas will be automatically freed from federal control Sept. 30 unless a city council requests their extension.

SEVEN years after the end of the war finds Chicago with the worst housing shortage to be found in any major American city," Ellsworth Smith, Chicago CIO Council secretary, charged.

"It got this way, not by any recent influx of population, but by consistently, year after year, standing near the bottom of the list of cities in the rate of new construction."

Catcalls from the landlord group greeted this statement.

Although surveys of the situation place the need for new housing units in Chicago between 200,000 and 300,000, spokesmen for the landlord groups denied that a housing shortage exists. Nearly all landlord spokesmen, including R. L. Vanderslice of the Chicago Residential Hotel Association, and William Schmidt of the Property Owners League, charged that "only the CIO was fighting for continued rent controls."

THE CIO position actually was supported at the hearings by a cross-section of Chicago civic organizations. Their representatives received the heckling.

"Kick him out," shouted the would-be rent gougers during the testimony of the Rev. Daniel M. Cantwell, a Catholic priest.

Father Cantwell, who is chairman of the Housing Conference of Chicago and chaplain of the Chicago Labor Alliance, cited a statement by James Downs, the mayor's housing coordinator (who previously lobbied for years in Washington on behalf of the real estate interests), that Chicago is short 100,000 housing units.

He was booed for this, but a tumult of vilification came when he added:

"More accurate statistics place the estimate at 251,000 units."

"Only 17,000 new housing units have been produced in the last 18 months to meet this shortage," Smith brought out during the CIO's testimony. "Buildings that should be condemned or torn down have been converted into so-called new units."

Maurice McElligott, president of the Illinois CIO Council, and representatives of each of the major CIO unions in Chicago joined Smith in making the CIO's presentation. McElligott cited Bureau of Labor Statistics figures showing that the current total vacancy rate in Chicago is less than 1%.

"The significance of that figure," Smith explained, "is that the real estate industry has for years said that a normal situation exists only when there is a vacancy rate of 4% or thereabouts. This means simply that we have not reached the point when rent controls can end."

Smith said that if rent controls are not extended "at this time, when there are 10% to 20% more families bidding than there are homes to go around," the rich would win and the poor would lose out.

CIO Speeds City Action To Keep Lids

ACTION by CIO locals and councils, in cooperation with the CIO National Housing Committee, is given credit for saving rent control in many cities throughout the country.

The CIO has already played a major part in getting the city councils of the following cities to extend rent controls under the new law: New Haven, Bristol and Waterbury, Conn., Lowell and Boston, Mass.; York, McKeesport and Lancaster, Pa.; Perth Amboy, Bayonne, Trenton, Jersey City and Newark, N. J.; East St. Louis, Ill., and Mishawaka, Ind.

The CIO fight to save rent controls in Philadelphia was begun last week. Martin Dunne, chairman of the housing committee of the Philadelphia CIO Council, testified on behalf of continued rent controls before the city council.

MEANWHILE, Economist Robert R. Nathan, speaking over the ABC network under CIO auspices, pointed out that since 1948 average rents have gone up about one-sixth, whereas other items in the consumers' price index have gone up less than one-tenth.

Nathan charged that the real estate lobby is trying to prevent tenants from even learning that they must get their city council to act to save rent controls in their city after Sept. 30.

"The lobbyists would like to keep the whole matter so quiet that rent controls would fade away without tenants knowing anything about it until they suddenly received notices from their landlords about big increases," he pointed out.

Swiss Labor Praises CIO's Tariff Stand

THE CIO's firm stand against attempts to raise the import tariffs on Swiss watch movements has brought a warm note of thanks from the Swiss Trade Union Federation.

Jean Moeri, secretary of the Swiss federation, wrote Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers, who also is chairman of the CIO International Affairs Committee. Moeri said:

"Allow me to thank you very strongly and without delay for the magnificent and speedy response that you have given to our appeal by asking President Truman on July 22nd to reject attempt to raise the import duties on Swiss watches.

"Your speedy action has not surprised us, for we know that one need not appeal in vain to the sentiments of justice and right which animate our brother trade unions in the United States of America."

MOERI said the CIO's arguments against the increased tariffs recommended by the Federal Tariff Commission were "particularly impressive."

"The intervention of your great organization will facilitate the holding of his position by President Truman, who is the great and logical defender of free trades," Moeri continued.

In opposing the increase, Potofsky wrote Truman pointing out that many American workers are employed in the production of cases used to house the Swiss watch movements. He said that Swiss economic conditions would be adversely affected by the imposition of a higher import duty, but that imports of Swiss movements encourage American exports to Switzerland.

Japanese Unions Get CIO, ICFTU Greetings

JAPANESE unionists, meeting for their third convention, heard messages from CIO Pres. Philip Murray and from the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The greetings were brought to the sessions of the General Council of Japan Trade Unions (Sohyo)—whose three million members make it the country's largest—by Willard Townsend, head of the CIO Transport Service Employees.

Townsend went to Japan early in July as a special representative of the ICFTU. It is his third postwar visit to that country.

The CIO official told delegates to the meeting that "it would serve no good purpose" to dwell on past conflicts, and that the "constructive approach is to learn from the past what are the opportunities for the future."

Pointing out that the peoples of the world are dependent on each other in every realm of human activity, he said, "It was upon this premise that the ICFTU was created."

Sharply attacking dictatorships, both Communist and Fascist, as making men slaves of the state, Townsend pointed out that democracy "not only acknowledges the rights of men but fulfills them, at times slowly but surely."

Answering criticisms of the ICFTU, Townsend pointed out that the international labor movement is free of government control and finances.

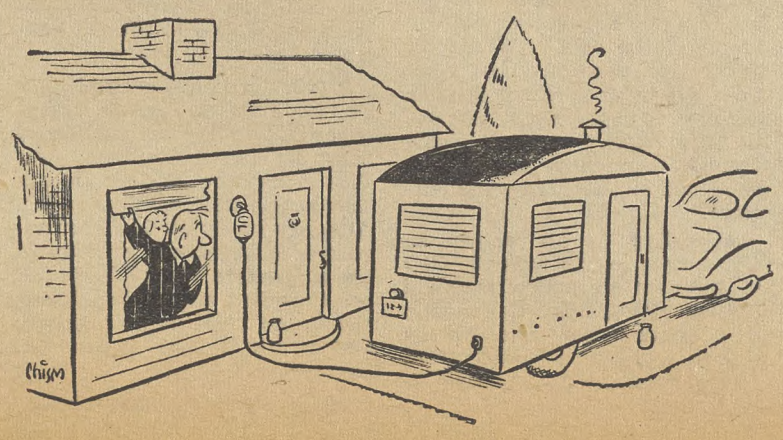
The English language Nippon Times of Tokyo, reported, however, that Sohyo on the final day of the meeting had decided not to seek ICFTU affiliation for the entire non-Communist labor movement in Japan.

The paper indicated that Left-wing Socialists gained majority voting strength at the convention and led the fight against joining ICFTU. Some Japanese unions are directly affiliated to the ICFTU however.

THE UNION federation also voted to cooperate with the Left Socialist party in the next elections, on a program of fighting any candidates who favor rearmament and of opposition to a widely-discussed and freqeuntly criticized anti-subversive activities law. (The ICFTU has condemned the law.)

Susumu Fujita of the electrical union and Minoro Takano were elected chairman and secretary-general of Sohyo, Takano had been criticized by right-wing members of the convention for leading a series of protest strikes against the anti-subversive measure.

Some 150 guards were posted around the convention hall, according to Nippon Times, "to prevent red elements from sneaking into the hall and throwing it into confusion," but no disturbances occurred.



Give A Buck To PAC

Vital In Defense—

Labor Dept. Rebuilds After GOP Ravages

PRESIDENT Truman's program to rebuild the Labor Dept. after the ravages of the Republican-controlled 80th Congress has met with considerable success.

The program has enabled the department to make major contributions to the defense effort.

A new "short history" just issued by the department points up this achievement by discussing for the first time its important emergency activities since Korea.

Through a description of the many mobilization assignments given to the department by both the President and Congress, it underscores the basic importance of American workers to the success of the defense effort.

In the face of its heavy burden of current duties, the following report of the actions by the 80th Congress takes on connotations of wry understatement:

"Activities of the department were curtailed in the fiscal year 1947. The 80th Congress made heavy reductions in appropriations, and passed the Taft-Hartley Act, which transferred the Conciliation Service out of the department and made it an independent agency under the title of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. The department's personnel was cut in half.

"Then in 1948 an appropriation bill rider transferred the U. S. Employment Service to the Federal Security Agency."

Efforts to repair the damage began immediately after the voters had repudiated the 80th Congress by returning a Democratic Congress in 1949. The 81st Congress reversed the latter action in the spring of that year by approval of Reorganization Plan No. 2.

"TO FOSTER, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment" is the purpose Congress declared in creating the U. S. Labor Dept. This new picture of the Labor Dept. Building is the first official photograph taken by telephoto lens from the Washington Monument.

Even the commission on government reorganization headed by former Republican President Hoover had repudiated the 80th Congress by recommending that the Bureau of Employment Security, an expansion of the employment service, be permanently housed in the Labor Dept.

Through three later reorganization orders, which became effective in 1950, President Truman added further to the department's functions and authority.

One of them brought in the Bureau of Employes Compensation, which administers medical care and disability compensation legislation covering almost three million federal employes, longshoremen and harbor workers, etc.

Still another reorganization plan provided for coordination through the Secretary of Labor of enforcement of the labor standards provisions in various laws relating to federal construction and public works or to construction with federally financed assistance. The Secretary also was authorized to prescribe appropriate standards, regulations and procedures, and to make investigations concerning compliance.

In the Defense Production Act of 1950, Congress placed heavy additional burdens in the department, resulting in the creation of the Defense Manpower Administration in the office of the Secretary of Labor. The publication cites seven regular divisions of the department now carrying out major national defense activities, on top of their regular duties.

The latter includes the Bureaus of Employment Security, Apprenticeship, Labor Statistics, Labor Standards, and Women's Bureau, and the Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Divisions.

Tracing the early origins of the forerunners of the Labor Dept. from 1869, when agitation first began for labor representation in the Cabinet, the publication makes clear that the history of the department begins "long before President William Howard Taft, on his last day in office—March 4, 1913—signed the act which created it as an executive department."

"The story is part of the saga of America's workers — their struggle for recognition of their dignity as individuals, their contribution to the economic and social development of the Nation, and their participation in the ideals and bounty of the world's greatest democracy," the booklet declares.

N. Y. CIO Plans Drive To Get Out Big Vote

THE NEW YORK State CIO Council last week set up a 17-man committee to conduct its most effective campaign to get out the vote of labor and "all other social-minded groups" in the November elections.

State CIO Pres. Louis Hollander heads the committee, which includes Harold J. Garno, council secretary-treasurer, and three CIO regional directors, Michael Mann. New York City; Hugh Thompson, Buffalo, and John J. Maurillo, Syracuse.

Hollander said that the new committee will appeal not only to members of CIO unions but to consumer and farm organizations and "all other social-minded groups."

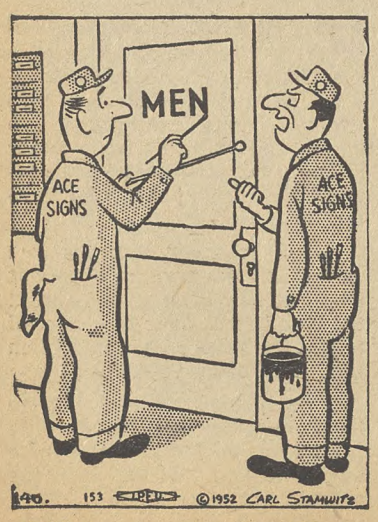
He said the million CIO members in the state—half of them in New York City—will be asked to contribute voluntarily to the campaign, and he was certain the campaign would be "more effective than ever before."

Hollander said that no sentiment in favor of the Republican Party was expressed at the meeting at which the committee was chosen.

"I will not forecast what the full committee will do next week," Hollander said, "but I personally would not endorse the Republican candidates because of what the Republican Party has done in Congress and what it has stood for."

He called attention to the GOP support of the Taft-Hartley Act and its "sabotage" of President Truman's civil rights program.

Other committee members are Charles Rosen, Clothing Workers; James Compton, Electrical Workers; Jack Rubenstein, Textile Workers; Martin Gerber and Charles Kerrigan, Auto Workers; Jack Altman, Department Store Workers; Andrew McMahon, Utility Workers; Joseph T. McNichols and Joseph P. Molony, Steelworkers; Gustav Farber, Transport Workers; William Bryant, Transport Service Employes, and Steve McMullen, Chemical Workers.



"This is a non-union firm, Ed, so why flatter the employees?"

Auxiliaries Of UAW Help Voter Drive

"WE'RE in political action to stay," declares Mrs. Catherine Gelles, secretary of the CIO Auto Workers International Women's Auxiliaries.

Pointing to forecasts that the November elections will show a considerable increase in the number of women voting, Mrs. Gelles reminded candidates that they must woo the ladies' votes if they are going to get to first base.

"Miss or Mrs. American Voter has a great responsibility to face in the November elections," Mrs. Gelles said. "We are out to achieve good government. We are concerned with the world problems and with the problems that face us in our own country."

Since 1932, when only 36% of those casting ballots were women, the percentage of women voters has increased steadily, Mrs. Gelles pointed out.

"The 1952 elections will be unlike any other elections in our lifetime," she said. "What will be decided upon in these elections will be decided not just for the next four years, not just until the next elections come around. Our entire future may be signed and sealed by the outcome."

Appealing to all women in CIO homes to join with the CIO in its political action program through PAC, Mrs. Gelles said that between now and Nov. 4 women should concentrate "every possible effort" on political action.

Martin Dies On Rebound As Texas 'Shiverscrats' Win

FORMER Rep. Martin Dies, who was the first head of the House Un-American Activities Committee, apparently has been re-elected to another term in Congress beginning next January.

Dies was swept to victory in last week's Texas primary as part of the slate of reactionary "Shivercrats." Pro-administration "loyalist" Democrats, led by liberal former Rep. Maury Maverick, were routed as the race-baiting Dixiecrat group led by Gov. Allan Shivers maintained its strong control over the state's election machinery.

Dies got 586,145 votes for congressman at large. That was almost equal to the combined total of 587,794 for his six primary election opponents. His leading opponent, former Lieut. Gov. John Lee Smith, conceded to Dies, thus eliminating a runoff.

Victory in the Democratic election is tantamount to election in Texas, where the Democrats have failed to win the general election only twice.

Shivers, who has been bitterly anti-administration, expressed opposition to the nomination of Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.) for Vice President at the recent Democratic National Convention. Although he earlier had been reported to be planning to throw his support to Gen. Eisenhower for President on the Republican ticket, he reluctantly took the Democratic "loyalty" oath at the convention.

Besides Shivers, who won easy renomination for governor over loyalist Ralph Yarborough, last week's primary gave Price Daniel, Texas attorney general, a better than three-to-one majority over liberal Rep. Lindley Beckworth in the race for the Senate seat that Tom Connally vacates next year. Daniels had led the attempted "states rights" oil land grab.

In an interview last week, Dies announced that he will seek re-assignment to the House Un-American Activities Committee and promised new assaults against "Communism."

When Dies was in Congress before, he was the congressman most quoted on Nazi propaganda broadcasts.

"The manager said he had a yen for me, but I told him that was coolie wages!"

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE HECTIC, drawn out battle in the steel industry is at an end and has resulted in a tremendous victory for the CIO Steelworkers whose ranks remained unshaken through the entire strike.

Pres. Murray has again demonstrated his great leadership in bringing about the gains for his members. After the settlement with the steel companies, agreements rapidly followed for the Great Lakes ore miners and the workers in the aluminum industry.

The writer attended the meeting of the Steelworkers Policy Committee following the strike settlement, to which Benjamin Fairless of U. S. Steel Corps. was invited. Fairless spoke of achieveing better industry-labor relationships in the future and of enlightened leadership in all industries. This is the very thing the CIO Steelworkers have been battling for and will continue to strive toward that goal.

The statements of Pres. Murray and Fairless should be an example to those labor-hating groups who continue to distrupt all attempts at free collective bargaining.

Collective bargaining is one of the bulwarks of democracy in this great country of ours, and has provided happiness and security for millions of American workers. We all must continue our efforts to bring the many unorganized workers under the banner of CIO.

★

THE REPUBLICAN and Democratic "pow-wows" in Chicago are finally at an end.

The Democratic Party nominated Gov. Aldai E. Stevenson of Illinois to carry its banner in the coming presidential election. Of the field, Gov. Stevenson was an excellent choice.

We must all work toward seeing that the Democratic platform is put into effect.

Last week CIO Field Rep. Alexander (Scotty) McKay was stricken with a heart attack in Washington, D. C., and died. I was very sorry to learn of Scotty's death and extend my deepest sympathy to his wife, family and friends.

Jersey CIO Conference On 'Teamwork In Industry'

MORE THAN 100 union officials, businessmen and industrial relations experts went to college two days last week at Rutgers Univ., New Brunswick, N. J., to study how to improve race relations.

The occasion was the second annual "Teamwork in Industry" institute which was sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews in cooperation with the Institute of Management and Labor Relations at Rutgers.

The New Jersey CIO Council joined with State AFL, the State Chamber of Commerce, and the State Division Against Discrimination in sponsoring the meetings.

The general theme was: How Can the Industrial Citizens meet Group Relations Responsibility in the Plant and the Community? Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers presented labor's viewpoint. He spoke on "The Group Relations Responsibility of Labor Organizations."

Pres. Louis Hollander of the New York State CIO Council addressed a luncheon meeting on "Equal Opportunity on the Job and Labor Union Contracts."

Labor consultants included Executive Vice Pres. Ralph B. Novak of the CIO Newspaper Guild; Leo Perlis, director, CIO Community Services Committee; and Brendan Sexton, CIO Auto Workers educational director.

CIO Railroad Workers Meet, Put Steam In Organizing Drive

By ROY GRANATA

IT'S FULL steam ahead for the CIO Railroad Workers. At its second national conference in Washington, the delegates looked over the URRWA-CIO's organizational engine, found it had made good progress during the past year and tightened it up to speed ahead.

Chairman John Green and Sec.-Treas. John Attreed of URRWA-CIO reported that despite attacks of AFL rail unions, assisted by the management of some railroad companies, the CIO union has grown and set the union shop pattern for the entire railroad industry.

On the suggestion of CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, the conference planned to extend their organizational activities to several other railroads.

HAYWOOD commended the officers and delegates on the job they had done during the past year, but he said that there are still more than a million non-operating railroad workers waiting for the chance to come into the CIO family.

URRWA-CIO officers were authorized to reopen all agreements with the railroads to improve working conditions, remove wage inequities and obtain productivity increases.

The delegates also considered URRWA-CIO's present drive on the Pennsylvania Railroad to represent machinists, blacksmiths and sheet metal workers.

Conference speakers included William Lavelle, CIO assistant legislative director; R. J. Thomas, CIO assistant organization director; Chairman Nelson Bortz of the rail and airline division of the Wage Stabilization Board; Harry A. Murphy, Railroad Retirement Board area representative, and Leverett Edwards of the National Mediation Board.

"WELCOME," says Chairman John Green of the CIO Railroad Workers to Assistant Labor Sec. Robert T. Creasey, who spoke at URWA's second national conference at Washington.

Labor Dept. To Study Textile Wage Hike

The Labor Dept. will hold a public hearing at Washington Sept. 4 to consider boosting the 87c an hour minimum wage paid under the Walsh-Healey Act—which both the CIO and AFL Textile Workers have requested.

URRWA Backs Stevenson As 'Fair Deal' Candidate

THE CIO Railroad Workers is the first national union to endorse Gov. Adlai E. Stevenson of Illinois for President of the United States.

URRWA-CIO, which was holding its second national conference at Washington, acted a few hours after Stevenson was nominated at the Democratic National Convention at Chicago.

The 105 delegates to the conference, representing 75,000 railroad workers throughout the nation, unanimously passed a resolution pledging "all our physical and moral resources to the end that Adlai Stevenson is elected the next president of the United States."

"The nominee of the Democratic Party for the Presidency of the United States, Adlai Stevenson, has subscribed to the principles and the practices of Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry S. Truman," the resolution said.

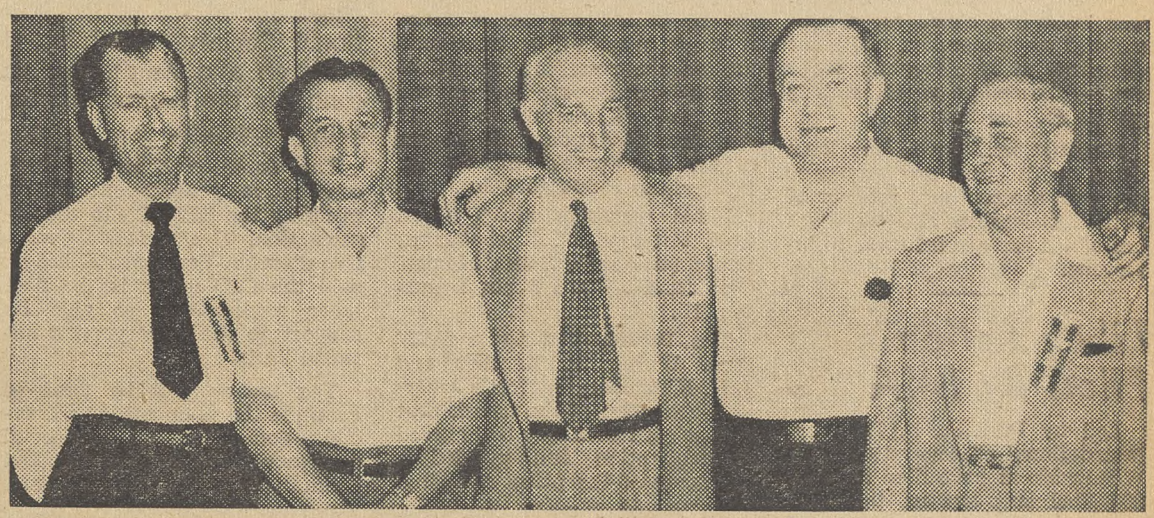
"He has pledged that he will be the candidate of all the people and will concern himself with the welfare of all the people.

"He has adopted as his own the platform of the Democratic Party. This platform fearlessly sets forth the dreams, the ideals and the desires of the nation as a whole and the United Railroad Workers of America, CIO, particularly."

Assistant Labor Sec. Robert T. Creasey warned the delegates of the danger of returning the Republican Party to power. Creasey, who was formerly president of old Division 10 of the CIO Communications Workers, said:

"It is all very well for the Republican Party leaders to 'view with alarm' programs of our Democratic Administrations . . . The leaders of the Republican Party have offered no constructive program through which they would change our economy . . .

"If you have any doubts about where the Republican Party stands, read the anti-labor plank in their platform. You will see praise of the Taft-Hartley Act, but no praise of the workers or their unions . . . "



A HAPPY occasion was the second national conference of the CIO Railroad Workers at Washington. From the left, URRWA Sec. Treas. Eugene Attreed, Michael Mann, CIO regional director, New York City; Sec.-Treas. Gustav Faber of CIO Transport Workers; R. J. Thomas, CIO assistant director of organization, and URRWA Chairman John Green. Note the smiles on all faces.

CWA Gains 11c In 17 New Pacts With Bell Firms

SINCE TELEPHONE workers in several states conducted successful strikes last spring, the CIO Communications Workers have negotiated and obtained Wage Stabilization Board approval of pay increases averaging 11.38c an hour for 249,150 Bell System employes.

These pay boosts are contained in contracts negotiated with 17 Bell System companies, CWA reported last week.

In addition, eight other contracts with Bell System firms covering 23,150 have been negotiated and are awaiting WSB approval. These are with Western Electric and the Pacific, West Virginia and Maryland Bell operating companies.

Annual cost of the pay hikes —approved and pending—for the total of 272,300 workers runs to almost $65 million.

Agreements approved last week and covering 190,900 workers were with American Tel. & Tel. (the parent company of the Bell System), Western Electric, Chesapeake & Potomac of D. C., Southern Bell, Southwestern Bell, Illinois Bell, Indiana Bell, Mountain States, Wisconsin Bell, and Cincinnati and Suburban Bell.

APPROVED earlier by WSB were other agreements covering 58,250 Bell System workers in Western Electric, Bell Laboratories, and the Michigan, Ohio Pacific and New Jersey Bell companies. All companies are AT&T subsidiaries.

Negotiations are under way on the five remaining CWA-AT&T contracts which expire between now and Aug. 18 and cover 46,000 workers.

The settlements won in the strikes last spring generally set the pattern of the subsequent agreements.

The new agreements give CWA members their second round of pay increases under the wage stabilization program. Earlier contracts, negotiated late in 1950 and early in 1951, provide increases averaging slightly more than 10c an hour.

IN RHINELANDER, Wis., 32 CWA members had to convince the independent Rhinelander Telephone Co. that they meant it when they said they would strike to back up the contract demands.

When the company refused to raise wages and grant other contract changes, the employes voted to walk out.

The union let the company take its case direct to the members—who listened to management's explanation — and then went on strike.

Convinced that the CWA members weren't kidding, the company settled with the union after one-day strike. CWA won pay raises of $2 to $7 a week, separation pay clause, other fringe improvements, and telephone service at half rate.

THE SMALL but militant Nashua, N. H., Newspaper Guild, CIO, is on strike after negotiations of more than a year failed to produce a contract and brought only substandard offers from the publisher. The AFL Teamsters but not the AFL printing unions are respecting the picket line. CIO and other AFL unions are helping the Guild.

Pact Sought In Canadian IWA Walkout

ON REQUEST of the CIO Woodworkers, a government mediator is seeking to settle the long strike of some 30,000 IWA members in British Columbia.

Chief Justice Gordon Sloan of the B. C. Court of Appeals has entered the dispute, on request of the IWA's provincial district council.

More than 100 logging, sawmill, plywood and shingle operators in the coastal area of British Columbia were struck in mid-June by the wood union. The IWA had asked for a substantial wage increase, while the operators at first sought a wage cut — despite record-setting profits for the industry.

Negotiations have broken down with another employer group in the southern interior of British Columbia, and the IWA has asked for a conciliator to intervene.

Libel Action Filed By IWA

Led by Pres. A. F. Hartung, international officers of the CIO Woodworkers have filed a $250,000 libel suit against the AFL Carpenters and its affiliated Lumber & Sawmill Workers.

The action, filed in U. S. District Court in Coeur d'Alene, Ida., is based on AFL attacks on the IWA's health and welfare plan.

Panel Named On Plane Pact

PRESIDENT TRUMAN last week named a three-man arbitration panel in the five-month wage dispute between the CIO Auto Workers and North American Aviation, sole maker of the Air Force's best combat fighter, the F-86 Sabre Jet.

Panel members are David Cole, Paterson, N. J., chairman; Benjamin Aaron, Santa Monica, Calif., and Willard Wirtz, Evanston, Ill.

The President wrote UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther and J. H. Kindelberger, North American chairman of the board, that he was glad that they had agreed to arbitration and avoided a shutdown of the plane company.

UAW and North American agreed, at a meeting in Washington several weeks ago, to submit the dispute to a special fact-finding arbitration board named by the President. The board's recommendations will be binding, it was agreed.

Finet Nominated As Labor Aide To Schuman Plan

PAUL FINET of Belgium, first president of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, has been nominated as a worker representative on the "High Authority" of the Schuman Plan.

The Plan, ratified by France, Western Germany and a number of other European countries, calls for bold new plans to unify production and distribution of west Europe's steel and coal industries.

The Finet recommendation was made at a Paris meeting of representatives of the ICFTU and the Intl. Confederation of Christian Trade Unions. P. J. S. Serrarens, former ICCTU general secretary, was nominated for the Court of Justice of the Schuman Plan.

It was agreed that the ICFTU will have 12 delegates and the ICCTU five on the Schuman Plan Consultative Committee.

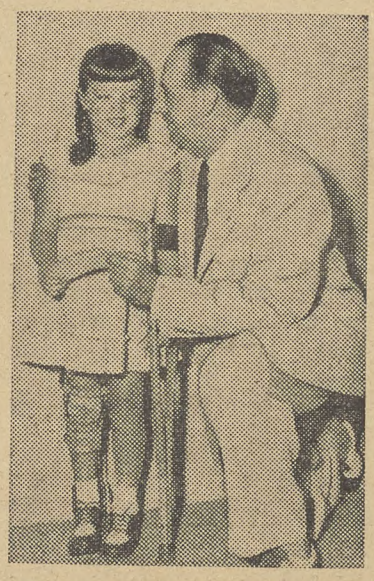
CIO Brewers Give $2000 To Help Crippled Children

THE CIO Brewery Workers last week presented a check for $2076 to the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults, which conducts the annual Easter Seal campaign.

The donation was the fifth consecutive yearly contribution made by the BW-CIO to the organization. The society's executive director, Lawrence J. Linek, said the CIO union is the first labor organization to give its support to the society on a national basis.

The money will be used to continue the financing of a traveling demonstration of special equipment used to train crippled children to walk, talk and lead happy, useful lives.

"Little Miss Hopeful of 1952, eight-year-old Marilyn Phillips, Chicago, accepted the check on behalf of the society from Joseph E. Brady, Cincinnati, Coordinator of State Councils of BW-CIO.



"LITTLE Miss Hopeful of 1952," Marilyn Phillips, 8, of Chicago, accepts a $2076 check from Joseph E. Brady, Coordinator of CIO Brewery Workers State Councils.

Chrysler Bows—

UAW Gains To 33c In New Orleans Strike

AFTER a month-long strike, CIO Auto Workers have forced Chrysler to extend its national agreement with the UAW-CIO to its big tank engine plant in New Orleans.

The strike settlement also won "substantial wage increases" for 1100 workers in the New Orleans plant.

Immediate wage boosts will be from 18c to 33c an hour plus —under the national agreement terms—cost of living and 4c annual productivity increases.

Dir. Norman Matthews of the UAW's National Chrysler Dept. said that the agreement represents the largest economic package negotiated for workers in the New Orleans area, although the UAW is not entirely satisfied with all of the terms.

The strike also won the UAW members these other benefits:

Vacation payments ranging from 40 to 120 hours' pay, 5% and 7½% night shift premium, six paid holidays, overtime pay of time and a half for over eight hours work per day or 40 hours per week, double time for Sundays and holidays, improved hospitalized insurance for the workers and their families with the company paying half the premium, $3600 life insurance and $32 per week sick and accident benefits.

The strike was voted 893-to-8 when Chrysler officials at the New Orleans plant refused to extend the National UAW Agreement to the Louisiana operation. Chrysler insisted on a separate, local contract, although Ford workers in New Orleans are covered by the national UAW Ford agreement.

The tank plant workers have voted approval of the agreement.

Klan Wizard Gets 4-Year Jail Term In Flogging Case

THE IMPERIAL Wizard of the Carolinas Ku Klux Klan last week was sentenced at Whitefield, N. C., to four years in prison in connection with a wave of floggings.

The wizard, Thomas L. Hamilton, had pleaded guilty to participating in an attack by "40 to 50 men" on three Negroes in their home. Mrs. Evergreen Flowers was flogged, but her husband, Will, and another resident, Mrs. Bessie Page, escaped the mob.

Another one of the defendants, District Grand Kleagle Joe Harden, was handed a shorter prison sentence. Lesser jail terms were given a number of other defendants, and still others received suspended terms and fines ranging up to $1500 each.

Special Congress Session Hinted To Overhaul Price Control Law

—SEE PAGE 2

WEARING MASKS because they fear evictions by angry landlords in reprisal for fighting against decontrol, women tenants parade in Milwaukee in developing national fight to keep rent ceilings. Milwaukee landlords won one round, and the BLS rent index in that city now is nation's second highest, but the fight has been revived. More than a score of major cities have voted to keep rent ceilings, after campaigns often led by CIO Councils. For a nation-wide survey of the rent control situation, and how cities can act to save ceilings, see page 3.

Congress Recall Hinted As Prices Climb Higher

PREDICTING that living costs will hit new record peaks every month for a year unless there is remedial action, Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall said last week "it may be necessary" for President Truman to call a special session of Congress to repair price controls.

Arnall called on President Truman to give him the low-down on price rises.

At a press conference, Truman said later he was considering calling a special session of Congress to deal with the sole subject of rising prices. He gave no indication when he might call the session if he finds it necessary.

Arnall said that the 1.2% increase in food costs during the June-July 1952 period was the greatest in any month in the history of the country.

He was backed up by Economic Stabilizer Roger L. Putnam, who agreed that higher prices are coming and blamed Republicans for weakening anti-inflation controls.

Both spoke shortly after the Bureau of Labor Statistics announced that retail food prices had jumped 1.2% in the first two weeks of July to boost the cost of living to another all-time high. The food index stood at 235.1 on July 15.

This means that it now takes slightly more than $2.35 to buy what $1 would get in foods in 1935 to 1939.

Arnall predicted that food price increases will be "constant and steady" in the months ahead and that consumers would feel the spiraling cost of living "very severely."

He criticized the "inadequate" price control law written by the "Horsemeat" Congress at the last session, which prevents the Office of Price Stabilization from controlling the prices of all fruits and vegetables and gives it only limited controls over other food items.

Arnall also pointed out that his agency has been forced to fire more than half its employes because of meat-ax appropriations cuts "at a time when the cost of living is the highest in the nation's history."

ON TOP of this, he said, the drought that hit a dozen states not only will have "a disastrous effect" upon thousands of farmers but also "will mean disaster to your pocketbook."

"In the months ahead this increase in the price of food, in my judgment, will be constant and steady," Arnall declared. "If things continue to get out of hand, it may be necessary for Congress to reassemble and give OPS the power to do the job for you."

Besides the serious drought over the South and New England, the prolonged recent heat spell also resulted in a sharp reduction of marketable food supplies, and this in turn has exerted an inflationary influence on pricing.

The record cost of living has already pinched consumers severely. "The government reported that the American people went into hock to the tune of $593 million in June, on top of a $447 rise in May. For 1952, up to June 30, the total debt of installment buyers was a record $13.8 billion. Counting loans for autos and charge accounts, the grand total of consumer credit was $20.3 billion.

COMMENTING on the actions of the "Horsemeat" Congress, Putnam said that "there's just no question that the Republican Party was voting to cripple controls. The Democrats were fighting to keep the power of controls where they're needed."

Pointing to the dizzy peaks to which food prices have risen since they were decontrolled in the last session, Putnam added:

"The people who decontrolled them were Republicans and I think that's a very real campaign issue."

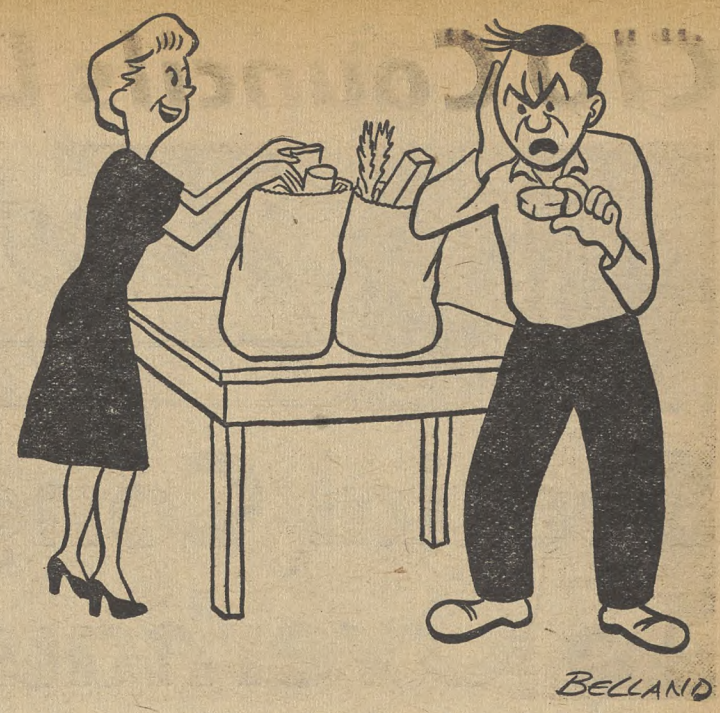
Arnall's hint of a special session recalled that—when a similar situation of run-away prices was brought on by the Republican-controlled 80th Congress—President Truman brought it back and asked for action on a 10-point program. The "awful 80th" rejected effective action and the price merry-go-round continued whirling.

Food Price Index Hits Year's Peak

A marked rise in the price of meat brought the wholesale food price index to the year's highest level in the week ended Aug. 5.

Dun and Bradstreet, business firm which maintains the barometer, said the index stood at $6.65 for the week. That is 2c above the preceding week and 1c above the previous high of $6.64 set the first of the year.

The index represents the sum total of the wholesale price per pound of 31 commonly used foods. The sharpness of the meat price hike is indicated by the fact that on other items price declines, due largely to seasonal factors, outnumbered advances.



"Don't get excited dear, they haven't cut the size of the loaf, yet. That's a free sample."

Tune In 'Issues Of The Day;' 2 Cities Add CIO-TV Show

CIO's TELEVISION series, "Issues of the Day", completed a 13-week run over WDTV-TV in Pittsburgh last week, just as Minneapolis and Columbus moved on to the TV log.

Presently the 15-minute program, jointly produced by CIO and the CIO Political Action Committee, is being presented in seven cities. Following is the present program series:

City	Station	Day	Hour
Chicago	WBKB-TV	Tuesday	10:45 p. m.
Cincinnati	WCPO-TV	Sunday	1:00 p. m.
Columbus	WTVN-TV	Wednesday	6:30 p. m.

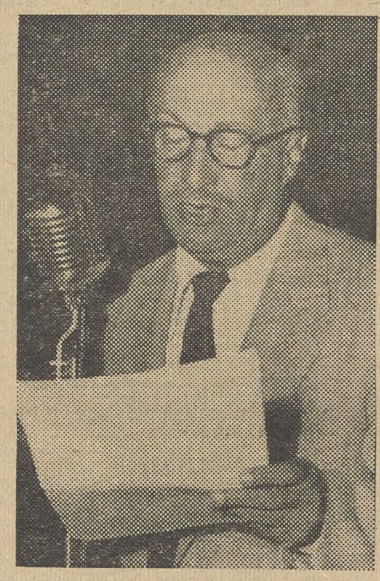
Chicago CIO Asks Protests Against Rent Hike Move



CASE for keeping rent lids is presented by Chicago CIO Sec.-Treas. Ellsworth Smith.

THE CHICAGO CIO last week called for a mass protest against action by a city council subcommittee calling for rental increases of 10% to 15%.

CIO's protest came within a few hours of announcement by the City Council Housing Committee that it would recommend extension of federal controls with the proviso that rents go up in this fashion:

1. Increases of 15% for buildings of six flats or less in which the owner lives.
2. Increases of 10% for other rental housing.
3. Elimination of controls for "luxury apartments," described as unfurnished units renting in excess of $35 a room to a total of at least $105 a month and furnished units renting in excess of $45 a room to a total of at least $135 a month.

Charging the council move was "inflationary," Pat Greathouse, director of UAW-CIO Region 4, called for a wave of protests to Chicago's mayor and city council.

Appearing on the first of a series of 13 CIO television broadcasts in the Chicago area, Greathouse reiterated the Chicago's CIO firm stand for continuation of rent control "in its present form."

In its action, the city council subcommittee admitted the housing shortage continued unrelieved in Chicago.

CIO Board, PAC Sessions Set In Capital

A SERIES of important CIO meetings have been scheduled this week in Washington.

CIO's executive officers and vice-presidents get together Wednesday morning, Aug. 13, at CIO headquarters for their first meeting since the Democratic party convention. That afternoon, the CIO Political Action Committee will meet.

The CIO Executive Board—consisting of one representative from each national union and organizing committee, plus the CIO executive officers and vice-presidents—meets on Aug. 14 at the Congressional Room of the Willard Hotel in the nation's capital.

Next day, on Friday, Aug. 15, the CIO-PAC is bringing into Washington an estimated 400 political action people from unions and councils throughout the country for an all-day session. That meeting will be held at the Grand Ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel.

On Friday, at 12:30 P. M., all the delegates attending the session will go to the White House, where they will be greeted by President Truman.

UPA Gets New Vote By NLRB Decision

The NLRB has ruled that Jackson Garment Co., at Jackson, Tenn., must stop bullying its employes on their union activity. It set aside an election of April 1951 lost by the CIO Paperworkers as a result of the company's tactics.

The company had help. A supplier of dress patterns had had the run of the shop to instruct workers on the use of the patterns, and had used the opportunity to talk against the union. Company officials testified they even let him make a speech to a captive audience of workers so as "not to hurt his feelings."

CIO Councils Lead Fight For Rent Lids

THREATS FAILED—Despite a vicious beating and warning to stay away from East Chicago city council, Pres. George Lamb voted to keep rent lids. But landlords won.

CHAMBERS of the Chicago City Council were jammed with tenants as the resolution for continuing rent control came up for action. Landlords booed CIO, church and tenant representatives. Final decision of Chicago council is pending.

By AL ZACK

HOW IS YOUR budget these days?

Can it stand a 35 to 50% increase (if you are lucky) on just one item—rents?

Can you afford to spend 35 to 50% of your monthly income for rent?

Well, brother, hang on to your hat. That's just what one of the best-heeled lobby groups in America has in mind for you.

Under the terms of the rent control bill passed by the 82d Congress, just before it hit the campaign trail, the real estate lobby is riding high.

Congress virtually killed rent controls, as of Sept. 30, except in two instances:

1. For communities declared critical housing areas.

2. For communities where local governments specifically request an extension of controls. Such continuation would only be until next Apr. 30.

This action pleased the real-estate lobby, which had long fought for an end to rent ceilings.

It believed local governments would knuckle under to its pressure and fail to vote to continue controls. It also believed tenants would be unorganized and unable to cut through the official red tape wrapped around the "critical housing" classification.

But the real estate interests forget to reckon with the CIO and other labor and tenant groups.

In 19 cities of more than 100,000 population, CIO has already successfully led the fight to preserve controls. But only slightly more than three million persons are thus protected.

IN ALL, six million American families face a new budget crisis on Sept. 30, unless prompt action is taken.

Ending of controls would mean rent increases ranging from 20% on higher-priced homes to 50 to 100% boosts on homes in the lower and middle-income brackets. That's the official prediction of Tighe E. Woods, rent stabilizer.

Concrete example of what happens when rent controls vanish is contained in the Bureau of Labor Statistics' consumer price index.

Highest listing in the BLS rent index goes to Birmingham, Ala., the first city where rents were decontrolled. In Birmingham, rents have gone up steadily, until today the BLS rent index for Birmingham is 205.4.

In contrast is New York City, where the BLS rent index stands at 118.7. Incidentally, New York state tenants have no fears of increases resulting from the new federal law, for New York has a state rent control law.

Evidence of what lies ahead for tenants in decontrolled areas comes not only from the record of what took place in other cities, but from the real estate lobby itself.

Testifying before Congress, Leo Goodman, director of the CIO National Housing Committee, revealed the intent of the real estate interests was to peg rents at from 35 to 50% of a tenant's monthly income during periods of housing shortages.

Goodman quoted from the standard textbook of the National Association of Real Estate Boards and backed up his quote with documentary evidence. The congressmen expressed amazement. But Congress voted to give the landlords a blank check for rent increases.

But the landlords can be stopped. Already, in a number of major communities, they have been stopped through drives spark-plugged by CIO councils.

In other areas, campaigns are now underway to salvage rent control, and thus provide city dwellers with some bulwark against the flood tides of inflation.

There are two methods by which controls can be salvaged, Goodman advised.

First is to institute a campaign to get the community declared a "critical housing" area.

The other is a campaign to get the local government body to request continuation of rent control. (Details on how both of these campaigns can be waged are outlined elsewhere on this page.)

While more red tape surrounds the campaign to win a "critical housing area" designation, Goodman pointed out that it was more effective and more lasting.

CIO campaigned for special legislation for critical housing areas, he pointed out, to protect workers in communities where a sharp increase in defense work meant an influx of new workers.

But for all areas where a housing shortage continues and where tenants would be hard hit by the lifting of controls, action by the local government will protect tenants at least until next Apr. 30.

A simple resolution by a city council, testifying that a housing shortage still exists and requesting continuation of federal controls, will do the trick.

A city council could also call for a local referendum on continuation of controls, a method the real estate lobby would undoubtedly fight vigorously.

The record shows that in every industrial community where the voters have had a chance to express an opinion on continuation of controls, the vote has been overwhelmingly in favor of this protection for tenants.

Only in a handful of resort communities, where summer visitors pay the freight, have the people voted to end controls.

Goodman pledged the full cooperation and technical assistance of the CIO Housing Committee, to any local CIO council taking up the fight against the real estate interests.

In most communities, the only group standing between tenants and a wholesale gouging by profit-happy landlords in the local CIO council.

In some cities they have already won the battle. In others, they've just begun to fight.

Tenants Face Rent Boosts, If Big Cities Fail To Act

Here's how the major cities, where federal rent control existed, shape up in the present battle to continue this protection for tenants:

The first paragraph lists cities which have acted to preserve controls. The second lists those areas where the battle continues. The third, and longer, list is of communities where tenants are definitely in danger.

Tenants Safe: Boston, Mass., Newark, N. J., Jersey City, N. J., New Haven, Conn., Springfield, Mass., Trenton, N. J., Fall River, Mass., New Bedford, Mass., Waterbury, Conn., Lynn, Mass., Lowell, Mass., E. St. Louis, Ill., Lawrence, Mass., Bayonne, N. J., Lancaster, Pa., York, Pa., Passaic, N. J., McKeesport, Pa., Hoboken, N. J., Pittsburgh, Pa., Philadelphia, Pa.

Tenants, Half-Safe: Chicago, Ill., Detroit, Mich., Baltimore, Md., Cleveland, O.

Tenants Not Safe: St. Louis, Mo., San Francisco, Calif., New Orleans, La., Minneapolis, Minn., Cincinnati, Ohio, Seattle, Wash., Kansas City, Mo., Denver, Colo., Memphis, Tenn., Columbus, O., Louisville, Ky., Atlanta, Ga., St. Paul, Minn., Toledo, O., Akron, O., Providence, R. I., Dayton, O., Worcester, Mass., Des Moines, Iowa, Nashville, Tenn., Youngstown, O., Paterson, N. J., Gary, Ind., Erie, Pa., Shreveport, La., Scranton, Pa., Camden, N. J., Cambridge, Mass., Canton, O., South Bend, Ind., Elizabeth, N. J., Wilmington, Del., Evansville, Ind., Reading, Pa., Allentown, Pa., Duluth, Minn., Somerville, Mass.

"You can also use it to haul groceries — if you happen to be in the upper brackets!"

Here's How Councils Can Act To Stop Rent Decontrol Drive

Here are two ways CIO councils or local unions can act to save rent controls:

1. Get the community designated as a "critical housing area."

Applications should be directed to the new streamlined ODM Defense Areas Advisory Committee, Lafayette Building, Washington 25, D. C. Copies should be sent to Leo Goodman, director, CIO National Housing Committee, 734 15th St., N. W., Washington, D. C., for a follow-up.

Councils should be prepared to provide the following evidence to back up the application:

Proof of defense contracts in the area. (Any local union would have this information about its plant.)

Proof of a shortage of housing. (Goodman's office will supply detailed facts on any community. A housing shortage exists if there's less than 10% vacancies in housing that's not in slum areas.)

Proof of in-migration of workers. (In areas where CIO members on Labor-Management Manpower Commission, this evidence is easily available. In other areas, a check of union membership cards since June, 1950, will provide this material.)

2. Organize a campaign to get the local government to request continuation of controls.

All that is needed is proof of a housing shortage, available from Goodman's office.

The rent control office can also provide the number of applications for rent increases, the number granted and the amounts granted. This is public information and proves that landlords with legitimate reasons for increasing rents, have been able to do so.

Coming Home To Roost

The rotten eggs hatched by Congress when it voted the new Defense Production Act are turning into ugly ducklings.

Some two months after the Dixiegops of both Houses gutted what strength there was in the old DPA and then voted what they had the gall to call an "anti-inflation law," this is the situation:

- Prices are on another runaway jag, meaning even greater hardship for all working people and consumers. The BLS consumer price index is at an all-time high.
- Food prices are going up faster than ever before. Between June and July, they went up by 1.2%, Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall revealed last week. That was greater than any past period, even the weeks of gouging by commodity speculators after the Communists began war in Korea.
- Tenants all over the nation face the spectre of no lids on their rents. In every major city where rent ceilings exist, organized landlords are pushing for decontrol by Sept. 30; they'll be stopped only by the strongest effort.

Last week Price Stabilizer Arnall went to the White House to warn President Truman that the price situation is getting "out of hand"—which is putting it mildly—and that he should call Congress back into special session to write a real price control law.

The President said he is considering recalling Congress. Commendably, he has rushed millions in government aid to drought-stricken farm areas. Consumers—for whom the drought means just one more pressure on prices—deserve equally prompt action.

Shortage of Steel

The effects of the steel strike, in terms of production of certain military items, may be felt seriously for three or six months, according to the Office of Defense Molilization.

In view of all the newspaper publicity about those shortages, it may be well to keep in mind who wanted the steel strike and who wanted to avoid it.

For the record, once more, it was the CIO Steelworkers that voluntarily postponed strike action for more than three months in a futile effort to avoid a shutdown.

It was the steel industry spokesmen and their friends who talked so casually about "there are many things worse than a strike. . . ."

And, you may recall, it was USA-CIO Pres. Murray who said last April, "A strike seems inevitable. But the strike should be recognized for what it is—a strike by the steel industry, against the government, against our Union, and against the American people."

Keep those facts in mind—when you hear people trying to place the blame for steel shortages on the steel workers and their union.

Sports Note

The Czechoslovakian Communist government had better keep a firm eye on Emil Zatopek, the Olympic champ who won the 5000 meter race, the 10,000 meter race, and the marathon. Zatopek looks to us like the one man in Czechoslovakia who might be able to out-run the secret police!

Torture Rule In Venezuela

The U. S. should "do some quiet but effective arm-twisting" to stop torture jailing of democratic oil unionists in Venezuela, the CIO Oil Workers said last week. An editorial in the International Oil Worker, OWIU paper, gave this report on the situation in oil-rich Venezuela, "one of Wall Street's richest colonies."

RIGHT ON THE doorstep of the United States a vicious military dictatorship is persecuting and torturing our brother oil workers. We think the U. S. government should do something about it.

We refer to Venezuela, where a military junta is carrying on brutalities and tortures which we doubt have been matched in the 20 Century except by Hitler.

Principal victims of the barbarities of the Venezuelan dictatorship are the leaders of democratic oil unions in Venezuela.

These union leaders have been tortured in bestial fashion in the prisons of Caracas. A few of them have escaped to live in exile in other nations. Most of them are now rotting to death in the concentration camp of Guasima which is on a disease-riden jungle island in the delta of the Orinoco River. This island has no shelter for its 800 political prisoners. Food is insufficient. Despite the extremely unhealthy nature of the place there is not a single doctor.

These things are happening in a country which, in today's air age, is quite close to our shores. Yet there seems to be in America a conspiracy of silence concerning this western hemisphere toehold of dictatorship.

The newspaper have in general ignored this situation. The only daily paper we know of which has printed anything about it is the New York Times. The commercial press conveniently ignores the Venezuelan situation even though it has plenty of space to report slave conditions in the remainder of the world.

We are not surprised that the daily press has rung down a curtain of silence, but we have clung to the hope that the U. S. government would do or say something about this outcropping of despotism so near our borders.

This newspaper, as well as some others in the trade union field, has called attention several times to the atrocities in Venezuela. International trade union organizations have reported the conditions. The situation has been called to the attention of the U. S. government.

We think our government should do something about it. We do not suggest that gunboats should be dispatched nor that Marines should be landed, as was done in previous decades to protect American capital south of the border. We merely suggest that the government do some quiet but effective arm-twisting down in Venezuela. And we suggest that the U. S. loudly call attention of the United Nations to the Venezuelan situation.

Some people may reply that it is none of the United States' business what goes on in Venezuela. That's a nice thought from a naively idealistic point of view but in the light of 1952 practical politics it is pure hypocrisy. Our government has stuck its nose into the affairs of nearly every nation on the face of the earth at one time or another when it has served the interests of this nation and its security to do so.

In interfering with the Venezuelan dictatorship the U. S. probably would be running into a head-on battle with American capitalism. Venezuela is one of Wall Street's richest colonies.

WE BECOME sick at the stomach when we think of the fact that American oil companies are in the midst of the act in Venezuela.

Restoration of democracy and free trade unions to Venezuela might result in higher labor costs for the U. S. oil companies. A fraction of a penny might be shaved from each profit dollar. Obviously the U. S. oil companies don't relish that idea. They had rather see human beings killed by slow torture than to see the Holy Dollar of Profits slightly nicked.

Whether the U. S. government is strong enough to do anything disapproved of by Standard Oil and its kowtowing comtemporaries is doubtful. We cling to the hope, however, that somewhere in Washington there is a man who will say something.

Even a word of sympathy and recognition from the United States of America, home base of liberty, would give new hope and courage to the brave men who are dying for the cause of liberty in Venezuela.

We of Oil Workers International Union, along with our brothers to the south, are listening intently for that word.

Book Review—

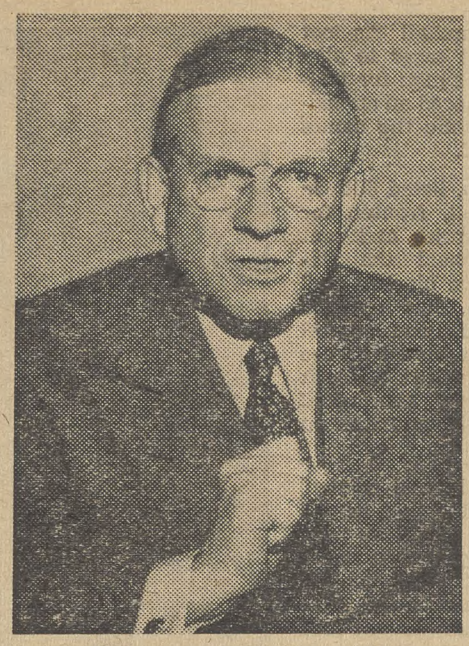
Randall Takes Dim View Of Business Leaders

CLARENCE RANDALL, the president of Inland Steel Co., is disturbed because more businessmen don't write books in support of free enterprise.

So he has written "A Creed for Free Enterprise"—a book described by its publishers as "a ringing statement of faith in the American system of free enterprise, by the most trenchant spokesman for our heavy industry."

Mr. Randall gained considerable attention as a "spokesman for heavy industry" in the recent steel dispute when, during a four-network radio and TV broadcast, he claimed that Pres. Truman's seizure of the steel mills was the result of a "deal" with Philip Murray. Murray promptly called Randall's statement a "malicious and deliberate lie."

Inland Steel has been working under contracts with the United Steelworkers for many years. But Randall's book, which reflects a good deal of the atmosphere of the thinking of the Calvin Coolidge "golden age of business," is considerably less than enthusiastic about the influence of labor in America.



CLARENCE B. RANDALL
Pounds the table in his telecast blasting steelworkers, Truman.

LIKE Calvin Coolidge, Randall sees America as a temple in which the businessman is—or should be—the all-wise high priest. The trouble is that too many businessmen are too busy making profits to care; and the people of the nation aren't content to sit around waiting for them to develop either a social conscience or a flair for leadership.

All that makes Clarence Randall unhappy—and his book is full of criticism of his business friends and associates; he's so mad at his friends, in fact, that he doesn't have too much time to be mad at labor.

Randall is moved, at every phrase and every page, by the ideal of "pure" free enterprise without that government "interference" which his cronies like to describe as "creeping socialism."

But that viewpoint leads to contrasts and contradictions. The country is more prosperous today than ever before—and the business free enterprisers are busy running to Washington not only for buying orders but for loans, for subsidies, for tax favors—and for Taft-Hartley anti-labor injunctions.

As a result, Mr. Randall is deeply unhappy because so few businessmen realize what he considers to be the threats to their corporate way of life.

Some businessmen, he notes, have a "naive belief . . . that we may leave to others the defense of free enterprise." But Randall of Inland Steel knows better: "There are no others."

People from the trade unions, he would have you believe, "though sometimes giving lip service to free enterprise in public speeches . . . seek constantly to destroy the leadership upon which it rests."

Clarence Randall would have great difficulty proving that statement—and he offers some disproof of his own a few pages later, with the words:

"If labor unions continue to keep management men on their toes, and if we in turn have the courage and intelligence to hold them up to high standards of responsibility, the greater stability that we all seek may be closer at hand than we now believe."

Clarence Randall takes a dim view of his generation's business leaders. They have, he says, "one severe handicap to overcome in achieving public leadership. Our approach to social questions is apt to be negative. Our habit of thought is to be against things, and we have little skill in creating concepts that other people will be for. We have raised invective to a fine art . . .

"So often we argue only by declaration and vituperation, striving to beat down the opposition solely by the noise our voices make, without sensing that no one is listening.

"We do, however, thus reveal the shallowness of our understanding, and strengthen the suspicion of the public that our fervor is based solely on a selfish desire to preserve the status quo, in which we are thought to be a privileged class."

Strong words, these, from one businessman about his associates.

RANDALL goes further, in trying to convince corporations they should be concerned with good housing and good health facilities for their workers. As he puts it, "good management" must "face up realistically to the fact that the meeting of a social need is as much a cost of production as plant maintenance."

These are fine sentiments, yet events keep raising both facts and questions.

What, for instance, was Inland Steel's reaction to the steel union's proposal, in 1949, for a health-welfare-pension program? To read Randall's book, one might think the company would have jumped at a chance to meet a "social need." But Inland, in fact, resisted the union's proposals until a strike forced company acceptance.

Randall, as a "pure" free enterprise writer, doesn't like industrywide bargaining—or what he thinks it to be. He criticizes "an unfortunate pattern of sameness" when workers in an industry get the same pay for the same work. He snips at steel companies which "goose-step to the music of Pittsburgh" (music which traditionally has been played by U. S. Steel Corp.) or which accept "with a smirk of complacency" a single wage pattern for the industry.

Yet Inland Steel, with Randall in the presidency, not only acted in concert with the other steel companies during the recent steel strike, but was party to a solemn agreement among the Big Six firms that none of them would break ranks to sign a contract with the union.

The gap between fine words and actual practice is tremendous; like the results of last year's World Series, that ain't news.

Nor is it news, as Clarence Randall complains, that:

. . . "There are still those (businessmen) who make the telephone call to their competitor before announcing a new price; still those who hesitate to enter a new market until their doing so has been cleared with the rest of the industry; still those who describe a trade association that quietly polices prices as 'constructive.'

"Such men," says Randall, "have no business philosophy and no understanding of the way of life they seek to save. Daily they put expediency and short term profit above principle and survival. Their conduct brings the whole system into disrepute . . . "

And, in the case of many companies, "no one will listen to its officers when they pound the table and say that free enterprise must be saved."

EVEN if every corporation executive followed the course of conduct Randall preaches in "A Creed for Free Enterprise," would the public be impressed? Perhaps, if his gospel of social concern had been accepted by business 20, 40 or 50 years ago, the course of American history might be altogether different.

But what Randall is saying to his fellow executives, in effect, is to please be "nice to the peasants." The "peasants," however, being citizens of a democratic America, don't want paternalism from the corporation front office or the big house up on the hill.

What we want, what the CIO expresses for all America, is joint cooperation and constructive thinking and action to make a better life available for everybody.

That's not a gift to be handed down from on high; it can be attained; and in moving towards its attainment we produce not socialism but the best and strongest buttress for the free enterprise system. Clarence Randall, thinking that only the businessman can defend free enterprise, just doesn't understand.

Story Of 10 Million Families—What They've Won In Co-ops

"THE AMERICAN city dweller may think of cooperatives as something they have in Scandinavia or as institutions that 'don't pay taxes.'

"But his country cousin knows better. He knows better because he has seen cooperatives of one kind or another at work in his rural community . . . especially is it so in the Middle West. He is likely to have read in his local weekly that a co-op is the biggest or close to the biggest taxpayer in his county."

With these thoughts, Jerry Voorhis, executive secretary of the Cooperative League of the U.S.A., begins a thoughtful study of what the co-ops are; why they exist; what they have done and what they hope to do.

"The Cooperatives Look Ahead," a pamphlet, published by Public Affairs Institute, is not only an "ABC" of one of the great people's movements, but is also a striking commentary on our times, which lauds "free enterprise for profit's sake," but fights "free enterprise" for the people's sake.

In brief, Voorhis writes, "a cooperative is a group of people faced with a common need, who decide that the best or only way to meet that need is by organizing a new business to supply it directly to themselves. This they do by joining voluntarily together to pool their capital investments and thus to own, control and patronize their own enterprise."

The liberal former congressman from California carefully outlines the four co-op principles:

1. Open membership, with no racial or religious bars, and political and religious "neutrality."

2. Democratic control, with every member having only one vote, no matter how large his investment.

3. Limited return on invested capital.

4. All net savings distributed in proportion to the amount of money spent buying the co-op's goods or services.

"Since cooperatives do not exist to make profits either for themselves or their stockholders, all net savings must be distributed among the patrons in proportion to their patronage," Voorhis says.

Discussing the need and slow growth of co-ops in the field of home ownership, Voorhis reports that "only in New York City has cooperative housing as yet made any substantial contribution to the need of the people for modest-priced homes."

In New York City, he observes, 10,000 of the 15,000 families living in co-op housing developments are housed in the three CIO Clothing Workers projects.

Tackling charges that "co-ops don't pay taxes"—the battle-cry of the big business-financed lobby fighting co-ops—Voorhis reports "cooperatives pay all taxes, including federal corporation income taxes, under the same laws and at the same rates as apply to other businesses."

Only sums refunded to patrons are not taxed.

Voorhis is blunt when he looks to the future:

"The cooperative movement in the United States consists of some 10 million different families who hold one or more memberships in some kind of cooperative enterprise.

"The full influence of cooperatives upon American life will be felt for the first time when a considerable proportion of these 10 million families realize how large and potentially significant is the movement of which they are a part and begin with a purpose to work with others of like minds but different particular interest to protect, defend, and above all, perfect the functioning of the dynamic enterprises which they own."

"Pop, will you buy me a bike? . . . Yes, son . . . And a new wagon? . . . Yes, son . . . And a BB gun . . . Uh huh . . . And you won't get sore when I play this back?"

Behind The Headlines—

Look Who's Scrambling To 'Win With Ike'

By IRVING FAGAN
For Labor Press Associated

IF YOU are playing with the idea of "voting for a change," and going overboard for Gen. Eisenhower, you ought to take a look at what the "change" would mean.

If Ike were to win, and the GOP Senators up for re-election come in on his coat-tails, here's who will be back in the Senate:

Joe McCarthy of Wisconsin; William F. Jenner of Indiana; John W. Bricker of Ohio; Harry P. Cain of Washington; George W. Malone of Nevada; Zales M. Ecton of Montana; James P. Kem of Missouri; Edward Martin of Pennsylvania.

There is not one friend of labor in the lot.

This year 24 seats are at stake in the Senate—16 Republican and 8 Democrats. There are now 50 Democrats in the Senate, and 46 Republicans. For the Republicans to capture the Senate, they must not only keep those 16 seats, but must take 3 away from the Democrats.

McCarthy, according to a poll of political scientists last spring, ranked 95th out of 95. The organizers of the poll reported that "Republican political scientists characterized him as not worthy of a Senate seat and a disgrace to the U. S. Senate."

SEN. CAIN
They want to ride . . .

Jenner of Indiana was ranked 94th. He is an opponent of foreign aid, including Point IV, but voted for funds for Franco; said General Marshall "is not only willing, he is eager to play the role of a front man for traitors. "Jenner authored an amendment to make public the names of those on relief.

Bricker of Ohio, listed 86th in the scientists' poll, fronted for the wreckers of price and rent controls, has upheld the filibusters which have blocked civil rights legislation, has opposed public power and flood control programs, has attempted to use civil rights in an effort to block all public housing, has voted against foreign aid, and was an America Firster.

Cain of Washington, ranked 91st in the scientists' poll, helped Bricker in trying to kill all public housing through a civil rights amendment. He was against raising the minimum wage from 40c to 60c. He openly fought rent control. He joined the Dixiecrats in killing attempts to end filibusters. He opposed foreign aid.

Malone of Nevada, the Senate's bitterest isolationist, ranked 92nd in the poll. He voted against the Point IV program; for cuts in foreign aid; against the North Atlantic Pact; against the reciprocal trade agreements; for discriminatory treatment of displaced persons.

Ecton of Montana, ranked 75th in the poll, is another bitter isolationist.

SEN. BRICKER
. . . on Ike's coat-tails.

Kem of Missouri called the Marshall Plan "the most gigantic dumping operation in all history," voted against aid to Korea, against the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, against the Voice of America. He was ranked 83rd in the scientists' poll.

Martin of Pennsylvania opposed foreign economic aid, was opposed to Eisenhower's nomination.

Genial "Mr." Ike, in accepting the GOP nomination, said he felt he had been called to lead a great crusade for freedom in the United States and in the world; that he was going to give the nation "progressive policies"; that he was going to build for prosperity and peace in the world.

For that, he said, he needed a Republican majority in the Senate. Yet, if he were to win, and drag with him such gentry as McCarthy, Jenner, Bricker, Cain, Malone, Ecton, Kem and Martin, what chance is there of "progressive policies"?

And what chance is there of building "a sound foundation" for peace and prosperity at home and abroad when those on whom he must lean are on record against Eisenhower's own public stand on foreign affairs?

Look over the record of these Republican Senators and then consider how much "change" there can be if they return to Congress — except a "change" for the worse.

Moody Wins In Landslide In Michigan Primary

VOTERS in three states—Michigan, Missouri and Kentucky—last week chose candidates for the November election.

In the Michigan primary, marked by a record-breaking vote, Democratic Sen. Moody won a landslide victory in his first election race.

Named to succeed the late Senator Vandenberg, Moody rolled up a five-to-one margin. Facing the liberal, ex-newspaperman—who played an active role in the Democratic national convention—will be Rep. Potter, who won a four-man race on the Republican ticket.

IN THE Michigan gubernatorial race, Gov. G. Mennen Williams was renominated without opposition. His opponent in the fall election will be Sec. of State Fred M. Alger, Jr., a Republican.

Both Potter and Alger have conservative records, thus giving Michigan voters a clear-cut choice in November between liberal and reaction in the two top races.

Michigan PAC had backed both Moody and Williams.

In Missouri, Stuart Symington, who had held many top administrative posts in the New Deal, was a two-to-one victor over state Atty.-Gen. J. E. Taylor in the Democratic senatorial race. The Missouri PAC had endorsed Symington, while indicating Taylor would have been acceptable if he had won the primary.

Symington will face incumbent Republican James P. Kem in another clear choice between reaction and liberalism.

In Kentucky, interest was centered on the congressional campaign in the 5th District which found two incumbents pitted against each other. Victory went to Rep. Spence, endorsed by the Kentucky PAC.

Spence defeated Rep. Joe Bates in the Democratic primary. Bates, who represented the 8th District, was forced to run against the 11-time winner, when his old district was eliminated by a redistricting act.

Other PAC-endorsed candidates who won in Kentucky's Democratic primary were Garrett L. Withers in the 2d District, John C. Watts in the 6th District and Beman L. Shamburger in the 3d District.

In the Tennessee Democratic primaries, Rep. Gore led by more than 70,000 votes the aging Sen. McKellar, who was seeking nomination for his seventh term. Gore was endorsed by the State CIO Council.

Potter's Charge Of 'Slush Fund' Hit

Unsubstantiated charges by Rep. Potter (R. Mich.) that the CIO Auto Workers were planning to spend a $2 million "slush fund" to re-elect Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) boomeranged last week.

Moody, whom Potter is opposing in the Senate race, said "it seems a little ridiculous for Mr. Potter to be comparing the total wealth of the UAW-CIO with the combined assets of $5½ billion of the 'Big Three' of the auto industry who are supporting him in his bid for the Republican nomination."

He added that Potter has already spent more on one leaflet in his primary campaign than Moody will spend between now and Nov. 4.

SEN. MOODY
An easy victory.

CIO Joins In Jersey Drive For All-Out Voter Signup

AN ALL-OUT campaign to "make possible the greatest voter registration in our state's history in 1952" was opened in New Jersey last week, with the full cooperation of the State CIO.

Sponsored by the New Jersey Non-Partisan Register and Vote Council, of which Harry Kraus, Jersey CIO publicity director, is secretary, the voter-signup campaign opened with a formal request to the chairman of every county board of elections.

Calling on the election officials to "facilitate the widest possible registration," the non-partisan organization made four specific requests:

1. That existing registration facilities be kept open evenings during August and September.

2. That county seats and other large cities be provided with registration facilities in every ward on one or more evenings per week.

3. That responsible citizens be deputized to register non-registered people anywhere in the county.

4. That on request from a company and/or union, voters be registered at that plant, store or other place of employment during or after working hours.

Henry Reed Bowen, chairman of the non-partisan group, pointed out there were more than 900,000 non-registered adults in New Jersey.

"We believe," he said, "that one of the reasons for this failure to register, apart from apathy, is the difficulty of registering at a single office in each municipality during the regular 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. business hours when most people are working."

29 Million Non-Voters Urged By HST To Register

PRESIDENT TRUMAN last week issued a personal plea to Americans to register so they could vote in November.

"Everybody is talking about the election these days," said the President, "but it seems to me they are putting the cart before the horse."

"The first order of business is registration," he said, calling on Americans to "think about it right away."

Truman noted Americans "are mighty proud of their democratic system of voting." But, he bluntly added, "when it comes to voting, many other countries put us to shame."

Recalling that only 51% of the eligible voters went to the polls in 1948, he listed these totals for recent elections in other countries:

France, 75%; Italy, 89%; Canada, 75%; Japan, 71%; Israel, 72%; Sweden, 80%; England, 83% and Belgium, 90%.

"I am informed," Truman added, "that, as of January of this year, more than 29 million adult Americans were not even registered to vote."

"The privilege of voting is one of the most treasured rights on earth, as those who live in totalitarian countries can testify, but we cannot have a big vote in this country without a big registration," he pointed out.

"A great decision will be made by the electorate on Nov. 4 of this year," the President said, "and I hope every American of voting age will participate in it."

Million GIs Are Denied Vote

Failure of many states and Congress to provide adequate absentee ballots will deprive nearly a million servicemen of their right to vote in November, according to military officials.

Some 600,000 fighting men are overseas and another 400,000 servicemen are stationed in the U. S. distant from their homes in states which make it impossible or difficult to cast absentee ballots. South Carolina and New Mexico have no absentee provisions at all.

During World War II, nearly all states revised procedures to enable fighting men to vote, and Congress provided a federal ballot, but many of these laws lapsed.

Platforms Presented By California CIO

THE CALIFORNIA CIO Council last week urged both major political parties to enact state platforms that "will guarantee the passage of basic progressive legislation and the defeat of reactionary and anti-labor measures."

In identical statements to the state Republican and Democratic party conventions in Sacramento, Pres. Manuel Dias and Sec.-Treas. John A. Despol offered recommendations on nearly every important phase of economic, social and political life in California and the nation.

URGING A firm stand on labor legislation, the California CIO said:

"Good labor-management relations are essential. We believe that, to the widest possible extent, management and labor should determine wage rates and conditions of employment through free collective bargaining.

"We urge repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act since it has proved inadequate, unworkable and unfair. We urge state legislation to establish a State Labor Relations Board to promote collective bargaining, thus diminishing the causes of industrial disputes."

The recommendations covered the need for a "new and modern workmen's compensation act," "extension and liberalization of the California Unemployment Insurance Program," "a Fair Employment Practices Commission with effective enforcement provisions," as well as other major labor legislation.

But the California CIO did not forget farm problems. To both conventions it commended "the program designed to protect the producers of basic agricultural commodities under the terms of a mandatory price support program at not less than 90% of parity."

The Council also urged legislation strengthening corruption laws and calling for "punishment of equal severity for those who corrupt as well as dishonest public servants who accept bribes . . . and, moreover, those who benefit from corrupt acts."

Minimum Pay Up

Effective this month the minimum wage for women and minors in California is 75c an hour, up from 65 cents. The work day is limited to eight hours in 13, and there must be at least 11 hours between work days.

'Harm' From T-H Delays Told In Report To Senate

A NEW REPORT to the Senate Labor subcommittee last week told how "substantial harm" is done to workers by long delays in National Labor Relations Board procedures forced by the Taft-Hartley Act.

The staff, which is headed by Jack Barbush, made seven major recommendations—six of which require changes in the law.

The recommendations that the non-communist affidavit requirement be abolished received wide press display, but the staff also came up with other recommendations which it thinks are necessary to reduce the delay in unfair labor practice and labor representation cases.

In the case of representation election procedures, the staff called for:

- Reinstating the pre-hearing election.
- Making the word of the regional director final in representation cases, subject only to a limited right of appeal to the NLRB.
- Using a shorter means of determining whether a union has representation rights—such as a cross-check of union membership cards and the employer's roster of workers.

To speed up the processing of unfair labor practices cases, the recommendations included:

- Partial centralization of legal assistance to individual board members, each of which now has his own law staff.
- More liberal use by the NLRB of the injunction to prevent the nullification of a board order while a circuit court is considering the petition for enforcement. (This is the only major recommendation which does not require a change in the law).
- Establishment of a Labor Court of Appeals.

In a foreword to the staff report, Humphrey said that in every one of the cases studied by the subcommittee, "the element of delay in getting final determination of an unfair labor practice charge or of a representation petition figured importantly as an aggravating factor.

"An investigation of this problem of delay was, therefore, directed by the committee. The present report represents the results of an investigation by Mr. Barbush. It is designed to serve as a starting point for subsequent activity in this field by the subcommittee.

"As is the rule generally with staff reports, this document does not purport to commit the members of the subcommittee with respect to subject matter or recommendations." (Sen. Taft (R. O.) is a member of the subcommittee).

On the matter of delay, the case of unfair labor practices cases, the average period required from the time of filing the complaint to the NLRB decision ranges from 469 to 490 days.

In representation cases, the average time required from filing of notice of hearing ranges from 71 to 104 days.

The report stressed the importance of the time factor in labor relations.

"It is not possible," it said, "to hold the positions of the contending parties in the status quo until the board can come to some definite decision. The union's majority in a representation case can be dissipated by the time an election is ordered.

"A board order for the employer to bargain in good faith or to cease and desist from certain unfair labor practices may issue only after the union has been destroyed.

"THE BOARD action must come expeditiously or its practical effects are weakened. The nature of the statutes is remedial rather than punitive, and the fear of punishment for past illegal acts therefore does not act as a deterrent to the wrongdoer.

"Even the indirect punitive effect of a back-pay order is diluted because the workers discriminated against do not wait until their case is adjudicated by the board. They get other jobs so that such earnings are deducted from the employers' back-pay liability, and even the punitive effect of a back-pay is limited.

"The upshot, to a larger degree than in other branches of litigation, is that administrative delay weakens the force of public policy, at the same time that substantial harm is done those who rely on the board to protect the rights guaranteed them under the law. This is particularly true in the labor-management field, because there is no money equivalent which can be imputed as the result of the failure of the law to operate speedily."

Non-Red Oath Called Futile

The Taft-Hartley non-Communist oath "is serving no practical purpose," the Senate Labor subcommittee staff reported last week.

"Well-known Communist party liners have had no difficulty in signing affidavits that they are not Communists," the report said.

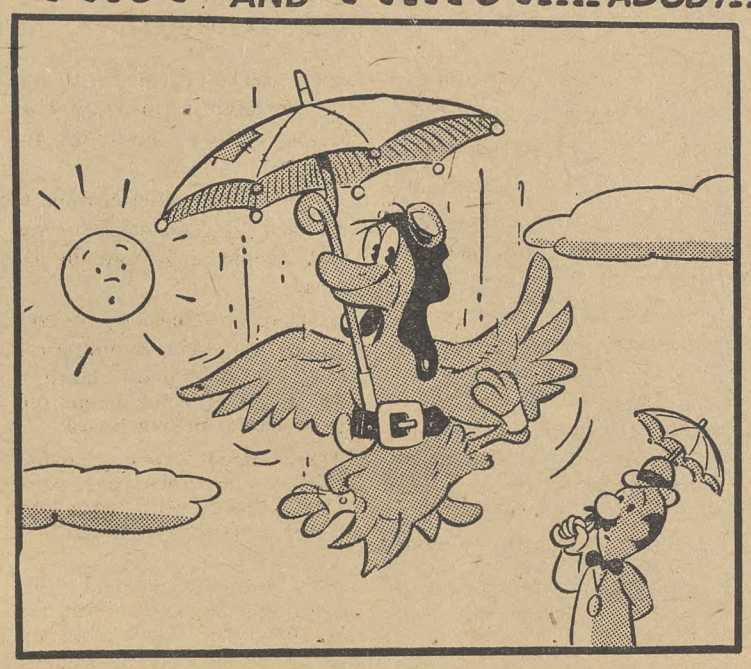
"Whatever else may be attributed to the anti-Communist affidavit, it has not prevented unions controlled by followers of the Communist party line from using the facilities of the National Labor Relations Board."

The staff recommended the non-Communist oath be waived in the case of unions having constitutional bars against Communists and Fascists holding office.

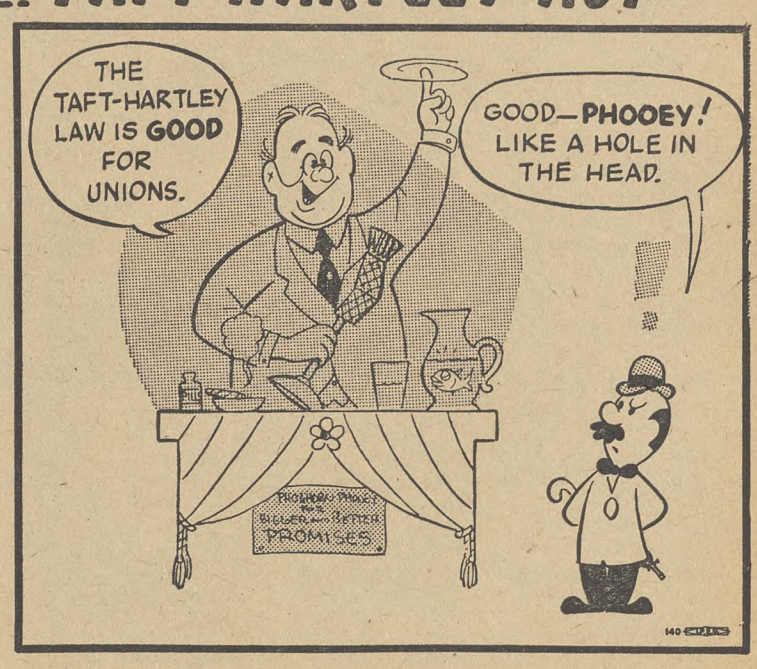
Reuss Condemns T-H

Henry Reuss, CIO-endorsed candidate for U. S. Senator from Wisconsin, has condemned the Taft-Hartley Act as "this vicious, biased piece of legislation."

FACT AND FANCY....ABOUT.... TAFT-HARTLEY ACT



NUTTY AS A LOON—It's a popular notion that the loon is a nutty bird. The fact is that its call sounds crazy, but it's one of the slickest and smartest of all birds.



JUST LIKE nutty as a loon, the notion that the Taft-Hartley Law is good for labor is the bunk. It has tied unions up in miles of red tape.

'Peron Unmasked'—

ICFTU Exposes Terrorism In Argentina

YOU DON'T go on strike in Argentina—unless it suits the government's convenience.

The Inter-American Regional Organization (ORIT) of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions charged last week Argentine labor is not free and Dictator Peron has bent the unions to his will. In a new pamphlet telling the story of "Peron Unmasked," ORIT said:

"For the Peron regime, strikes are 'legal' or 'illegal'. The distinction does not arise from any analysis of the situation that has anything to do with the workers. No. It concerns itself only with the convenience of the regime . . .

"The only kind of strikes which can be called in Argentina now without being labelled 'illegal' by the government are 15-minute walkouts called to show the workers' 'concern for the health of the president's wife' or five-minute demonstrations of support for the government for having successfully overcome some plot of 'foreign capitalism' as the regime calls movements against it which are neither foreign or capitalist."

(The death of Evita Peron presumably has reduced the number of reasons for "legal" strikes.)

Why do such conditions prevail? Many of the unions and the workers have been intimidated by the Peron regime. The sadistic treatment common to dictators and even murder were used.

Carlos Antonio Aguirre was murdered for his part in the sugar workers strike in 1949.

The treatment accorded the telephone strikers by the notorious "Special Section" of the police was even perhaps more appalling even though it fell short of murder. ORIT told of the phone strike as follows:

"The police were merely trying to discover who had drawn up lists of demands which the telephone workers had submitted to their employers, but to achieve this they resorted to the electric needle, which was applied without hesitation to four women, one of whom was well advanced in pregnancy.

"The stories which these telephone workers related are almost unbelievable. The treatment to which they were subjected was not only horrible, but violated the deep human instincts. The cries of the victims were drowned out with records which the police played on an old victrola."

Two of the principal means that Peron used to make the labor movement an instrument for his own gain were laws and decrees, and the taking-over of as many unions as possible.

"Decree No. 23852 confronted the unions with the choice whether or not to become Peronistas," ORIT said. "Since many decided not to do so, the government, through the General Confederation of Labor (CGT) 'intervened' in them, throwing out their elected officials, and imposing agents to run them in the government's interest . . .

"Not a few unions which yesterday were militant, proud and praiseworthy, are today only shells of their former selves, conserving little more than their names.

The result of these maneuvers is that the Argentine workers' standard of living has fallen, as even Peron himself was forced to admit. In a speech earlier this year he said "that the people should eat only what is 'absolutely essential,' should spend less, should not waste food, should not buy 'excessive' amounts of clothing, should keep track of unscrupulous merchants who might try to rob them . . ."

To attempt to gain approval of his attempt to dominate the Argentine labor movement, Peron's followers set up the Latin American Trade Union Unity Committee last February in Asuncion, the capital of Paraguay.

But the free workers of the world are not deceived. Even before the Asuncion meeting, ORIT's founding congress at Mexico City in January, 1951, refused to seat CGT's representatives. ORIT was hopeful:

"The banner of real social justice will remain with us, the free workers, who in the continent of Washington, Bolivar and San Martin, fight for the fulfillment of the great economic, social and political reforms which will transform the status of labor in our countries."

Release Oil Cartel Report, Says Sparkman

SEN. SPARKMAN (D. Ala.), last week urged President Truman to make public the bulk of a secret Federal Trade Commission report on a giant international oil cartel.

Sparkman, who is Democratic vice-presidential nominee, acted as chairman of the Senate Small Business Committee.

The 900-page report, dealing with a giant monopoly dominated by five American and two foreign oil companies, has not been made public on orders of the President. Truman has said publication would not be in the national interest.

Sparkman suggested certain portions of the report, which might impair security or America's foreign relations, be suppressed. The committee felt, however, that only 40 pages of the report fell into this category.

In labeling the report "confidential," the President had agreed to have it used to aid any possible legal action or congressional study.

Meanwhile, the Justice Dept. reported a federal grand jury would investigate charges against the cartel's control of world oil prices. The Justice Department case will be based, in part, on the secret FTC report.

In fighting the cartel, Sen. Hennings (D Mo.) charged it was gouging American taxpayers and operating as an "independent world government."

Recently, the Mutual Security Agency discontinued financing of crude oil shipments from the Middle East to Western Europe, charging it was overcharged by three of the same oil firms.

In urging publication of most of the report, Sparkman wrote the President he believes it "can be issued without adversely affecting our foreign relations."

The companies involved in the grand jury action are: Standard Oil of New Jersey, Standard Oil of California, Texas Oil Co., Socony-Vacuum, Gulf Oil — all United States owned—and two foreign, British-dominated companies, Royal Dutch Shell and Anglo-Iranian Oil Co.

FTC Nails 7 Firms On Japanese Sewing Machines

THE FEDERAL Trade Commission has charged seven U. S. firms which distribute Japanese-made sewing machines heads with deceiving the public and ordered them to appear at hearings Sept. 23 and 25 in Washington.

The CIO Electrical Workers called for government investigation of such misrepresentation some time ago.

Named in the complaint are Mercury Machine Importing Corp. and Morse Sewing Machine and Supply Corp., New York, which give their machines the trade name "Mercury;" Pamco, Inc., and Sewing Machine Factors, producers of the "Champion;" Del Mar Sewing Machine Co. and Getz Bros & Co., makers of the "Majestic" and "Admiral," respectively, all of San Francisco, and Japan American Trading Agency, Inc., Los Angeles.

All are charged with failing to reveal that the machines are Japanese-made. Mercury and Morse also are accused of falsely claiming they make the machines they sell, and Pamco, Factors and Del Mar are charged with misrepresenting that their machines formerly sold at much higher prices.

4 CIO Aides Join UNESCO Education Seminar

FOUR CIO experts in labor education are attending a seminar on that subject at the Chateau de la Breviere, in France, sponsored by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

Don Stevens, director of the Michigan CIO Council Education Committee, is taking the full six-weeks course. Attending for two weeks each are James Turner, director of the Rubber Workers Fair Employment Practices Dept.; Barbara Wertheimer, acting education director of the Clothing Workers, and Jack Pierce, CIO Community Services Committee field representative.

Stevens and Turner are veterans of early CIO organizing struggles. The chateau in which classes are being held is owned by the Swedish Federation of Labor and has been the scene of several schools run by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. Frank Fernback, associate CIO director of research, served on parley preparations.

More duPonts Named In Anti-Trust Case

The government has won an important ruling in its anti-trust case against the duPont financial-industrial empire.

U. S. District Judge Walter J. Labuy granted a government move to name 115 more members of the duPont family as defendants. The U. S. had asked that they be named as "class" defendants, but the court denied this plea, permitting them to be named as individual defendants in the suit.

Drudgery In Red Army Told By Russ GI

THE RUSSIAN GI is underfed, lacks adequate medical attention and lives a life of drudgery, the State Dept. reported last week.

The report was based on the experiences of a man who should know—a Ukrainian who spent years in the Soviet army after World War II.

Even on his supposedly free days, the Ukrainian said, the Red Army soldier is kept busy with work and compulsory sports.

The former Russian GI reported "the main object is to keep the soldier completely occupied, leaving no time to think of what goes on outside his camp.

"The authorities are afraid the soldiers will see the better life of the Germans and that they will tell the Germans of their miserable life in the Soviet Union."

The Ukrainian finally fled to German's West Zone.

CIO Council Proposes—

'End Segregation In D. C. Schools'

THE DISTRICT of Columbia (Washington) CIO Council last week called for ending segregation in the schools and increasing public assistance payments in Washington.

Two representatives set forth the council's views at a hearing before the D. C. Commissioners, who must submit a budget to Congress.

Segregation was attacked by Ben Segal as wasteful in the use of teaching personnel and school plants.

Segal, who is CIO associate director of education, said that white schools last October had 231 too many teachers and Negro schools needed 99 more teachers. He urged the commissioner to examine the request for 85 additional teachers pending a report on the adequacy of the present staffs if segreation of teachers is ended.

Segal also called for ending segregation in teachers' training and education of crippled and deaf children. He declared that segregated schools were estimated to cost the taxpayer from $7 to $8 million annually—about a quarter of the annual budget for the district.

"We cannot afford this staggering bill; we can no longer tolerate the outmoded, undemocratic, immoral system it upholds. We, therefore, ask the Commissioners to repare and recommend legislation that will provide for an integrated school system," Segal said.

Ending segregation would require an act of Congress, which has stalled all moves to break down bias in the voteless capital.

The council's case for increased public assistance was presented by Josephine Piccolo of the CIO Communications Workers staff.

"Adequate appropriations are needed by the public welfare department, particularly for public assistance to the needy," she said.

"Assistance payments are below recommended levels for minimum existence and have failed to keep pace with the rapid rise in the cost of living."

'Job Bias Is As Bad As Robbery'—Hollander

LAWS AGAINST racial and religious discrimination are as important to the well-being of our communities as laws against arsen and theft.

That was the message of New York State CIO Pres. Louis Hollander to the "Teamwork in Industry" conference at Rutgers Univ. The conference was jointly conducted by the university and the National Association of Christians and Jews.

"As far as the individual is concerned, discrimination that robs him of his opportunity to earn a living or find a decent home for his family is as bad as any kind of robbery," Hollander told more than 200 representatives of labor, industry and the teaching profession.

"Discrimination is a crime not only against the individual but against all Americans," he said.

"Let no person underestimate the price we pay for discrimination," he warned. "It pollutes the lifestream of our communities; it impedes our social and economic progress; it robs us of the productive talents and energies of millions of our fellow-Americans and it sabotages our defenses against the world-wide menace of Communist imperialism."

Hollander called upon the nation to follow the pattern set by the CIO in industry and act vigorously against discrimination through a combination of education and legislation.

"In industry, the CIO translates its anti-discrimination policies into law in the form of specific contract terms banning any kind of discrimination," he said.

"To enforce these terms we establish machinery to investigate and act on all complaints—whether against management or against brother union members. At the same time, a continuous process of education is carried forward by the union, generally through a Fair Practices or Human Rights Committee.

"This is the pattern that must be followed throughout the community."

GOP Hit For Cover-Up On Civil Rights Record

NEW JERSEY'S Republican governor, Alfred E. Driscoll, was warned last week that he can't "cover up the miserable civil rights record of the Republican party."

Driscoll "will have to shout much louder than he has" to hide the record, Arthur Chapin, State CIO civil rights director, said in condemning the governor's claim that "the Republican record in civil rights was based on action rather than words."

"What Driscoll means, of course, is inaction," Chapin said.

Citing the record of Republican Sen. Smith of New Jersey and two Jersey GOP congressmen, Auchincloss and Eaton, the CIO official charged they had "consistently voted against civil rights in Congress."

He added, "of course, Driscoll is aware of this."

Chapin also checked the voting record of Senator Nixon, GOP vice-presidential candidate, and found a solid listing of anti-civil rights votes.

CLOSE HARMONY on the picket line was rendered by four CIO Textile Workers during a strike at the Mohawk Carpet Mills, Amsterdam, N. Y. Note the sign in the background.

TWUA Signs At Biggest Carpet Plant

THE LARGEST carpet plant in the world last week reached an agreement with the CIO Textile Workers and broke the united front of the big rug companies against TWUA's 10-week strike.

Alexander Smith Carpet Co., Yonkers, N. Y., agreed to increase the hourly rates of 4200 TWUA members from 9c to 10c, increase hospital benefits and improve other working conditions.

TWUA members at another big plant, Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Co., in Amsterdam, N. Y., last week rejected a contract offer.

Fred J. Krokenberger, TWUA's local's business agent, said it was not accepted because of "certain contract provisions."

He said that there were differences over wages and other provisions, and "the next move is up to the company." Krokenberger declared the rejected agreement was "not exactly the same" as that which ended the strike at the Smith plant.

A number of smaller plants also have come to terms with TWUA.

Eubanks Named

Sam B. Eubanks, past executive president of the CIO Newspaper Guild, has been named executive secretary of the San Franciso ANG local, succeeding the late Robert D. Brown.

CIO Takes Its Story To Farm Fairs

LABOR'S STORY is being taken to Michigan farmers this year through the Michigan CIO Council's third annual county fair program.

Opening at the Hastings fair last week, the CIO display takes as its theme the interdependence of the farmer and worker.

The tent-housed display points out that continued prosperity for the farmer depends on the city worker getting high enough wages to buy all the products the farmer has to sell.

The display also points out the farmer also must make enough to buy the products made by the city industrial worker.

CIO's display will appear at eight other county fairs during the summer months. At five of the fairs, CIO will sponsor a professional comedy show.

In charge of the display is Robert Dingwell, Michigan CIO education representative, and Marvin Meltzer, representative for the Labor Committee for Human Rights. Volunteers from local unions and county councils will also man the tent display.

Philadelphia Plant Joins Steel Union

WORKERS at the Nicholson File Co. plant in Philadelphia have rejected the communist-dominated United Electrical Workers and joined the CIO Steelworkers like employes of the firm's two other plants in Indiana and Rhode Island.

The Philadelphia workers voted 283 for the Steelworkers to 11 for no union in a NLRB election. UE was not on the ballot.

Until UE was expelled by the CIO at the Cleveland convention in 1949, the Nicholson workers in Indiana and Rhode Island helped the Philadelphia employes get good contracts.

After the expulsion of UE, all cooperation ceased and the Philadelphia workers, aided only by UE's feeble efforts, kept getting worse and worse agreements, the USA-CIO reported.

Spearheading the USA-CIO drive were Emerson F. Miller and Edward Lonergan, staff representatives of District 7, USA-CIO, and the following members of the Philadelphia local, Vincent Neyer, Leonard Malinowsky, Anthony Trunfio, Walter Gibson and Robert Lutts.

Report Hits Runaway Shop

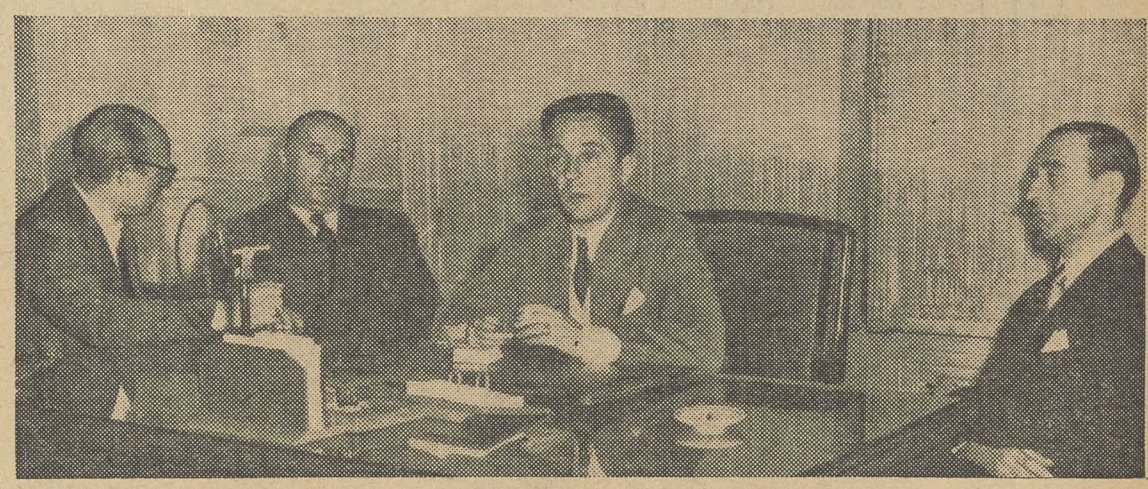
ANOTHER anti-union firm learned last week it can't run away from its collective bargaining responsibilities.

The Mount Hope Finishing Co. which moved south last summer after a strike of the CIO Textile Workers, must rehire 700 workers and pay nearly $2 million in back wages, an NLRB trial examiner has ruled.

In an intermediate report, which may be appealed to the full board in 20 days, Examiner C. W. Whittemore ruled the company may rehire workers either in Dighton, Mass., from which it fled, or Butner, N. C., to which it fled.

If the company decides to rehire the workers at Butner it would have to pay travel expenses in addition to the lost wages.

The decision followed hearings on charges of unfair labor practices brought against the company by the CIO union.



DEAD PAST was buried when spokesmen for French Force Ouvriere (FO) and German Federation of Labor (DGB) met in Paris and formed French-German Workers Association for cooperation in getting better wages and working conditions and a unified policy on social services. Shown at press conference after completing setup are (left to right) Ehrich Buhrig and Hans von Hoff, DGB; Andre Lafond, FO, and Ludwig Rosenberg, DGB. This is in striking contrast to Reds' 'peace' moves.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE CIO is preparing for action. At three important meetings in Washington this week, CIO will determine its position in the coming presidential election. Plans will be formulated and initiated to support actively those who will fight for human rights and security for the American workers.

The CIO Officers and Vice Presidents will meet on Wednesday, Aug. 13, at National CIO Headquarters. On the following day, the full CIO Executive Board will meet at the Willard Hotel.

On Friday, Aug. 15, there will be a large CIO-PAC meeting at the Mayflower Hotel. All of CIO will be represented, with officials from all the national and international unions and CIO Industrial Union Councils, regional directors and officers of National CIO attending.

The entire CIO is determined to go forward to achieve better things for its membership and workers all over the country. We have got to reject those tory Republican "packages" with a brand new name on the outside, but with the same old stuff on the inside.

To build a better America and a stronger democracy, we have got to support those principles that mean human decency and security for the workers everywhere.

Court Upholds Trucks Act In Michigan

MICHIGAN'S Trucks Act, which the State CIO Council had vigorously attacked as an un-democratic attempt at thought control, has been declared constitutional by a split decision of the federal district court.

CIO had opposed the law on the basis that it used totalitarian methods to fight totalitarianism. At its recent convention, the Michigan CIO had denounced the law and demanded its repeal.

The dissenting opinion supported the CIO contention.

Judge Theodore Levin declared the act was not consistent with federal law or the constitution. "The provisions of this act do not meet constitutional standards," he said.

THE MAJORITY decision, written by Chief Judge Charles C. Simons of the U. S. circuit court of appeals, and supported by Judge Frank A. Picard, held the Trucks Act was "an effort by the Michigan Legislature to preserve a government with whose destruction all personal rights will disappear."

On the other hand, the dissenting opinion noted the act, "if allowed to stand, will contribute in this country to that phenomenon so familiar in totalitarian countries—public advocacy on the part of law-abiding citizens of a stereotyped political ideology and the stifling of the free inquiry and investigation into the whole realm of political ideas characteristic of the growth of our democracy."

"Enforcement of this act," Judge Levin wrote, "would constitute a continuing threat to freedom of speech and assembly."

DETAILING its opposition to the law, the Michigan CIO listed these faults in the Trucks Act:

1. It makes membership in an alleged "Communist front organization" the basis for a felony prosecution.

2. A person can be declared a member of such an organization even though he does not pay dues or hold a membership card.

3. The law makes refusal of a person to testify against himself or others automatic proof of guilt.

4. It deals with sabotage in dangerously broad and loose language so that it could be used in a labor dispute in a defense industry to impose penitentiary sentences on workers engaged in legitimate strikes.

Labor Campaign To Aid Hospital Over Top

The CIO and AFL unions' drive to raise $2800 for an iron Lung for the St. Joseph-Lloyd hospital, Menominee, Mich., went over the top—by $2050.

The United Labor Council, which consists of CIO and AFL unions in Menominee, Marinette and Peshtigo, turned the additional money over to the hospital, which will use it to buy equipment for the physical therapy department. Said the Menominee Herald-Leader: "Our unions have performed a signal public service."

Labor Joins Observance Of UN Day

A KICK-OFF planning session of the Labor Advisory Committee of the National Citizen's Committee for UN Day last week in Washington came up with what CIO chairman Stuart Brock describes as "the best program yet" for labor participation of the United Nations' seventh birthday celebration next Oct. 24.

Brock, associate director of the CIO Education and Research Dept., represented CIO Pres. Philip Murray at the meeting. He was named co-chairman of the labor committee with W. G. Flinn of the Machinists Union, representing the AFL.

The committee drew up plans for a program for this year's annual observance of the adoption of the UN Charter. The plan, for the first time, calls upon local labor groups to take the initiative in their communities in supporting area-wide UN celebrations.

CIO Councils will be asked to urge the mayor of each city to appoint UN Day Committees with labor representation.

Local labor groups also will be urged to sponsor UN Day luncheons and to invite as guests of honor UN labor exchange visitors and Korean veterans in their areas.

A labor publicity committee, composed of Irving Fagan, editor of Labor Press Associated; Bernard Tassler, editor of the American Federationist, and Milton Plumb, assistant editor of The CIO News, was appointed to assist the chairman.

Job Outlook Brighter In Cumberland

THE JOB outlook is somewhat brighter in Cumberland, Md., which was one of the cities worst hit by unemployment early this year.

The biggest employer in the area, the Celanese Corp. of America, last week reported that 4100 persons were at work at the plant and that more would be recalled.

In August, 1949, the factory employed more than 8000, but employment last February had dropped to less than 3000. The plant is under contract to Local 1874 of the CIO Textile Workers.

Other brighter spots are the Kelly-Springfield Tire Co. plant, where some departments are working six days a week and additional employes are being hired, the Allegany Ballistics Laboratory where more men are being put on the job, and the railroads which are recalling up to 1500 workers laid off because of the steel strike.

Nationally, unemployment was estimated by the Census Bureau at 1,940,000 during the week of July 6, about 100,000 lower than a month earlier.

CIO Sponsors Red Feather Tour

Tours of several Boston Red Feather agencies will be featured during the CIO Union Counseling Course which gets underway in that city on Aug. 20.

Sponsored by the Greater Boston CIO Council, this workers' education course is designed to instruct future counselors in the many phases of public and private welfare aid available in the community.

Graduates will aid co-workers when legal, financial, medical and other health and welfare problems arise. The course, which runs through Oct. 22, is open to delegates from all CIO unions in the area.

Union Shop Tops IUE Demands As GE Parleys Open

THE CIO Electrical Workers last week opened negotiations for a new contract for 70,000 members employed at General Electric Co. plants throughout the nation.

Highlighting the demands is a request for a union shop. The economic proposals which were presented last week—together with requests for other contract improvements and a better insurance and pension plan to be presented Aug. 13—will amount to from 20 to 30c an hour, the IUE said.

At the initial meeting in New York City, the union negotiating committee headed by IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey last week asked for:

1. A cost of living increase amounting to 4.4c an hour covering the period from last September to June 15, to be paid immediately, and an additional increase covering the period from June 15 to Sept. 15—to be paid on the latter date.

2. A 4c an hour productivity increase to match that given the General Motor workers on May 29.

3. Revision of the GE incentive system to provide increased pay in proportion to increased production.

4. Equal pay for equal work for women workers. Since 1940 the differential in favor of men has increased by 11c an hour.

Carey, who is also CIO Secretary-treasurer, said that one of the chief objectives of IUE-CIO economic demands was "to recapture some of the gains GE workers had made, but which the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers gave up or allowed the company to take away, including a profit sharing plan."

FOLLOWING the first negotiating session, Carey said:

"I don't think we are going to get a settlement with GE without being very, very forceful. It means that we are going to get these concessions or we are going to have trouble.

"I don't want to anticipate that we are going to have a strike to get them, but we won't be satisfied with just a cost-of-living and productivity increase."

The contract expires Sept. 15, and the union is free to strike under a wage reopener of last Mar. 15.

The best offer that the company made was 1.03% increase to cover the cost of living rise between September, 1951, and March. IUE-CIO proposed that its members be paid the increase just as were non-union members and that bargaining be continued for other matters.

The company rejected the proposal. GE also rejected a IUE proposal that it join in asking WSB for a general wage raise of 12 to 15c an hour, and inequity increases ranging from 9.9 to 11.3c an hour.

IUE members at 53 plants throughout the country staged demonstrations last June against what they termed the company's "chiseling" 1.03% offer.

The day after the demonstrations, IUE's international executive officers, vice presidents and conference board chairmen authorized "a special defense fund to insure the successful prosecution of our fight with GE."

The wage demands were drawn up by IUE's GE conference board at a meeting held the day before negotiations opened.

The conference board also pledged full support to the $1.5 million National Defense Fund to be collected through voluntary contributions of $1 a month per member for four months.

Bethlehem, Inland Sign With Steel

CIO STEELWORKERS and major and smaller companies in basic steel last week continued negotiations on contracts incorporating the conditions of the White House settlement.

Only two major companies have signed contracts. They are Bethlehem, No. 2 producer, and Inland Steel.

Other smaller companies which have already signed contracts are Wheeling Steel and Lukens. Crucible Steel signed an "interim pact" earlier.

Late last week, negotiations between the Steelworkers and U. S. Steel were recessed until an unannounced date, following two negotiating sessions.

Basic terms of the signed contracts include a modified union shop and wage increases of 12.5c an hour in the lowest grades.

Harvester Plant Struck By UAW

A drastic cut in piece-work rates led last week to a strike of 4000 members of the CIO Workers at the motor plant on International Harvester Co. in Melrose Park, near Chicago.

On the plant's reopening after the steel strike, the company instituted new piece-work rates, which Pres. Ray Cluts of Local 6, UAW-CIO, cut the earning of some of the men as much as 48%.

'Vin' Sweeney Gains

Vincent Sweeney, veteran publicity director of the CIO Steelworkers, last week was reported gaining in a Pittsburgh hospital after an attack. He was taken ill shortly after the steel strike ended.

Putnam Praises WSB Members; Raps New Law

THE NATION has "an excellent Wage Stabilization Board . . . but not an excellent law to start off the new wage program," said Economic Stabilizer Roger L. Putnam last week.

He spoke at ceremonies marking the swearing-in of members of the new board.

Putnam referred to the board's lack of authority to deal with labor disputes, which Congress took away in the new Defense Production Act, and to the cut in appropriations, which restricts WSB's operations.

Packinghouse Bargains With 3 Big Firms

THE CIO Packinghouse Workers last week opened negotiations for a new contract with Swift & Co. covering 30,000 members in 28 plants throughout the U. S.

UPWA now is conducting talks for new agreements covering a total of 70,000 members, having begun discussions two weeks ago with Armour and Cudahy—two others of the Big Four packers. All meetings are being held in Chicago.

No date had been set last week for starting negotiations with the fourth of the big packers, Wilson & Co.

UPWA-CIO called the talks "the big drive for better wages, pensions, union shop, decent working conditions, security and many other items that are needed to make the packing plants a better place to work . . . There are many things the packinghouse workers need, and UPWA is determined to get them. Here are some of the leading contract advances UPWA is after for 1952:

"A Substantial Wage Increase . . . With prices and taxes high, we must have a real wage increase to make up for the ground we've lost and put us ahead.

"A Union Shop . . . The 'free riders' have had it their way long enough. Let them get on their feet and carry their own weight from here on out. We want them off our backs.

"Pensions, Health and Welfare: We seek provisions for the workers and their families for economic protection and security against the hazards of sickness, accidents, medical and surgical bills, old age and death. For this reason, we demand insurance and pension benefits which are entirely employer-financed with the union participating in the administration.

"A Guaranteed Annual Wage: We demand that every employe be guaranteed his pay for 40 hours each week and 52 weeks each year . . . " (For several years UPWA has had a guaranteed annual wage provision in its pact with Hormel, one of the big independent packers.)

UPWA also is demanding the end of pay differentials against women and southern workers. It contended that "by paying women 9c an hour less than men, the packers make a cool extra profit of better than $7 million every year" and constantly threaten the rates paid men.

The union also declared that "by keeping wages low in the South, the packers and other industries are able to rake in an extra $4.5 billion a year in profits . . . "

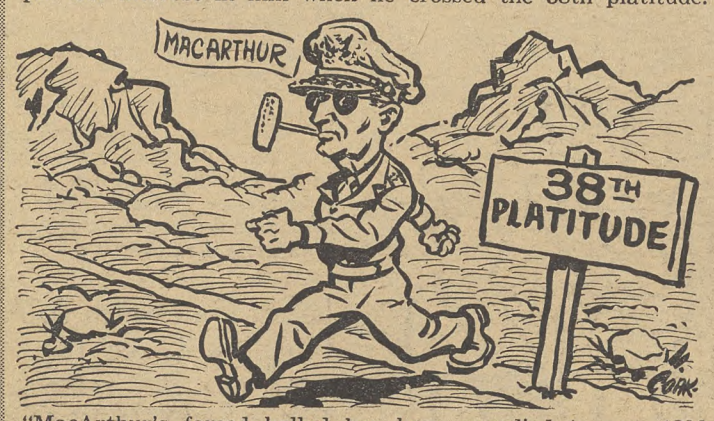
UPWA-CIO also proposed a contract guarantee against discrimination.

'Dog Days' Coolers

They may raise some temperatures—these jibes on the 1952 Presidential campaign by Prof. Earl Latham of Amherst College. They're digested from the Amherst alumni magazine:

Washington: "Washington — the capital of the United States, a border city dividing North from South, a city which combines the charm of the North with the efficiency of the South."

MacArthur: "Of MacArthur it has been said that the people lost interest in him when he crossed the 38th platitude.



"MacArthur's famed ballad has been parodied to say, 'Old faders never die—they just soldier on'."

Taft: "They say Taft has the best mind in the Senate—until he makes it up."

Eisenhower: "Eisenhower has been doing that most difficult of all things: running without moving his feet."

Dewey: "Of Dewey's intentions to run again in 1948 some people remarked, 'Of course not! How can you expect a souffle to rise twice'?"

Platforms: "The perfect platform is for something and against something. Only the vegetarians have realized this ideal. They were for something: vegetables; and against something: meat. Their slogan was simple: 'If it blooms, you eat it; if it wiggles, you leave it alone'."

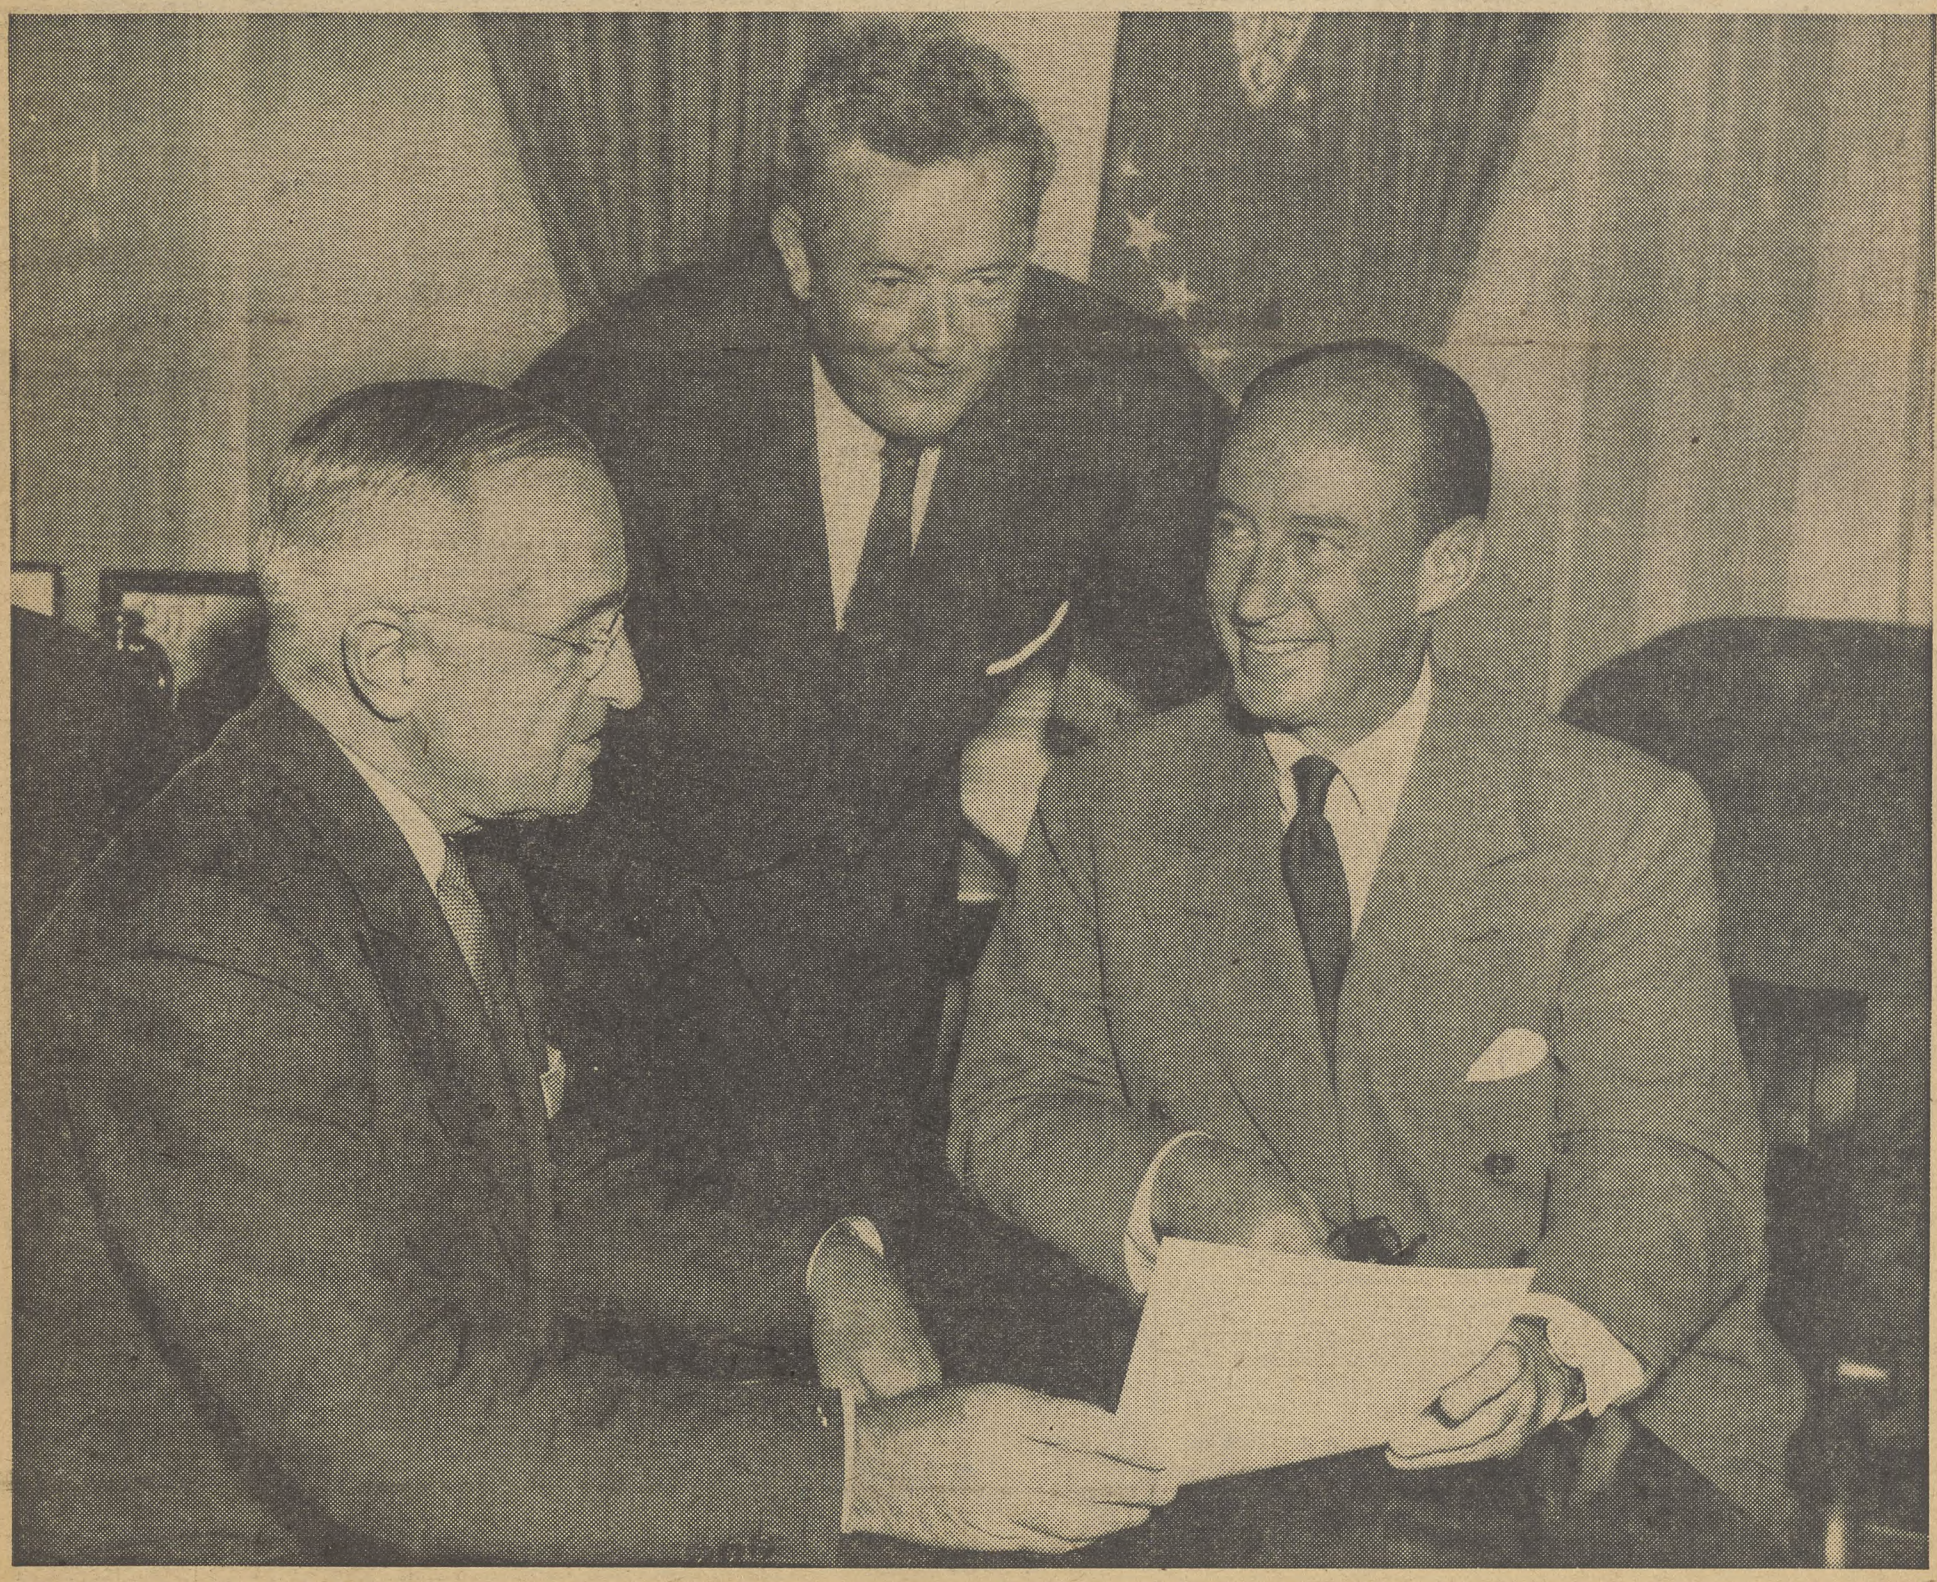
CIO Supports Stevenson To Carry On Fair Deal

—SEE PAGES 2 & 3



THREE FAIR DEAL FIGHTERS—President Truman, who says he now is a "private in the rear ranks" of politics, met at the White House last week with the Democratic candidate for President, Gov. Stevenson of Illinois (right), and the Democratic nominee for Vice President, Sen. Sparkman of Alabama (standing). Members of the Cabinet and the White House staff joined in what Stevenson called a "very satisfactory" meeting on campaign plans. Both Truman and Stevenson will speak at Labor Day rallies, the former in Milwaukee, the latter in Detroit.

CIO Statement—

Stevenson Will Meet 'Needs Of The People'

Here is the full text of a "Statement on the 1952 Election" adopted last week by the CIO Executive Board, meeting in Washington:

IN NOVEMBER 1952, the citizens of America will choose the men who will lead their government for the next four years.

It is essential, this year as in the past, that Americans vote on the basis of facts, not emotion; that they view the records of the candidates; that they study the platforms and policies of the parties; and that they weigh promises against past performances. The best interests of our beloved country demand that our votes be cast with wisdom and with regard for the future welfare of the nation.

In that spirit, and conscious of our responsibility, the Executive Board of the Congress of Industrial Organizations recommends to CIO members that they cast their votes for Adlai E. Stevenson for President and John J. Sparkman for Vice-President.

It is our belief that the election of Stevenson and Sparkman, and of a Congressional majority ready and willing to carry out the policies enunciated in the Democratic Party platform, will insure more years of government responsive to the needs of the people. Under a Stevenson Administration based upon such a platform, we can look forward to an unfaltering continuation of the best traditions and ideals of the New Deal and the Fair Deal.

This recommendation of the CIO Executive Board is based upon the following considerations:

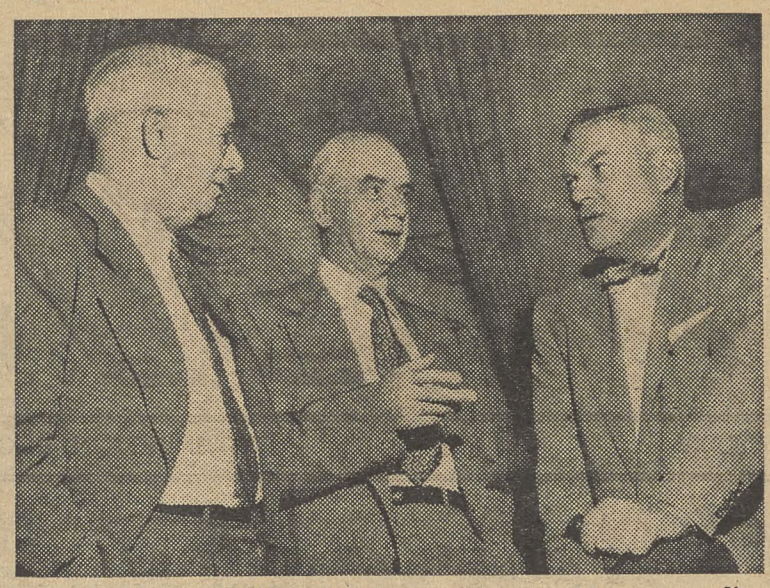
1 THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM. The Democratic Party platform is conceived in the Roosevelt-Truman tradition of banishing fear and looking to the future with confidence and boldness. Translated into legislation, it will equip America to meet our complex domestic problems. It will strengthen our position of economic, military and moral leadership among free nations in the common effort to resist Communist aggression and to build a better world, in which peace and freedom can be made secure.

The Democratic platform, while it does not deal with all the recommendations made by the CIO, is nevertheless as a whole the most liberal, forward-looking and realistic ever adopted by any political party.

The Democratic platform is clearly dedicated to continued improvement in American living standards, through control of inflation, the expansion of social security, a fair tax program, good housing and the principle of equality of sacrifice during the national emergency.

The Democratic platform calls for the repeal of the "inadequate, unfair and unworkable" Taft-Hartley Act. To Americans of every race, creed and color, the platform solemnly pledges the enactment of effective civil rights legislation; and, to the end that such laws may be passed, the platform calls for abolition of the filibuster tactics which for so many years have prevented either honest consideration or a vote in the Senate on this issue of crucial importance to every American.

Enactment of this platform will provide for a stronger, better, and more democratic America. The election of a Congress composed of men and women dedicated to the spirit of this platform, and firmly committed to its purposes, is the only means of achieving this goal.



TALKING IT OVER.—PAC campaign problems are discussed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray (center) with Jack Kroll, CIO Political Action Committee director (left), and David J. McDonald, PAC secretary-treasurer.

2. THE REPUBLICAN PLATFORM. The clear purpose and intent of the Republican Party is truly revealed in its fulsome praise of the sorry record of the Republican 80th Congress. That Congress, meeting from 1946 to 1948, attempted to reverse the course of legislative progress made by the American people since the depression days of 1932. It enacted the Taft-Hartley Act, and in its venomous fury it cut down or weakened every New Deal law it had time to attack.

In a period of growing world crisis, the 80th Congress refused to recognize the danger of world communism. It refused to recognize the threat of inflation. It refused to recognize the desire of the people for security.

The Republican platform of 1952 renews its attack on the labor unions of America by reaffirming support for the Taft-Hartley Act. It once again calls for a "crusade" to turn Fair Deal prosperity into Republican bankruptcy. In endorsing the repudiated record of the 80th Congress, the Republican party has demonstrated that it is a party empty of constructive ideas, of concern for the needs of the people, and of vision to lead the forces of world democracy against an aggressive enemy.

3. THE DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE. Adlai Stevenson, as governor of Illinois has compiled an outstanding record of achievement and service to the people of his state. The record shows he has provided resourceful, imaginative, humanitarian leadership. He has been ruthless and uncompromising in his fight against the forces of evil which seek everywhere to corrupt and prevert government to the service of special interests, whether criminal or corporate.

As governor of Illinois, Adlai Stevenson used the full power of the state to protect the rights of citizens whose civil rights were being threatened in the town of Cicero. His gallant efforts for an anti-discrimination law were thwarted only by an obstructionist Republican opposition in the Illinois Legislature. His record in seeking and obtaining better laws for the protection of workers is unblemished. His administration has an unparalleled record of efficiency and honesty.

During the war and the years immediately after the war, Adlai Stevenson served his country well, in positions of trust in the Department of the Navy, Department of State, and in the U. S. Delegation to the United Nations.

We are convinced that Adlai Stevenson is a man well equipped, by background, training and experience, to fill with honor the Presidency and to lead the fight to enact into law the great promise of the Democratic platform.

4. THE REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE. No candidate, however respected and however well intentioned, could wrest power from the entrenched Old Guard who still control the Republican Party, who dictate its policies in the halls of Congress and who write its reactionary platforms. This Old Guard has neither died nor surrendered. They are ancient enemies of the people an by their votes we know them well.

CONCLUSION

The executive board of the Congress of Industrial Organizations has utmost faith and confidence in the future of our country and the free world. The 1952 elections can be a major milestone in our progress toward the achievement of peace and abundance.

We know that CIO members, like the American people as a whole, will look at the record; will weigh, without prejudice, the facts; and will evaluate, on the basis of past performance and future promise, the candidates and the parties.

We feel confident that the American people, on that basis, will cast an overwhelming majority of their votes for Adlai Stevenson and John Sparkman on Nov. 4.

'No One Can Beat' McKellar — He Was, And Tennessee CIO Helped

THE Tennessee CIO helped strip the gears of two political machines and slowed up a third in that state's primary election.

As a result, 83-year-old Kenneth McKellar lost the Senate seat he had occupied for a record 36 years. Gov. Gordon Browning, who used state troopers to bust a CIO Textile Workers' strike, lost his bid for a third term.

The CIO had early endorsed Frank Clement for governor and Rep. Albert Gore for U. S. Senate. Both won easily, Gore by 85,000 votes and Clement by 70,000, in the Aug. 7 Democratic primary.

THE once-powerful political machine of Boss Ed Crump of Memphis supported McKellar vigorously. But when the votes were counted, it had carried Shelby (Memphis) county by only 3000 votes.

The Browning campaign, which had the powerful support of Silliman Evans and the Memphis Tennesseean and was financed by an estimated half-million dollars, was just as ineffective. In the gubernatorial campaign, Clement had Crump support as well.

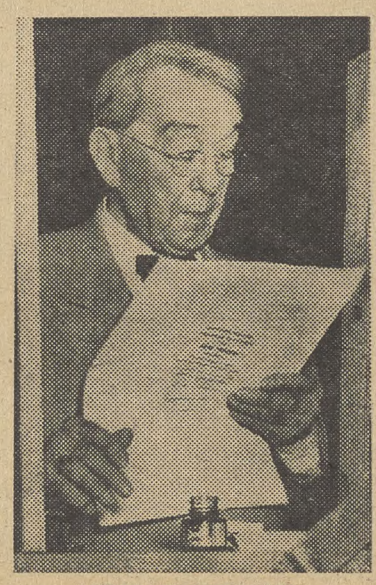
In the Republican primary, Gen. Eisenhower was snowed under in his first voting test since the Republican convention.

This test came in a choice of district party committeemen, when a group styling itself as "Eisenhower candidates" ran against the Old Guard controlled by staunch Taftite, J. Carroll Reece.

In Memphis, the Eisenhower group staged a vigorous, free-spending campaign buying much radio and television time and plastering the country with placards reading "Support Eisenhower and vote for the Eisenhower candidates for Republican committee."

In that county, only one Ike follower won with four posts at stake. Throughout the state, late reports showed only four of the General's team had won.

The Republican vote was unusually light, with Reece reportedly sending Republicans into the Democratic primary to vote for McKellar and Browning. His defeat on this issue and one calling for a constitutional convention to revise Tennessee's 82-year-old constitution was another CIO victory over a political machine.



SEN. McKELLAR
Studies his ballot before defeat in Tennessee.

Gore's top-heavy victory over the aging McKellar recalled Boss Crump's observation, "Sen. McKellar probably has more personal friends in his home state than any other senator . . . No one can beat him."

But Crump was wrong. The frock-coated bow-tie wearing Senator, called the very model of a Southern Senator, had waged many a fight against New Deal and Fair Deal domestic policies.

An early supporter of TVA, McKeller carried on a long and losing fight against David Lilienthal as head of TVA and as chief of the Atomic Energy Commission. Reportedly, McKellar's ire was aroused when Lilienthal refused to clear TVA jobs through the Senator or his political ally, Crump.

Back before CIO entered the political arena, Crump's support was tantamount to victory. His candidates had an almost sure 40,000 to 60,000 vote margin in Shelby county, enough to offset majorities run up elsewhere in the state. But Gore's victory, similar to the victory of Estes Kefauver four years ago, showed labor's support to be much more valuable.

Tennessee CIO leaders pointed out that Browning was elected Governor in 1948 with labor support. He refused to keep his commitment to repeal or modify the open shop law. He sent state troops into Morristown and busted the TWUA-CIO strike at the American Enka plant.

'Give People The Facts And We Will Win'

"IF THE PEOPLE get the facts, I am not worried how they will vote in November," says Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers.

Addressing the ACWA Training Institute graduation at Sarah Lawrence College, Bronxville, N. Y., Potofsky cited inflation, bumper profits, and the need for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and enactment of a strong civil rights program as important campaign issues.

"We are opposed to all forms of totalitarianism, whether of the right or of the left," Potofsky said. "But if we are to set an example of democratic leadership as a country, we must be sure to set our house in order. Incidents like the Cicero race riot reverberate around the world, and are a disgrace to the United States and what we stand for."

The institute sessions were attended by 49 delegates from 33 ACWA locals and joint boards in 13 states.

CIO Backs Stevenson, Sparkman, Warns 'Old Guard' Still Runs GOP

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE CIO EXECUTIVE Board has called for the election of Stevenson, Sparkman, and a liberal Congress.

Meeting in Washington on Aug. 14, the 46-man executive group recommended to CIO members that they cast their votes for Adlai E. Stevenson, the governor of Illinois, for the presidency.

They described him as a man who has "compiled an outstanding record of achievement and service" to the people of his state, and whose records shows "he has provided resourceful. imaginative, humanitarian leadership."

"We are convinced that Adlai Stevenson is a man well equipped, by background, training and experience, to fill with honor the Presidency and to lead the fight to enact into law the great promise of the Democratic platform," the Board said.

Platform Hailed

The Board hailed the platform adopted by the Democratic convention last month as "conceived in the Roosevelt-Truman tradition of banishing fear and looking to the future with confidence and boldness."

The Democratic platform—which called for repeal of Taft-Hartley, curbing of filibusters, adoption of a civil rights program, and enactment of more Fair Deal legislation—was described by the CIO leaders as "the most liberal, forward-looking and realistic ever adopted by any political party."

The party's platform, it went on, "is clearly dedicated to continued improvement in American living standards, through control of inflation, the expansion of social security, a fair tax program, good housing, and the principle of equality of sacrifice during the national emergency."

In contrast, the CIO Executive Board said the Republican platform in effect calls for a "crusade to turn Fair Deal prosperity into Republican bankruptcy."

"In endorsing the repudiated record of the 80th Congress, the Republican party has demonstrated that it is a party empty of constructive ideas, of concern for the needs of the people, and of vision to lead the forces of world democracy against an aggressive enemy."

The key to the GOP platform, the CIO said, was its "fulsome" praise for the 80th Congress, the only GOP-controlled session in many years. Meeting between 1946 and 1948, the 80th Congress passed the Taft-Hartley Act and "in its venomous fury it cut down or weakened every New Deal law it had time to attack."

The CIO statement did not mention Gen. Eisenhower by name. Discussing the "Republican candidate," it said:

'Ancient Enemies'

"No candidate, however respected and however well intentioned, could wrest power from the entrenched Old Guard who still control the Republican Party, who dictate its policies in the halls of Congress, and who write its reactionary platforms. This Old Guard has neither died nor surrendered. They are ancient enemies of the people and by their votes we know them well."

The CIO Executive Board statement was issued during the course of a one-day meeting at the Hotel Willard in Washington.

A day earlier, on Aug. 13, CIO Pres. Philip Murray had called together a meeting of the vice presidents; and that afternoon, the CIO Political Action Committee—composed of presidents and secretary-treasurers of the CIO's largest unions—had met for a discussion of campaign problems and the job of getting out the vote.

On Friday, the CIO scheduled a full-day session of some 400 representatives from around the country—union officials, leaders of industrial union councils, regional directors and local PAC people. They were scheduled to hear addresses by CIO leaders and to discuss PAC work in the three months until election day.

PAC 'Persuades'

Murray, in a press conference after the PAC meeting, pointed out that the CIO Executive Board's recommendation would not be "binding" on any individual. PAC, he said, "only exerts whatever persuasive influence it may have."

But, Murray added, "by and large, trade unionists know the issues and are ready for action on those issues."

Jack Kroll, PAC director, told reporters that the PAC meeting discussed "what we are going to do, and how we are going to do it, and—I may say—what we're going to do it with." That was a reference to the 1952 "give a buck to PAC" drive, now rolling into high gear in local unions throughout the nation.

"V-FOR-VICTORY" sign was given by Gov. Stevenson and Sen. Sparkman after their nomination for President and Vice President at Democratic convention. They were backed by CIO as "in the Roosevelt-Truman tradition."

Murray Talk Set On Labor Day

CIO Pres. Philip Murray will deliver his annual Labor Day speech over the National Broadcasting Co. network, at 2:00 p.m. EDT, on Monday, Sept. 1.

The 15-minute talk will be carried as a sustaining broadcast by the entire NBC network.

Local CIO groups should contact their local NBC affiliated station to make certain that the broadcast is heard in their community.

In another Labor Day broadcast over the American Broadcasting System network, CIO Exec. Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey will be interviewed on the contrast between free American unions and Russian "false-front unions."

They will join AFL Pres. William Green in the half-hour, which goes on the network at 3:30 p.m. (EDT).

'Like A Magician'—

Ike Double Talks On Killing Price Controls

GEN. EISENHOWER is forgetting to tell the left side of his mouth what the right side is saying.

That's the impression Economic Stabilizer Roger L. Putnam has of the general's recent statements on inflation and price control.

The general would need the "wand of a magician," Putnam said, in his promise to end inflation and price controls at the same time. According to Putnam, Eisenhower is talking "out of both sides of his mouth."

Putnam warned that food prices will soon zoom past their present peak as the result of legislation passed in the last Congress by the general's Republican party, which further weakened price controls.

"Very real inflationary dangers may become even more urgent in the months ahead despite our best efforts to ward them off," Putnam said.

"The sack of groceries you get for $10 will be smaller and lighter in the months to come."

Quoting Eisenhower's observation that the government must end controls and lower prices at the same time, Putnam observed:

"Even if the gentleman in question exchanges the swagger stick of a general for the wand of a magician, his task will be impossible."

Continuing, the economic stabilizer observed, "it's not at all surprising to me that a Republican candidate should talk out of both sides of his mouth during a campaign year."

Meanwhile, Rep. Karsten (D. Mo.) quoted President Truman as "alarmed" at the way living costs are going up.

Karsten and Rep. Price (D. Ill.) called at the White House to urge Truman to "do something" to save the situation. The President has said he is considering calling a special session of Congress to seek stronger price controls, but he hasn't reached a decision yet.

Double-Header On Labor Day

It will be a Fair Deal double-header on Labor Day.

Gov. Stevenson, Democratic presidential candidate, will make the first major speech of his election campaign at a joint CIO-AFL rally in Detroit on Labor Day.

On the same day, President Truman will make a major political address at another joint CIO-AFL rally in Milwaukee.

"You anti-union guys have a one-track mind, but you'll never make the grade with your 'loco' motive!"

CIO Invites Truman To Major Rally

PRESIDENT TRUMAN has been invited to speak at a major CIO political rally in Pittsburgh between Oct. 6 and 10.

The invitation was issued last week when CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey visited the President at the White House. Carey reported Truman was "very receptive" to the invitation.

Carey, who is also president of the CIO Electrical Workers, said the rally was being planned in conjunction with the IUE-CIO's annual convention to be held in Pittsburgh from Oct. 6 through 10.

He said the plan was to invite members of the CIO Steelworkers and other organizations in joining the outdoor rally in one of Pittsburgh's big stadiums.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray would be the other principal speaker.

Senate Checking Campaign Funds

The Senate Privileges and Elections subcommittee has begun a detailed check of all campaign expenditures by senatorial candidates, covering both primary and general election spending.

The subcommittee, headed by Sen. Gillette (D. Io.), sent questionnaires not only to party organizations but also to special campaign committees. All contributions above $100 and all spending above $10 must be listed.

Stevenson And Sparkman . . . Labor's Best Choice

In recommending to CIO members and the American people that they vote for Adlai Stevenson and John Sparkman, the CIO Executive Board acted clearly and forthrightly in the public interest.

"We are convinced," the CIO statement said, "that Adlai Stevenson is a man well equipped, by background, training and experience, to fill with honor the Presidency, and to lead the fight to enact into law the great promise of the Democratic platform."

That platform, as others have noted, is a great document. The CIO Board pointed out that it was "conceived in the Roosevelt-Truman tradition of banishing fear and looking to the future with confidence and boldness."

But platforms are only words of promise. Without the strength in Congress to carry out that promise, the best of platforms can be forgotten and its pledges ignored. That is why the CIO has stressed, in its recommendations to the people, the election of a liberal and forward-looking Congress to work as a team with the White House for the enactment of the platform.

In the months ahead, the members of the CIO throughout the country will be working on political action. They will be registering and getting their families and friends to register; they will be learning the issues and the records of the candidates, and telling the issues and the records to their neighbors and fellow workers; and, on Election Day, in the privacy of the voting booth, they will mark their secret ballots.

That is the American way—it is the PAC way. But the opposition will try to distort and to smear the efforts of union members to elect the candidates they think best for the nation. Even now, the smear campaign is under way, with Sen. Nixon leading the demagogic attacks on CIO and CIO-PAC.

There is nothing new and nothing true about these attacks. Fairminded Americans, who have heard the same anti-labor stuff before, will pay little attention. The elections of the past 20 years have clearly shown that the American people want liberal, fair-minded government.

That is why they will rally to the support of Adlai Stevenson, a man of great integrity and great understanding. That is why, we believe, the people of America will vote in November for Stevenson and Sparkman, and for a liberal Congress ready and willing to meet its responsibilities to the nation and the entire free world.

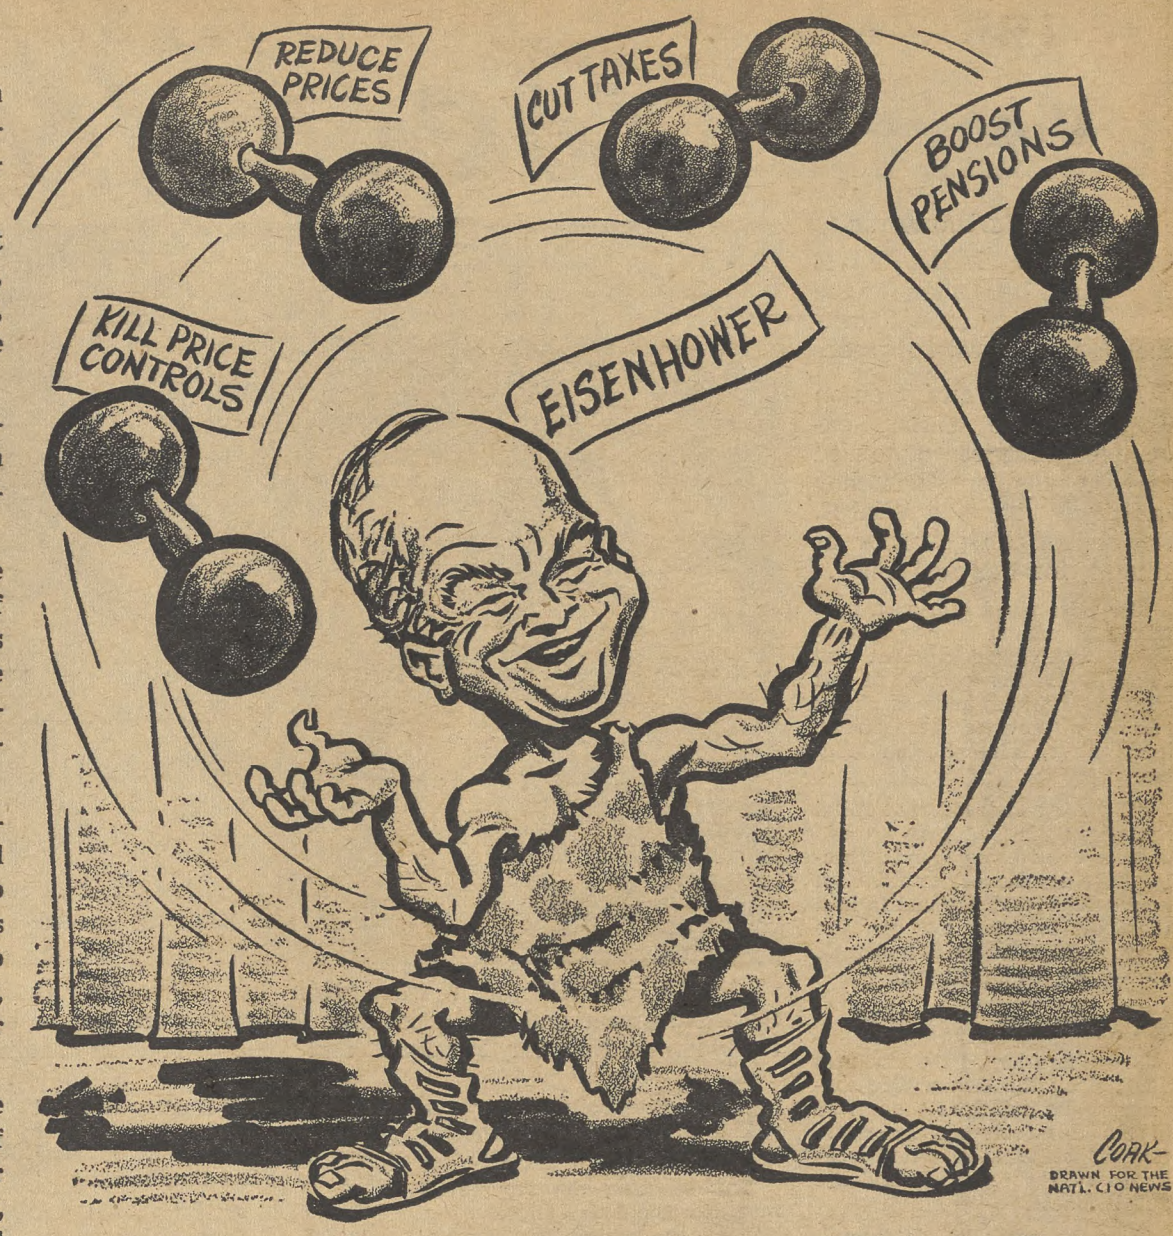
The Juggler



How To Trap Your Friends

Following is an article by Eric Sevareid, noted radio news commentator, now covering Washington for the Columbia Broadcasting System. It appeared in "The (LaFollette) Progressive" magazine:

By ERIC SEVAREID

A LISTENER to my CBS news commentary recently asked me to tell him briefly just what a Communist is. I am not sure I can, completely. I would suggest that a Communist is one who belongs to the party and/or subjects himself to its discipline, or one who clearly and consistently puts the interests of Soviet Russia ahead of his own country, or one who believes all the basic dogmas of Marxism.

But beyond that, into the twilight zone of half or quarter Marxists—the misty zone of those who believe in some but not all the things Communists also believe in—into that murky region I timidly refuse to venture.

Some men, such as Sen. Karl Mundt of South Dakota, have much more courage. And we would recommend to our inquiring listener, if he also is a man of courage, that he read the remarks of Sen. Mundt in the Congressional Record appendix. Sen. Mundt skips over the obvious signs such as party membership or treasonable actions and says:

"Your yardstick for measuring a suspect is his attitude on issues of the day."

Sen. Mundt says it is your solemn duty as a citizen to measure "your union boss, supervisor, next door neighbor, Congressman, Senator, or anyone else you can observe, directly or indirectly." But first you must accept Mr. Mundt's tidy promise that, "Each issue has a pro and an anti-Communist point of view."

Sen. Mundt has marked his handy yardstick with a long list of current issues. He warns that a suspect's view on a single issue is inconclusive; you must, he says, look for a pattern. How many black marks make a pattern? He doesn't say. Let's assume six or seven and take them from the Mundt master list and look at them:

• Communists want a federal deficit, he warns. But, it is military spending that causes the deficits. So if your suspect favors a big army, navy, and air force, keep your eye on him.

• Communists oppose universal military training, Mundt says. So remember that, and forget all about Rep. Powell of New York who said on the House floor that UMT was conceived by the Communists—that will only confuse you.

• Communists, says Mundt, fight the Taft-Hartley law and are in favor of more public housing—so keep an eye on a large section of the Democratic party.

• Communists, according to Mundt, favor federal funds for schools and colleges, the Missouri Valley Authority, and the St. Lawrence Seaway, so put those things down on your check-list as you draw out your unsuspecting neighbor.

• Communists, says Mundt, favored David Lilienthal for the Atomic Energy Commission, and they took the President's side in the Truman-MacArthur issue, so you had better think hard about all those great newspapers—newspapers you always thought were conservative — which were wrong on both those matters. Also, by the way, look twice at any neighbor who thinks we ought to have higher taxes—that's part of the Communist line too, according to Mundt.

You see how it's done—the handy Mundt method for trapping your friends. You might jot the full list on your cuffs for quick reference during the bridge game conversation. However, if you are the old-fashioned, lazy type of American who would rather leave such delicate matters to the FBI and others trained for them, and who finds it easier to trust than to suspect, then you might turn from Sen. Mundt to the editor of the Saturday Review, Norman Cousins.

Mr. Cousins says, suppose there are a million American Communists and fellow-travelers—an extremely high estimate. That would mean it's at least 99 to one that your boss or your neighbor is just as loyal as you are.

"If each American cannot look at his neighbors or the leaders of his community without wondering whether any of them lead secret and subversive political lives, if he is to be torn with doubts about even his best friends," Cousins said, "then we have shattered the articles of human faith on which a democracy must rest."

1952 Voting Record

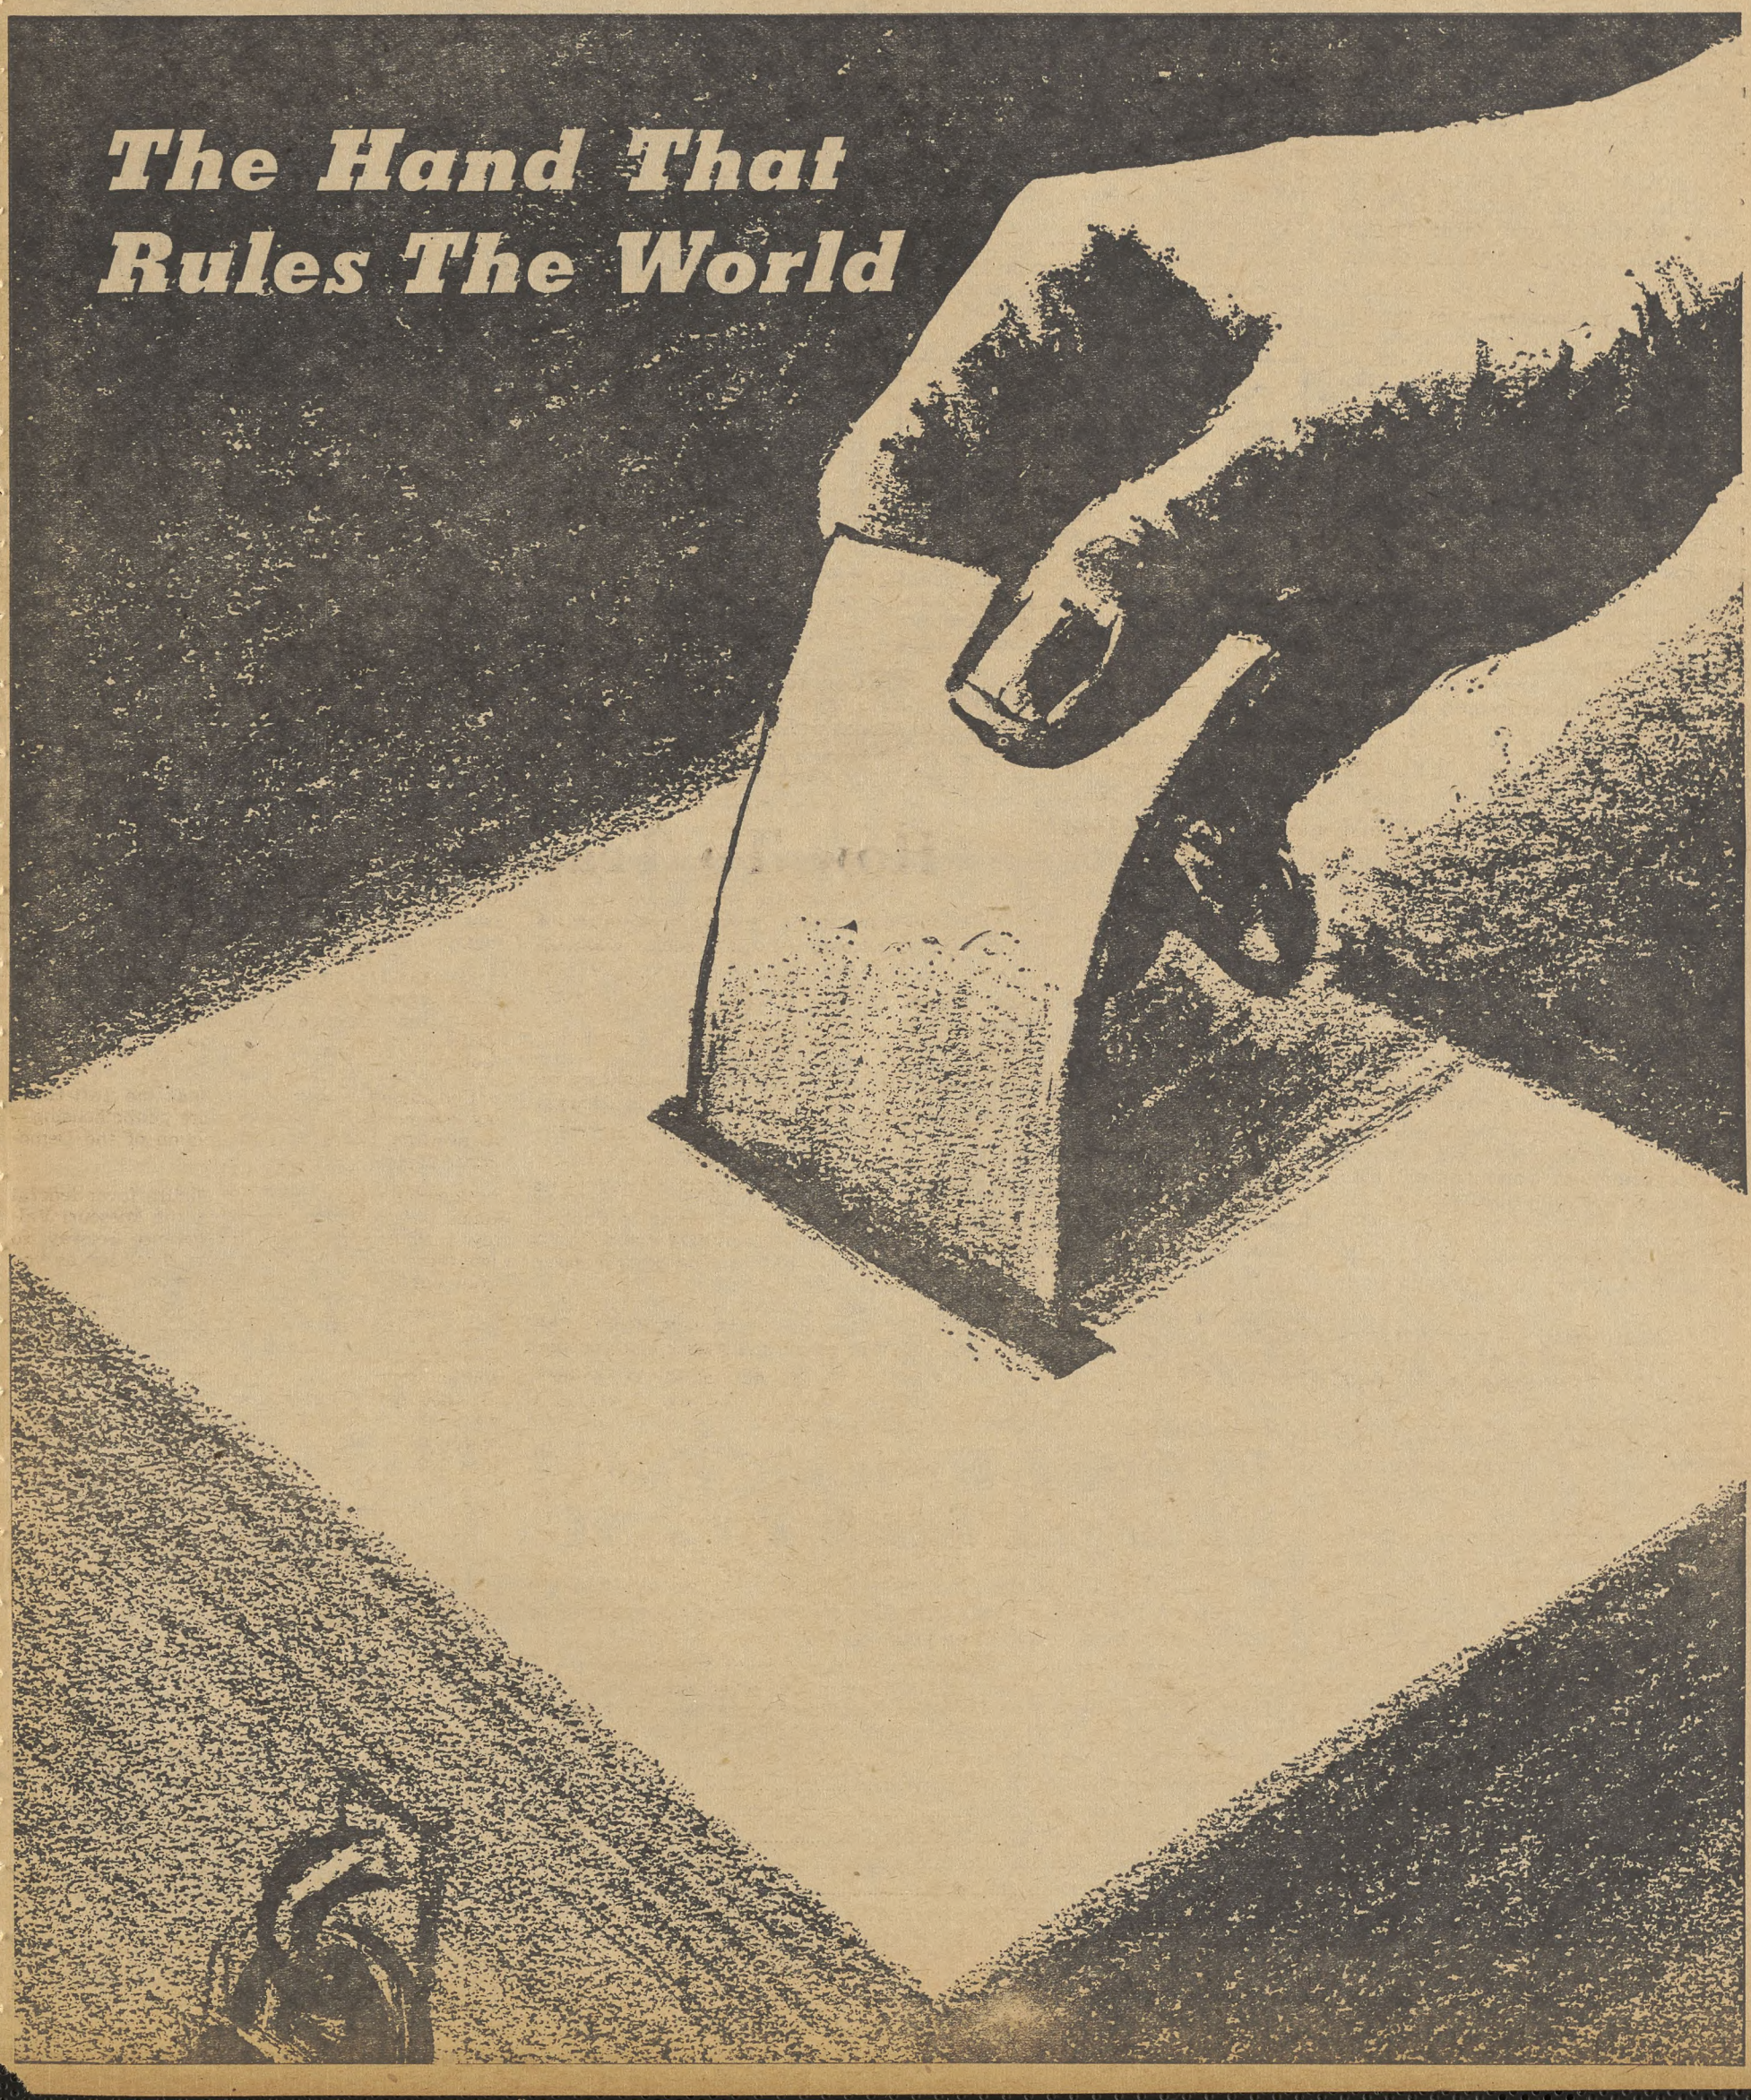
The Hand That Rules The World



The 'Horsemeat Congress' Gave People Meat-Ax

Fair Deal Stymied As Lobbyists Made Hay

THE 82ND CONGRESS will go down in history as the "Horsemeat Congress."

It got the title when it wrote "built-in inflation" into the Defense Production Act and took "eatin' food" off many American dinner tables.

Like its predecessors—the "awful" 80th Congress and the "eighty-worst" 81st Congress—the 82d Congress had as its outstanding characteristic domination by the Dixiegop coalition.

It was a "Democratic" Congress only through misuse of the party label by Dixiecrat lawmakers.

The reactionary Southern Democrats actually worked closely with the reactionary Republican leadership and voted with the GOP—while reaping the benefits of committee chairmanships and patronage resulting from nominal adherence to the Democratic party.

Instead of carrying forward the "Fair Deal" aims of the Democratic Administration which they supposedly had been elected to support, a large enough number of the Dixiecrats teamed up with reactionary Republicans so that the GOP leadership had the whiphand.

New Records For Inefficiency Set

A liberal Republican Senator, who refused to go along, revealed that this was a deliberate "deal." He told how Dixiecrats had wrung from GOP leaders in Congress a promise to buttonhole all civil rights legislation and agreed in return to vote with the Republicans against the President's program.

So the old reactionary Republican leaders who had made such a mess of things in the "do-nothing" and "awful" 80th Congress once again called most of the turns in the 82nd. They were even more "do-nothing" than before, and the 82nd Congress proved to be one of the most inefficient in history in getting its work done.

The first 1951 session—one of the longest on record—lasted nine months and 17 days. Even then, it adjourned 20 days after the date originally set by Majority Leader McFarland (D. Ariz.), due to the almost unprecedented snarl it had gotten into through not having passed most of its appropriations bills and other "must" legislation.

Because its members needed to begin campaigning for the Nov. 4 elections, the Congress ended its second 1952 session—just before the national party conventions last month. There was another logjam at the end. Consequently, the Congress could cut off its work only by using costly and ill-considered meat-ax methods in dealing with bills affecting the welfare of millions.

Many other vital measures simply died with the Congress.

The CIO Legislative Dept., like all other liberal groups working for the welfare of labor and the public, characterized its work as limited to "a holding operation" against still more reaction.

Almost from the beginning, because of control by the Dixiegop coalition, it was clear that the people could expect no significant labor or social legislation.

To cover up its shortcomings, the Congress took to "investigating" anything and everything that would get a newspaper headline. While professing interest in "economy," it spent a record amount of the people's money—totalling several millions of dollars—on special committee probes.

When it was over, even the investigation-mad 80th Congress seemed a piker by comparison. Its previous record expenditure for investigations had been topped by a million.

Voted 'Robbery By Broad Daylight'

One of the few constructive things that came out of the generally unproductive probing was a professed interest in "ethical practices" and "morality in government." The Republicans, in fact, picked up disclosures made by Democratic committees and tried to make "morality" seem a key issue for the coming campaign.

In their action on legislation, however, the Dixiegops voted "robbery by broad daylight—and on a colossal scale" in the tidelands oil grab, which President Truman successfully vetoed. And they kept millions of migrant farm workers in direst poverty by hamstringing Administration efforts to control importation of "wetbacks" labor on the great corporation farms of the Southwest.

Then the coalition went on to "tax-the-needy, spare-the-greedy" taxes, an "Iron Curtain" immigration bill that will work undue hardship on millions, and apparently whatever the special interest lobbies wanted on most other issues it considered. At no point did the Dixiegops running Congress appear to realize that morality, like charity, begins at home.

But People Can't Dodge Responsibility

Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), as chairman of a special Senate Committee set up to study ethical practices, submitted a brilliant report. Dixiegop leaders of the 82nd Congress promptly pigeon-holed it. The head of the committee's staff, son of the late Wendell Willkie, later said that he thought Congress itself couldn't escape blame for lack of morality when it crops up elsewhere in government.

But if Congress cannot dodge responsibility, neither can the people.

Today's soaring prices, vanishing rent controls, critical housing shortages and many other unsolved social and economic problems unquestionably are a direct legacy of the Dixiegop 82nd Congress. That Congress, however, was created—even though through default—by the people in 1950's elections.

Too many voters followed the pattern of off-presidential elections and stayed at home. Only 40 million—by far too few—voted. Sen. Taft won in Ohio; Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) won a major victory by engineering the defeat of Sen. Tydings (D. Md.).

In other areas, where the people really turned out, they sent to Congress some of the fighting liberals who have valiantly fought for their interests during the last two year. These included Sens. McMahon and Benton (Conn.), Lehman (N.Y.), Hennings (Mo.) and Morse (Ore.), each of whom had strong labor support.

Significantly, 200,000 fewer people voted in the 1950 Ohio election which Taft won than had voted when he ran for the Senate in 1944.

"THAT OLD GRAY MARE ain't what she used to be." Now she's the main course for those who can afford more than beans, according to this Washington restaurant owner, advertising his dislike of the "horsemeat Congress."

Why We're In Economic Wringer

It doesn't take much arithmetic to show that the stay-at-homes in 1950 lost the election to the enemies of progress who have been putting all of us through the economic wringer.

CIO has said it before, but it bears repeating: The 82nd Congress is the "penalty" the American people have had to pay for not voting in adequate numbers two years ago.

This year they can pass up the opportunity to change the reactionary make-up of the Congress only at considerable peril. Isolationism has been growing, and America's program of preventing the spread of communism through international cooperation is being challenged.

The times do not permit the luxury of another reactionary Congress in 1953-54.

A forward-looking legislative program in the 83rd Congress must be made possible before it takes office—by the voters at the polls on Nov. 4.

10 Good Reasons For Giving A Buck To PAC

THE 82ND CONGRESS has passed into history, leaving a spotty record, in which a great part of the progressive program of labor has been scuttled, crippled or pigeonholed.

The forces that bore heavily on the Congress in Washington too often overshadowed the forces that will bear upon the congressman in November. Their drive was backed up by lobby funds that came close to breaking all records. Among the lobby expenses reported to the Congress are:

American Farm Bureau Federation	$ 878,813.00
Committee for Constitutional Government	$ 773,957.59
American Medical Association	$ 450,373.57
National Association of Electric Companies	$ 434,325.91
Trucking Industry National Defense Committee	$ 249,882.56
Association of American Railroads	$ 237,809.89
National Milk Producers Federation	$ 185,315.78
National Association of Real Estate Boards	$ 133,625.76
U. S. Chamber of Commerce	$ 116,382.90
National Coal Association	$ 109,672.76

'We'll Beat Political Blitz'

By Philip Murray
President, CIO

ON NOVEMBER 4, every American has an assignment — the most important of 1952.

That assignment is to cast his vote on the most important day of 1952—Election Day.

It is imperative that every American fulfill that assignment.

Every vote is important.

But it is just as important that every voter be fully informed on every issue and be well acquainted with the voting record and position of every candidate.

It is equally important that every voter distinguish between truth and propaganda and not be confused by smears, jeers or lies spread by the foes of organized labor.

In this year of decision, the CIO is dedicated to a worthy and distinctly American task. It is the task of helping create the largest, best-informed, most-determined group of voters in our history.

That is the formula for success. We have proven it in the past. We will prove it again this year.

But let no one be misled into believing this will be an easy victory.

It won't. In 1952, we face our toughest battle.

Our opponents' battle machine is huge and powerful. It will be financed by the greatest political slush fund ever accumulated.

Its goal will be abolition of every gain American workers have achieved in the last 20 years.

But the CIO is not afraid of a tough fight. Everything we have achieved has been the result of determined fighting. We know how to fight hard and fight clean.

We'll have to fight this time, so that the American people will not fall victim to a modern-day political blitz.

The American people can prevent any such catastrophe.

If they are registered . . . if they know the issues and the position of the candidates . . . if they have the facts, they will cut through the smokescreen of false propaganda. They will vote for the kind of America best for themselves and all the people.

Our task is clear. We must give our political action program additional support. It is a program which has spelled victory before and will spell victory again.

That means an all-out registration campaign. It means making contributions to PAC. It means a vigorous fight to make each voter informed on the issues and alert to false propaganda.

It means a tremendous drive to get the vote out on Election Day.

It is a task which demands and deserves the best from each of us. I am confident we will each give our best.

I have an abiding faith in the intelligence, resourcefulness and patriotism of the men and women of CIO.

I am confident of a victory for all the people of America in November.

Workers Get A Stiff Kick In The Pants

THE 82ND CONGRESS — free-wheeling in handing out favors to the big business monopolies and special interest lobbies—saw fit to give workers and their unions only a good stiff kick in the pants and Taft-Hartley another pat on the back.

From the very outbreak of the dispute between the CIO Steelworkers and the steel industry, the issues were both tried and "judged"—in the steel companies' favor—by partisan lawmakers.

Eight committees of the Congress at the same time began to "investigate" the situation, with reactionary members on each trying to outdo the others in blaming the workers for the dispute.

The frenzy reached its peak when the Wage Stabilization Board dared to set forth the facts of the case as it saw them. Except for a few liberal members, Congressmen repeated only the minority views of the industry members of the wage board in their attacks on the recommended settlement.

To get even, Congress rewrote the Defense Production Act so as to abolish the old Wage Stabilization Board and replace it with a new one with greatly limited powers.

Lawmakers On Big Steel's Side

The result, as it affects workers and the public, will become apparent in the months ahead. Wages have been virtually frozen by "unfairly rigid" regulations of the board, while prices, rents—and profits—were given the go-ahead to soar farther into the stratosphere.

The anti-labor bias of Congress was most clearly shown by its "action" in response to President Truman's plea for new emergency disputes legislation to permit seizure of the steel companies after they had defied the WSB. Congress voted down all bills proposing such authority and came up only with a "recommendation" that the President use the Taft-Hartley anti-strike injunction to force the union to break its strike.

The 82nd Congress gave this demonstration of kinship to the 80th Congress which enacted T-H despite the overwhelming proof brought forth by the President and government agencies that it was the adamant position of the steel companies that had caused the strike.

The steel union had already voluntarily postponed strike action at the government's request for more than the 80-day period called for by a Taft-Hartley injunction. This made no difference to the Dixiegop coalition, however, which, in effect, said it wanted the government to "soak" the union anyhow.

Not until after Congress had gone home was the President able to bring about a steel settlement.

Several bills calling for T-H Act repeal were filed early in the first session, but the anti-labor majority of the House Labor Committee under the chairmanship of Rep. Barden (D. N.C.), promptly sat on them. It still had them buried at adjournment.

Taft-Hartley's unworkability created so great a crisis during the year, however, that Congress was forced to amend it. As revised, elections—won overwhelmingly by unions—are no longer required to authorize union shop agreements. Thousands of contracts negotiated by CIO affiliates prior to 1949, which a new interpretation of the law had put in jeopardy, were also validated.

Two other proposed T-H amendments got nowhere. These would have again legalized maritime hiring halls and allowed union shop contracts in the construction industry without the need of representation elections.

The Dixiegop-controlled House Labor Committee, while sitting on all bills designed to improve labor-management relations, reached the height of its activity when it conducted a smear-job "investigation" of the labor and public members of the old WSB. Old and long-discredited charges in the files of the House Un-American Activities Committee were again bruited about.

A more responsible Senate Labor Committee waged a losing battle in its efforts to persuade the Congress to act on labor bills. It reported out favorably many bills intended to promote better industrial relations and improve the lot of workers, but if they weren't pigeonholed in the Senate, the House Labor Committee promptly pounced on them.

Among such casualties was a bill to provide equal opportunity in employment.

Real Issues On Nov. 4

In digest, here are major legislative issues at stake in the 1952 presidential and congressional election:

LABOR AND THE LAW—Our country needs more than ever a labor-management relations act that is fair to both the worker and the employer. The Taft-Hartley Act, though repudiated by the people in 1948 and disavowed by many of its sponsors, still stands on the statute books. For our economy to realize the full promise of its productivity we must re-establish our labor law upon foundations of even-handed justice. The first step toward this goal is repeal of Taft-Hartley and passage of an equitable law in its stead.

CIVIL RIGHTS—To secure the civil rights of all our people on an equal basis, as contemplated by the Constitution, legislation is needed, and there must be administrative machinery to carry out that legislation. Only by these means can all our people enjoy equal opportunities for education, employment and political participation.

ECONOMIC STABILITY—The rising tide of inflation threatens all who work for wages with the loss of their substance. And no less in danger are those elder citizens who live on pensions and their savings. The better wages we have won have been more than cancelled out by higher living costs; soaring prices eat up the pensions and savings of those too old to work. There must be adequate controls to keep the American economy from shaking itself to pieces.

FOREIGN POLICY—The great aim of our people is a peace in the world, founded upon liberty and justice and enjoyed in security. Toward this end, it is necessary that the full strength of our Nation be mobilized, and that a Third World War be averted by effective use of the United Nations, the NATO organization and the fostering of the most friendly relationships with our neighbors in the American continents.

NATURAL RESOURCES—The Tennessee Valley Authority has added untold billions of dollars to the wealth of this part of the Midsouth and advanced the health, welfare and happiness of millions of people. Yet the TVA still is attacked in Congress by reactionary forces, who have blocked the development of the St. Lawrence seaway and power-project and stand stubbornly in the way of the Missouri and Columbia Valley developments, which are badly needed for flood control, for water supply and the generation of electric power.

Migrant Farm Workers Hit

The Dixiegops saw to it, however, that the rich owners of corporate farms in the Southwest continued to have available a practically unlimited supply of cheap Mexican labor for exploitation.

First they passed the Ellender-Poage bill which provided for the legal importation of thousands of poverty-stricken Mexicans—with American taxpayers subsidizing a large part of the expense.

Then, by writing a weak law and denying adequate funds for enforcement, they left the Mexican border a sieve through which an estimated half-million more illegal entrants find their way each year.

Thousands of American migrant farm workers were thrown out of jobs, or took a reduction in income, as a result. But even the Mexican government was forced to file strong objections over the abject conditions and treatment accorded to its nationals after they are hired by the corporate farmers in this country in place of U. S. labor.

When it came time to renew the treaty under which Mexico permits its workers to come to this country for work, that government wrung a few concessions by threatening not to sign unless Congress provided penalties for farmers hiring illegal entrants.

Price Gougers Cost Each Family $500

OF ALL the issues on which the 82nd "Horsemeat" Congress thumbed its nose at the consuming public, it thumbed the hardest on price and rent controls.

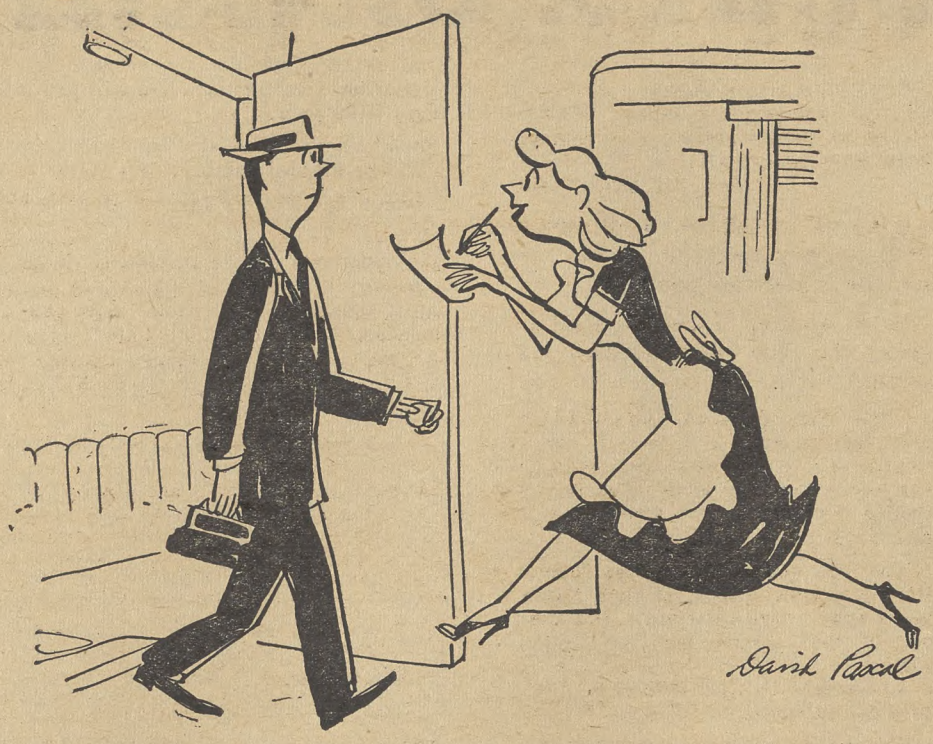
What's worse, the damage is far from over. Continued congressionally-sponsored price gouging and inflation may take $500 from each American family in added living costs in the year immediately ahead—which shows why politics is a bread-and-butter matter.

Rarely on any similar issue which affects the welfare of every man, woman and child has Congress shown as great irresponsibility, or as complete subservience to lobbyists for big business and special interests. Only the 80th Congress, which decided to let prices continue zooming skyward showed an equal lack of concern about inflation.

The facts of runaway prices were clear to the Congress from the moment of its birth. A steady spiral of the consumer's price index since Korea showed living costs constantly rising each month above ever new all-time highs.

One after one, top Administration spokesmen and representatives of labor and consumer organizations drove this fact home to Congress when the time came in the first session to extend the Defense Production Act. That law had been hurriedly passed by the 81st Congress to provide temporary controls over the defense economy.

The steady rise in prices clearly demonstrated that the original act was inadequate in many important respects and needed strengthening. Instead, the "Horsemeat" Congress — under the prompting of the same Republican leadership which had been responsible for the inflation of 1947 and 1948—tore even the weak 1950 law asunder last year.



"I've worked out this month's budget perfectly, if you could only scrape up another $63.18."

Through amendments sponsored by Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.), Rep. Herlong (D. La.) and Sen. Butler (R. Neb.) and Rep. Hope (R. Kans.) it riddled the measure with economic booby traps which cost consumers at least $16 billion in inflation last year. This "built-in" inflation also added tens of billions of dollars to the cost of the defense program and more than cancelled out even the damaging cuts in appropriations made by the coalition "wrecking crew."

The cost-of-living index soared. Housewives all over the nation found it necessary to curtail food purchases—and the nouishment for their children—drastically. School authorities in areas of low-income families reported a disturbing increase in the number of children living on near-starvation diets.

The American Red Cross said lack of meat at meals was reducing the number of eligible blood donors.

This forced a "buyers' strike" against high prices, which brought a temporary overstocking and a lull in price pressures on some commodities early this year. Dixiegop Congressmen, ignoring the fact that most goods were still at or near all-time highs, seized on this lull as an excuse to support big business demands for an end to all price controls.

The House actually voted such a step during its consideration of legislation extending the economic controls law this June. At the very moment this action was taken, the upward spiral of prices was again renewed and the consumer price index hit a new all-time high.

Although the House vote killing all controls was finally reversed, the bill passed this year was still a "fraud on consumers" which guarantees business even higher profits through further inflation while keeping wages frozen. Controls were ended last month on all processed fruits and vegetables, which make up about 11% of the food budget.

At the same time the Dixiegops voted to end rent controls Sept. 30, except where local governing boards take definite action to extend them to April 30, 1953. Rent Stabilizer Tighe Woods since has warned that the landlord lobby is preparing to further pluck consumers' pockets in decontrolled areas once the deadline has passed with new rent boosts ranging up to 100%.

And just to make sure that the critical nationwide housing shortage which causes high rents continues, the "Horsemeat Congress" all but wiped out the public housing program, reducing the number of units to be built next year to a pitiful 35,000.

So far the public has only been able to grumble. It will have a chance to do something about the price and rent situations when voting times comes next November.

A lot of "Horsemeat" Congressmen may find themselves let out to pasture.

Sparkman vs. Nixon— A Study In Contrasts

OVER THE six-year period that both have been in Congress, the nominees for Vice President on the Democratic and Republican tickets for 1952 have run up decidedly uneven records, a check of CIO voting guides for the last three Congresses shows.

Sen. Sparkman, the Democratic nominee, has been in the Senate throughout the 80th, 81st and 82nd Congresses. Sen. Nixon, GOP nominee, went to the House in 1946 and to the Senate in 1950.

The following comparison, accordingly, balances Nixon's record in the House during four of the last six years against Sparkman's record in the Senate throughout this period as well as the record of each during their last two years in the Senate. The tally is based on CIO voting records for 1948 (80th Congress), 1950 (81st Congress) as well as the current guide for the 82nd Congress.

Out of a total of 46 key issues covered by the three guides, Sparkman is credited with a "right" vote on 36 occasions, while Nixon earned that designation only 10 times. Sparkman was listed as "wrong" six times and not voting four times; Nixon was cited as "wrong" on 31 issues and as not voting on four.

Civil Liberties Slashed By Dixiegop Coalition

BORN IN the deal between Republicans and Dixiecrats to kill civil rights legislation, the Dixiegop coalition went beyond even this reactionary base of operations in the 82nd Congress and gave civil liberties generally the worst butchering in years.

Civil rights, of course, had no chance at all. Not a single one of the four major items in President Truman's civil rights program was allowed to reach the floor of either the House or Senate.

And in one respect, the 82nd Congress was even worse on civil rights than the five preceding Congresses. In each of the latter, the House had passed the anti-poll tax bill with an overwhelming vote, forcing the Senate to do the dirty work of killing it through filibusters. In the Dixiegop 82nd, the House did not even hold a hearing on the issue.

A small group of liberal, pro-Administration Democrats and two Republicans, Sens. Ives (N. Y.) and Morse (Ore.), fought valiantly to keep the civil rights issue burning.

In the closing days of the second session, the Senate Labor Subcommittee headed by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) voted 10-to-3 to report an FEPC bill. Those who voted against it were Sens. Nixon (R. Calif.), Taft (R. O.) and Hill (D. Ala.).

Once the measure was out of committee, however, the Dixiegops pounced on it and prevented it from getting on the calendar for floor debate.

The necessary preliminary to action on civil rights—a change in the Senate rules to make it possible to stop inevitable Southern filibusters—was killed with Republican help. Morse and Humphrey introduced a bill early in the first session to end debate by majority vote; the Senate Rules Committee reported out instead a token change proposed by the late Sen. Wherry (R. Neb.).

The latter, which would have had no effect on stopping filibusters, would have required a two-thirds vote of those present instead of two-thirds of all Senators. Yet even this mild change was never acted upon. The "deal" had paid off for the South.

Dixiecrat filibusters sent bills to grant statehood to Hawaii and Alaska back to committee. Republican Policy Leader Taft supported this move, saying the time wasn't right.

The success of the so-called "States Righters" in denying basic democratic rights of statehood to Alaska and Hawaii was repeated in regard to the move to give home rule to the 802,000 voteless citizens of the District of Columbia. The

The most serious inroads on civil liberties came when the Dixiegop coalition voted to override the President's veto of the "Iron Curtain" McCarran-Walter immigration bill. Restrictive provisions which deny fundamental democratic rights and erect racist and anti-foreigner barriers make this law a threat to the happiness and future welfare of millions of citizens and future citizens.

Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) also dealt a major blow to civil liberties in the first session when, as chairman of the Senate Rules Committee, he succeeded in blocking the customary exemption from the conflict-of-interests law to the members of the Commission on Internal Security headed by Admiral Nimitz.

Witch-hunting boiled over on the floors of Congress, while there was still more than a normal amount going on in committees. Sen. McCarthy hit and ran throughout the session.

Here's The 80th Congress— GOP Wants To Duplicate It

"The Republican Party does not rest its case upon promises alone. We have a record of performance . . . the Republican 80th Congress."

—From 1952 GOP platform

WHAT WOULD a Republican victory next November mean for the American people?

The answer already has been given by the Republicans themselves.

Their 1952 platform—adopted just a few weeks ago at Chicago—commits themselves to a repeat performance of the exhibition they gave when they controlled the "awful" 80th Congress in 1947 and 1948.

The GOP goes out of its way to endorse the "accomplishments" of that 80th Congress and to praise it highly—but the record of that session was assailed, with justice, by workers, farmers and small businessmen, by the voters in the last presidential election.

The record of those years tells a different story from what the GOP now proclaims. As CIO Pres. Philip Murray said back in 1948, the story of the 80th Congress "is not a pleasant one."

Although the "awful 80th" came to be known also as a "do-nothing" congress because of its failure to enact any of the measures needed to protect the people's interests, it did deliver strong at the start. What it delivered consisted solely of anti-labor bills; the Taft-Hartley Act, amendments weakening the Wage and Hour Law, and an appropriations rider that crippled the Labor Dept.

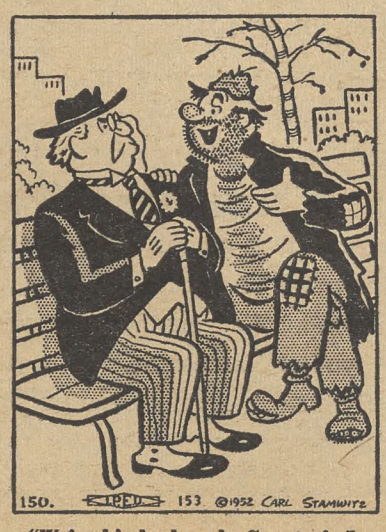
Every Family Pays The Price

"The 80th Congress declared war on the rights of American workers and their unions," Murray said upon its adjournment in 1948. "It destroyed the Wagner Act, and has brought collective bargaining back close to the jungle of industrial warfare."

"The 80th Congress failed completely to fight against inflation. Today, as a result, every American family suffers," Pres. Murray said in summary. "The 80th Congress failed to act on matters of health and security, of decent minimum wages and critically needed housing. Every American family is the loser."

Legislation desired by a vast majority of the American people was pigeon-holed. But lobbyists for the big corporations, special interests and trade groups hit the jackpot frequently.

"You could smell the work of the big business lobbies," The CIO News reported. "Their number was greater than ever . . . They wined and dined the Congressmen. They sat in at committee hearings, they helped draft bills—Taft-Hartley, for instance."



"We're kindred souls, Senator! I, too, am anti-labor. And, like you, haven't worked a day in my life, either!"

In the Senate, none of the major civil rights bill even came up for debate, and the House, despite the strong GOP majority, failed to act on anti-lynching or FEPC bills. The House gave its overwhelming approval of segregated southern schools, however, and then pushed through by another whopping majority the Mundt-Nixon bill, which became the McCarran Act, regarded as a major threat to civil liberties.

In foreign affairs, traditional GOP isolationism bubbled over. Despite the bipartisan policy then in effect, House Republicans tried to chop down funds for the European Recovery Program below the point of effective operation.

FDR's Program Was Cut Down

Urged on by the high-tariff lobbies, the GOP majority struck a blow at international trade and weakened European recovery hopes by cutting down FDR's program of reciprocal trade agreements from three years to 12 months. Then they passed a Displaced Persons Bill loaded with clauses discriminating against Jews and Catholics.

Rent control was weakened, and the real estate lobby also won—despite strong urging from President Truman—by preventing any action on housing legislation. Price controls didn't have a chance, either, though the BLS index went up and up to the then highest point in history.

Meanwhile, the outmoded 40c hourly minimum wage stayed right where it was.

The rich, the privileged and the powerful special interests did much better. The Reed-Bulwinkle Bill exempting the railroads from prosecution under the anti-trust laws was passed over President Truman's veto.

The 80th Congress also voted to override a veto of its "spare-the-rich" tax bill, which bestowed a saving ranging from 18.5% to 58% on families earning between $25,000 and $250,000, but reduced taxes only 1.3% on families earning $2,200.

Tafts, Tabers Would Be Back

Running most of the show throughout the "awful 80th" were Sen. Taft (O.) and Millikin (Colo.), who as chairman of the Finance Committee pushed "spare-the-rich" taxes, and Reps. Halleck (Ind.), Knutson (Minn.), Wolcott (Mich.), Taber (N.Y.) and Thomas (N.J.).

All of these except the latter, who was indicted on a charge of taking kickbacks from one of his employes and sent to prison, would return to power in the event of a GOP victory in 1952.

Taft and Halleck would each become Majority Leader in their respective chambers, and the others would take over as chairmen of important committees. The best proof that they haven't changed a bit since 1947 and 1948 is the fact that Sen. Millikin headed the platform committee at last month's Republican convention.

By endorsing the "awful 80th Congress" the Republicans made it clear that their return to power next November would mean another Congress that would be "awful" for the American people.

About This CIO Voting Record . . .

THE VOTING records of each member of the House and Senate during the 82nd Congress on 17 "key" issues of importance to working men and women are pinpointed on the following pages.

This record is published by the CIO as a matter of educational value for its members and the public in general.

It is not a "blacklist," on the one hand, nor a series of indorsements on the other. It is, however, an accurate record of the position taken by each Congressman on the issues involved.

Taken as a whole, these votes help to show whether your representatives in Congress stood with the people or with the special interests. The issues included were carefully selected by the CIO Legislative Dept. and the CIO Political Action Committee. They were chosen to give a well-rounded history of a Congress which gravely disappointed the American people.

An effort was made to present record votes on issues which most fairly test each Congressman's fundamental concern for the nation's general welfare.

No voting record, however, can tell the whole story of your representative's career in Washington. This is particularly true in regard to the 82nd Congress, where coalition control was accompanied by fewer roll call votes than were taken in previous years.

Other important factors in a Congressman's work, such as how he acted behind the scenes and in carrying out committee and other duties, are not touched upon here. And obviously, a voting record cannot show whether a Congressman supported or opposed worthwhile measures which never came up for a vote. Because the 82nd Congress bottled up many important measures affecting the general welfare, this consideration is especially important in relation to this particular voting guide.

This voting guide is one way for you to learn the records of the men and women who represented you in Washington, so that you may judge for yourself whether they deserve another term in office.

The basic decision, after all, is up to you, the American voter.

The CIO and its affiliated union will work hard to improve the Congress and make it worthy of American democracy. It invites your help either through the CIO Political Action Committee or independently.

Unlike other labor groups, the CIO will not issue a "blacklist" of members of Congress whose actions have been directed against organized labor and the American people.

Endorsements of candidates in the 1952 Congressional elections will be made, as in the past, by CIO Councils and CIO Political Action Committees back home, in the states, in the districts. Those endorsements are made on the basis of all the facts—of which the voting record is only one.

If you want further information about the record of any Congressmen or Senators on issues not listed in these pages, write to the office of Nathan Cowan, CIO Legislative Director, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C., or to the CIO Political Action Committee, 1346 Connecticut Ave., Washington, D. C.

The Senate's Voting Record

Here's an explanation of each of the 17 important votes on the opposite page. Read the description of the issues—then see how your Senator voted.

1. DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT—Byrd Amendment (Opposed by CIO)

Issue: After rejecting President Truman's request for steel seizure authority, the Dixiegop anti-labor coalition adopted the Byrd (D. Va.) amendment "requesting" the President to use the Taft-Hartley 80-day injunction against striking steelworkers. Vote June 10, 1952.

Vote: To use Taft-Hartley injunction ..... 49 (W)
Against use of Taft-Hartley injunction ..... 30 (R)

Result: Similar action by House gave strong encouragement to the steel companies to prolong fight against the steelworkers.

2. DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT—Douglas WSB Amendt. (Supported by CIO)

Issue: The Douglas (D. Ill.) amendment would have retained existing Wage Stabilization Board with power to handle dispute cases. Amendment defeated June 4, 1952.

Vote: To retain existing WSB ..... 26 (R)
To restrict WSB ..... 56 (W)

Result: Later adoption of crippling Ives-Lucas amendment deprived WSB of disputes function and limited board to advisory capacity.

3. DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT—Douglas Amendment (Supported by CIO)

Issue: Rollback of prices on meats and other commodities through Douglas amendment was a crucial issue in the 1951 fight for effective inflation control. Amendment defeated June 27, 1951.

Vote: To permit price rollbacks ..... 26 (R)
To prohibit price rollbacks ..... 61 (W)

Result: Consumers have paid billions in increased prices.

4. DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT—Dirksen Amendment (Opposed by CIO)

Issue: The Dirksen (R. Ill.) amendment would have barred price ceilings on agricultural commodities unless in "short" supply and opened the way for a new inflationary spiral by exempting food processors from control. Amendment defeated June 4, 1952.

Vote: To bar agricultural price ceilings ..... 33 (W)
To permit agricultural price ceilings ..... 44 (R)

Result: Final bill exempted fresh and processed fruits and vegetables from price control. These items make up 20% of average family food budget.

5. JENNER AMENDMENT—(Opposed by CIO)

Issue: Opposed by labor and welfare groups, the Jenner (R. Ind.) amendment lifted the ban on publication of the names of persons receiving public relief. Amendment adopted July 19, 1951.

Vote: To publish the names of those on relief ..... 38 (W)
Against publication of relief rolls ..... 30 (R)

Result: Although the Jenner amendment was eliminated in conference from this particular bill (H.R. 2416), the way was paved for its adoption later as a rider to the 1951 tax bill.

6. AID TO MEDICAL EDUCATION—(Supported by CIO)

Issue: Bill provided federal grants-in-aid to help train additional doctors, dentists and nurses urgently needed armed forces and on home front. Key Vote came on Pastore (D. R.I.) amendment to encourage expanded enrollment in medical training schools. Amendment defeated Oct. 4, 1951.

Vote: For the Pastore amendment ..... 23 (R)
Against the Pastore amendment ..... 42 (W)

Result: No further action taken on bill.

7. AID TO LOCAL PUBLIC HEALTH UNITS—(Supported by CIO)

Issue: Bill authorized federal aid to local communities to initiate and expand public health units. Bill passed Mar. 16, 1951.

Vote: For aid to local public health units ..... 38 (R)
Against aid to local public health units ..... 35 (W)

Result: Passage of bill by Senate was a forward step, but House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee sat on the measure.

8. PUBLIC HOUSING UNITS—Committee Amendment

Issue: The House had authorized construction of only 5000 public housing units in 1953, which the Senate Appropriations Committee increased to 45,000 units. Committee amendment adopted June 3, 1952.

Vote: To provide for 45,000 public housing units ..... 37 (R)
To limit to 5000 units ..... 31 (W)

Result: Real estate lobby attempt to kill public housing program blocked, although only 35,000 units finally approved by Congress.

9. HILL EDUCATION AMENDMENT—Motion to Table (Opposed by CIO)

Issue: Hill (D. Ala.) amendment to the tidelands oil bill provided that federal income from off-shore oil leases be used for national defense during the emergency and then be used to improve the nation's schools. Vote came on Holland (D. Fla.) motion to table the amendment. Motion adopted Apr. 2, 1952.

Vote: For the Hill amendment ..... 36 (R)
Against the Hill amendment ..... 47 (W)

Result: Congress failed to use effective means to aid education and improve teacher salaries.

10. TIDELANDS OIL—Holland Substitute Bill (Opposed by CIO)

Issue: Senate Interior Committee bill retained federal ownership of off-shore oil resources valued at $40 billion. Holland (D. Fla.) substitute bill gave ownership of these resources to a few states. Holland bill passed Apr. 2, 1952.

Vote: To give away vitally needed oil resources ..... 50 (W)
To keep federal ownership of this national asset ..... 34 (R)

Result: Federal ownership of off-shore oil resources preserved by President Truman's veto of the bill. No attempt made to override veto.

11. ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—Recommittal (Opposed by CIO)

Issue: Last chance opportunity for U. S. participation with Canada in construction of vitally-needed St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project. Vote came on O'Conor (D. Md.) motion to return bill to committee. Motion adopted June 18, 1952.

Vote: For the St. Lawrence Project ..... 40 (R)
Against the Project ..... 43 (W)

Result: Recommittal of bill killed U. S. participation in St. Lawrence Project.

12. ALASKA STATEHOOD—Recommittal (Opposed by CIO)

Issue: The granting of statehood to Alaska was blocked by the Smathers (D. Fla.) motion to recommit the bill to Committee. Opponents of civil rights legislation do not want additional Senators and Representatives who are likely to vote for such legislation. Smathers motion adopted Feb. 27, 1952.

Vote: To recommit the bill ..... 45 (W)
Against recommittal ..... 44 (R)

Result: No further action taken on statehood for Alaska or Hawaii.

13. EUROPEAN AID—Dirksen Amendment (Opposed by CIO)

Issue: Dirksen (R. Ill.) amendment proposed to slash $500 million from 1952 authorization of ECA funds for European Recovery Program. Amendment defeated Aug. 31, 1951.

Vote: For the Dirksen fund-slashing amendment ..... 31 (W)
Against the Dirksen amendment ..... 41 (R)

Result: Senate later cut authorization for European economic aid by $250 million. This was only partially restored by final action on bill.

14. EUROPEAN AID—Benton Amendment (Supported by CIO)

Issue: Benton (D. Conn.) amendment proposed that European aid be provided in a way to discourage cartels and monopoly and to encourage development of the free trade union movements of Europe. Amendment adopted Aug. 31, 1951.

Vote: For the Benton amendment ..... 36 (R)
Against the Benton amendment ..... 31 (W)

Result: Passage of amendment struck blow at European monopolies and gave a boost to free trade union movements.

15. MUTUAL SECURITY PROGRAM—Welker Amendment (Opposed by CIO)

Issue: Attempt by Sen. Welker (R. Idaho) to slash another $1 billion from the 1953 Mutual Security Program of economic, military, and technical assistance to free nations resisting Communist aggression. Amendment defeated May 27, 1952.

Vote: For the Welker amendment ..... 27 (W)
Against the Welker amendment ..... 35 (R)

Result: President Truman had requested $7.9 billion for the Mutual Security Program. Congress finally appropriated $6 billion for program.

16. McCARRAN BILL (Opposed by CIO)

Issue: Passage of McCarran Immigration bill over President's veto. Veto overridden June 27, 1952.

Vote: To override the veto ..... 57 (W)
To sustain the veto ..... 26 (R)

Result: Adopted over veto by both houses, McCarran law vests arbitrary powers over admission and deportation in hands of administrative officials; fosters concept of second class citizenship; perpetuates racial and nationality discrimination in immigration law.

17. WETBACK CONTROL FUNDS—Magnuson Amendt. (Supported by CIO)

Issue: Magnuson (D. Wash.) amendment would have increased funds for Immigration Service by $2 million to enforce ban on illegal migratory labor. Amendment defeated June 26, 1952.

Vote: For the Magnuson amendment ..... 17 (R)
Against the Magnuson amendment ..... 62 (W)

Result: Cheap "wetback" labor will continue to undermine U. S. workers' standard of living.

Help Send A Better Congress To Washington!

The House Voting Record...

Here's a short description of each of the 16 key votes in the House of Representatives which are recorded on the next three pages. Read the description of these issues, then see how your Congressman voted on them.

1. DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT—Smith Amendment (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Dixiegop anti-labor coalition "request" to President Truman to use Taft-Hartley 80-day injunction against striking steelworkers. Smith (D. Va.) amendment adopted June 26, 1952.

VOTE: To use T-H injunction..... 228 (W)
Against use of T-H injunction..... 164 (R)

RESULT: Action gave strong encouragement to steel companies to prolong fight against steelworkers.

2. DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT—Lucas Amendment (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: The Lucas (D. Tex.) amendment provided a new Wage Stabilization Board, with a majority of public members, and stripped of disputes functions. Amendment adopted June 26, 1952.

VOTE: To restrict WSB..... 256 (W)
To retain existing WSB..... 138 (R)

RESULT: Adoption of crippling Ives-Lucas amendment deprived WSB of disputes function and limited board to advisory capacity; equal tripartite membership was retained.

3. DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT—Talle Amendment (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Virtually all price controls would have ended June 30, 1952 under the Talle (R. Ia.) amendment. Amendment adopted June 26, 1952.

VOTE: For the Talle amendment.....210 (W)
Againt the amendment..... 182 (R)

RESULT: Although the Talle amendment was eliminated in conference, the final version of the DPA paved the way for further inflation.

4. DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT—Wheeler Amendment (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Rent controls will end Sept. 30, 1952 under the Wheeler (D. Ga.) amendment except in critical defense housing areas or where local governments specifically request extension. Amendment adopted June 26, 1952.

VOTE: To end rent controls Sept. 30..... 225 (W)
To extend rent controls..... 170 (R)

RESULT: Six million American families face sharp increases in rents.

5. DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT—Poage-Cole Amendt. (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Cost-plus pricing on every product at every stage of production and distribution was provided in the Poage (D. Tex.)-Cole (R. Kans.) amendment. Amendment defeated July 20, 1951.

VOTE: For cost-plus pricing..... 181 (W)
Against cost-plus pricing..... 233 (R)

RESULT: Later inclusion of the cost-plus procedure in the 1951 Defense Production Act set up one of the greatest roadblocks to effective price control.

6. SOCIAL SECURITY BILL (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Measure designed to raise old age and survivors benefits, preserve full rights to such benefits for permanently and totally disabled persons, and increase the amount of earnings permitted without loss of benefits. Vote came on motion to suspend rules and pass bill. Bill failed to receive required two-thirds majority. Bill defeated May 19, 1952.

VOTE: For bill ..... 151 (R)
Against bill .....141 (W)

RESULT: Although temporarily blocked by the American Medical Association lobby, popular demand for the measure was so great that the House later passed a similar bill. Final compromise bill enacted by Congress is meaningless for the disabled.

7. HOUSE RULES CHANGE—Cox Resolution (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Cox (D. Ga.) resolution repealed reforms in House procedures adopted in 1949 and restored to the House Rules Committee dictatorial control over legislation. Resolution adopted Jan. 3, 1951.

VOTE: To repeal House rules reforms.....243 (W)
To keep House rules reforms..... 180 (R)

RESULT: Chairmen of House Committees deprived of right to by-pass Rules Committee bottleneck and get bills directly before House for vote.

8. SEGREGATED HOSPITAL FOR NEGRO VETERANS (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Bill authorized construction of a segregated hospital for Negro veterans. It attempted to place Federal approval on a policy of segregation. Vote came on motion by Rep. Powell (D. N.Y.) to strike enacting clause, thereby killing bill. Motion adopted June 6, 1951.

VOTE: To construct a Jim Crow hospital.....117 (W)
Against segregation ..... 223 (R)

RESULT: Attempt to advance program of segregation was beaten.

9. PUBLIC HOUSING—Recommittal (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Senate-House Conference Report provided for construction of 35,000 public housing units in 1953. Rep. Fisher (D. Tex.) moved to return the report to conference with instructions to limit new construction to only 5000 units. Motion defeated July 2, 1952.

VOTE: To provide for 35,000 public housing units.....193 (R)
To limit to 5000 units..... 160 (W)

RESULT: Final action by Congress provided for construction of 35,000 public housing units in 1953.

10. FARM LABOR—Poage Bill (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Bill provided for importation of Mexican farm labor under entirely inadequate safeguards. It did nothing to improve conditions of American farm workers. Bill passed June 27, 1951.

VOTE: For the Poage bill.....240 (W)
Against the Poage bill.....139 (R)

RESULT: Passage of Ellender-Poage bill led President Truman to ask Congress for corrective legislation.

11. TIDELANDS OIL BILL (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Bill forfeited federal ownership of offshore oil resources valued at $40 billion by turning over title to the states. It opened the door to exploitation by private oil interests. Bill passed July 30, 1951.

VOTE: To give away vitally needed oil resources.....265 (W)
To keep federal ownership .....109 (R)

RESULT: Federal ownership of offshore oil resources preserved by President Truman's veto of the bill. No attempt made to override veto.

12. PUBLIC POWER FUNDS—Keating Amendment (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Keating (R. N.Y.) amendment to Interior Dept. appropriation prohibited use of funds to build public power lines in certain areas. Amendment adopted May 2, 1951.

VOTE: Against construction of public power lines.....226 (W)
For construction of public power lines.....165 (R)

RESULT: Although later modified in the Senate, the amendment remained an obstacle in the operation of public power projects.

13. MUTUAL SECURITY PROGRAM—Vorys Amendment (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Vorys (R., O.) amendment cut over $615 million from the defense support fund authorization for Western European nations resisting Communist aggression. Amendment adopted May 23, 1952.

VOTE: For the Vorys amendment .....221 (W)
Against the Vorys amendment .....137 (R)

RESULT: Mutual Security Program seriously weakened despite protests of the President and top military leaders who warned that adequate aid was necessary in terms of America's security.

14. MUTUAL SECURITY PROGRAM—Vorys Amendment (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: This amendment by Vorys slashed $111 million from the fund authorization for Asia. Military and economic assistance was cut 10%; the Point 4 technical assistance program was cut 50%. Amendment adopted May 23, 1952.

VOTE: For the Vorys amendment .....192 (W)
Against the Vorys amendment .....165 (R)

RESULT: Another crippling blow to the Mutual Security Program.

15. McCARRAN BILL (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Passage of McCarran Immigration bill over President's veto. Veto overridden June 26, 1952.

VOTE: To over-ride the veto .....278 (W)
To sustain the veto .....113 (R)

RESULT: McCarran bill became law as a result of both House and Senate overriding the President's veto. The new law perpetuates racial and nationality discrimination and gives arbitrary powers to administrative officials.

16. MUTUAL SECURITY PROGRAM—Crawford Amendt. (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Crawford (R. Mich.) amendment cut an additional $145 million from funds for military assistance to Western European nations. Amendment adopted June 28, 1952.

VOTE: For the Crawford amendment.....172 (W)
Against the Crawford amendment.....167 (R)

RESULT: Weakens our NATO allies resisting Communism.

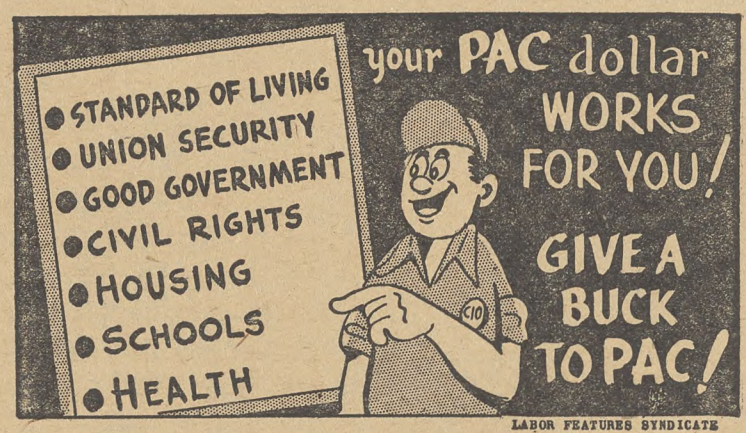
Political Action Is A Bread And Butter Matter . . .



. . . So Register!
. . . Give A Buck To PAC!
. . . And Vote!

'Let People Know The Truth'

By JACK KROLL
Director, CIO-PAC

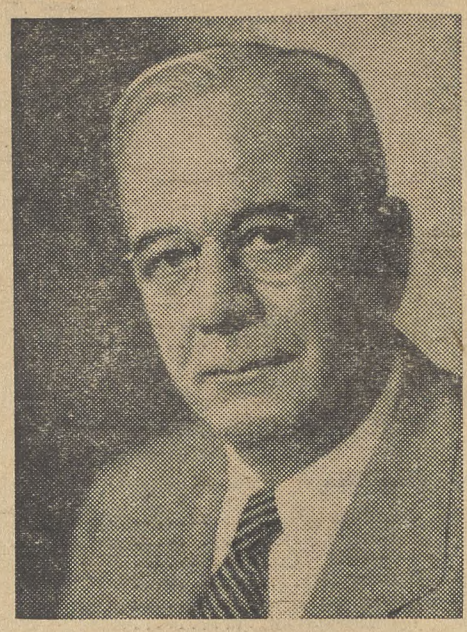
WE STAND on the threshold of a great debate upon issues that are vital to us all—issues that mean bread and butter for our people, and mean peace or war for the whole world.

We Americans have less than three months in which to reach a decision that will mould the social and economic policy of our government for years to come.

We have reason to be thankful that the method of our country is the method of political action. Our course will not be fixed by any decree but a great surge of democratic expression of the popular will.

We of the CIO have a great responsibility in this regard. Already we know the necessity of political action. The crisis that we face in 1952 is a challenge, but an accustomed challenge. The crisis of 1952 differs only in the magnitude of the decision to be made.

As we have experience in these matters, we have a duty to our fellow citizens, not to make up their minds for them, but to inform them of the facts.



When the people know the truth, we can have the most complete faith in the rightness of their decision.

The question before us in this campaign is not wholly one of candidates. They are important, and they are to be judged upon their records, their character and their platforms. But they are chiefly important by reason of the principles for which they stand. A decision based on personalities alone is far less to be trusted than one resting upon the real issues at stake.

These issues make 1952 a clear cut turning point in our history. The choice before us is between going forward with a liberal program, and going backward toward the policies and the conditions of half a century ago.

One thing we may be sure of: a nation does not stand still, it must advance or retreat.

The road ahead leads to a country of peaceful and serene homes, in a peaceful and secure world. The road back leads to unemployment, breadlines and depression.

These being the choices, we of the CIO have a big job to do in the next three months. We must be messengers of the facts, and carry them to all our fellow citizens. Having informed ourselves, we must act.

For it is not enough to know the record, or to tell the record to the world, if neither we nor others do anything about it.

Political action is no action at all unless it is completed, unless it is brought to the final realization of the ballot box.

To bring this about takes organization. We canont have that without work and money.

We have already in our political action committees, national, state and local, a broad foundation. For us, meeting the challenge of 1952 is the high point of our continuous effort for civic betterment. To be successful, we must by all means within our command make sure that this high point is high enough.

Wherever in the land registration books still are open, we must register, and urge others to register, so that their right to vote in November will be secure.

From our registration drives, we must turn to getting out the vote, so that the election of 1952 will be a true expression of the will of our people. Every vote not cast is a vote against our country.

Now the time is short. Within three months we must turn plans and projects into action and results. If all who have faith in the future will help, if all who believe the job is worthwhile will take part, we cannot fail.

This Is Your CIO-PAC

1. What Is PAC?

The purpose of the CIO Political Action Committee is to advance the general welfare by political action. It is made up of local and state committees of CIO members and a national executive board, whose members are Philip Murray, chairman; David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer; Jack Kroll, director; Joseph Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, James B. Carey, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Jacob Potofsky, Michael Quill, Walter Reuther, Emil Rieve, Al Hartnett, Emil Mazey, T. M. McCormick, William Pollock, Frank Rosenblum, Desmond Walker and Carlton Werkau.

2. Why Are We In Politics

Because the welfare and security of all Americans depend on good officials—good mayors, good congressmen, good presidents—and politics is the process by which we elect officials. Our country will have good officials only if its people are good citizens, who do their part to elect good men.

3. How Does PAC Work?

PAC reports the facts about issues and the records of the candidates. PAC block workers and shop stewards canvass their areas. They carry on registration drives and try to get out the vote on election day so that the result will be a true decision of a majority of the people.

4. What Is The Political Program Of The CIO?

The CIO stands for world peace founded on justice, freedom and security. The CIO stands for peace for the United States, secured by preparedness and strength, in which the welfare of our people shall be maintained by wise policies and just laws.

In particular, the CIO stands for full mobilization on the basis of equal sacrifice by all, the re-establishment of fair labor-management legislation, for adequate education, housing, health, social security and farm programs, for taxes levied upon those able to pay, for laws to guarantee the civil rights to every citizen.

PAC works to elect candidates who support these policies of the CIO. State and local PACs have programs for their own communities.

5. What Is The Long Range Program?

The CIO seeks the direct election of the President by popular vote, the modernizing of Congress by abolishing the Senate filibuster and by the appointment of committee chairmen on the basis of merit. The CIO seeks fair registration laws free of red tape and complicated rules, and works for free and open primaries, equal legislative districts, and adequate pay for public officials.

6. Is The PAC A Political Party?

PAC is not a political party. The CIO convention has consistently declared:

"The CIO-PAC is directed to continue to act on an independent, non-partisan basis, giving support to the progressive forces in the two major parties, basing its judgment of candidates upon their records and platforms."

7. Does PAC Work Alone?

The PAC cooperates as broadly as possible with other labor groups, farmers, professional men, consumers and all other citizens of good will who have the same ideals of public welfare.

8. Where Does PAC Get Its Money?

PAC funds come in election years from the voluntary contributions of CIO members and from union contributions in between elections.

9. Where Does The Money Go?

Of every dollar given, half is used by local and state PACs, the other half is used by the CIO-PAC to aid worthy candidates for city, state and national offices, for research and information, and for services to the state and local political action committees.

Every American Controls A Vote

EVERY American is a political boss—he controls one vote.

He can swing his vote to the candidates and party of his choice, or he can throw it away.

A wise boss knows his one vote is his greatest political asset; it is the key to his political power. So he will be careful to preserve it, by registering, so that he will be able to act with force on election day. Only a foolish boss will let his ballot go by default, without benefit to himself, his community or his country.

Having made sure that his vote will be an effective factor, an American political boss will know the issues; not just the propaganda but the facts. He will go over the platforms of the parties, and the declarations of the candidates. And he will place more weight on performance than he does on promises.

When he has made up his mind about the issues, when he has framed his own policy, then the one-vote boss may form alliances with other one-vote bosses, and together they will campaign, and raise money—by giving dollars to their PAC, for example, to place their joint policies into effect.

But the foundation of political action remains the individual boss, controlling one vote.

Register, and be sure of your own.

1952's Biggest Bargain Is Your Buck For PAC

Facts For '52—

Not Enough People Is Trouble With Politics

"THE ONLY trouble with people in politics is that there aren't enough of them."

That's the comment of the CIO Political Action Committee, set forth in the latest in its "Facts" series—"'52 Facts About Politics."

"Politics," the new pamphlet explains, "is simply how the people run their business. If they don't tend to their business somebody is going to 'give them the business.'"

Politics are involved in our everyday lives in many ways, PAC points out, and it lists a few examples. Politics:

1. "Involves how children are educated, whether they have adequate buildings and well-trained teachers."

2. "Decides how much pay checks are whittled down by taxes."

3. "Decides whether a worker suffering severe illness gets insurance to tide over his family or whether they have to go on relief.

4. "Decides whether farmers get fair prices for their crops . . . adequate protection against natural disasters such as droughts . . . good roads to town or muddy ones."

"All this is politics," the PAC notes, adding:

"There are not enough people running for office, working in local and national political groups, not enough people who register and vote."

Turning to statistics, the pamphlet observes that the total vote in the 1948 presidential election was 48,836,579.

But, it adds, nearly 100 million people were 21 or older and eligible to vote.

In 1950, the story was worse. In the congressional elections that year, only 40,500,000 voted. That was only slightly more than two-fifths of those old enough to vote.

"The people can repossess the government if they want to. New voters can elect national, state and local officers, change government policies, demand —and get—better public services, better schools, better housing, better national and international programs," the pamphlet contends.

"All they have to do is work—in politics."

Turning its attention to charges that politics are dirty and shabby, PAC offers a sharp denial. There's nothing shabby or dirty even about partisan politics, it continues.

"The only thing shabby and dirty may be some politicians—and the people can change the politicians if they want to," PAC points out.

"It isn't very smart for people who believe in democracy to make fun of politicians as a class, to mock them and look down upon them," the pamphlet cautions.

"Politics can be a clean business—and one of the most important classes of business in the world.

"The more people who vote, who work in party organizations, the cleaner and more truly representative our democracy will be," PAC continues.

Turning its attention to the vital issues which politics affect, the pamphlet notes the jump in prices since Korea as a major item.

"The reason prices are higher is that the conservative coalition in Congress planned it that way," PAC notes, detailing the way Congress protected profits at the consumer's expense.

Other such political problems, detailed in the PAC pamphlet, are schools, health needs, housing, taxes and foreign policy.

"Working men and women in the factories, on the farms, in the offices and in the homes can elect a President, a majority of Congress, and most of the state and city officials," PAC pointed out.

"But they can't do it without working in politics," it continues, and concludes with this observation:

"The more people who work in politics in 1952, the better our government will be in 1953."

Book Review—

New Manual Is 'Answer Man' On Labor Issues Of The Day

SOMETIME you've probably been quizzed about what one book you'd rather have if you were shipwrecked on a desert island.

Well, the CIO has just issued a volume which might not be much use on a desert island, but can certainly be warmly recommended to all active CIO'ers who want to keep well informed on the labor issues of the day.

If a union member could have only one book to help him do this, he wouldn't go wrong if he picked the CIO Educational Manual—1952-53, just issued by the National CIO Dept. of Education and Research.

Between the orange paper covers of this big volume, handily divided into seven main subjects, are the answers to just about every important question that concerns a worker and his family today—on the job, at home, in the community, at the polls, in the union.

The manual is a ready reference book for any subject an intelligent CIO member might want to know about. Not only does it take up all the main current issues on which the CIO has taken a stand, but it gives the basic facts upon which CIO policy on these issues is based.

Do you know what unemployment insurance benefits or workmen's compensation are paid in your state? How did your senators and congressmen vote on important issues in '52? What is the Point 4 program and why does the CIO support it?

What's all the squabble about that is now going on between the Democratic and Republican parties and their presidential candidates over civil rights? The CIO is a strong advocate of FEPC. Why? Would you know what to say if somebody told you that FEPC wouldn't work?

Do you know what "parity" means? The word is used constantly in talking about farm prices. And why should labor be concerned anyway with the problems of farmers?

THE NEW CIO manual can serve as an "answer man" in book form on all these and hundreds of other questions that concern the modern American worker.

Or perhaps you want to know where and how to get films, pamphlets, songs, posters, exhibits for union affairs. Or how to run a CIO booth at a county fair. The manual gives sources, costs of material needed and other helpful suggestions in planning these and other activities.

H. R.

CIO Education Manual, the CIO Dept. of Education & Research, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C. Single copies cost $5; 3-9 copies, $4 each; 10-24 copies $3.50 each; and 25 or more $3 each.

Cases Decrease

Public assistance cases under social security dropped by 200,000 cases last year, with grants to 4,964,000 persons, according to Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing.

Farm Bureau Still In The Chips—If Farmers Aren't

THE AMERICAN Farm Bureau Federation is doing okeh in Litchfield, Conn.—home of many New York City millionaires.

There are only 1206 farms in the Litchfield area, but the Farm Bureau has 1900 members.

The Farm Bureau, which works the same side of the street as the National Association of Manufacturers and U. S. Chamber of Commerce, heads the list of big spending Washington lobbies.

A few weeks ago, in a report filed with Congress under the lobbyist registration law, the Farm Bureau reported spending $1,595,815 for all purposes. Now it says its spending should have been listed as $878,813—still at the top of the list. (LPA)

Social Security Law's 'Father' Dies At 83

Former Rep. David J. Lewis (D.), who went to work in the coal mines of Western Maryland at the age of 9 and learned to read in Sunday school, died last week in Cumberland, Md., after a long illness. He was 83.

Lewis was one of the few members of Congress to take an active interest in the welfare of labor unions before the Fair Deal. He served in the House from 1911 through 1915 and again from 1931 through 1936. He sponsored relief bills early in the depression, and during his last term sponsored an unemployment insurance bill which became the nucleus of the present social security system.

CWA Asks Full Gain UnderNewPensionLaw

THE CIO Communications Workers is acting to see that 27,700 Bell System pensioners get the full benefit of increased social security pensions, which start Sept. 1.

With that aim in mind, CWA-CIO is negotiating at Omaha with Northwestern Bell Telephone Co. for changes in the Bell Telephone System pension plan. Whatever gains come out of these negotiations will apply to 23 Bell System companies with more than 600,000 employes, the union said.

CWA-CIO said pensioners will receive on Sept. 1 an increase in social security benefits of about $6 a month, but as the Bell System plan is now written, the company's part of the pension would be reduced by from $3 to $6 a month as a result of the increased social security payments.

Union negotiators are seeking to prevent this reduction in total benefits.

At present the minimum pension for telephone workers retiring at age 65 is $100 a month, and for those retiring before reaching age 65 it is $75 a month, both less the social security payment. Pensions above these figures are reduced by one-half of the social security payments.

Under the contract between CWA-CIO and the company, pension negotiations are scheduled to continue for a maximum of 60 days. Both sides, however, hope to reach agreement before Sept. 1.

Current negotiations came as a result of a CWA-CIO demand for modification of the pension plan made to the parent Amer. Tel. & Tel. Co. July 11.

This is the first time that the Bell System has agreed to bargain with the union on pension changes. The company took the position since the pension plan is employer-paid, it has the sole right to make changes. Recent contract changes have made the pension changes subject to negotiations.

On the West Coast, CWA-CIO has won base wage increases ranging up to $4 a week for 11,000 members of the union employed by the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. in northern California and Nevada.

Additional raises ranging from $1 to $2.50 a week were gained for operators in 21 exchanges by reclassification. CWA-CIO also won improvements in grievance procedures, holiday and terminal pay and wage payment practices.

San Jose Guild Gets Hike To $111

The San Jose, Calif., local of the CIO Newspaper Guild recently completed negotiations with the Mercury-News increasing the editorial-display advertising journeyman scale to $111 weekly.

A 5.9% general increase was negotiated for the 130 Guildsmen covered. The contract was settled shortly before the Ridder chain bought the papers.

Workers Tell HST Board Need For Health Services

WORKERS and their families just can't afford to pay for the kind of health services they need, spokesmen for organized labor told the President's Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation at a hearing in Philadelphia last week.

The only way they can get them, the union representatives asserted, appears to be through the national health insurance, such as has been advocated by President Truman and endorsed by the CIO.

The hearing was one of several scheduled for cities in different parts of the country and was presided over by Pres. A. J. Hayes of the AFL Machinists, a member of the commission. Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers, also a member, will conduct a similar session in Detroit on Sept. 23.

CIO witnesses before the commission rapped the inadequacy of the protection given workers at present, including health and hospitalization insurance and the Blue Cross and Blue Shield plans.

Costs of medicines, medical services and hospitalization have risen so rapidly, they stressed, that a worker who is barely able to maintain his family at a decent standard of living is unable to build up a financial backlog to meet the expense of an extended illness.

Sol Barkin, research director for the CIO Textile Workers, said that the inadequacy of present insurance protection is particularly apparent in the surgical field. Surgeons have frequently used the fees detailed in the fee schedules as "a jumping-off plank for raising their total fees," he declared.

"This practice has widely outraged our membership," he added. "There is a general conviction that the doctors have been engaging in a holdup, exploiting the gains secured by workers through their economic power to stage another raid on his income."

The Blue Shield plan is more satisfactory, he said, because it provides and pays for full service.

Barkin pointed out that most coverage at present provides no protection through preventative medicine, nor does it protect the unemployed who may be stricken ill between jobs.

"OBVIOUSLY," he said "present types of hospitalization and medical service fail when the financial capacity of the worker to meet the cost is lowest."

The situation was dramatized by Harry Kranz, legislative director for the New Jersey State CIO Council. He presented a series of worker-witnesses who told of their unsuccessful struggles to pay staggering bills for medical and hospital expenses that ran far beyond the protection given by insurance or plans.

One was John Cunningham, Newark, N. J., a member of CIO Electrical Workers Local 447 and an employe of the Federal Telephone & Radio Corp., Nutley, N. J. Cunningham attained national prominence last year when he underwent a new type heart operation.

He testified that six years of fighting coronary thrombosis has cost him $6852 in spite of Blue Cross and Blue Shield coverage, blood donations from fellow union members, and gifts from the union and friends.

Another was Anthony S. Zuccarello, Trenton, N. J., a member of CIO Auto Workers Local 731 and now a State CIO Political Action Committee representative. Zuccarello's wife was stricken with chronic leukemia in 1949, when he was employed by General Motors in Trenton, and has since been hospitalized 15 times. His expenses since she became ill, beyond Blue Cross payment, have totaled $2514 and are still mounting — and Blue Cross coverage is running out, he said.

IN HIS own testimony, Kranz asserted that both coverage and benefits of voluntary plans are inadequate.

"I hope," he concluded "the commission will recommend to the President and Congress enactment of a comprehensive national health program, including extension of the social insurance principle to cover the costs of hospitalization and complete preventative, diagnostic and curative medical care.

"The program should also include additional federal aid for hospital construction, research and the training of more doctors, dentists and nurses."

Dr. Morris A. Brand, medical director of the CIO Clothing Workers' Sidney Hillman Medical Center in New York, testified on behalf of the ACWA and the New York State CIO Council.

"As things are today and in view of the frightening predictions of a still mounting cost of living," he said, "sickness is a luxury financially beyond the means of workers."

A comprehensive medical care insurance plan on a national basis, he maintained, would "reduce wasted manpower and the loss of wages, and eliminate borrowing to meet the unpredictable and high costs of medical care."

C. Of C. Lobbyists Never Learn

The Greater Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce told the President's Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation that it opposes "any compulsory form of health insurance."

It was promptly and tartly put in its place by John W. Edelman, Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers and an old-time Philadelphian. Edelman said:

"Let me remind Dr. G. S. Everts, who issued a propaganda statement on behalf of the Chamber of Commerce in an effort to undercut the President's Commission, that back in the 20's the Chamber tried to do a similar job on unemployment insurance."

URW Gets 10c Boost At 2 Big Rubber Firms

THE CIO RUBBER Workers, after seven weeks of negotiating, reached agreements last week with two of the industry's Big Four on general wage increases of 10c an hour.

Covered by the pacts are about 30,000 members employed by the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. in 10 plants in nine states, and about 35,000 employes of the U. S. Rubber Co. in plants throughout the country.

The first agreement was reached with Goodyear—the seventh peaceful contract settlement in as many years—and apparently, as expected, set a pattern for the industry. The compact with U. S. Rubber was settled a few days later.

Both settlements provide that the union and each company jointly will ask the Wage Stabilization Board for approval of the pay hike.

Meantime, the union was continuing negotiations with the other Big Four companies. Meetings were being held with Goodrich in Cincinnati, O., and with Firestone in Columbus, O. Talks with all four employers opened late in June or early in July.

BACKING PLEDGED—Sec.-Treas. Barney Hopkins of the Michigan CIO Council pledges the American Federation of Physically Handicapped the continued support of CIO. AFPH Pres. Paul A. Strachan is seated.

CIO Urges Full Plan To Aid Handicapped

REHABILITATION of the nation's millions of physically handicapped citizens is "one of America's greatest unfinished jobs," Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers told the convention of the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped last week.

"Too few people realize that here is a tremendous challenge to our free society," Reuther declared at the AFPH convention in Detroit.

To deprive handicapped persons of "the opportunity to take their place in our economic life is to deny them the independence and dignity to which every citizen is entitled," he said.

TRAINING and necessary artificial appliances along with educational work to make the public conscious of the needs and problems of the handicapped "should be placed on top of American democracy's unfinished business," Reuther said.

An expanded program for rehabilitation of physically and mentally handicapped workers was called "a critically urgent need" by another CIO spokesman at the AFPH conference, Sec.-Treas. Barney Hopkins of the Michigan CIO Council.

"Certainly a comprehensive and vigorously administered rehabilitation program in behalf of the nation's millions of physically and mentally handicapped citizens is a critically urgent need," Hopkins said. "It must include extension of medical services, special educational aids, income maintenance, vocational training and guidance, and employment services.

"The program must be broadly conceived to include all the physically handicapped, whether they suffer from substantial or only partial impairment of their capabilities and working capacities.

"Rehabilitation must be closely coordinated with workmen's compensation and disability programs to provide income for the disabled and their families during periods of unemployment, and insure prompt referral of each case to the rehabilitation agencies.

"The program of federal assistance for vocational rehabilitation, through grants-in-aid to the states must be vastly expanded, and federal funds must be made available to advance research, to increase the supply of trained personnel, and expand and improve necessary facilities."

The convention marked the AFPH's tenth anniversary.

N. Y. Arrests Hit By UFW

CIO FURNITURE Workers last week charged Brooklyn police with abusing and arresting strikers, while they allowed toughs, hired by the strike-bound company, to attack strikers.

In a protest to the New York police, UFWA Pres. Morris Pizer demanded an investigation and punishment for all officers found guilty of brutality.

The strike began Aug. 8 at the Puro Feather & Down Corp. in Brooklyn, because of the firm's refusal to set minimum wages paid by all other organized feather shops.

Pizer said "our union must protest such police behavior because mistreatment of strikers everywhere is getting worse and must be stopped before it becomes impossible for workers to strike for their rights."

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

CHECKING on the progress of the CIO's new television project last week, I found it is now being shown on a number of stations in various parts of the country. Those councils and local unions which have arranged to sponsor this 13-week series, "Issues of the Day," are well pleased with their quality.

Of course, the list of cities where this program is on the air should grow much larger in the near future. It is very important that the people know all the facts about these important elections. If they don't, they will be led astray by the enemies of organized labor.

I hope to be able to report in the very near future that CIO in a number of other cities has made arrangements to sponsor these programs. They are well worth while. We welcome your comments on them.

★

THIS PAST WEEK I had an interesting meeting with Dr. Roque Vicente Ferrer, Director General of Labor of Brazil. Dr. Ferrer was quite interested in the structure of the CIO and the manner in which it organizes the workers of this country. He will be in the United States approximately 60 days and during this period wishes to study U. S. labor legislation and its administration, and labor-management relations.

Dr. Ferrer is desirous of building sound, democratic trade unions in Brazil, and hopes eventually to see the trade unions of Brazil join the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. During his stay, he will visit with a number of CIO people throughout the country, and I have assured him that we will cooperate in every way to see that his visit is a fruitful one.

Our CIO people in Tennessee have done very well in helping elect good political representatives in the recent primaries. CIO endorsed Frank Clement for Governor and he defeated Gov. Gordon Browning by 70,000 votes. CIO endorsed Rep. Albert Gore for U. S. Senator and he won by 85,000 votes. A number of projects were put forth and every one passed. Congratulations for a job well done in Tennessee.

CIO FIELD Rep. Gilbert Lewis reports that in a representation election among circulation district managers of the News Journal Co., Wilmington, Del., the workers favored the CIO Newspaper Guild by a vote of 10 to 1 no union.

National Dir. John Riffe, of the CIO Organizing Committee reports that in a representation election at the E. D. Tinsley Lumber Co., Florence, S. C., the workers favored the CIO Woodworkers by a vote of 21 to 19 for no union.

Vice Pres. Claude Ballard of the Woodworkers reports that in a representation election at the Redding Pine Mill, Cottonwood, Calif., the workers favored the IWA-CIO by the following vote: eligible 23, IWA-CIO 15, AFL 5, no union 3. Credit for this victory goes to Business Agent Clyde Moore of IWA Local 13-433.

Tune In 'Issues Of The Day'; 3 Cities Add CIO-TV Show

CIO'S NEW television series, "Issues of the Day," moved into three more areas last week, just as the series completed a 13-week run in Washington.

Added to the television log were Huntington, W. Va., and Ames and Davenport, Iowa. The two Iowa stations virtually blanket the state, thus insuring all Iowans will have an opportunity to see the 15-minute program jointly produced by CIO and the CIO Political Action Committee. Following is the present program series:

City	Station	Day	Hour
Ames	WOI-TV	Tuesday	9:30 p.m.
Chicago	WBKB-TV	Tuesday	10:45 p.m.
Cincinnati	WCPO-TV	Sunday	1:00 p.m.
Columbus	WTVN-TV	Wednesday	6:30 p.m.
Davenport	WOC-TV	Tuesday	9:45 p.m.
Dayton	WHIO-TV	Wednesday	10:15 p.m.
Huntington	WSAZ-TV	Sunday	2:15 p.m.
Indianapolis	WFBM-TV	Sunday	5:00 p.m.
Minneapolis	WTCN-TV	Sunday	1:00 p.m.

Guild Settles Disputes In N. Y., Tacoma

THE CIO Newspaper Guild last week settled three disputes on two sides of the continent.

Longest dispute was at Consumer Reports, the Consumers' Union publication in New York, where 102 employes were idle for five weeks.

Three weeks were required to end the ANG strike at the Tacoma, Wash., News Tribune, but Guild members had been out a total of four months. Before their own strike, they honored the AFL Pressmen's picket line.

Shortest of all disputes was at the Erie, Pa., Dispatch, where a nine-hour work stoppage obtained the reinstatement of nine Guildsmen.

The dispute at Consumer Reports began July 7 when the Guild claimed that management broke up a negotiating session called to discuss several grievances—by requesting Guild members to leave.

A major grievance was discrepancy in retroactive pay. The settlement corrected the pay discrepancy by providing for payment of the regular wages and retroactive pay due to the employes in accordance with the existing contract.

A UNIQUE feature of the settlement was that employes will have the opportunity to make up at time-and-a-half rates all wages lost during the dispute.

Before settlement was reached management's labor consultant, Sidney L. Cahn, resigned. Guild members said that he had precipitated the dispute by flatly refusing to discuss the retroactive pay grievance.

The Guild had been bargaining with Tacoma News Tribune before the pressmen went on strike. Because the publisher's offer made at the termination of the pressmen's strike would have required the Guildsmen to return to work under an inferior agreement, they struck.

During the course of the two Tacoma disputes the Guild and the printing crafts honored the picket lines and used their skills to publish a strike daily, the Tacoma Reporter.

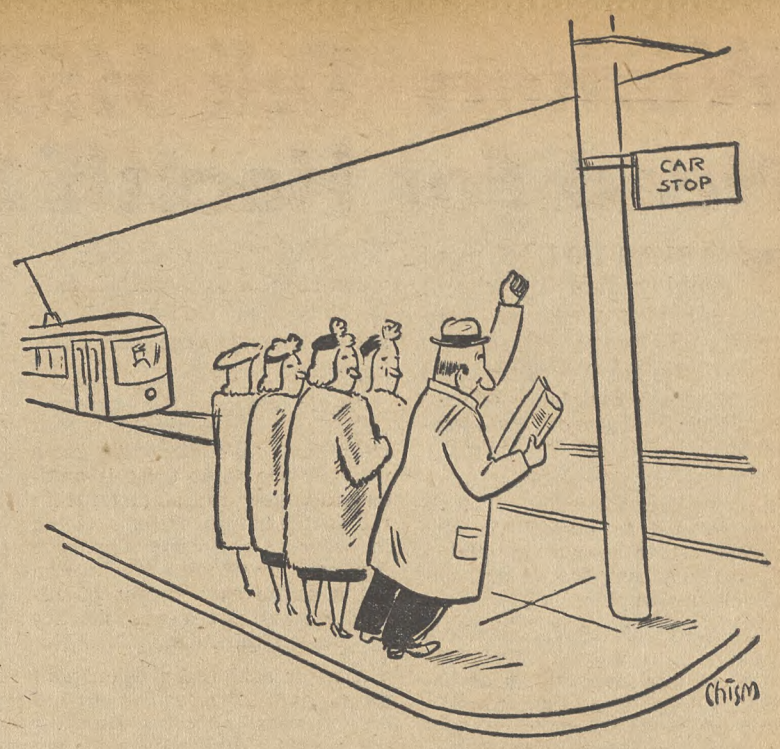
Store Union Reports Gains

A NEW contract setting the highest wage minimums for drug and cigar store clerks in the Philadelphia area has just been negotiated by the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union.

The contract between RWDSU Local 1034 and United Cigar-Whelan Stores covers some 200 workers.

Provisions include a $2 weekly increase for all regular employes, reduction in hours from 48 to 44 for men workers and from 44 to 42 for women workers, the union shop, dues checkoff, paid vacations, overtime premium pay, seniority and grievance arbitration.

The contract settlement came after a Retail-Wholesale union organizing drive which began early this year. (LPA)



Fight To Save Seniority Set By GCEOC

LOCAL 1 of the CIO Government & Civic Employees has swung into a campaign to protect the seniority of government workers furloughed because of layoffs in certain departments and defense agencies.

Initial action in the Washington local's campaign came when the National Production Authority, a division of the Dept. of Commerce, furloughed a number of workers.

While the present fight centers in the NPA, the CIO union points out it is typical of widespread abuses which have aroused the ire of government workers. Those furloughed are given a 30-day notice, then separated from the government payroll, unless they get a new job in this time.

IT IS almost impossible, the local said, for a worker to get a new job, cutting through the red tape of personnel actions, Civil Service checks, loyalty and security investigations, and start on a new job in 30 days.

If there is a break in his service record, the union points out, the worker faces the loss of valuable rights which he has achieved by years of continuous service. This, says the union, constitutes a breach of faith on the part of the government toward career civil service employes.

The local, pushing the fight for furloughed workers, has demanded:

1. Employes have an option of taking a furlough (a leave without pay) rather than separation whenever forces are reduced.

2. That they get 90 days rather than 30 days notice of all reductions.

It wants both of these rights made retroactive, to protect empoyes already laid off by government agencies.

UWUA Takes Strike Vote In Detroit

LOCAL 223 of the CIO Utility Workers accused the Detroit Edison Co. of attempted union-busting as contract negotiations remained stalemated last week.

Incensed by the company's attitude, 4000 UWUA-CIO members were voting on strike authorization. The union accepted the offer of the federal and state mediators to attempt to bring the parties together again. UWUA-CIO Pres. Joseph A. Fisher was assisting local negotiators.

Pres. Nolan W. Leach of Local 223 said "one of Edison's intentions is to destroy collective bargaining and unionism on its property. We intend to fight this all the way." The union first requested negotiations June 1, which was 60 days before expiration of the contract.

"For 11 days after receiving the notice," Leach said, "the company refused to meet with the union. Instead, it took that time to move its beds, refrigerators, food and television sets in all its plants in what it probably considers psychological warfare.

"When the company's negotiators did sit down with us, we met for 13 consecutive full days without being able to get a counter-proposal out of them. When the counter-proposals did come, they called for taking away practically all the working conditions we had won and provided for wage cuts of approximately $140,000."

Two-Day Shutdown Helped Bring Pact

A two-day shutdown by CIO Auto Workers at the Chrysler New Orleans Tank plant brought the settlement under which workers won wage boosts of from 18c to 33c an hour and coverage under the national Chrysler contract, according to Theodore Hawks, UAW-CIO Region 5 assistant director. Incorrectly, in reporting the settlement, The CIO News reported it came after a month-long strike.

Give A Buck To PAC

Packing Workers Protest As Big 4 Pacts Expire

THE NATION'S meat packing industry was in turmoil last week as contracts between the CIO Packinghouse Workers and the Big Four companies expired before negotiations of new agreements.

The situation was most tense in plants of Armour & Co., which has refused to extend the old agreement to permit the union to study a complicated and detailed pension plan.

Hundreds of UPWA members belonging to several locals refused to work without an agreement. Others staged short walkouts in protest. Workers charged lockouts in still other sites. Company efforts to operate many plants were unsuccessful.

"Armour has now made it clear," said Pres. Ralph Helstein of the UPWA, "that the meat trust is taking over where the steel trust left off."

Union officials accused the company of trying to provoke a strike. It has not bargained at all on the union's demand for "substantial" wage increases, the union shop, a strengthened anti-discrimination clause, a guaranteed annual wage and other important proposals.

"It is obvious the company wants to provoke trouble," Helstein said. "We can only guess whether the meat trust is anxious to follow the steel trust in the tactic of provoking a strike in order to maneuver for price increases, or whether it wants to use a strike as a means of enabling it to put a new market squeeze on the farmers."

Armour said the pension plan represented the equivalent of 3.5c an hour, but refused to give the union a breakdown. When asked if it were willing to convert that amount into a general wage increase and forego the pension proposal, it refused flatly.

The union planned to ask Swift & Co. and Wilson & Co. for contract extensions at meetings arranged by the U. S. Concilation Service.

If the request is rejected, scattered walkouts were expected to hit operations of those two firms.

Negotiations also are under way with Cudahy & Co.

The union is seeking new contracts for 70,000 employes of the Big Four, nearly half of them, or about 30,000, in Swift plants. All meetings are being held in Chicago. Whatever agreements are reached will set a pattern for other contracts with smaller packing firms from one end of the country to the other.

"REGISTER AND VOTE" was the theme of the Iowa CIO Council's state convention in Fort Dodge, and some of the delegates advertised the PAC slogan on their shirt fronts.

'Klan's Got Too Bad A Name'—

Big Shot Kluxers Now Promoting New Front

THE BIG SHOTS of the Ku Klux Klan—the ones that aren't in jail yet—have come up with a new hate club upon which the U. S. Dept. of Justice already is casting a dubious eye.

It is the American Confederate Army. Its members won't wear nighties and hoods like the Klan, but will array themselves in Confederate caps and ties on ceremonial occasions. Membership will be limited to "white Christians." It will tilt at the windmills of "socialism, communism and the welfare state," and says it plans to use arms if necessary to enforce what it decides is constitutional and unconstitutional.

The presiding genius is Bill Hendrix, grand dragon Kluxer in Florida.

"The Klan's got too bad a name," he explained last week in telling why he had dropped plans to revive it in Virginia.

"All that trouble in North Carolina hurt. People want to forget all that beating and bloodiness."

He was referring to floggings by North Carolina klansmen of white and Negro offenders against Klan standards of conduct. The beatings resulted in the imprisonment of 61 members of the hooded mob. Among them was Thomas L. Hamilton, imperial wizard in the State, who changed his plea from not guilty to guilty as he was about to go on trial. He got a four-year jail term.

A few months ago, Hendrix and Hamilton were trying to reactivate the Klan in Virginia.

The fact that the Confederate Army is being investigated by the Dept. of Justice was made known to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The NAACP had asked Atty. Gen. James P. McGranery for a "full investigation of the so-called Confederate" Army and "the necessary appropriate action resulting from such investigation."

IUE Checks GE's Latest Wage Offer

THE GENERAL Electric Co. came up last week with a wage offer which fell far short of what the CIO Electrical Workers are seeking in negotiations for a new contract.

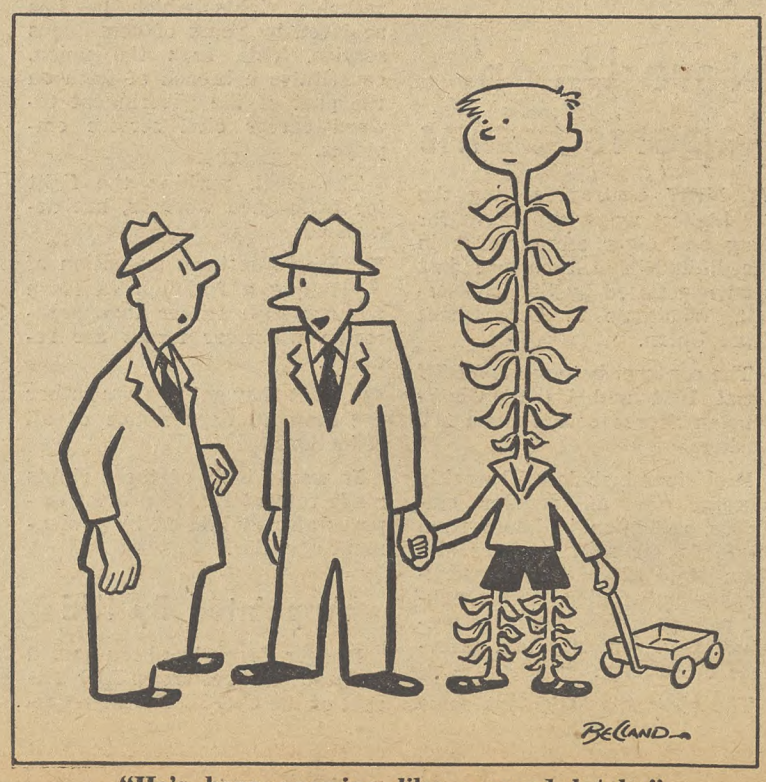
The company said the offer included a general wage increase of 2.5% with a floor of 3.5c an hour, and a cost of living increase based on the Bureau of Labor Statistics index for Sept. 15.

It also proposed to make the cost of living boost effective a month early, on Aug. 15, for employes who did not receive a 1.03% cost of living increase last Mar. 1.

The offer also included increases in sickness, accident, hospital and maternity insurance benefits. Pres. James B. Carey of the IUE-CIO said the insurance offer "only partially met" the union's demand.

The wage proposal, he added, "substantially met two of our specific wage demands," but that the union would continue to press for elimination of some wage differentials and restoration of the profit sharing plan. The profit sharing plan was junked at the demand of the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers in negotiations shortly after the end of the war.

GE made the same offer to the UE and to unaffiliated unions at some plants.



"He's been growing like a weed lately."

Iowa CIO Council Seeks 'A 100% Job For PAC'

FIRST STATE CIO council to meet since the national conventions of both major parties, the Iowa State CIO Council last week left no doubt of where it stood politically.

It unanimously adopted a resolution which flatly stated:

"It is to the advantage of labor to support the Democratic party.

"We want to support a Democratic president in 1952."

Meeting at the Wahknosa Hotel in Fort Dodge, Iowa, the 175 delegates took a close look at the council's activities during the past year and mapped plans for the next 12 months.

After considerable discussion, the delegates outlined a program for action on three fronts: political action, community services and public relations.

The delegates and speakers were blunt as they looked at the record and to the future of PAC. "Only a quarter of our members voted in the last primary," the PAC committee reported. "The rest were heedless of the importance of the issues involved. That we can say the same for other segments of our citizenry is of little comfort."

The PAC committee offered a program, which it said would "yield a maximum of labor votes on election day."

Top spot went to a registration and get-out-the-vote campaign, with emphasis on making registration hours and places more convenient and more accessible. Recognizing the need for finances, the delegates took steps to speed up the PAC fund drive, setting Sept. 15 as the final date for the buck campaign.

Looking to the future, the Iowa CIO urged "increased activity in local elections where future candidates for city, county, state and national offices must be developed."

Although they recognized that PAC must be "the No. 1 job in 1952," the delegates didn't ignore other pressing problems in the three-day session.

They unanimously voted to set up a statewide community services committee "that our members may better obtain their rights and services as citizens." The convention decided membership on this committee must come from all industrial communities and it instructed the committee that its annual community services conferences must be continued and expanded.

In the field of expanded public relations, the convention voted unanimously for joint sponsorship of the CIO's "Issues of the Day" series on television. After viewing samples of these programs, the delegates set up a TV committee, instructed to place the series on the air over two Iowa stations, to insure its being seen in all areas of the state.

DISCUSSING the problems of civil rights, the convention agreed the Iowa CIO must wage an all-out fight, working with all groups, "to eliminate discrimination and segregation wherever it exists."

But always, the delegates came back to the theme, "no matter what resolution we adopt, we won't get what we want until we do a 100% PAC job."

At the annual banquet the delegates heard J. W. Maucker, president of Iowa State Teachers College, discuss the attack on the public schools by professional hate groups. He reported that some well-meaning but harassed taxpayers "believe these unfounded, hysterical rumors."

Chief speaker of the convention was Richard T. Leonard, CIO national representative, who substituted for Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice-president.

The two top officers of the Iowa State CIO were reelected. They are Pres. Vernon Dale, a member of the Clothing Workers, and Sec.-Treas. Ken Everhart, a member of the Auto Workers.

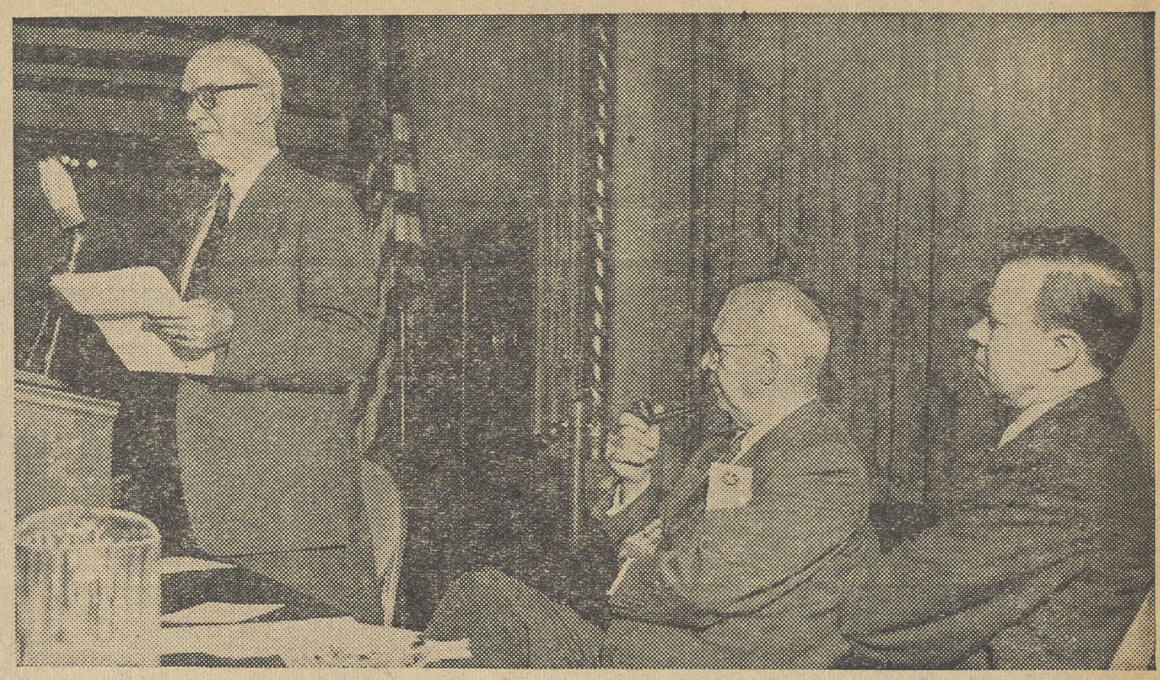
REGISTER...KNOW THE FACTS...VOTE

YOUR BEST BUY...A BUCK TO PAC

SLOGANS TELL THE STORY.—The two banners—"Register . . . know the facts . . . vote" and "Your best buy . . . a buck to PAC"—hung in Washington meeting room for CIO political action rally. They summarize PAC goals up to Nov. 4. A high point of rally was a visit to the White House at which Pres. Truman and CIO Pres. Philip Murray exchanged greetings. Also in group (from left): PAC Dir. Jack Kroll, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, USA-CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, CIO Exec. Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, and USA-CIO Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald.

'Hard Work' Begins To Bring PAC Victory



"OUR CONCEPT OF POLITICS," CIO Pres. Philip Murray tells national PAC rally, "is progress, social reform and improvements of living standards for our people—in other words, making our country a better place in which to live."

CONTRARY "beer and hot dogs" political beliefs of Gen. Eisenhower, the GOP presidential candidate, were quoted with sarcasm by Murray who said GOP platform "reflects a state of political depravity." Listening are PAC Dir. Jack Kroll (center) and UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who hit GOP's reactionary stand.

By AL ZACK

"REGISTER — know the facts — vote."

With that banner waving over their heads, some 300 CIO and PAC leaders from all over the country gathered in Washington's Mayflower Hotel to kick off the 1952 PAC campaign.

In place of the generalities which mark most political gatherings, there was an atmosphere of sound, practical common sense. Instead of broad and baseless charges, there was a specific and detailed "bill of complaint" against politicians who put the profit of special interests ahead of the welfare of the people.

Throughout the session, on Aug. 14, speakers and delegates discussed the formula for victory in 1952.

PAC Dir. Jack Kroll summed it up in two words: "Hard work."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray noted it was "organization—not resolutions, which win."

And President Truman, whose 1948 victory proved this formula works, told the delegates:

"We are going to do again just what we did in 1948, and we are going to make them like it."

Kroll, in opening the day-long session, reminded the delegates that 34 Senate seats and the entime House of Representatives was at stake in this election, as well as the presidency and vice presidency.

Of the Senate seats at stake, he said, 21 were in marginal areas, where hard work in the next three months could mean victory for liberal candidates and defeat for reactionary incumbents.

Predicting an all-time high registration and voting record in 1952, Kroll had a stiff warning:

"Don't be lulled into thinking that just because it's a high registration, it's our registration."

He called for an all-out registration drive, in which every CIO member's registration status would be checked and all non-registered members personally urged to register and vote.

"Don't forget the families," Kroll added. "There are more women eligible to vote this year than men."

Murray, noting he was addressing the largest PAC meeting in CIO history, lauded "this interest in politics which manifests the highest degree of citizenship." "It is indicative," he said, "of the overwhelming interest you have in the welfare of your country."

Murray recalled the depression of 20 years ago, and the great progress of the labor movement and the American people under the New Deal and Fair Deal banners. He said the way to continue and expand these gains was through the election of Gov. Stevenson and Sen. Sparkman.

He called them "eminent men, with outstanding records, who believe in their party's platform and have an understanding of what the people want and need."

"All labor," he said, as the delegates applauded, "can with perfect pride support the candidacies of both Stevenson and Sparkman."

The delegates voted unanimous support of the CIO Executive Board resolution endorsing the Democratic platform and its candidates, which had been read by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey. Pres. Murray observed:

"One thing even our enemies must respect us for—we don't hesitate about taking a position."

At noon the entire delegation went to the White House to pay their respects to President Truman. The President, greeted with loud applause when he entered the rose garden, was introduced by Murray as "the greatest friend labor ever had in my lifetime."

Praising Gov. Stevenson as an "honorable and progressive man," and lauding CIO for its endorsement, President Truman recalled 1948 and added:

"Now we are going to be faced with exactly the same situation this time, and with your help, with the help of people who believe in right for everybody, we are going to do again just what we did in 1948 and we are going to make them like it."

Truman Accepts Bid To Rally

President Truman has accepted an invitation to address a joint CIO rally to be held in Pittsburgh early in October, it was reported last week.

He was invited by James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer and president of the CIO Electrical Workers. The rally will be held the week of Oct. 6, while the IUE-CIO convention is under way in Pittsburgh.

Gov. Adlai Stevenson, Democratic candidate for President, also has been invited to the rally but not yet has said whether he will accept.

Murray Pours Sarcasm On Ike's Political Statements

"I AM quite sure Gen. Eisenhower is not too well acquainted with domestic affairs or civilian matters."

That was CIO Pres. Philip Murray's observation after he completed reading a number of the general's statements to delegates at the CIO-PAC rally in Washington.

He recalled that on Dec. 8, 1949, Eisenhower said, "If all that Americans want is security they can go to prison. They'll have enough to eat, a bed and a roof over their heads."

Murray commented sarcastically, "That is a fine, statesmanlike, broad vision of what America should be."

He then quoted the general as saying, on Nov. 30, 1949: "We seek the illusion called security. We want to wear fine shirts and have champagne when we should be eating hot dogs and beer."

Commented Murray, while the delegates applauded his sarcasm: "Now there is a philosophy to be introduced into the American political seene. There is a far-seeing point of view toward the solution of our social problems."

As the delegates howled with laughter at his derisive and stinging comment, Murray expressed his doubt that "the average citizen can find any comfort or solace in Gen. Eisenhower's candidacy."

8 Out Of 10 Republicans Vote To Boost Rents, Prices

Here's the box score on Republican performance in the 82d Congress, which CIO Pres. Philip Murray cited at the PAC rally:

Seventy-five per cent of the Republicans in the Senate and 80% of those in the House voted against rent control.

Ninety per cent of the Senate Republicans voted to save American big business $500 million in four months of 1951 by enacting a special tax exemption for special interests.

Eighty per cent of the Senate Republicans and 87% of the House GOP voted against repeal of Taft-Hartley.

And "most of the Republicans stood against any legislation to curb inflation.

Reuther Calls Ike A 'New Fuller Brush Salesman'

THE REPUBLICANS did not nominate Sen. Taft for the presidency because they "wanted to sell the same old merchandise," Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers told the CIO political action meeting.

"They had to get a new Fuller Brush salesman," he explained, "because the old one couldn't get his foot in the door."

Reuther said the Republican platform claims that "to be free you have to be hungry."

"But," he declared, "we CAN have bread and freedom.

"The greatest thing the Republicans did was to bring Herbert Hoover to the convention. They talked about the Great Man Hoover. We wondered what made him great. Then we remembered. He was the father of the great depression."

Reuther lashed at the Republicans for continuing to stand by the Old Guard principles that have cost it so many elections. The Democrats, he declared, supported the CIO position both in the platform and in the candidates.

Reuther described the Democratic civil rights plank as "the best we have ever gotten." He pointed out that the platform also includes a pledge to fight for the elimination of Senate Rule 22, which allows a minority to filibuster and prevent a vote on civil rights measures.

"Corruption in the Truman administration is nothing compared with the Teapot Dome scandal under Harding," he said.

"We hardened under Harding, Coolidge, and went hungry under Harding. The bread box and the ballot box are linked. The attitudes of U. S. Steel and General Motors will be influenced in collective bargaining by the kind of government we get in November."

'GOP Is Party Of 5 Generals'

The GOP is the party "of the five generals," Walter Reuther quipped at the CIO-PAC rally.

They are, the Auto Workers' president said, "General Eisenhower, General MacArthur, General Mills, General Motors—and General Confusion. And, in the Democratic party, we have the people."

PAC Rally In Pictures

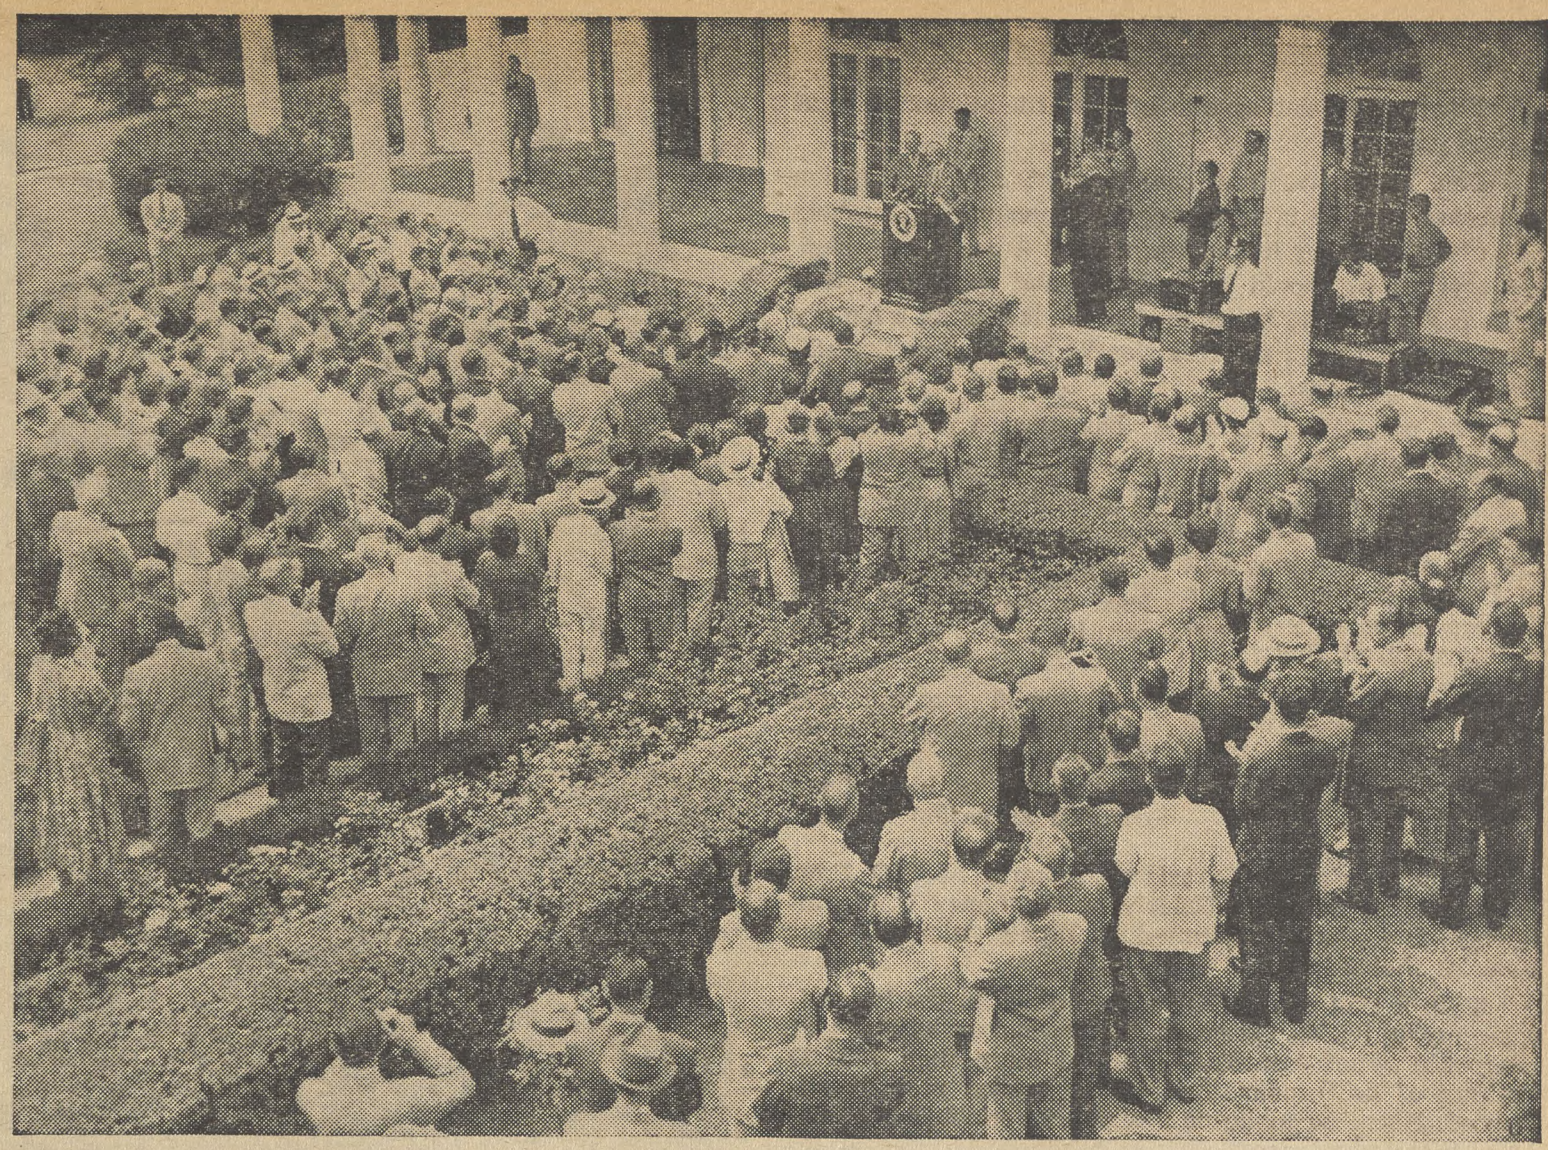
"With your help, we're going to do again just what we did in '48 — and we're going to make them like it."

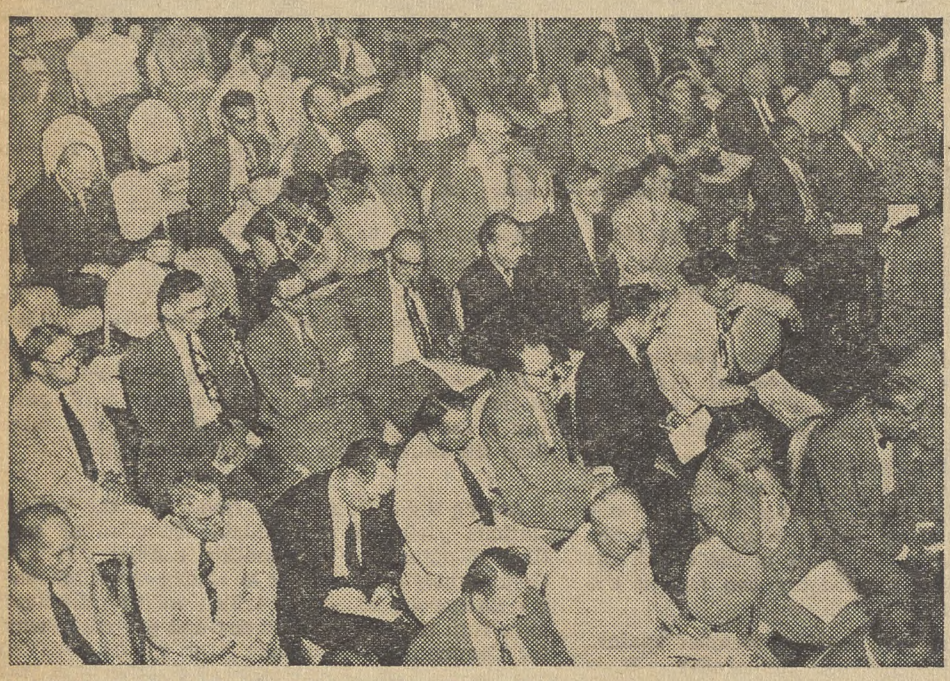
That's what Pres. Truman told several hundred delegates to national CIO-PAC rally when he met them briefly in the White House rose garden. (Photo at right.)

CIO Pres. Philip Murray introduced Truman as "the greatest friend labor has had in the White House."

Truman praised Gov. Stevenson, the Democratic presidential candidate, as "progressive" and said the "liberal" Democratic platform is "something to fight for when you get elected."

The national PAC rally was the largest ever staged by CIO, and formally set off the drive to help elect Stevenson, Sparkman and Fair Deal members of Congress.





HERE ARE PART of the more than 300 delegates—from international unions, CIO Councils and regional offices—who joined in PAC rally.

DELEGATES from New York, including Reg. Dir. Michael Mann (right) and State CIO Pres. Louis Hollander (second right), were in this group.

CIO ENDORSEMENT of Stevenson and Sparkman, read by Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, was adopted by acclamation.

TV CAMERAS and flood lights frame CIO Pres. Philip Murray and PAC Dir. Jack Kroll telling Stevenson backing.

Ike, Meet Ike

What a politician says today has little relation to what he said yesterday.

Gen. Eisenhower is a case in point. As his campaign bumbles along, he talks vaguely of "freedom"and specifically of Taft-Hartley injunctions against American workers. He says prices should come down—and specifically that price ceilings should be eliminated. He is making a big cry for peace—but says the free world's anti-Communist alliance is too defensive.

And now Gen. Eisenhower has squared the circle on social security.

Ike's rather famous for his statement of a few years ago, when he was president of Columbia Univ. after a lifetime of security on the military payroll, that:

"If all Americans want is security, then they can go to prison. They'll have enough to eat, a bed and a roof over their heads."

Now that he's campaigning, the general says:

"One of the pressing problems in the field of social security . . . are the old folks.

"I would support and press for adoption of legislation designed to lighten the burden of high living costs on our senior citizens."

Eisenhower's "go to prison" remark, as CIO Pres. Philip Murray observed bitingly at the recent PAC conference, is "a fine, statesmanlike, broad vision of what America should be."

Take a look at the GOP record. Back in the Republican-controlled 80th Congress, the lawmakers—instead of improving social security — deprived more than 750,000 workers of its benefits. And in the session recently adjourned, House Republicans bowed before lobbyists of the American Medical Association in fighting a $5 monthly increase in old age pensions.

Gen. Eisenhower will discover that Republican policy is on the record—and it will haunt him.

Having Fun?

Early Smears

Whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad. And on the basis of early campaign reports, the Republican party may be headed for destruction.

No other explanation can account for the bitter and untruthful attack on the CIO by the Republican National Committee, for its endorsement of Stevenson and Sparkman.

But even granting that the Old Guard brass say things that can't be reasonably explained, it is hard to understand the tone of racial and religious prejudice that runs through the GOP statement. That is shocking enough; it is worse when it comes just a few days after the Republican leaders, like their Democratic opposites, had formally pledged themselves to stay clear of appeals to racial prejudice.

As Jack Kroll, the CIO-PAC director has pointed out, the GOP statement "is another sample of what a Republican promise is worth." On the basis of late returns, not very much.

Our Stake In The UN

The following are excerpts from President Truman's letter transmitting to Congress the annual report on U. S. participation in the United Nations.

IN THE UNITED Nations we have pledged our support to the basic principles of sovereign equality, mutual respect among nations, and justice and morality in international affairs.

The United Nations provides a worldwide forum in which those principles can be applied to international affairs. In the General Assembly all nations have to stand up and be counted on issues which directly involve the peace of the world. In the United Nations no country can escape the judgment of mankind.

This is the first and greatest weapon against aggression and international immorality. It is the greatest strength of the United Nations. And because we, as a nation, sincerely desire to establish the rule of international justice, this is a precious instrument, a great asset, that we should never ignore or cast away.

This great moral value of the United Nations has been clearly demonstrated with respect to the conduct of the Soviet Union.

The Soviet leaders have been dominated by their doctrines of communism, by the concept of the use of force, unchecked by ethical considerations. This concept has led the Kremlin into a course of international conduct which threatens the peace of the world. By stirring up class warfare, subverting free governments, and employing lies, intimidation, and conquest, the Soviet Union has pursued a policy of extending its control without regard to the sovereignty of other nations or respect for their rights.

This policy might have been irresistible if it had not been clearly and decisively brought to the bar of world opinion in the United Nations.

The proceedings of the United Nations, time and again, have proclaimed to the world that the Soviets have not lived up to the principles of liberty, morality, justice, and peace to which they profess to subscribe. Through the United Nations the international conscience has relentlessly exposed and sternly resisted the attempts of the Kremlin to impose a rule of force upon the peace-loving nations of the world.

This process has strengthened freedom. It has given courage to the faint-hearted, who might otherwise have yielded to the forces of communism. It has presented the truth to those who might have been deceived by Communist progaganda.

And as a result, the principles of international justice, of freedom and mutual respect, still exercise a far greater sway over the minds of men than the false beliefs of communism.

* * *

Among the nations of the free world, the United Nations performs the valuable function of settling disputes and terminating conflict. It has been notably successful in localizing and diminishing dangerous situations which might otherwise have torn the free world apart and paved the way for Communist expansion.

In Indonesia, Palestine, and Kashmir the United Nations stopped serious fighting and persuaded the combatants to take steps toward a peaceful settlement of their differences. In many other cases the United Nations has prevented disputes from erupting into violence.

We must remember that the challenge of international lawlessness is not only military but also political and economic. The United Nations is helping dependent peoples to move toward greater freedom.

DURING the past seven years our work in the United Nations has been carried out on a strictly nonpartisan basis. Able men and women from both political parties and both houses of Congress have represented this country in the General Assembly.

Nevertheless partisan attacks have been made on the United Nations. Some of these attacks are made in a spirit of impatience that can only lead to the holocaust of worldwide war. Most of those who urge us to "go it alone" are blind to the fact that such a course would destroy the solid progress toward world peace which the United Nations has made.

I am confident that the American people will reject these voices of despair. We can win peace, but we cannot win it alone. And, above all, we cannot win it by force alone.

We can win the peace only by containing to work for international justice and morality through the United Nations.

Profits Climb As Consumers Go In Hock

What Business Has

WHILE THE cost of living is smashing previous records, corporation profits are showing a steady—and sometimes fantastic—rise.

In the first seven months of this year, the Commerce Dept. said last week, publicly reported cash dividends totaled nearly $4.4 billion, or 4% more than in 1951.

In July, the department said, corporations which issue public reports of dividends paid out $542 million as compared to $535 in the same month of 1951.

Behind these dividends were huge layers of reserves, such as, for example, made it possible for U. S. Steel to pay its regular dividend in spite of having provoked and lost a long and costly strike.

The new profit gains come on top of a rapid rise in the profit rate in the eight years from 1942 to 1950. The Securities and Exchange Commission says that corporate NET profits—after taxes—doubled in this period. The net worth of the corporations went up from $32 billion in 1942 to $54 billion in 1950, and the rate of return on this net worth rose from 9.6% in 1942 to 16.7% in 1950.

EXAMPLES of how profits go up were contained in the following reports from Labor Press Associated:

Chrysler Corp., reporting a 10% drop in sales and tripled taxes in the first six months of 1952 as compared with the same period in 1951, also reported net profits were up 22%.

In the petroleum industry, Socony-Vacuum's net earnings (after all taxes) in the first half of 1952 were $84 million as compared to $76 million in the same period last year.

In rails, New York, New Haven and Hartford chalked up a profit of $2,006,597 for the first six months of 1952, as against $402,348 in the same period of 1951.

Pillsbury Mills, in the year ended May 31, had net profits of $3.2 million, compared to $2.8 million the year before.

And the Republicans continued to claim taxes were "killing" business.

What Business Wants

"GREEDY" is about the mildest thing the CIO Steelworkers were called by the nation's louder tories because they went on strike for wages and working conditions a responsible government agency found they were entitled to.

But when it comes to greed, they're rank amateurs compared to industry and its "tax bonanza."

If your memory is long enough, maybe it goes back to the early days of World War II and the preparedness program that preceded it. Industry then ignored the defense effort until it got what it wanted out of the government. What it wanted boiled down to one thing; More dough.

Now, with another defense production effort, industry is going through the same old motions. The profit is terrific—but it wants more.

ALREADY industry has certificates of "necessity" covering nearly $22 billion worth of new plants for the production of everything from electric power to nylon. These "tax bonanza" certificates permit the owners to amortize a varying percentage of the construction cost—the average has been estimated at about 58% by the Defense Production Administration—in five years instead of the normal 20 to 25 years. The tax savings are immense.

But industry is still holding back. DPA Chief Henry H. Fowler thinks it's perfectly logical for it to hang back in some cases because it does not make sense to him for a company to build facilities that would be of use only in case of national defense or war.

This can only mean that Fowler thinks stockholders' money is more important than steel workers' money.

Fowler thinks the government may have to give industry more "incentive" if the country is to get the production it needs for the defense effort. Workers who wanted more money for producing steel have been belabored ceaselessly for their greed and lack of patriotism.

The line will now form—on the right, of course—for belaboring industry. Don't bother to hurry. It won't be crowded.

What Workers Pay

THE U. S. Dept. of Labor came up with a set of figures last week which confirmed what a lot of CIO members have been claiming for a long time: You just CAN'T make ends meet.

In 1950, Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin reported, the average city family had to spend $4700, after personal taxes, in order to keep going.

But, he went on, the same average family's income in 1950 after personal taxes was only $4300, or $400—the equivalent of 6%—short of enough to make ends meet.

And families where the head was a wage earner or a salaried clerical worker had it even worse. Their incomes average only $3900 in 1950, which meant they had to dig up an additional $800, or more than 20%.

Tobin's figures were based on a survey conducted by the Bureau of Labor Statistics for the revision of the Consumers' Price Index. The study covered 10,813 families in 91 cities ranging in size from Madill, Okla., with about 2500 population, to New York.

THE BLS investigators also found out how the average family kept going in spite of the deficit of income. They drew on their savings, they went deeper into debt, or "they relied on other sources," according to Tobin. This last is believed to cover the old custom of hitting a better-heeled relative.

The survey showed that the families studied spent 30% of their incomes for food and beverages; 15% for housing, fuel, light and refrigeration, and 52% for everything else. Included in the 52% was 11% for autos, television sets, refrigerators and other household appliances; 4.5% for personal insurance, and 4% for gifts and contributions.

Covered by the investigators were families making less than $1000 and families making $10,000 or more. Prosperity was considered high in 1950, but 80% of the families dependent on the income of a wage earner or clerical worker had less than $5000 that year.

The survey was undertaken to provide data for a new postwar market basket of goods and services which will be priced each month to determine the revised index, scheduled for release early next year.

Carey Decries 'Fear' In U.S. World Policy

WHAT'S WRONG with American foreign policy is too much "fear," too much emphasis on military preparedness alone.

What's necessary in American foreign policy is expansion of the "economic recovery program for the democracies of Europe and for the free nations everywhere that need help to overcome poverty, hunger, illiteracy and ill health."

That's what CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey said last week. He spoke at the seventh annual Ohio CIO Council summer school at Bowling Green State Univ.

Pointing to the U. S. growth in 175 years to "first place in economic production, in standards of living, in freedom and in military strength," Carey said:

"We didn't reach the top of the mountain by sitting down to worry about expense or anything else. We did it by refusing to look behind.

"We weren't concerned about how far we had come. We were concerned with the road ahead.

"We can build a wider and stronger highway toward eventual world peace through justice and freedom if we have the courage to do so."

Carey ranked communism "along with exploitation, suppression of rights, and greed by those who have only money for a god," and said under both Communist or right-wing reaction, "the common people figure only as pawns."

But the CIO official said free labor's interest in world affairs is "not merely an anti-Communist activity."

The CIO, Carey said, "favors a positive program of building the welfare of all the people, particularly those who work, and guaranteeing them at the same time every right to which they are entitled as free men and women."

Along with the U. S. military preparedness program—which CIO fully supports—"you must have side by side with it economic strength," Carey said in proposing expansion of the economic recovery program.

"They say there's one good thing about non-union labor — But I'm hanged if I could ever find it!"

BLS Figures Set New Records, More Price Boosts Coming

PRICE Stabilizer Ellis Arnall is a guy who can say "I told you so."

Both the "old" and "new" consumer price indexes of the Bureau of Labor Statistics went through the roof again last week—reflecting weakening of the price control sections of the Defense Production Act by the last session of Congress.

Arnall—who has urged President Truman to recall Congress to shore up the DPA—predicted a "constant and steady" rise in prices. Such Washington officials as Sec. of Commerce Charles Sawyer and Sec. of Agriculture Charles Brannan a few days ago pooh-phooed his warnings.

"Time will tell who is right," Arnall said.

AND A few days later the BLS issued its monthly report.

The "old" price index — to which "cost-of-living" escalator clauses in union contracts are linked—went up by 1.3 points from mid-June to mid-July. The new, record figure is 192.4.

The "new" price index went up 1.2 points, to 190.8—the first time that index has topped 190.

Both figures have been climbing for months, and each set new records in the last two months.

Again the BLS reported a "sharp rise" in food prices—the last Congress killed ceilings on fruits, vegetables and canned and frozen foods—as the major cause of the increasing cost of living. Fruits and vegetables went up 1.3%.

Here are the cumulative figures for the "old" BLS Index:

Period	Index
1939 monthly average	99.4
1943 monthly average	123.6
1944 monthly average	125.5
1945 monthly average	128.4
1946 monthly average	139.3
1947 monthly average	159.2
1948 monthly average	171.2
1949 monthly average	169.1
1950 monthly average	171.2
1951 monthly average	185.9
1952 monthly average	190.1

Period	Index
1950: June 15	170.2
1951: June 15	185.5
1952: Jan. 15	190.2
Feb. 15	188.3
Mar. 15	188.4
Apr. 15	189.6
May 15	190.4
June 15	191.1
July 15	192.4

As result of the climb in the "old" index, more than a million members of the CIO Auto Workers—including employes of General Motors, Ford and other auto and farm equipment firms—will receive a 3c hourly wage increase under contract escalator clauses. These increases called "wooden nickels of inflation" by UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther—have totalled 26c hourly since the GM contract with a cost-of-living wage clause was signed in 1948.

There was more bad news for consumers—and signs of still higher food prices ahead.

Dun & Bradstreet's wholesale food price index climbed for the fourth straight week. It reached $6.69, the highest figure of the year.

About the only good news for consumers was the OPS announcement that it is going to reinstitute, partially, the World War II system of posted price ceilings in grocery stores.

Beginning in October, dollars-and-cents ceiling will be posted in 54 cities and towns throughout the nation. They will cover 300 market basket items—about 40% of grocery purchases.

The new, posted price system will replace a setup in which grocers figured their own ceilings.

Auto Workers Win Bay Area Strike

After a 10-day strike, the CIO Auto Workers won a 20c wage boost package at the National Motor Bearing Co. plant in Redwood City, near San Francisco.

Under the three-year contract, an 8c hourly increase was granted immediately, with additional 4c boosts each Dec. 1 for the term of the agreement. An escalator wage clause also is incorporated in the agreement.

Rent Controls Salvaged For 16 Million Americans

MORE THAN 16 million Americans, living in communities of more than 5000 persons, could breath easier last week. Their rents were not going to be increased.

CIO's National Housing Committee made that report this week, after studying returns from communities declared as critical housing areas, or where local governing bodies had already acted to continue controls until April 30.

In many of these areas, the drive for continued controls beyond the Sept. 30 expiration date had been sparkplugged by CIO councils and local unions.

Elsewhere, the fight to salvage rent controls continued. Late last week, Federal Housing Expediter Tighe Woods needed a police escort on leaving the Detroit City Council chamber.

Woods had made a report on rent controls, which was barely heard over the boos and screams of a landlord-packed gallery. A police escort was provided when he was threatened by the landlords.

More than 2.7 million persons will have continued rent control protection because of critical housing designations. More than 13 million live in communities where controls have been extended. Following is a partial list of those communities:

Over 1 million: Chicago and Philadelphia.

Over 500,000: St. Louis, Boston, Pittsburgh.

Over 100,000: Newark, Jersey City, Paterson, Trenton, Camden and Elizabeth N. J.; New Haven and Waterbury, Conn.; Springfield, Cambridge, Fall River, Somerville, and New Bedford, Mass.

Over 50,000: Lynn, Lowell, Quincy, Lawrence, Medford, and Pittsfield, Mass.; McDowell City, W. Va.; Manchester, N. H.; East St. Louis and Springfield, Ill.; East Orange, Bayonne, Clifton, Atlantic City, Passaic, Union City and Hoboken, N. J.; New Britain, Conn.; Lancaster, York and McKeesport, Pa.

Over 25,000: Bloomfield, Perth Amboy, Kearny, New Brunswick, Orange, West New York, Belleville and Garfield, N. J.; Everett, Salem, Chelsa, Revere, Taunton, and Gloucester, Mass.; Meriden and Middletown, Conn.; Hagerstown, Md.; Steubenville and Newark, Ohio; Owensboro, Ky.; Mishawaka, Ind.; Bangor, Me.; Albany, Ga.; Panama City, Fla.; New Kensington, Pa. and Jefferson City, Mo.

Wage Hike Policy Set For Steel Fabricators

THE WAGE Stabilization Board has cleared the way for the application of the steel wage settlement in fabricating plants which traditionally follow the pattern set in the basic industry.

Over the objections of industry members, the WSB adopted a procedure under which both national and regional boards will approve with a minimum of delay settlements in line with the pay boost wrested from basic producers by the CIO Steelworkers for companies that have followed the pattern in the past.

The board said that companies and unions that agree to apply the steel pattern in their plants should file petitions for approval in the usual way. They must demonstrate, the board determined, that a "tandem" relationship to basic steel wages "has in fact existed in past years."

The WSB will acknowledge receipt of the applications. If it does not notify the parties of rejection within 30 days, the increases may be put into effect.

Fringe improvements come within the scope of WSB Regulation 13. This means they can be approved only if they do not exceed the benefits in effect in other mills in the area.

The board's action means that the wages of some 500,000 workers in steel fabricating can be brought into line with those in basic steel by a comparatively simple procedure. The ruling also will apply to workers in other plants that historically have followed the basic steel pattern.

MEANTIME, the Office of Price Stabilization last week formally approved an average price increase of $5.55 a ton for steel.

The OPS said it acted only in accordance with orders from Acting Defense Mobilizer John R. Steelman, and that it had "relegated to the restricted position of serving as an agency for merely mathematical and statistical calculations."

Steelman had ordered the price increases as part of the strike settlement. Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall objected that they should average only about $3 a ton under OPS standards.

Economic Stabilizer Roger L. Putnam directed Arnall to "isolate" the increase as much as possible. Some of it undoubtedly will be absorbed by fabricators, but Arnall feels it would be both impractical and unfair to require them to absorb all of it.

The price boosts allow $5.20 a ton for carbon steel, which makes up the bulk of production, and a 4.7% increase for more costly alloys and stainless steel.

The Steelworkers continued their task of mopping up by signing new contracts with additional producers. Among those with which the union reached agreement were the Allegheny Ludlum Steel Corp., the country's 16th ranking producer with 14,000 employes, and the Acme Steel Co. of Chicago.

UPA Strikes Big Firm In 3 States

THE BIGGEST strike in the nation's paper industry since World War II began late last week, when CIO Paperworkers walked out at plants of the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co. in three states.

More than 4000 workers were forced out by company efforts to weaken the contract, said UPA-CIO Pres. Harry Sayre.

Sayre, who led pre-strike negotiations over the past two months, said West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co. management had sought both to chop up the UPA's bargaining unit and whittle down existing contract benefits. UPA has asked a 13c hourly cost-of-living plus productivity wage increase.

Plants struck are located at Luke, Md., Covington, Va., and Williamsburg, Pa.

Job Boycott Of Older Workers Hit

THE NATION'S defense production effort is suffering a severe loss because of industry's unofficial boycott on workers over 45.

That charge was leveled last week by Acting Defense Mobilizer John R. Steelman, as he announced a new defense manpower policy, calling on labor, management and the government to make better use of the abilities of men and women over 45.

Steelman declared 3½ million more workers may be needed by the end of 1953 to meet expected defense and civilian production levels. He said older workers are one of the most important manpower resources the nation has.

He urged relaxation of employment and retirement policies which discriminate against older workers.

Retirement of persons simply because they reach a certain age and without regard to their usefulness, or refusal to hire persons because of age often deprives the nation of the critical skills of mature, efficient workers, he said.

3 Backed By Newark CIO

THE ESSEX-West Hudson (N. J.) CIO-PAC last week unanimously endorsed Democratic congressional candidates in the 10th, 11th and 12th districts.

Endorsements went to Peter W. Rodino, Jr., and Hugh J. Addonizio, incumbents, and Martin S. Fox.

Action came at a meeting of 300 delegates from every CIO local union in the Newark area.

The delegates also rapped Republican candidates for these seats for failure to accept an invitation to debate their opponents at the CIO meeting, as well as failing to answer a CIO questionnaire seeking their views on campaign issues.

GCEOC Wins Fight For Job Security Rule

THE U. S. Civil Service Commission has yielded to the request of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee that the job rights of federal employes who are laid off by one agency be preserved long enough for them to get posts in others.

The order was hailed as a major victory by the CIO affiliate. Sec.-Treas. Milton Murray of the GCEOC sent the following telegram to Commissioners Robert Ramspeck, James Mitchell and Frances Perkins:

"Congratulations and our sincere thanks for your ruling. The equity of the new provisions will reaffirm the belief of federal employes in a meaningful career system."

The campaign for the new ruling was started by GCEOC Local 1 in Washington when the National Production Authority was forced to lay off a number of workers because appropriation requests were cut in Congress. Those furloughed were given 30-day notices and then separated from the government payroll unless they got new jobs.

Local 1 pointed out that because of civil service and other requirements it is almost impossible for a federal worker to start on a new job in as little as 30 days. And once he leaves the government service, he faces the loss of seniority and other rights built up during his years of service.

THE LOCAL asked notice of 90 days be given instead of 30 days, and that employes be allowed to take a furlough, or leave without pay, when forces are reduced. This, is was felt, would permit them to obtain other government jobs.

The National GCEOC got into the fight and extended it to cover all U. S. workers. The CSC action means that federal employes, for the first time, now have the security of job rights and accrued benefits enjoyed by workers under contract with private industry.

CIO Auxiliaries Say—

Women Urged To Call Men's Bluff, Join In Political Action

IT'S HIGH time that women got into politics with both feet, and call the men's bluff, says the latest bulletin of the CIO Congress of Women's Auxiliaries.

"The boys have made a mystery of politics for years," scoffs the Auxiliaries Congress, "but now that we have seen some of our top political bosses on television, we women must realize that it doesn't take a very large intellect to be one."

Moreover, it continues, "every woman in the country is in politics whether she knows it or not. You can't go through the daily motions of living without running into politics with every breath you draw. Since you're in it anyway, you might as well get in with both feet and do something about things you don't like."

Here's how the bulletin advises women to begin PAC work:

"Go to your local precinct and register. Tell your local party leader that you want to work. Tell him that you are willing to ring doorbells, stuff envelops—anything they want you to do. But most important, you want to get into politics.

"Then go ahead and work. Keep your eyes and ears open, make your weight felt in local campaigns. If we women would just get out and work in politics, spend half as much time as we do at our clubs, we could really accomplish something big."

Union Label Week

Detroit will mark Union Label Week beginning Sept. 1, with emphasis upon the union label program of the CIO Clothing Workers. The observance was proclaimed by Mayor Albert E. Cobo.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

WE HAVE just concluded one of the largest political action meetings CIO has ever held. Representatives from many of our CIO Councils, international unions, and regional directors were in attendance.

President Murray discussed the issues involved in the coming presidential election, and presented them so masterly and convincingly, that all those in attendance were unanimous in their support of the Democratic platform and Gov. Stevenson and Sen. Sparkman and voted to recommend this program to the people.

We have our duty as Americans, and as members of CIO to (1) make sure that we register to vote, (2) subscribe some financial help to PAC no matter how small the amount, and (3) bring the issues of the coming campaign to all the citizens in the communities throughout the country.

These are matters to be decided by all Americans, not just a few. Today the CIO is more united than ever before and will work together to help win the election in November.

★

Republican Sen. Dirksen again resorts to distortion in replying to a letter from a minister of his own church. In his reply, the Senator attacks Gov. Stevenson on the West Frankfort, Illinois mine disaster which occurred in December, 1951.

Maybe Dirksen doesn't know? And maybe he doesn't care? But the facts are that following the Centralia mine disaster in 1947, the Illinois Assembly at Gov. Stevenson's request, took the mine inspection service out of politics and put it on a merit basis. Gov. Stevenson even went further and caused a modern safety code to be drawn up. Unfortunately, the legislators did not act.

It is with interest that I note the Senator does not discuss the Centralia disaster that was due largely to the inaction of the then Republican Gov. Green. During Gov. Green's term of office, request upon request was made that he do something about the horrible conditions in the Centralia mines. Nothing was done and many of those who made requests for investigation were later killed in the mine blasts.

The writer will attend and address the CIO Chemical Workers convention in Chicago. From there I shall journey to Los Angeles for the CIO celebration on Labor Day.

CIO Rep. Lou Koletka reports that in a representation election at the Select Dairy, Portsmouth, O., the workers favored the CIO Retail, Wholesale, Department Store Union by a vote of 18 to 1 no union, 2 not voting. Edgar Johnson of RWDSU Local #21 handled the organizing.

Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports that workers at the stock yards in Indianapolis, Ind., favored the CIO Packinghouse Workers over the AFL by a vote of 68 to 22, no union 2. UPW-CIO Rep. Herman handled this representation campaign.

Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports these CIO election victories: Book Find Club, New York, N. Y., CIO 21, challenged 2, no union 14; General Dyestuff Corp., New York, N. Y., CIO Gas, Coke, Chemical Workers 39, AFL 1, void 2; Electricoil Transformer Co., Ossining, N. Y., CIO Auto Workers 11, AFL 1; Gotham Chalkboard & Trim Co., Inc., New York, N. Y., RWDSU-CIO 8, no union 6, challenged 1.

Reg. Dir. Sam Sponseller reports the CIO Packinghouse Workers won a representation election at the Swift Packing Co., Cleveland, O., by the following vote: UPWA-CIO 352; independent union 236; AFL 20; no union 11. UPWA Rep. Edward Beltrame was in charge of the drive, assisted by the CIO regional office.

Vice Pres. B. J. Schafer, of the CIO Oil Workers, reports three representation election victories: Petroleum Package Carrier Co., Atlanta Ga., OWIU 3, others 0; Phillips Petroleum Co., Sweeney, Tex. (Clerical and Traffic Dept.) OWIU 3, others 1; Simplot Fertilizer Co., Pocatello, Idaho, OWIU 24, Teamsters 7, Engineers 1.

CIO Board Urges U. S. Fight Newsprint Price Boosts

CONDEMNING the latest price increase for Canadian newsprint, the CIO Executive Board on Aug. 14 urged the government and the American newspaper industry to work to have in rescinded.

Adopting a resolution submitted by the CIO Newspaper Guild, the board noted newsprint prices were at an all-time high and had been raised twice this year.

It called newsprint the "largest single cost item in the publishing industry" and said, "the net result of these successive increases in prices will be new declines in the competitive newspaper field, where monopolies are more dangerous than in any other industry.

"As a long-range solution to this problem, we endorse the recommendation of the Guild that the government undertake immediate development of newsprint resources in Alaska as well as to encourage manufacture of newsprint from substitute materials, such as sugar cane, in order to help insure an adequate domestic supply of newsprint."

CIO Board Raps Baldanzi, Backs TWUA Against Raids

RAIDING operations of the AFL Textile Workers were sharply condemned by the CIO Executive Board, which charged they were "endangering the economic security of thousands of workers in the textile and allied industries."

Lashing out at George Baldanzi, who is leading the AFL raids, the board noted Baldanzi had once been a member of the CIO Executive Board. He "once was honored by the Textile Workers with a high office in their organization," the resolution said.

But, the CIO added, Baldanzi has "completely broken faith with those who once so honored him and has proved himself unworthy of the trust they placed in him."

The resolution, adopted at a Washington meeting Aug. 14, recalled that Baldanzi had deserted the CIO and joined the United Textile Workers-AFL, when he was defeated in a bid for presidency of the CIO union.

Emil Rieve, president of the CIO Textile Workers, told reporters Baldanzi's raids had not been successful. When Baldanzi joined the AFL, that organization predicted 100,000 textile workers would follow him.

Instead, said Rieve, only 2000 or 3000 former CIO workers are now paying dues to the AFL group. However, AFL raids have just about halted organizing of textile workers in the South, Rieve added.

The CIO board charged Baldanzi with completing "an alliance with a union whose record Baldanzi roundly attacked in those happier days before he violated the trust his fellow workers had placed in him."

The board called on all CIO unions to assist the TWUA-CIO in combatting these raiding operations in order that the workers "may continue to have the protection of a strong, effective, honest trade union, the TWUA-CIO."

Tariff Hike Turned Down By Truman

PRESIDENT TRUMAN has rejected a precedent-setting proposal to increase the import duty on watch and watch movements.

His action followed a recommendation by the CIO International Affairs Committee, which had advised the President "considerable harm to the position of the United States in world trade" would result from any other action.

A recommendation of the U. S. Tariff Commission would have raised the duty to protect domestic watchmakers and would have adversely affected the Swiss watch industry.

In urging the President to take the action he did, Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO committee and president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, had written:

"We believe that action by you rejecting the recommendation to increase duty on Swiss watch movements will greatly strengthen our whole reciprocal trade program."

Steel Signs Can Contract

THE CIO Steelworkers last week signed two important contracts for terms similar to the strike settlement agreement in basic steel.

A wage increase of 12½c hourly, improved vacations, and gains in the social insurance program were won in the contract with Continental Can Co.

Covered are 14,000 workers in plants in the United States and Canada.

In Ohio, another 13,000 USA-CIO members ended a month-long strike in Columbus, Canton and Zanesville against Timken Roller Bearing Co.

The contract, ratified last week by membership meetings, is highlighted by a 10% wage increase averaging 16.7c an hour and a modified union shop. Timken in recent weeks had sponsored an expensive national advertising campaign denouncing the union shop in any shape or form. (LPA)

Textile Gets Rug Pact; Pay Gain In Carolina

NORTH and South, wage increases were won by CIO Textile Workers for rug, carpet and textile mill workers.

In the New York-New England area, TWUA brought to a successful conclusion a 12-week-long strike against major carpet firms. Terms were basic wage increases to 10c hourly, additional job inequity increases, and defeat of employer moves to weaken basic contract terms.

In the South, TWUA gained an arbiter's decision awarding a 5% hourly wage increase, or about 6½c an hour, to 1200 workers at the Columbia Mills, Columbia, S. C.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve said the award will strengthen the union's long campaign to raise wage rates in textile mills throughout the South.

The rug and carpet strike, which began on June 1, was wound up last week with contract ratification by workers at the Bigelow-Sanford plant and the Mohawk Carpet plant, Amsterdam, N. Y.

The agreements—similar to the pact reached with the big Alexander Smith plant at Yonkers—came after management abandoned two contract-weakening demands which had forced the strike. Dropped by management were moves for compulsory overtime and reduction of the down-time guarantees.

Along with the 9c increase in piece rates and 10c in hourly rates, 600 additional Mohawk workers will get a half-cent in job inequity increase and 360 Bigelow-Sanford workers will get 3c extra in a similar increase. Insurance and hospitalization benefits also were improved.

IN THE South, Rieve said, the union will seek to gain the 6½c increase granted at Columbia in other agreements opening for bargaining beginning next month. Arbiter was C. G. Shake, a Vincennes, Ind., attorney.

"The arbitrator's decision," Rieve said, "does verify what we have been arguing for more than a year—that southern textile workers are entitled to a substantial wage increase by any standard of measurement.

"We are sure that the arbitrator's decision will have a great moral effect on our forthcoming negotiations.

"If the southern textile employers hope to maintain the pretense of dealing fairly with their workers—a pose they have sought to maintain for years—they can hardly refuse what an impartial arbitrator has declared to be reasonable and proper."

UAW Gets 4c Hike At Harvester

Some 32,000 production workers at International Harvester plants, represented by the CIO Auto Workers, will get a 4c hourly productivity wage increase.

The boost, under the annual improvement provision of the UAW-CIO contract, was approved by the Wage Stabilization Board. The company also granted the increase to salaried employes.

Food Firm Named

The Federal Trade Commission has filed an anti-trust action against General Foods Corp., $500-million-a-year firm, charging it with attempting to prevent competition by unfair pricing practices.

Jet Engine Contract Set

THE CIO Auto Workers and the Allis-Chalmers Co. last week signed a contract ending a 14-week strike at the firm's jet engine plant at Terre Haute, Ind.

The walkout was marked by futile efforts of the AFL Operating Engineers to take over bargaining rights.

The new contract, for three years, provides for wage increases of 14c an hour immediately, 4c an hour more on July 1, 1953, and again on July 1, 1954; a cost of living wage formula; increases in night shift premiums to 10c an hour from 5 to 7c, and health, vacation and pension benefits.

Labor Day Statement—

Murray Sees Another Defeat For Reaction

Following is CIO Pres. Philip Murray's 1952 Labor Day statement.

By PHILIP MURRAY

ON THIS 1952 Labor Day, American workers can well take pride in their accomplishments—in advancing democracy's cause and in protecting the welfare of the people.

We crave peace in the world—but we can see no firm basis for peace so long as the Soviet totalitarians threaten the world with plans for aggressive warfare.

We crave the great rises in our standard of living which modern technology makes easily possible—but so long as freedom's cause is under attack, we must support the building of our military defenses.

Thus, in a world where peace and freedom and security are within the reach of mankind, we must hold responsible for war and poverty and insecurity those enemies of freedom and democracy who live on exploitation and human suffering.

American labor, on its annual holiday, recognizes both the challenge of the future and the menace of the present. We pledge ourselves to build democracy's strength against that menace of military aggression, while constantly waging economic war against poverty.

The members of the CIO know that at home, as well as abroad, it is within man's province to abolish fear and hunger and the dread of a bleak tomorrow.

At home, we have fought with courage the selfish interests which exploit labor and thrive on the cancer of inflation. We have made clear our belief in equality of sacrifice. We have defied those greedy forces who wish that workers and their families should bear the whole brunt of the common struggle. And we have fought at every step—as we shall always do—the evil provisions of that evil law, the Taft-Hartley Act.

American labor, recognizing its world responsibilities, has lent its support to our Mutual Security Program and to the Point Four Program to help the people of under-developed areas. We agree with President Truman that both these great unselfish programs are essential to the future of world democracy and the well-being of people everywhere.

In 1952, as free Americans, we shall go to the polls to determine the future course of our government policies. We shall not, I am sure, turn our backs on two decades of progress. We shall retain our faith in the forward-looking programs of the New Deal and the Fair Deal—programs that have brought immense benefits both to America and the entire world.

Through the CIO Political Action Committee, we shall mobilize our strength to elect men and women to public office who are pledged to carry out the true spirit of the American people.

It behooves every union member to register, to know the issues and to vote. In doing so, we can have faith that reaction will meet still another defeat in November at the hands of the American voters.

IUE Triumphs At Westinghouse

8-25

CIO ELECTRICAL Workers last week crushed a raiding attack by the Communist-dominated UE at the largest plant in the Westinghouse chain.

At the East Pittsburgh plant, 6781 workers voted to retain IUE-CIO as their bargaining agent against 4825 for UE. No union received 294 ballots.

The majority of nearly 2000 votes shows a substantial gain in IUE-CIO strength since the original contest in April, 1950, when results were so close that a run-off, won by IUE-CIO, had to be held a few weeks later.

UE petitioned for a new NLRB election early this summer. IUE-CIO, confident of its strength, consented to an immediate election. In a brief, hard-fought campaign IUE-CIO overwhelmed UE's 100 organizers imported into the Turtle Creek valley under the personal direction of James Matles, UE director of organization.

IUE-CIO leaders of the giant Local 601 felt that the union's improved position resulted from wage gains of from 26c to 32c an hour which Westinghouse workers have averaged under IUE-CIO representation.

URW Signs 4 Firms, Strikes At Goodrich

CIO RUBBER Workers had 10c hourly wage increases buttoned down for some 70,000 tire workers last week, but were forced on strike to get a satisfactory contract with B. F. Goodrich—one of the Big Four rubber firms.

Some 18,000 URW members walked out of nine Goodrich plants, the largest of which is in Akron, O.

L. S. Buckmaster, URW president, said the walkout—a month after the contract expiration—was caused by management's "below par contract proposals."

"The union," he said, "was compelled to take strike action in the face of the company's continued refusal to live up to its responsibilities to its employes."

Although Goodrich had agreed to the 10c pattern won by the URW in other contract settlements, Buckmaster said "the offer was tied into contract proposals which are not comparable to agreements in existence with most other rubber companies.

"If the union should agree to the below par contract proposals, the net result would be a loss to the workers involved despite the wage increase."

Before the Goodrich walkout, the URW signed with Goodyear and U. S. Rubber, two big producers, as well as General and Sieberling. Approval of the Wage Stabilization Board is required.

CIO Leaders To Broadcast On Labor Day

THE AIR over the United States will fairly crackle on Labor Day, Sept. 1, with radio speeches extolling the working man and discussing his problems.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray will give one of the major addresses, from the CIO Oil Workers' Convention in Philadelphia. He will speak for 15 minutes beginning at 2 p.m. (EDT) over the National Broadcasting Co. network.

Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey of the CIO will join in a 15-minute interview over the American Broadcasting System network at 3:30 p.m. (EDT).

Gov. Stevenson, the Democratic nominee for the presidency, will start off his campaign with a major speech to be broadcast from CIO-AFL rally in Detroit. He will speak at 1 p.m. (EDT).

Pres. Truman will urge the election of the Democratic candidates for president and vice president in a speech to be broadcast from another joint CIO-AFL Labor Day rally in Milwaukee.

CIO Anti-Bias Group Hails Demo Platform

THE DEMOCRATS paid far closer attention than the Republicans to "the hopes and aspirations" of millions of Americans when the two parties drew up their civil rights planks and nominated their presidential candidates, the National CIO Committee To Abolish Discrimination declared last week.

The committee met in Washington, concurred in the CIO Executive Board's endorsement of the Democratic standard bearers, and recommended their election in November "to all Americans of good will."

Of the candidates themselves, the committee, headed by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, said:

"Both of these candidates have stated publicly that they will support the Democratic platform and will make their campaigns upon the principles and policies which it proclaims.

"Adlai E. Stevenson has a lifelong record as a liberal. As Governor of Illinois he has even invoked the military power of his State, notably in the Cicero affair, to enforce American legal and moral principles in defense of human rights. He has outlawed segregation in the public schools in Illinois. His thinking is embodied in the Democratic platform.

"John J. Sparkman has on a number of occasions challenged the proclaimed white supremacy claims of the Dixiecrats. As a delegate to the convention from Alabama and as a leader in the Democratic Party, he assisted in the drafting of the Democratic platform and it bore his endorsement when it was presented to the convention."

THE committee noted that in the field of civil rights, the Democrats pledged themselves to the stand that more is required than cooperation efforts of individuals and action by state and local governments.

"It made the forthright statement," the committee continued, "that the federal government must act, must live up to the ideals of the Declaration of Independence and must exercise the powers vested in it by the Constitution.

"The Democratic Party further pledged itself to complete the elimination of discrimination in the armed forces and the civil service. It pledged punitive action in defense of civil rights by the U. S. Dept. of Justice. It met specific issues squarely in the following language:

"'At the same time we favor legislation effectively to secure these rights to everyone:

"'1. The right to equal opportunity for employment;

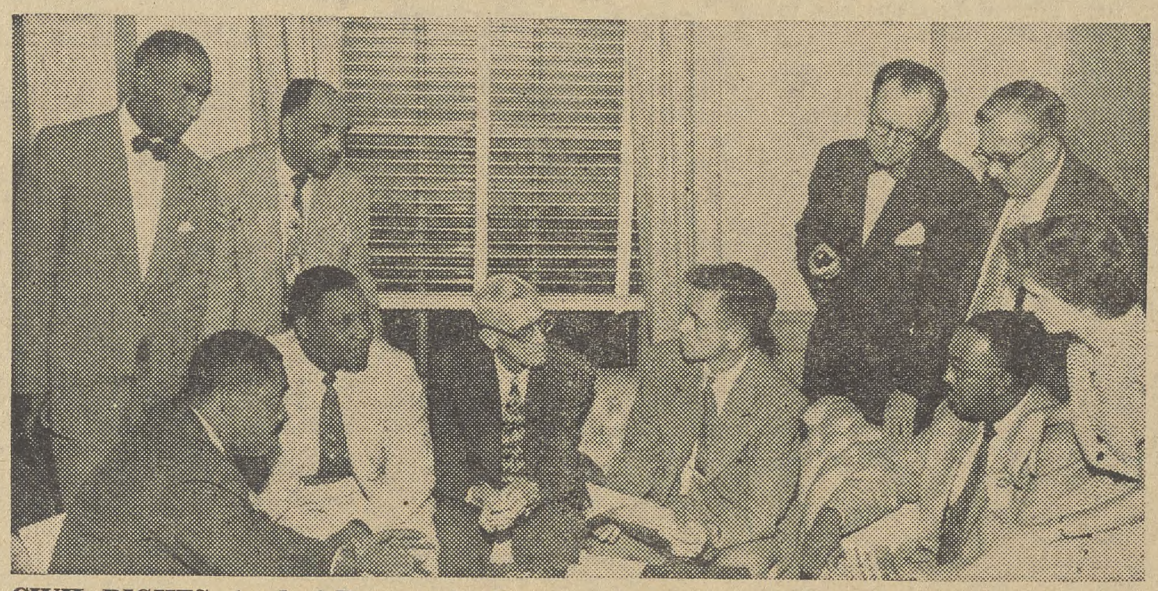
"'2. The right to security of person;

"'3. The right to full and equal participation in the nation's political life free from arbitrary restraints'.

"Finally, the Democratic Party pledged itself to institute congressional procedures that will prevent filibuster and make possible legislative decisions by majority vote.

"These statements are clear and impossible of misinterpretation.

"In sharp contrast the Republican Party confined itself to a reaffirmation of state's rights which have too often in the past operated to deny human rights to the individual citizen."



CIVIL RIGHTS stand of Democrats shows far more thought for hopes and aspirations of all Americans than that of the Republicans, the National CIO Committee To Abolish Discrimination (shown above) declared at a meeting in Washington. The committee recommended "to all Americans of good will" the election of Gov. Stevenson as president and Sen. Sparkman as vice president.

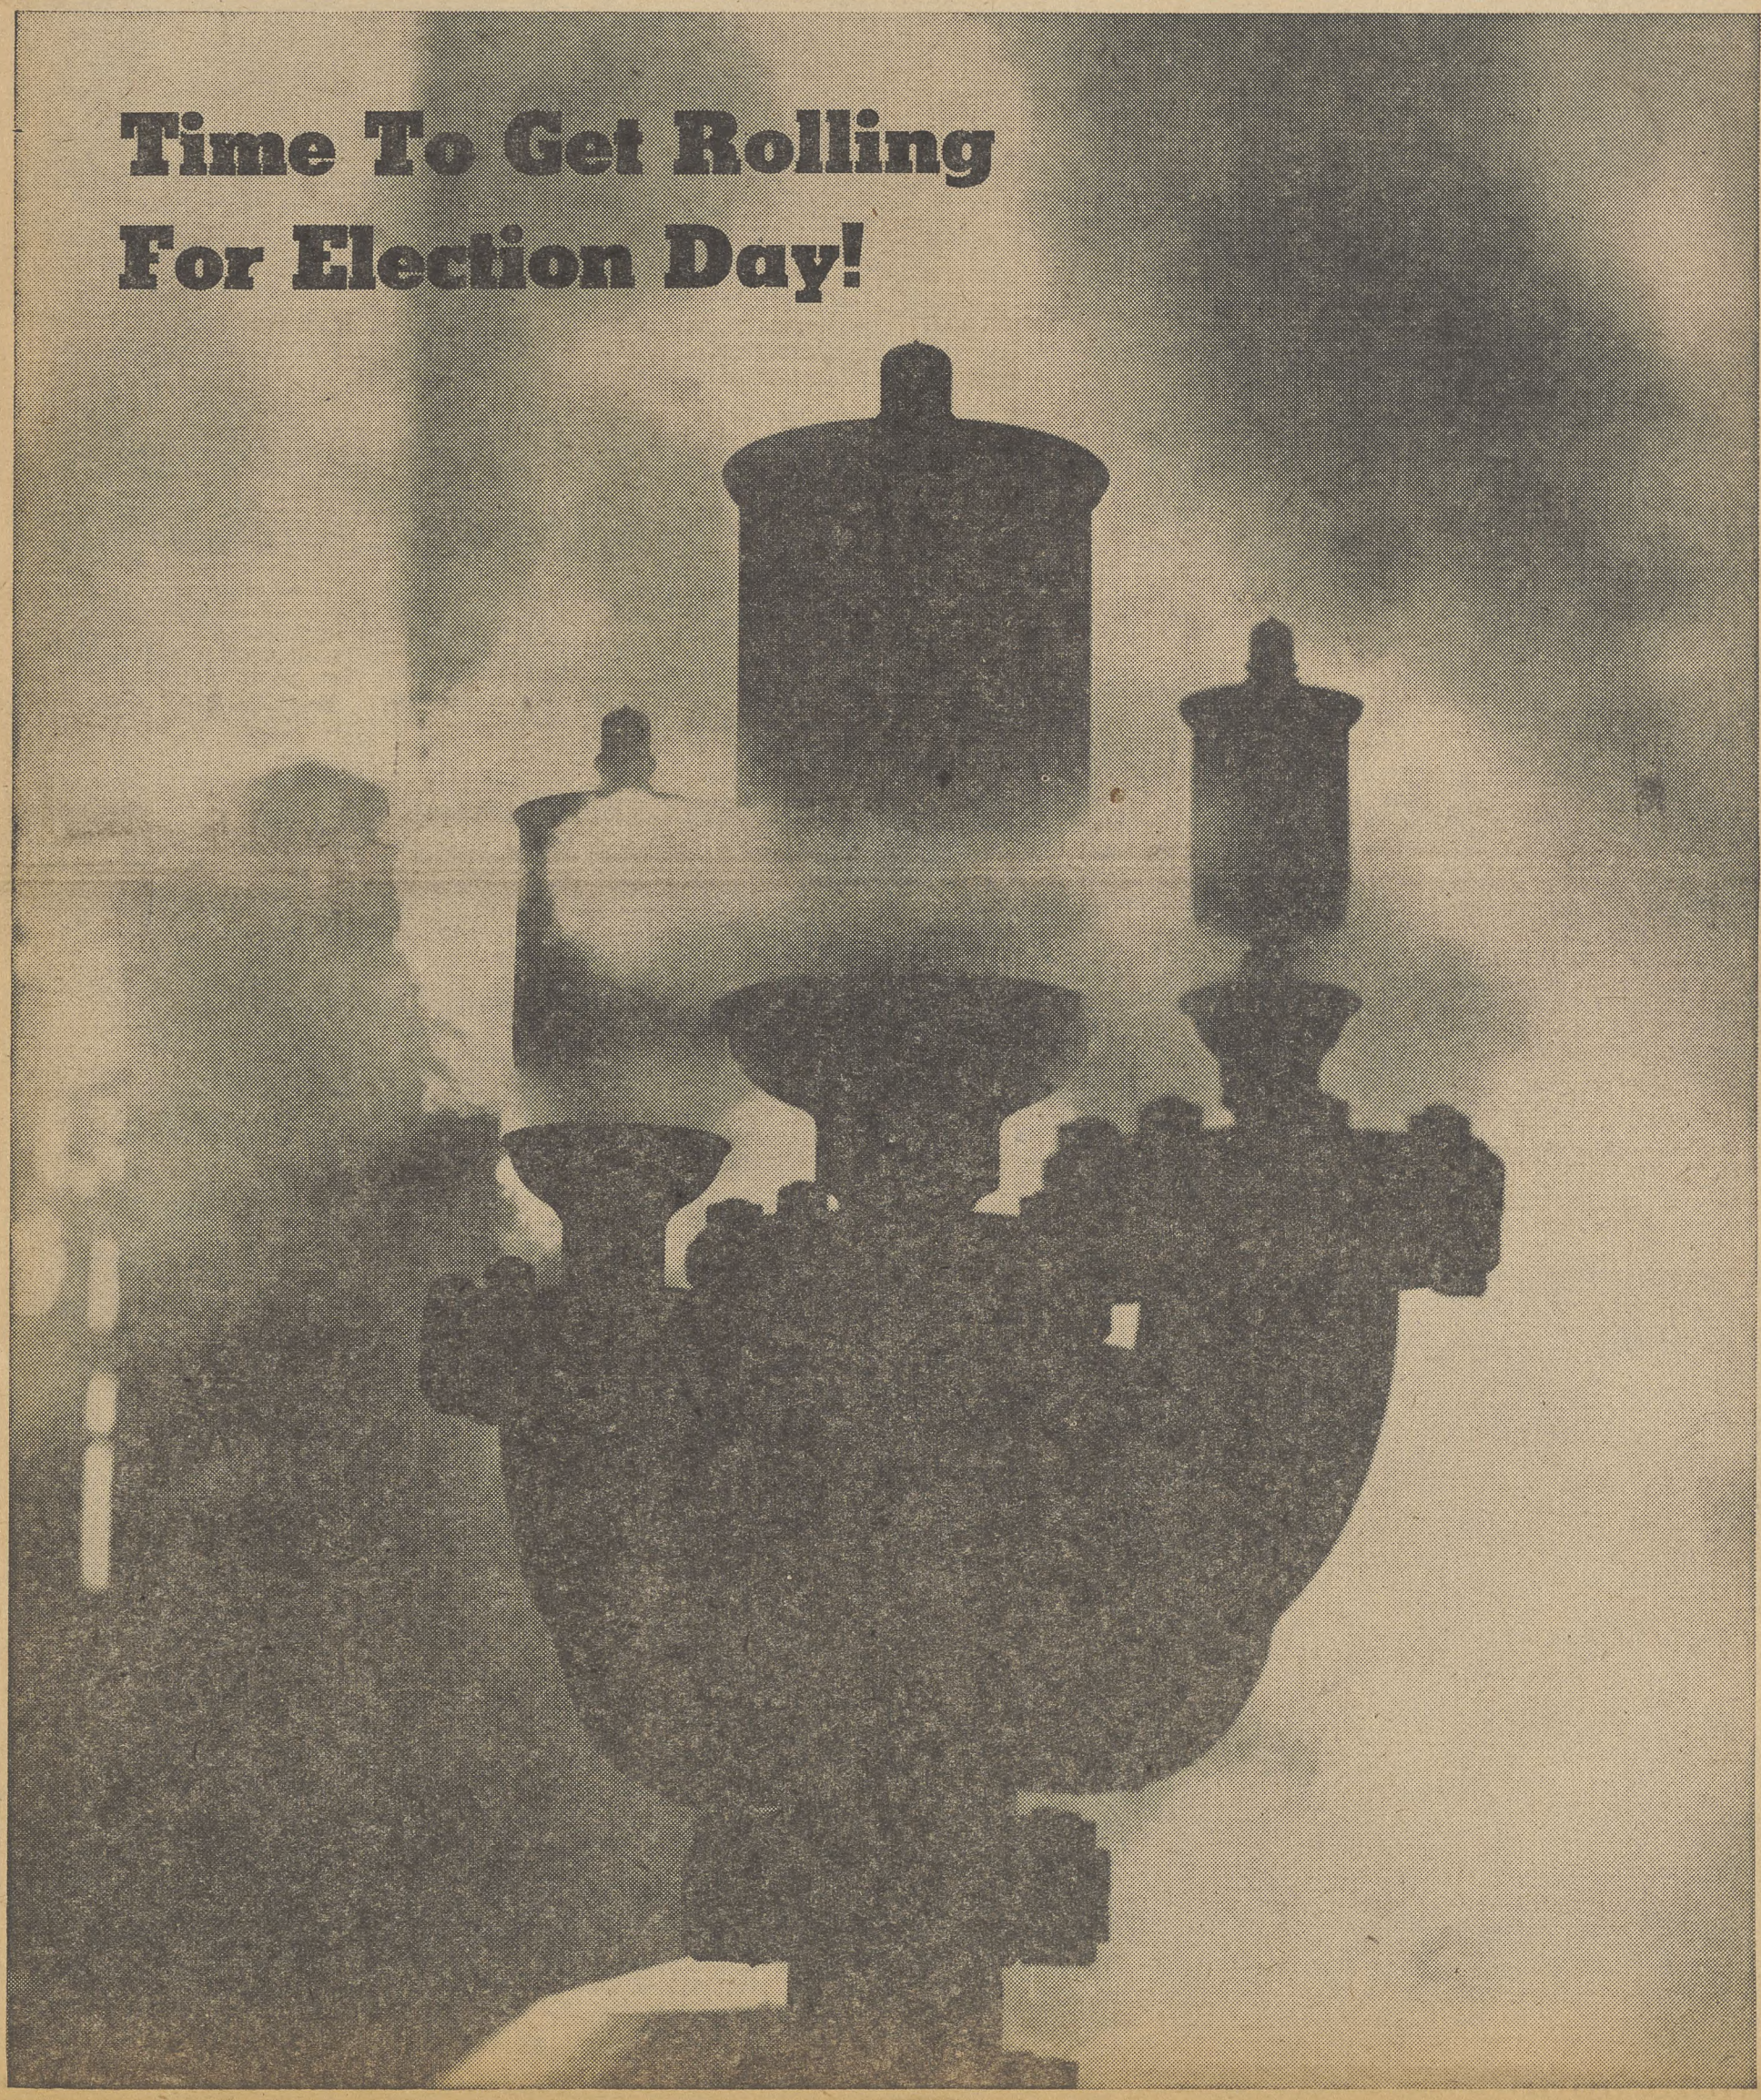
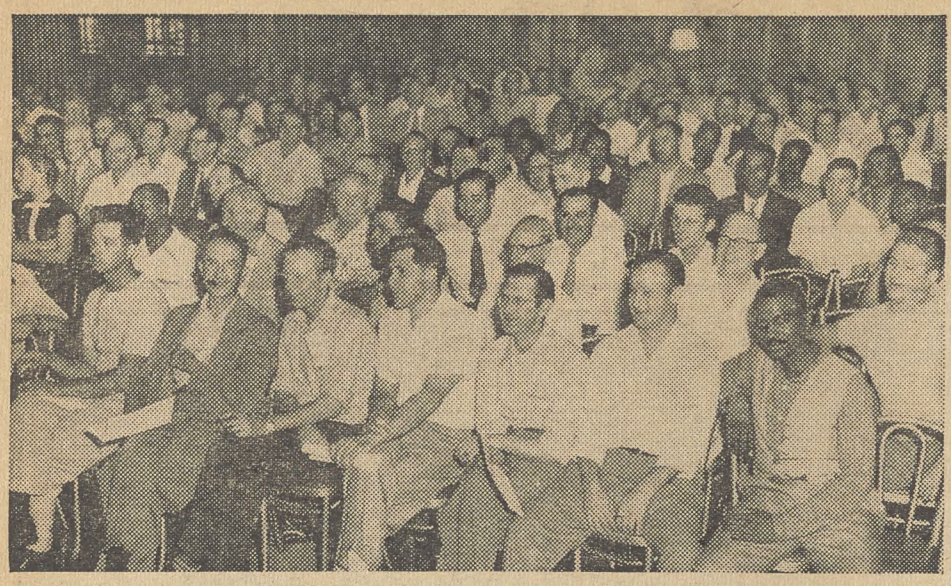
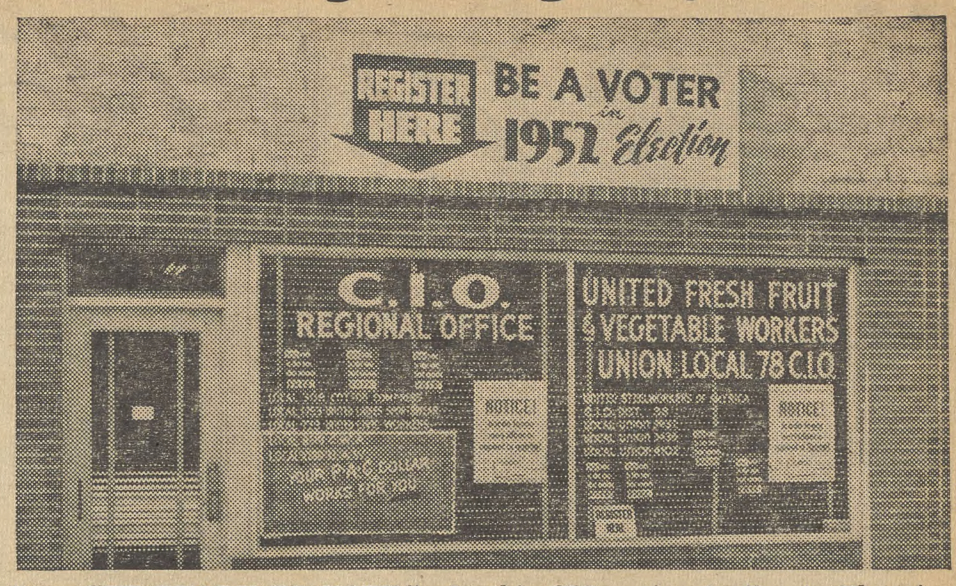
Time To Get Rolling For Election Day!



East And West—Here's How We're Working To Sign Up Voters



"DON'T MISS THE BOAT . . ."—Enthusiasm of PAC workers to register the non-registered, get them eligible to vote, is reflected in faces of more than 250 unionists at Essex-West Hudson CIO Council rally in Newark. They've begun a doorbell-pushing drive for full registration of all CIO members in that heavily-populated area.



". . . GET READY TO VOTE."—In this CIO regional office in Phoenix, Ariz., two aides have been named full-time official registrars. They've been registering as many as 82 people a day. If all Phoenix eligibles aren't registered, said CIO Reg. Dir. Nick Dragon, it won't be because CIO didn't try its best to get them on the rolls.

Ohio PAC Rally Boosts Drive To Defeat Bricker

(By a Special Correspondent)

SOME 3000 Ohio CIO unionists met in Columbus last week to hear a short but not sweet description of Sen. Bricker and to step up the campaign to replace him with Michael V. DiSalle.

From Averell Harriman, Mutual Security Agency chief, came this description of Bricker, Taft's junior partner in the Senate from Ohio:

"Bricker has been one of the blindest men in the Senate. He consistently has voted for reaction at home and for isolationism on foreign policies."

He called the campaign of DiSalle, former price stabilizer, to unseat Bricker one of the most important senatorial races in the nation.

Delegates to the state-wide political action rally gave cheering support to the Democratic national candidates, Gov. Stevenson for President and Sen. Sparkman for Vice President. Jack Kroll, Ohio Council president and PAC national director, was chairman of the rally.

DiSalle already has CIO backing in the Senate race. The Ohio CIO-PAC state central committee announced it would make recommendations for other state offices later.

Harriman noted Bricker's votes against the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, foreign arms aid and mutual security to support his charge that "Bricker stands for conditions in which he would deny American boys allies in other parts of the world."

The MSA chief challenged Gen. Eisenhower, former commander and now Republican presidential candidate, to state whether he will support Bricker in light of his isolationist record.

Harriman also debunked claims of Arthur Summerfield, GOP national chairman, that CIO was a "ball and chain" around Stevenson.

"Gen. Eisenhower's political spokesman may shed tears of sympathy for Gov. Stevenson," Harriman said, "but I note that the general is rushing to the AFL convention to try to get a few 'balls and chains' of his own.

"I DON'T think he's going to be very successful. American labor understands that the strong liberal domestic policies of the Democratic Party have brought prosperity at home and given us the moral and physical strength to take leadership in the free world.

"If we are to maintain this leadership in the fight against communism, we must continue these policies for economic and social progress which have resulted in the highest production and the highest standard of living in our history."

Harriman praised Stevenson as one of the "finest governors in the history of Illinois."

Harriman hammered away at the point that CIO members and other Ohioans must defeat Bricker and send DiSalle to the Senate.

"The voters of Ohio have a real opportunity," Harriman said. "In Mike DiSalle they can contribute to their own welfare, to the welfare of Ohio and the nation.

"As chief of the Office of Price Stabilization he (DiSalle) successfully fulfilled one of the toughest jobs in the nation, making more friends and fewer enemies than anyone thought possible. As a member of the Senate, he would be a vigorous and informed fighter for America's consumers, and that means all of us.

"You in Ohio CIO will be working in this campaign, not merely as members of labor unions, but as citizens of the country."

Big Job Still Ahead On Voter Registration

NEW registration records were being hung up throughout the country last week as CIO-PAC units pushed hard to complete the job of "registering the unregistered" voters.

Civic, political and non-partisan organizations, in many areas, took up the task of promoting registration. They universally filed complaints which were carbon copies of PAC complaints in the years when it was one of the few organizations actively promoting registration.

In area after area, groups charged that registration stations were inadequate and often in inaccessible locations. Hours of registration were unrealistic, making it virtually impossible for workers to register during non-working hours.

Some areas were working to improve registration conditions, reports said, while in others political motives and legal red tape prevented improvements.

Meanwhile, Jack Kroll, CIO-PAC director, offered a word of caution.

"While reports of new registration records are salutary," he said, "we should not be led astray. If CIO is to do its part in this great patriotic drive, we must not be lulled into thinking that a high registration automatically means our members have registered."

In New Jersey, the State CIO Council completed a survey which pointed up the magnitude of the job. State CIO Pres. Carl Holderman reported more than 900,000 New Jersey citizens will be unable to vote unless they register before Sept. 25.

Boston, Philadelphia Add CIO-TV 'Issues Of The Day'

"ISSUES OF THE DAY"—CIO's new, 13-week television series—moved on to the TV screens in two of the nation's largest cities last week.

In both Boston and Philadelphia, arrangements were completed for televising the series which had been jointly produced by CIO and the CIO Political Action Committee.

William J. Bellanger, president of the Massachusetts State CIO Council, said "this series, which the State CIO is sponsoring as a public service, will be seen by viewers in many of the New England states. We have chosen the station which will reach the most viewers, for we sincerely believe the people of New England should know all the issues when they go to the polls in November."

In Boston, the series will be on Station WBZ-TV either before or after the Saturday afternoon baseball or football games. Bellanger advised TV viewers to check their daily newspapers each week for the exact time.

Henry F. Shipherd, president of the Philadelphia CIO Council, said the TV show in that area would be seen every Thursday at 6:45 p.m. over station WFIL-TV. It is being sponsored by all of the CIO councils in that viewing area, which includes much of Eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware.

Following is the present program schedule:

City	Station	Day	Hour
Ames	WOI-TV	Tuesday	9:30 p.m.
Boston	WBZ-TV	Saturday	check papers
Chicago	WBKB-TV	Tuesday	10:45 p.m.
Cincinnati	WCPO-TV	Sunday	1:00 p.m.

Philadelphia	WFIL-TV	Thursday	6:45 p.m.

'Industry Day'

Murray Urges Business To 'Cooperate'

CIO PRES. Philip Murray marked Labor Day, the holiday of American workers, by proposing that the men who own and operate the country's factories, mills and mines have a holiday all their own—"Industry Day."

He made the suggestion in a speech prepared for delivery Sept. 1 before the convention of the CIO Oil Workers in Philadelphia.

"Industry Day," he explained, "would be a day in which the top executives of our great corporations, the financial leaders of the Wall Street community, the men and women who own great blocs of stock in our American free enterprises, could sit in solemn meditation and consider their fundamental responsibility to our nation.

"Perhaps, on such an Industry Day, the men of management could make sincere resolves to strive, honestly and effectively, to achieve a sound and democratic spirit of understanding with the workers of American industry. There are some areas of industry, of course, where harmonious cooperation is practiced, and its benefits appreciated.

"But it is time for the great majority of corporations to turn a new leaf in their human relations with the men and women of the production units."

Murray said that industry can show on two points its willingness "to work with the rest of the team to make a better America." The first is to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act.

"That law was conceived in an atmosphere of hate and misunderstanding," he declared. "It has attempted to buttress the power of industry with the power of government—a craven, selfish objective by some industrialists, which has been thwarted by the statesmanship and patriotism of one of our greatest presidents, Harry S. Truman.

"In place of the Taft-Hartley Act, we need a fair and just labor-management relations law. That new law, if it is to be honest and effective, must recognize that the union is the servant of its members and that government interference can—and does—stifle free collective bargaining."

The second point, Murray said, is the guaranteed annual wage, which could be established "if management is willing to sit down at the bargaining table to work out the details."

"The guaranteed annual wage is a democratic proposal, a humanitarian program," he said. "It is coming in America, as certainly as spring follows winter, because it corresponds to the heartfelt need of people in every walk of life for added protection from the hazards of human existence."

Labor is vitally interested in the November elections, Murray said, because of the issues "in which we, as citizens and as workers, have an overwhelming interest." These issues, he explained, include inflation, better social security, slum clearance and a health insurance program in addition to repeal of T-H.

"Through our CIO Political Action Committee, CIO members will be supporting those candidates, Republicans or Democrats, who want liberal, honest government in this country," he said.

"Some people seem to think that the votes of American workers can be herded like cattle on the range; the man who believes that is either a fool or an ignoramus. Mark you this: The American worker cannot be bamboozled or misled.

"But it is just conceivable, if a working man or woman seeks advice on the issues and the candidates, that he may place more reliance on the word of his own union than of his known enemies in the ranks of the Chamber of Commerce or the NAM.

"No, there is no labor vote. But there is a citizens' vote, and in every past presidential election, it has been cast in great majority for the principles of the Roosevelt New Deal and the Truman Fair Deal.

"As in the campaigns of 1944 and 1948, I have faith that the voice of the CIO and the CIO-PAC will be heard and respected.

"For the voice of labor is the voice of liberal, progressive America—a voice that calls for economic advancement, for security, for the strengthening of our liberties, for the continued leadership of our beloved nation in the worldwide struggle for freedom and for peace."

Stevenson Blisters McCarthy As Ike Dodges Issue

GOV. Adlai Stevenson last week opened his campaign for President with a blistering attack on McCarthyism, coupled with a plea for the defense of freedom of thought in the fight against communism.

Although he did not use names, Stevenson left no doubt that his main target was Sen. McCarthy (R. Wisc.).

The Democratic presidential nominee chose the American Legion's New York convention for his free-swinging attack on those who use "the patriotic cloak of anti-communism" to undermine the Bill of Rights.

In cold and measured words, he referred to the attacks on the "loyalty and motives" of Gen. George C. Marshall, wartime chief of staff, as a "shocking example" of attacks on public officials.

"To me," he said, "this type of 'patriotism' is the last refuge of scoundrels."

In another New York address, Stevenson endorsed the Democratic platform pledge to curb Senate Dixiecrat filibusters aimed at civil rights legislation.

"No man," he said, "has the right to strangle democracy with a single set of vocal cords."

Stevenson said he favored fair employment practices legislation which would give the states the opportunity to set their houses in order, but give the federal government power "to proceed by careful deliberation and full and fair hearings."

Stevenson's tough-talking speech to the American Legion followed by two days a speech by his Republican opponent, Gen. Eisenhower.

The advance text of Eisenhower's speech contained a one-paragraph attack on McCarthyism. The general, however, deleted this when he spoke.

Stevenson clearly outlined his own views on patriotism, which he defined as "love of this Republic" and not "hatred of Russia."

He told the Legion, which once gave McCarthy an award for "Americanism," that he thinks patriotism "is based on tolerance and a large measure of humility."

"There are men among us who use 'patriotism' as a club for attacking other Americans," he warned.

"What can we say for the man who proclaims himself a patriot—and then for political or personal reasons attacks the patriotism of faithful public servants?" Stevenson asked as he went on to detail the attacks of Republicans against Gen. Marshall.

"What can we say for the self-styled patriot who thinks that a Negro, a Jew, a Catholic or a Japanese-American is less an American than he?" he asked the Legionnaires.

That attitude, he said, "betrays the deepest article of our faith, the belief in individual liberty and equality which has always been the heart and soul of the American idea."

"Surely intolerance and public irresponsibility cannot be cloaked in the shining armor of rectitude and righteousness. Nor can the denial of the right to hold ideas that are different—the freedom of man to think as he pleases," said the Democratic nominee.

Stevenson said he thinks many threats to freedom arise from "a healthy apprehension about the Communist menace within our country." Americans who have become Communists, he said, "have surrendered their right to our trust and there can be no secure place for them in our public life."

But, he continued, "we must take care not to burn down the barn to kill the rats." He assailed communism as "the death of the soul," but warned that freedom of thought is being menaced by over-zealous patriots.

CIO Officers, PAC Chief Meet With Gov. Stevenson

GOV. STEVENSON, Democratic presidential nominee, "officially" was told last week that CIO is supporting him in the 1952 campaign.

He was visited at his temporary New York headquarters by a delegation of CIO leaders, who officially notified him of the endorsement, voted Aug. 14 by the CIO Executive Board.

Jack Kroll, CIO-PAC director, led the delegation which included: David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the Steelworkers and of PAC; James B. Carey, president of the IUE-CIO and CIO's secretary-treasurer; Emil Rieve, president, Textile Workers; Joseph Curran, president, Maritime Union; Jacob Potofsky, president and Frank Rosenblum, secretary-treasurer, Clothing Workers; O. A. Knight, president, Oil Workers; L. S. Buckmaster, president, Rubber Workers; C. J. Werkau, secretary-treasurer, Communications Workers; and Henry C. Fleisher, CIO publicity director.

The delegation spent a half-hour with the Illinois Governor. Later Kroll told newsmen they had officially presented to Stevenson the CIO's statement of support of the Democratic platform and the national nominees.

"We had a very pleasant conference," Kroll told the reporters, "and we feel sure we'll be able to convey to our people Gov. Stevenson's liberal views and recommend their voting for him and Sparkman and a liberal Congress."

'Reverse The Trend, Boost Registration,' Says Adlai

THE FREEDOM under which American workers have gained their advances can be retained only if we safeguard our liberties by exercising the right to vote, Gov. Adlai Stevenson, Democratic candidate for President, said in a Labor Day message.

In commenting on the increasing proportion of the population which fails to vote, he said:

"It is the duty of all of us to reverse that trend. We need to make this a government of all the people or it will become a government by the people who take the trouble to vote. We should make a special effort this year when the issues touch the lives of every American and the results will shape the world in which we live for years to come."

American workers should not be satisfied with celebrating their gains on Labor Day, said President Truman in his statement, but should use the occasion "to look ahead, to plan where we are going, to consider the things we can accomplish in the future."

Among the things the country must do, he said, are to improve social security, build more homes and schools, better the collective bargaining process, end discrimination, fight inflation, safeguard our freedom against attacks from right and left, and build up strong defenses.

Courage When It Counts

Twice last week Adlai Stevenson demonstrated that, as UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther has said, he is "the most independent candidate" to ever seek the Presidency.

First he met with Gov. Allan Shivers of Texas and told him, pointblank, that he accepts the Supreme Court's decision that the U. S. has "paramount rights" in the tidelands and that he opposes any "blanket cession" of the oil-lands to the states. Stevenson's forthright stand—which promptly brought cries of "revolt" by Texas Dixiecrats long cozy with the big oil companies—contrasts with the various, contradictory remarks of Gen. Eisenhower on the tidelands issue.

Later in the week, in his address to the American Legion—the old stamping grounds of the McCarthyites—Gov. Stevenson skipped the political pablum in his condemnation of those "men among us who use 'patriotism' as a club for attacking other Americans."

True patriotism, the Democratic presidential candidate reminded the Legion, is "love of this Republic, not hatred of Russia."

To which we add, Amen.

Marriage Of Convenience

Bertie McCormick probably won't get very far with his latest bitter-end cry for an "American Party" (Americans by his definition being few apart from those living within sight of Chicago's Tribune Tower) but the Dixiegop alliance is becoming more complete every passing day.

Take the situation in Virginia, where Sen. Byrd—who boasts he's never voted for a New Deal measure—is on McCormick's favored list.

The Virginia Republican party has confirmed its role of end man to the Dixiecrats. Officially, it decided last week not to enter a candidate against Byrd—whose latest anti-labor move was to sponsor in the Senate the demand for a Taft-Hartley injunction against the CIO Steelworkers during the recent strike. And the Virginia GOP won't oppose Rep. Smith, who sponsored the same move in the House.

In Texas, the Republican party put 15 Dixiecrat candidates, including Gov. Shivers, on the GOP ballot because "politically we belong together."

All of which shoots full of holes the theory, voiced frequently, that the GOP is going to bring a second party to the South.

Learning From Abroad

Twenty-five CIO members from all over the nation left last week on a three-week flying trip to Scandinavia. It's a "life-seeing" journey in which they'll meet and live with the people of Denmark and other nations.

Unions in this country and Scandinavia arranged the trip, the first for American rank-and-file unionists overseas. Just as many European unions have gained from visits to the U. S., so will CIO be strengthened in the local unions and councils by the "life-seeing" journey to Scandinavia.

ILO Aids American Labor

By Labor Press Association

THE 33RD LABOR DAY since the founding of the Intl. Labor Organization finds that specified agency of the United Nations in the strongest position of its history. The workers, employers and governments of 66 nations are now represented in its conferences.

Its assignment to work for lasting peace through social justice for the world's workers is being carried out by experts from more than 50 countries around the world.

Born in 1919 after the first war against German aggression, the ILO has aimed its efforts at improving the working conditions of less fortunate countries—with results of direct advantage to American workers.

For instance, the hard lot of American seamen has been improved by international labor legislation, adopted by the ILO and ratified by the U. S. Congress. Of more than 100 ILO conventions (treaties), many of the most successful protect the conditions of seafarers.

In other industries, even if American workers are not covered by the ILO's regulations, the employes of foreign industries competing with American factories have benefited. The result is to lessen the use of sweated foreign labor to depress union gains in the United States.

The ILO was founded to give the voice of labor an international forum in which it could express itself. Today it remains the only organization supported by governments in which labor has the right to speak and vote without being bound by governmental instructions.

This worker-employer-government system sometimes gives the ILO's meetings the look of a collective bargaining session, but the accomplishments that result are proof that labor's ideals are not being watered down. The member countries to date have deposited more than 1300 ratifications of ILO treaties.

Among its accomplishments, in addition to the creation of an international code of fair labor standards, are these:

1. Research and information. ILO research into safety devices has saved lives aboard ships and in factories.

2. Advice to governments. The ILO was consulted when Pres. Roosevelt drafted this country's first Social Security Act in 1934.

3. Investigation and conciliation. Tension in the Suez Canal Zone was lessened when an impartial ILO mission produced a report that was accepted by both the British and the Egyptians.

4. Technical assistance. The ILO participates in the United Nations program of technical aid to underdeveloped countries, sending out experts, when requested to help governments in matters of manpower and economic and social affairs.

Although the ILO has been accused by certain employers of seeking to "socialize" the world, the record shows it is battling constantly to protect unions from government domination or interference. For instance, at this year's general conference at Geneva, the delegates issued a declaration of trade union independence even from those governments in which labor officially participates.

In many countries abroad, trade unions have traditionally been in politics. They have formed their own parties and sometimes they have supported Marxist economic theories. In some places, of course, unions have been hitched to the wagons of totalitarian governments.

The ILO resolution on the independence of the trade union movement found the leaders of free European trade unions for the first time universally in agreement with American unionists as to the proper role of the labor movement in politics.

The resolution warned unions to maintain their freedom so as to be unaffected by a country's political changes. It warned trade unions not to compromise their existence and their proper functions through political alliances. Finally, it warned governments not to try to change unions into political instruments.

This resolution is an important bulwark to treaties on freedom of association and trade union rights adopted at previous ILO conferences.

Consequently, America's Labor Day finds the Intl. Labor Organization a pipeline of American labor's ideals and energy to brothers in other lands. Better understanding of its program is attracting ever-increasing support so that it may become a stronger influence in the United States and Canada as well as in the world at large.

Behind The Headlines—

Check The Press—And Beware The Big Lies

By IRVING FAGAN

For Labor Press Associated

VETERAN unionists know the score, but the younger ones may still be taken in by what they read in the daily papers. It's bad enough day in and day out, but during this 1952 campaign, which means so much to labor, it will be worse.

You owe it to yourself to look at these stories in the daily press with a fishy eye.

Here's a sample of how it is done. Sen. Morse in a radio interview advised the GOP to junk its program because it was McKinley style.

The New York Times reported Morse "took exception to the foreign policy, civil rights and labor planks in the platform." But the United Press said "Mr. Morse singled out for particular criticism the platform planks on foreign policy and civil rights."

Notice, nothing about Morse's objections to the labor plank. As a matter of fact, Morse said, "the labor plank is inexcusable," and went on to tell why.

Remember all the statistics on how long it would take the nation to recover from the steel strike, and the stories so pointed as to give you the idea that the workers were traitors to have gone out at all?

The other day the N. Y. Times had a story headlined "Recovery Staged By Steel Mills Is Held Beyond 'All Expectations!" In one week the industry's rate of output had jumped from 45% of normal to 85%. A week later it was up to 95.4%.

What had really happened was that the steel industry had cleared out its plentiful supply during the strike, was getting back in high gear right away, and was producing like mad—for the higher prices gouged from the government as the price of peace.

The Wall Street Journal had a story about rapid tax amortization, the racket by which Uncle Sam lets big corporations write off depreciation in a hurry on new plant and equipment. They save on taxes and get the buildings, you get the bills. The Wall Street Journal's headline said "DPA Tally Shows Approval of 51.5% of Bids Filed."

That was to give you the idea that Uncle Sam was being very careful of how he handed out tax favors, because almost half were turned down. But if you examined the story itself, you discovered that the total turned down came only to $3.9 billion, while the total approved came to $31.2 billion.

And now Gen. Eisenhower is flinging around "socialism." Socialism is a horrid word. Call something socialism and people will decide it's bad. That's the strategy of business, and the strategy of the Republicans in 1952, and the strategy of the press.

That's the way propaganda works. You want to discredit something, so you tag it with a bad word—socialism, paternalism, regimentation, bureaucracy.

Or, you use the technique Hitler exploited so well—the Big Lie, and pound and pound at it, until it has been said so often people begin to believe it. That's the GOP line for the 1952 campaign.

The propaganda barrage is getting heavier and heavier. Now is the time to determine not to fall for it, not to be a sucker.

It's Time To Rap Knuckles Of Business Fixers, Bribe-Givers

CORRUPTION in government is not peculiar to politics. It is symptomatic of our times and is much more general and serious.

It is a breakdown in moral ethics and integrity which extends to business, the professions, and even the general public.

Those are the conclusions of a famed sociologist, Marshall B. Clinard.

Clinard, who is professor of sociology at the Univ. of Wisconsin, believes the public needs some perspective as it studies reports of corruption in government.

"Political corruption, crime, immorality, athletic scandals, the current disorders of our society, cannot be diagnosed as independent, isolated phenomena," he wrote in the New York Sunday Times Magazine.

"All are common consequences of a general social disruption in the ways we live and work and think together as human beings."

CORRUPTION in government is no innovation, he notes, recalling the scandals of the Grand administration, the railroad "Robber Barons" and Teapot Dome.

"It is not easy to draw a sound conclusion that government dishonesty is vastly worse today," he adds.

Noting that the U. S. is now an urbanized, industrialized nation of 150 million, as compared to 40 million in Grant's time, Clinard observes there are now two million federal employes as compared to 56,000 in Grant's day.

"It is well to keep in mind," he cautions, "that more people are handling larger public funds than ever before in our history. While the disclosures in Washington have shocked the country, the possibility remains that the actual rate of corruption in public service might not have increased nearly as much as people believe."

Clinard labels as "false" the assumption that corruption can be eliminated by ousting the incumbents. The problem, he says, is much more complicated.

Equally guilty, in his eyes, are the bribe givers, and he notes:

"Government officials operate in a situation where bribes and favors are offered, and where politicians, including Congressmen, exert influence for special interests. Influence is applied to federal employes by business men through many of the manufacturers' representatives, the public relations, or 'Washington relations', men, the 2500 registered lobbyists, the expediters, the Five Percenters, the 'fixers,' or the 'fellow who knows his way around'."

"While our citizens are likely to complain ardently about corruption in the Federal Government, they often permit such behavior to continue as a matter of course in their own back yards."

The blame, in his opinion, results from a "selective disobedience of law"—a school of thought which allows business men to believe "that laws regulating the conduct of banking, pure foods, securities, taxes, labor practices, restraint of trade, misrepresentation of advertising, bribery and price and rationing controls are not nearly as binding on the individual as laws prohibiting burglary, robbery and other such laws in our society."

GOP Shells Out For TV Time

THE PUBLIC got a quick look last week at the Republican party's budget for the 1952 presidential campaign—and it is still gasping.

GOP Publicity Director Robert Humphreys admitted the Republicans would spend between $1.8 million and $2 million on just network television and radio time for General Eisenhower and Sen. Nixon.

This does NOT include radio and TV time for House or Senate candidates nor does it include radio and TV time to be bought by state or local groups.

Big Papers Begin 'Snow Job' To Smooth The Way For Ike

THE NATION'S press last week began a "snow job" on Mr. and Mrs. John Q. Voter, trying to delude Fair Deal supporters into taking it easy before election day.

Back in '48, the big press went far out on a limb—"the election is in the bag for Dewey," it said then. Before voting day, Dewey was described as "the next President of the U.S."

Now the press is going out on another limb, moaning copiously that Gen. Eisenhower is "fumbling the campaign" since he won the GOP nomination at the bitter Chicago convention. And it is all apparently with a purpose: To prevent Fair Deal supporters and backers of Gov. Stevenson from "running scared" and waging a vigorous campaign, which is just what the GOP plans to do.

Last week—after Ike voiced some sharp criticism of Sen. McCarthy, but said he would back the Wisconsin Senator if he's renominated—there were these developments:

Roy Howard of the Scripps-Howard chain was vitriolic because Ike refused to turn his back on Gen. Marshall, who is a "traitor" to the McCarthyites and the China Lobby (of which S-H papers are a part). The S-H papers jibed "Ike is running like a dry creek."

The Associated Press — whose political reports are in tune with the views of big publishers who run the outfit—came out with a lengthy report to the effect that "GOP drive lags . . . is not doing well."

Bertie McCormick — of the Chicago Tribune, New York News, Washington Times-Herald axis—took a walk on Ike and proposed formation of "The American Party." (Gerald L. K. Smith already has a "party" with a name like that; he's backing MacArthur.)

And David Lawrence—columnist and U. S. News publisher, who gets apoplexy of the typewriter faster than you can say "political action" — opined that "the defeat of Eisenhower is a strong possibility" with many Taft Republicans sitting on their hands. —W.M.

This Is A Big Labor Day For Steelworke

Things Are Better Since The Strike

BY GERVASE N. LOVE

TODAY—Labor Day, 1952—is a big day in the life of the American steel worker. He never spent another holiday like it, but there are a lot like it in his future.

If he is staying at home and taking the wife and kids to the union picnic, he knows that come pay day his envelope won't be that much lighter because he wasn't on the job.

If he is working—as he probably is—he's no doubt purring contentedly. Come pay day, his envelope will be heavier. There'll be an extra day's pay in it.

The answer, of course, is the new contract the CIO Steelworkers wrested from the steel industry after an eight-week strike—the costliest package the industry ever yielded to the people who work in it.

Last year, if the steel worker stayed home on Labor Day, he wasn't paid for it. If he worked, he was paid at the same old rate he got every other working day.

This year things are different, thanks to that contract. Labor day is one of six paid holidays it provides—for the first time. The formula is the usual one: straight time pay for not working, double time pay for working.

If the average steel worker chose to stay home on Labor Day and contemplate the blessings the new contract has brought him, he had plenty of food for thought. The chances are he would come to the same conclusion that Philip Murray, president of the Steelworkers and the CIO, reached:

"The agreement as a whole is without doubt the best ever negotiated in the history of the union."

The paid holidays are only one of the many items that make the contract as good as it is—and not the most important.

Take wages, for instance.

If the steel worker who spends a little time on Labor Day mulling things over is a veteran of the industry, maybe he can remember back when there was no CIO United Steelworkers of America, nor even a Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

In 1936, just before the CIO sent its organizers into the industry that was the citadel of the depression, the mills, were paying common labor 47c an hour. And they made the common labor classification broad enough to cover a wide range of actual jobs.

Average earnings were but 66c an hour—$26.40 for the 40-hour week that had been decreed by the Blue Eagle.

A few years ago, under a job study set up in an earlier contract between the USA-CIO and the industry, workers were slotted into 32 job classifications determined by scientific standard rather than by a foreman's whim.

Under the new contract, the average increase is 16c an hour retroactive to March 1. The lowest rate becomes $1.435. And it isn't paid to common labor—which gets more—but to janitors and sweep-up men. That's an increase of 96.5c in the lifetime of the steel union.

The average hourly earning left that 66c behind many years ago. Under the new agreement, the figure becomes about $2.40 an hour.

Since the end of World War II the Steelworkers have received an average increase of 68c an hour in wages alone—exclusive of pension and social insurance and all the many fringe benefits that have made each contract more impressive than its predecessor.

But that isn't all. Besides the straight wage increases, each Steelworker gets an average of 5.5c an hour in the so-called fringe benefits under the new agreement.

That's where the paid holidays come from. Also an increase in shift premiums from 4c to 6c an hour on the second shift and from 6c to 9c on the third. And likewise an improved vacation clause which provides for three weeks' holiday after 15 years of service, instead of the previous 25 years.

Even that isn't all. If the Steelworker who spends Labor Day pondering on his lot lives in the South, or works in the iron ore mines, he is still better off under the new contract.

If he works in the South, he has been under a geographical wage differential for so long as there has been a steel industry below the Mason-Dixon Line.

When the steel union first appeared on the scene, the worker in Birmingham, for instance, had a job rate 17.5c an hour less than a man doing the same type of work in Pittsburgh, Bethlehem or Gary.

Over the years the differential was gradually whittled down. On Labor Day 1951 it was 10c. On Labor Day 1952, under the new contract, it is 5c—cut in half.

That's a total of 26.5c an hour. It goes to southern iron ore miners, too. Unlike their brothers in Michigan and Minnesota, they have enjoyed wage parity with the mill workers for the last few years.

The settlement, however, took ample care of the Michigan and Minnesota miners. It was a tough agreement to get out of the steel producers who own the mines—so tough that they held out for two days after agreeing to the basic steel settlement and thus delayed the reopening of their mills by that much.

They had grown so accustomed to paying the miners less than they paid for similar work in the mills that union negotiators had a hard time breaking them down. But they finally agreed to eliminate the long standing differential in two steps—half of it effective at the end of the strike, the other half effective July 1, 1953.

This means that by July 1 of next yea the miners in Michigan's Peninsula a on the iron ranges of Minnesota will enjoying total boosts of 28.5c to 63c a hour!

For example: Under the old agreeme a contract miner was paid $1.52 an hou He got an increase of 50c, making present rate $2.02, and next July 1 wi go up another 13c to $2.15. And a mot man, with an old rate of $1.39, jumped 4 to $1.84 and will get 9c more next July for a new rate of $1.93, a total of 54c.

In the iron ore mines in New York a Pennsylvania, the producers agreed similar increases, with variations due longstanding local conditions that may p the highest boost above the Michiga Minnesota 63c when all details are iron out.

No wonder Murray could say recentl

"Out of the agreement I am satisfi that, so far as the basic industry goe we have kept pace with the times a we have taken advantage of such oppo tunities as may have presented themselv to us to improve the lot of the peop whom we are privileged to represent."

At another time he said:

"Naturally all Steelworkers are pro of the tremendous victory they won f themselves in the face of heavy oppositio But they also should take pride in t fight they made to win equality for t thousands of second class citizens worki under unfair differentials."

And at still another:

"Six hundred and fifteen thousand me bers of our organization get average i creases of 21.5c an hour, including wage vacations, holidays and shift differentia Another 140,000 more will get 26.5c to 6 an hour."

The story of wage increases alone see to go on and on.

In the fabricating subsidiaries of t basic steel corporations the workers a

Picket Shanties For Sale Cheap

Any local union that has a strike in prospect or on its hands can get a bargain in "equipment" from Local 1104 of the CIO Steelworkers, members of which are employed at the Lorain, O., plant of Inland Steel.

The local, according to Labor Press Associated, is seeking a buyer for three picket shanties and five sturdy benches which were used, with considerable success, during the recent steel strike.

ver The Hump t Big Steel

The CIO Steelworkers got over the last ajor hump on Aug. 23 when agreement a new final contract was reached with S. Steel.

The 170,000 USA-CIO members who rk for Big Steel had been on the job a month under the interim settlement at ended the nationwide strike. As with er corporations, the union had to bar- in out with U. S. Steel complex issues e managerial rights and local working nditions after the return to work.

A few days later, the union and the mpany signed another agreement giving ,000 white collar workers pay increases nging from $24 to $66 a month. Cover- g salaried workers at all U. S. plants ex- pt Tennessee Coal & Iron, the pact runs til June 30, 1954, with a wage reopen- g on next June 30.

tting not only the 16c average increase rates, but job rate differentials up to an hour are wiped out. Where the dif- rentials are more than that amount, an- her one or two pennies can be negotiated cut them further.

Limestone mines and cement plant em- oyes in basic steel subsidiaries also get t only the 16c average pay boost, but ch wage differentials as exist are being ped out or cut down in negotiations still nder way.

The Steelworker who is thinking, on abor Day 1952, of his past and his pres- t realizes that his future as a worker made more secure by the new contract. hy? Because his union has tremendously eater security than it had a year ago.

On Labor Day, 1951, as on many Labor ays before, the Steelworkers as a union had only the security that their strength gave them. Being the union it is, that strength was great. But is was not great enough, in a traditionally reactionary industrial stronghold, to give complete protection against all avenues of attack.

True, the union would have preferred the straight union shop to the modified form it won. Even that was achieved despite the anguished bawling of some producers about the inherent right of the non-union man to ride to a better life on the coat-tails of the dues-payers and the folks on the picket lines.

The union already is the collective bargaining representative of about 94% of the workers in the basic steel industry. The contract provides that these must continue as members of the union during the life of the agreement—two years.

New employes are to sign union membership applications at the time they apply for jobs. During the second 15 days of employment, they can exercise the option of not joining by so stating in writing to the company, which under the agreement sends a copy to the union.

Present employes who are not union members are under no compulsion to join. But—

"I am confident in my own mind," Murray said, "that even under the modified system of union shop which is written into the contract, that two years' experience under the present agreement will result in everybody getting into the union.

"I think that we have developed a state of mind, I should say, among the members that makes them believe it is more essential for everybody to carry his share of the load than they have ever thought before.

"Hence, in all probability all of the people employed in the industry during the next two years may become members of the organization . . ."

He described the contract as "a major victory for our organization."

HIS IS IT—On July 24, Pres. Truman announces strike settlement agreement reached by Murray (left) and Pres. Ben Fairless of U. S. Steel Corp.

It was a victory won not only at the price of the strike, but of many long hours of bargaining at which management efforts to undercut the basic contract were beaten back by the grimmest kind of negotiating.

It was also a fight against a relentless barrage of propaganda by the industry—the most expensive in the history of labor relations, with full page ads appearing frequently in scores of daily newspapers. Never, the employers proclaimed, would they yield on the union shop.

Peace could have been restored to the industry—in turmoil since Nov. 15, 1951—much earlier had management taken a reasonable approach to union security and not insisted on weakening the contract in some other respects.

One of its proposed gimmicks was a management rights clause. Its insistence on this innocuous-appearing but ruinous provision was an important factor in the corporations' prolonging of the walkout. In rejecting an offer of 13.3c an hour without union security, the union's Intl. Wage Policy Committee, at a meeting in Pittsburgh on June 13, had this to say:

"What the industry is hoping to do, under the slogan of 'management rights,' is to seize from the workers' pay envelopes far more than the inadequate pay increases they have reluctantly offered."

The settlement climaxed a remarkable demonstration of concern for the country's welfare by the Steelworkers and an equally remarkable demonstration of indifference to it by the industry.

The major contracts expired last Dec. 31. At the union's request, negotiations began on Nov. 27. They came to nothing. From the beginning, management was determined to take from its workers, not give. And it was equally determined to drop the dispute into the lap of the old Wage Stabilization Board.

On Jan. 10 hearings opened before the WSB. With rebuttals, they continued to Feb. 16. On Feb. 21 the USA-CIO executive board and Wage Policy Committee met and set a new strike deadline of Mar. 23, to give the WSB time to study the case and make its recommendations.

The WSB announced its recommendations late the evening of Mar. 20. The union executive board accepted them at a midnight meeting in Washington. Two hours later the Wage Policy Committee did likewise. Industry said nothing at first, later said 'no.'

Negotiations on the basis of the WSB proposals opened Mar. 26. By the end of the first week in April it became apparent that the corporations were not bargaining in good faith.

So President Truman seized the industry on Apl. 8. On Apl. 29 Judge David A. Pine in Federal Court in Washington ruled he had exceeded his powers, and gave the plants back to their owners.

USA-CIO members then, and only then, went out on strike. But they quickly returned—on May 3—when the President again asked for continued production and called union and industry negotiators to meet at the White House. These sessions, like those that had preceded, produced nothing but more evidence of the industry's determination to bring its employes to their knees and of its indifference to the needs of the country.

On June 2, the U. S. Supreme Court upheld Judge Pine's ruling. The Steelworkers promptly walked off the job and stayed out until they—and not the employers—got what they wanted. An interim agreement was reached on July 24 after another series of meetings at the White House.

Members of the Steelworkers have the satisfaction of knowing that the fight they made on their own behalf produced benefits for thousands of employes in industries outside basic steel and its immediate subsidiaries.

Several hundred thousand USA-CIO members who work in steel fabricating plants not owned by the basic producers are getting or will get the same benefits the strikers won. Their wages, working conditions and other benefits are traditionally tied to those of the basic industry. A settlement with the larger producers historically yields the same contract improvements for them.

The steel settlement also was an intangible factor in negotiations between the USA-CIO and the aluminum industry.

Bargaining on behalf of about 30,000 employes of the Aluminum Corp. of America, Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. and the Reynolds Metal Corp. yielded average packages of at least 24c an hour.

Alcoa agreed to the basic steel type of union security and also to a joint job study and reclassification program to be completed by July 1, 1953. Reynolds previously had agreed to the union shop in states where it is permitted; in the other states, it has now agreed to give the union the fullest protection it can under the law. Kaiser has had the straight union shop for some years.

Tax Refund Boosts Steel's Net

Them as has gits: U. S. Steel, because of the CIO Steelworkers' strike, didn't earn anything in the second quarter (April, May and June) of 1952, but it made a profit anyway.

The company's quarterly report showed an operating loss of $20.8 million for the period. But it also showed a tax credit of $43 million which wiped out the loss and created net earnings equal to 61c a share of common stock. The tax refund came from a first quarter payment based on an estimated income which was not sustained during the second quarter.

Gas, Coke Elects New President In Close Race

By FRED ROSS

POLITICS — intra-union and national — occupied the center of the stage during the four days of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers' convention at Chicago.

A heated contest between slates headed by GC&CW Pres. Martin Wagner and Sec.-Treas. Cecil Martin had been raging for some time, and came to a climax on Aug. 23, the final day of the convention.

When the nick-and-tuck balloting was completed, Elwood Swisher, Boomer, Va. — running on Martin's slate—defeated Wagner, who had been president of the union for 10 years, by a vote of 414.6 to 410.4.

Incumbent Sec.-Treas. Joseph R. Joy, backed by Wagner, defeated the Martin candidate, Stephen G. McMullen, 439 to 383. Martin himself won re-election quite handily over the Wagner-supported candidate, Sam Angelocci, by a vote of 504 to 295.

Principal issues in the contest were increasing the per capita tax to the international from $1 to $1.25 a month, the amount of money authorized by the executive board for organizing and union efficiency.

Wagner said that the union treasury was low because the executive board authorized a disproportion share of the income for organizing. He strongly urged increasing the per capita tax to $1.25.

Martin opposed boosting the per capita because the locals had not been advised the convention would act on the issue. He also differed with Wagner on the amount of money being spent for organizing, and declared that the reason for small amount in the treasury was due to "lack of efficiency" in servicing unions.

The convention resolved the per capita issue by sending the $1.25 proposal to referendum. Each local will receive ballots for bona fide members and will decide how it wants to conduct the referendum.

The day before the balloting, CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood in a speech said that he favored Wagner and Joy. After the election both Haywood and Wagner said they were content with the results and urged closing the ranks in the interest of building the union.

The some 600 delegates adopted a resolution calling for harmony back of the winning candidates and for building GC&CW, now 71,000 strong.

Intra-union politics were not the only politics that held the attention of the convention—the delegates were reminded of their stake in the national elections and they took steps to implement their desires.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey gave a plank-by-plank analysis of the Democratic and the Republican platforms, showing that while the former favored the CIO program, the latter rejected CIO's proposals.

Carey, who is also president of the CIO Electrical Workers, said "union men are not interested in political jobs. But I believe they should be interested in the jobs they've got and in the jobs they want . . .

"The policies enacted on the floor of Congress have their impact on employment, and so it seems quite simple to me that any worker interested in keeping his present job, or getting a better one, should do his utmost to make sure that national employment policies and other legislation will be such as to insure his continued employment and his continued income that will enable him to maintain the highest possible standard of living for himself and his family.

"And so when our critics accuse you of getting into politics as a job-getting proposition, don't deny it. Tell them that is why you are interested in politics."

Haywood also emphasized the need for labor to take a greater role in politics. He ridiculed the middle-of-the-road stand of Gen. Eisenhower, GOP presidential candidate, likening it to the positions of ex-Pres. Coolidge and Hoover.

"The farmers lost their farms and the workers lost their jobs and savings under Hoover's middle-of-the-road policy," Haywood said.

The CIO executive vice president declared "if Stevenson were aspiring to be a general in Korea, I'd oppose him—just like I'm opposing a military man in the presidency.

"Under the Weimar Republic in Germany, a military man—Von Hindenburg—was elected president and he allowed Hitler to take over. Why should a military man have a dominant position in government? When a general becomes president, your civil liberties are gone."

Greater PAC activity also was advocated by rank-and-file delegates and a number of speakers including Wagner; Phillip Weightman and Darrell Smith, PAC representatives.

The convention acted constructively, despite the heated intra-union contest, when it decided to:

- Press forward to organize "the most rapidly growing" chemical and allied industry after Wagner pointed out in his report to the convention that "great segments" of the 300,000 workers employed in the nation's industrial chemical plants are unorganized. (Martin's report said that GC&CW gained 18,148 members in the past two years.)
- Create a District 12 covering Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas by carving it out of southern District 9.
- Authorize the executive board—in the light of the income—to increase the salaries of the officers and employes, provided that the salary of the president could not be increased to more than $8500 a year. The president's salary now is $6180 a year.
- Send $1000 from the strike fund to each of three striking locals at the Acme paint plant of the Sherwin-Williams Chemical Corp. at Detroit, the Universal Atlas Cement plant at Fairborn, O., and the American Cyanide and Chemical Corp. plant, Joliet. Ill.

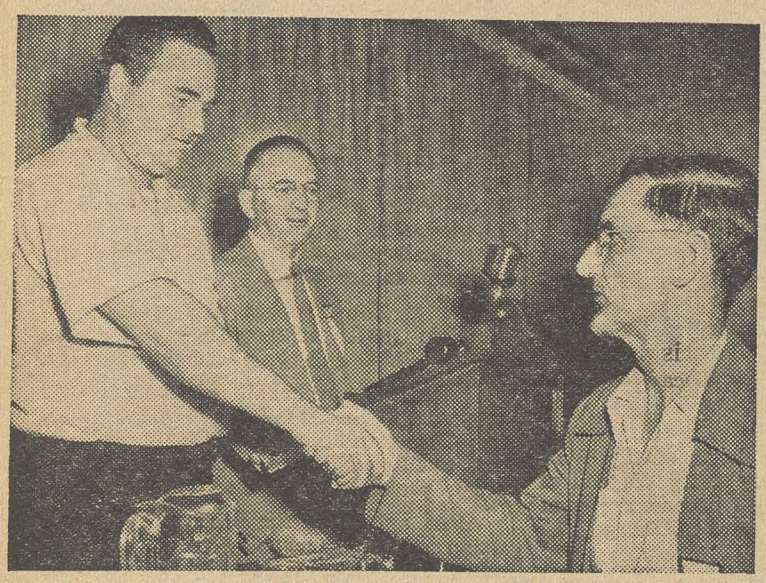
The flag was the gift of the district, which presented it because that country's flag was lacking at the previous convention of the union.

So The Cubs Lost Customers

The Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers' convention had barely started one morning when a motion was made that an afternoon session be eliminated so that the delegates could attend a National League baseball game.

GC&CW Pres. Martin Wagner observed that the way things were going the delegates would be "lucky" if the convention business were concluded the day after the convention was scheduled to end.

The motion was seconded, went to a vote—and was snowed under by a lusty volume of "noes."



HELP THAT COUNTS—Pres. Chester Berry of GC&CW Local, 496 Detroit (left), shakes hands with Pres. Jack Sarge of Local 268, Chicago, after the latter gave him a check for $5000. Both locals represent workers at Sherwin-Williams plants. The Detroit plant has been struck for three months.

'PAC Means Going Ahead,' Millwright Tells Parley

PAC MEANS "going forward" to John Bunzer of Niagara Falls, N. Y., a delegate to the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers' convention.

When a resolution calling for stepping up the GC&CW political action program was introduced, Bunzer, who has been a millwright at the Carborundum Co. for 15 years, said:

"This is one of the most important resolutions to come before this convention and this is one of the most important elections since 1932.

"Are we going to turn to the left or go forward? If we don't go forward, we'll lose everything we have gained in the past 20 years.

JOHN BUNZER

"You must register. It's all right to pass resolutions, but resolutions don't mean a thing if you don't vote. And you got to be registered to vote.

"If I had anything to do with it, registration would be compulsory. A man who works for a living should register, because his bread and butter are involved."

The millwright declared workers should vote for the man who represents them best, independent of party. He said voting Republican simply because your father voted Republican was "not American."

Bunzer was not the only delegate who spoke emphatically for the resolution which was passed unanimously.

"Most of us—rich and poor—want security," said Sam Angelocci, a staff member of CG&CW District 7 with headquarters in Chicago. The rich, he added, get security through insurance, but the "poor man has PAC to give him the things he has to have."

Anthony Kaiser, Detroit, urged delegates to run for precinct delegates in their parties to have a voice in determining who represents them at the national conventions.

For Joe Richter, St. Louis, it's politics from "the time we get up in the morning until we go to bed at night."

GET PAC FACTS—A group of delegates to Gas, Coke convention read The CIO News Voting Record to learn how their congressmen voted. Note the isolationist, reactionary Chicago Tribune tossed in the waste basket.

Nixon Calls T-H 'Progressive'—Here's How It Harms Workers

The Taft-Hartley Act is "like all progressive legislation"—Sen. Nixon, Republican candidate for vice president and a T-H Act author, said in Boston.

SIXTEEN long months ago, eight employes of the jewelry store of Busch & Sons, Newark, N. J., went on strike to win, among other things, recognition of Local 108, CIO Retail Union of New Jersey, as their bargaining representative.

The company promptly hired scabs to replace them. But the strikers, undaunted, have maintained their picket line ever since, in good weather and bad, in the blistering heat of summer and the biting cold of the damp North Jersey winter.

Now they have the bad news. In spite of the fact that they went on a perfectly legitimate strike and that they have been picketing constantly, they cannot vote in the forthcoming National Labor Relations Board election on the choice of a bargaining agent.

The scabs who took their jobs can vote.

That's what the NLRB just ruled. But the fault isn't that of the board.

It's the Taft-Hartley Act—again.

THE NLRB ruled that under T-H, "we find that the replacements were hired as permanent employes, that they are eligible to vote, and that the strikers, whom they replaced, not being eligible to reinstatement, are not eligible to vote."

So last week a group of CIO and AFL leaders headed by Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council joined the eight strikers on the picket line in a dramatic demonstration of just how the Taft-Hartley Act can break a strike, steal the jobs of union members and, in some cases, bust up a union.

With the strikers and Holderman were Pres. Joseph Bruder of the Newark AFL Teachers Union; representatives of the AFL Ladies Garment Workers; Pres. Hugh Caldwell and Exec. Sec. Joel R. Jacobson of the Essex-West Hudson CIO Council; CIO Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner; District Pres. Milton Weinrauch of the CIO Electrical Workers; State CIO Sec.-Treas. Victor D. Leonardis, and Harry Kranz, State CIO legislative director.

"Developments in the Busch strike," said Holderman, "highlight the most lethal direct blow struck at unions by the Taft-Hartey Act.

"This is the spelled-out right of the employers to fire any workers who strike for higher wages or better conditions and to replace them with scabs.

"Under Taft-Hartley, loyal workers who have built up an interest and right in their jobs over a period of years are treated like scabs. And scabs are treated like loyal workers."

Book Review—

'Odds Are Up To You,' New CIO Pamphlet Says

THE CIO is enlisted in a world-wide war against poverty, disease, hunger and illiteracy through its support of programs of the United States and the United Nations for a better world, and through its membership in the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

How individual members and unions can help in this vast global fight is told in a new illustrated pamphlet, "The Odds Are Up To You," just issued by the National CIO Dept. of Education and Research.

The booklet answers the question "What's all this got to do with me?" by explaining the tie-up between the things an American worker hopes to have—security, a decent standard of living, and a good life for his children—and what happens to the people in the rest of the world.

Today this picture is black indeed. In India, 25% of all babies die before they are a year old. Every year millions of people die of tuberculosis, leprosy, typhus, cholera and other diseases. In China alone a million people starve to death every year.

More than half the people in the world can neither read nor write. Compared to the illiteracy rate of 3% in the U. S., in India it is 91%; in Turkey 79%; in Korea, 69%.

"Through reading, people can learn about ways to improve their health, their crops and their standard of living," says the CIO pamphlet. "Thus illiteracy is a part of the vicious circle of hunger, disease and poverty."

One simple way the pamphlet suggests for promoting "mutual understanding" between U. S. workers and those in other countries is to give foreign workers who visit this country "a chance to get to know you. Thousands of visitors from other countries are coming to the U. S. yearly under various government programs. Many of these are trade union workers.

"Invite a trade unionist from another country to visit your union, your town," the booklet suggests. "Give a worker who doesn't know what U. S. workers are really like a chance to get to know you. Ask him to stay in the home of one of your union members, don't put him in a hotel."

Copies of the booklet may be ordered from the CIO Dept. of Research and Education, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C. Prices, 15c each; 12 for $1; 100 for $7.50; 1000 for $65.

High Toll Of Poor Medical Care Told By CIO Aide

NORTH CAROLINA is a prosperous, growing state, but because of poor wages, "only two people in a family of four can afford to get sick in a year—the other two just have to die, and there is not even enough money to bury them."

That's what Franz E. Daniel, state CIO director, said last week. He testified at a regional hearing in Raleigh, N. C., of the President's Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation.

The "grass roots" hearing heard representatives of labor, farm, consumer, educational, medical and health groups in six Southeastern states.

Daniel said health care in North Carolina is "substandard"—averaging $10.33 a year per person for doctors' services—because of low wages. He pointed out wood and textile workers "barely make half the hourly wage needed to support the BLS minimum budget allowances."

Daniel said members of the CIO Textile Workers have "a little better protection" against the hazards of illness, because of hospitalization and medical care provisions under union contracts.

But he emphasized that such plans are inadequate, paying only "about 35% to 40% of medical expenses and not providing coverage for dependents.

"The plain and simple fact," Daniel said, "is just this: working people in North Carolina, as in the nation, cannot afford the burden of medical expenses within the wage scale they are paid.

"The further fact is that, failing to get proper care, the health of the people of this state is substandard.

"Inevitably, the result of prohibitively expensive medical care and hospitalization is either death or bankruptcy, and, even worse, a lowered standard of public health with all its penalties in terms of lowered human efficiency and heightened human misery.

"The question we in CIO are concerned with is this: How long must this state waste its most vital resource — its people — through the attrition of chronically poor health?"

IUE Rejects Pay Offer By Westinghouse

SHORTLY after its victory over the Communist-dominated UE at the East Pittsburgh plant of Westinghouse Electric Corp., the CIO Electrical Workers last week was offered wage increases by the firm.

IUE Pres. James B. Carey and Robert Nellis, chairman of the union's Westinghouse Conference Board, immediately called the proposal inadequate. Carey also is CIO secretary-treasurer.

They said that the offer of 7.5c to 13c an hour wage increase "approximately covers only two of the economic proposals which IUE-CIO has made and fails completely to touch on other economic and contract proposals which we presented in earlier negotiating sessions."

MEANTIME, the IUE rejected as unacceptable pension and holiday conditions which General Electric attached to its similar wage offer. The IUE-GE conference board was called to a special meeting in New York on Sept. 5.

The two proposals which the Westinghouse offer approximately meets are a cost of living increase and a 2.5% productivity increase.

Nellis said, "Westinghouse also is proposing to introduce stringent restrictions on the workers' right to strike and on holiday pay."

"This is a first offer," Carey said. "The economic proposals are inadequate. They do not satisfy the proposals made by the union. Several of the non-economic proposals are provocative and unsatisfactory."

AMA Put In Shadows By New Tory Medical Lobby

FOUND—a medical lobby even more conservative than the American Medical Association.

It is the Association of American Physicians and Surgeons, which goes farther than the AMA in its opposition to health insurance.

The AMA opposes a national health insurance program. But the AAPS requires its doctor-members to pledge to refuse to take part in any health insurance plan, national, state or local.

According to its "Code of Medical Practices," it opposes even voluntary plans in which "the value of a doctor's professional services to his patient is determined, or his fees dictated, by any process except mutual agreement between him and his patient."

In other words, the AAPS opposes any insurance plan which does not permit the doctor the same control over his fees as he has in private practice.

At the same time, this lobbying group distributes literature of extreme right-wing outfits, like the Committee for Constitutional Government. It calls the wide-spread distribution of such propaganda a "meritorious achievement."

Active on Capitol Hill in lobbying against bills which even the AMA has accepted, the AAPS calls practically everything a "seed of socialism."

10c, And Union Shop—

URW Wins Strike Against Goodrich

THE CIO RUBBER Workers virtually completed their 1952 wage and union security program last week by winning wage increases of 10c an hour and the full union shop from the last two of the industry's Big Four producers.

The second settlement, with the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Co., tentatively ended an 11-day strike that had tied up nine plants in eight states. The walkout was only the second company-wide strike the union has been forced to call since the end of World War II, said URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster.

The other contract, reached after eight weeks of negotiation, was with the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. Firestone was the first of the Big Four to recognize the URW-CIO as bargaining agent for its employes, extending that recognition to Local 7 in 1937 when Buckmaster was president of the local.

"It has taken 15 years of struggle and effort," he said reminiscently, "to reach this point where Firestone has agreed to complete unionization of its shops."

THE FIRESTONE pay boost is retroactive to Aug. 18 and is subject to approval by the Wage Stabilization Board. In addition to the wage hike and the full union shop, Buckmaster said, "we were able to improve the working agreement all along the line." The inprovements include the paid holiday and holiday worked clauses and the piece work allowance setup.

The agreement covers about 24,000 employes in seven Firestone plants in eight states and raises the average wage rate to $2 an hour.

The Goodrich settlement was worked out at a meeting in Cincinnati after 12 weeks of bargaining sessions. Many of the workers who had been on strike stopped picketing, but the walkout was not to be formally ended until the agreement was ratified by a majority of the URW-CIO members affected and by the union's general executive board.

The 10c an hour wage increase is retroactive to Aug. 27 and is subject to WSB action. Besides the higher rate and the full union shop, the settlement liberalized the incentive pay system, improved vacation pay, and provided for double time for holidays worked in addition to holiday pay. The agreement runs to Aug. 15, 1954.

THE URW-CIO has won a 10c an hour wage increase for 119,000 members since Aug. 9. On that date, the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. set the pattern by agreeing to settle on that basis. The U. S. Rubber Co., the other of the Big Four, settled a few days later.

In addition, the increases has been won for several of the larger independents — General Tire, Seiberling Tire & Rubber, Kelly-Springfield Tire, and the New Haven, Conn., plant of the Armstrong Tire & Rubber Co., where Local 93 got the agreement.

Last week's settlement mean that 134,000 URW-CIO members are now protected by the full union shop.

"These settlements end the major phase of our drive for union security," Buckmaster said. "All of the major contracts we have in the industry now give that protection."

"LIFE-SEEING" JOURNEY—Before departure on three-week "life-seeing" air trip to Scandinavia, this group of CIO unionists met in New York with Jacob S. Potofsky (center, front row), CIO Clothing Workers president and CIO International Committee chairman, who expressed hope that pioneering CIO trip will the be first of many.

ACW Opens Parleys For Major Pact

NEGOTIATIONS between the CIO Clothing Workers and the men's and boys' clothing industry got underway last week in New York.

Chief request of the union to be delivered to the Clothing Manufacturers Association was a wage increase and improvements in working conditions for its 150,000 members employed in the industry.

The ACWA's negotiating team was led by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky.

Potofsky outlined the union's requests, in addition to wages, as follows:

- Hospitalization coverage for members' wives and children under 18.
- Full pay for six holidays in each calendar year, regardless of the day of the week on which the holiday falls.
- Two full weeks' vacation with pay after one year's employment.
- Severance pay for members when firms liquidate. The union called for establishment of a fund after future study and reports.
- Union label sewed on all garments.
- A master agreement with a uniform expiration date in all clothing markets.

Potofsky and other ACWA negotiators emphasized the importance of a wage increase at this time because of mounting living costs and the threat of substantial rent increases.

25 CIOers Leave On Tour Of Scandinavia

TWENTY-FIVE rank-and-file members of CIO unions blazed a new trail last week when they left New York on a three-week visit with trade unionists, cooperative leaders and government officials in the Scandinavian countries.

Although hundreds of European union members have come to this country in the last few years to study U. S. unions, the CIO group is the first to reverse the process.

The Americans will spend their first week at the Roskilde Workers High School in Copenhagen, Denmark, where they will take a series of intensive courses with Danish workers. Their second week also will be spent in Denmark visiting factories, co-ops, government offices, welfare institutions and other points of interest.

The third week will be divided between Sweden and Norway.

THE CIO members are taking the trip on "scholarships" provided by their local unions or city CIO councils, the Workers' Education Association of Denmark and the Danish Society.

In Denmark, such a jaunt is called a "life-seeing" journey. The expression shows that its purpose is to meet people and see how they live and work, rather than to indulge in the conventional sightseeing.

The group met in New York before sailing with Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, chairman of the CIO International Committee.

"I hope this trip will be the first of many by CIO members not only to Europe, but to other parts of the world," he said.

"We need mutual understanding. There is no substitute for face-to-face meetings by union members where each can learn the other's viewpoint. In Denmark, our people will find a truly democratic society and a great and respected democratic union movement."

Those making the trip are:

Auto Workers: Arthur J. Valenti, Patricia Cayo, Sam Fishman and Frank Marquart, Detroit; Charles Graves, Dallas, Tex.; Robert E. Davis, Los Angeles; Kenneth F. Knott, Waterbury, Conn., and William F. Blome, Berkley, Mich.

Brewery Workers: John H. Wyant, St. Paul, Minn.

Clothing Workers: Clethra Divinagracia, St. Louis; Agnes A. Bowman, Hattiesburg, Miss., and Margaret Holmes, Trenton, N. J.

Communications Workers: Jack P. D'Angelo, Jr., San Jose, Cal.; Florence M. Graham, Cleveland, and Gordon E. Sallee, Lemay, Mo.

Gas, Coke: John Marshall, Bartlesville, Okla.

Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union: Israel F. Parker, Birmingham, Ala.

Steelworkers: Edward Kohleim, Chicago; Joseph K. Mangan, Bethlehem, Pa.; Charles Miller, Reading, Pa., and Albert F. Edwards, Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Canada.

Textile Workers: Betty Zamulinsky, Philadelphia.

Transport Service Employes: Edgar A. Pulliam and Cecil L. Patrick, Chicago.

Ed Hughlett, Brewery Union Secretary Since '48, Dies

EDWARD HUGHLETT, for four years an international officer of the CIO Brewery Workers, died last week in Cincinnati. He was 40.

Hughlett, a veteran local and international leader of the BW-CIO, had served as general corresponding-recording secretary of the union since 1948.

His death came after an 18-month illness.

Since the Brewery Workers' affiliation with CIO in 1946, Hughlett had been a delegate to National CIO conventions and helped to form the CIO Union Label Committee on a permanent basis.

Hughlett's original home was in Waukesha, Wisc., where he served several terms as president of Brewery Local 102 and as secretary and later president of the local labor council.

In the Brewery Workers international union, he had served as an international representative, General Executive Board member and corresponding secretary. Recently he was nominated without opposition to a third term as general corresponding-recording secretary.

He leaves his wife and a son and daughter.

20c Hike Won In Shipyards

THE CIO Shipbuilding Workers last week won a 20c an hour increase for 30,000 employes of the shipyards of the Bethlehem Steel Co., the bellwether of the ship building industry.

A strike in eight Atlantic Coast plants of the firm was averted as the negotiators signed a new contract after eight months of bargaining. The increases will be retroactive to last Apl. 14.

IUMSWA Pres. John J. Grogan hailed the agreement as "the opening of a new era of higher standards of living, better working conditions, and greater job security for the nation's shipyard workers."

Settlement of the Bethlehem dispute was quickly followed by resumption of deadlocked negotiations between IUMSWA and the Todd Shipyards Corp. Talks were continuing with Maryland Drydock. Those yards employ 10,000 members of the union.

S. F. Guild Gets Increase To $6

An arbiter's decision granting weekly wage increases of $2 to $6 and setting a new journeyman top minimum of $119.50 weekly has been won by the San Francisco local of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

The increase, averaging $4, covers some 1300 employes of four San Francisco dailies. Arbiter was Clark Kerr of the Univ. of California, formerly a Wage Stabilization Board public member.

Walter White Praises Democrats On Civil Rights

A PROMINENT leader in the fight for civil rights last week praised the Democratic party platform provisions dealing with fair employment practices and the end of the Senate filibuster.

Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, took sharp issue with pro-civil rights critics of the Democratic platform. He spoke from Detroit on a CIO Auto Workers broadcast.

"Because the initials FEPC or words, filibuster, cloture or rule are not specifically mentioned," he said, they denounce the platform "as a compromise or as weak."

He went on to detail the strong, uncompromising sections of the Democratic platform dealing with civil rights, and concluded with the observation that, on these points, "the Republican platform is painfully silent."

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers have adjourned their convention in Chicago, and the delegates have elected a new president, Brother Elwood Swisher. The writer joined in bringing all groups within UGCCWA together during the convention and secured a pledge that they would continue to devote their full time building their fine union and continuing their support of National CIO and its policies. Officers and members alike are determined to drive their union on.

Wisconsin is in the throes of a highly important primary election. Joe McCarthy, better known as "Smearing Joe," is being supported on the one hand by Gen. Eisenhower, who on the other hand condemns the tactics of Joe and his kind. The Republican Sen. Nixon, consistently inconsistent, gives McCarthy the nod and blames Pres. Truman for smears. Westbrook Pegler endorses McCarthy's every move.

Col. McCormick of the Chicago Tribune is pulling for him; in fact, the Colonel would like nothing better than to form his own political party with Joe as one of the leading candidates.

★

THE WRITER is deeply grieved to report the untimely passing of Edward J. Hughlett, corresponding-recording secretary of the Intl. Union of United Brewery, Flour, Cereal, Soft Drink & Distillery Workers. The Brewery Workers and the CIO have lost one of the most constant advocates of industrial unionism in the trade union movement. Brother Hughlett was buried in his home town of Waukesha, Wis., and I along with many, many others of his friends attended the funeral.

Reports have reached me that the CIO's new television series, "Issues of the Day," is now being shown in two additional cities—Boston and Philadelphia.

I hope before long to be able to report that more areas have completed arrangements to put this television series on the air. It is certainly a worthy project.

DIR. JOHN RIFFE, CIO Organizing Committee, reports the following representation election victories in the South: The Texas Co., North Charleston, S. C., OWIU 21, no union 3; Merchants Cigar and Candy Co., Birmingham, Ala., RWDSU-CIO 12, no union 11; American Machinery Corp., Orlando, Fla., USA-CIO 38, no union 27; Marden Manufacturing Co., Auburndale, Fla., USA-CIO 14, no union 10; Kilgore Ceramic Corp., Kilgore, Tex., CIO Stone & Allied Products Workers 27, no union 24; Peerless Manufacturing Co., Dallas, Tex., USA-CIO 24, no union 2; Charles Ingram Lumber Co., Florence, S. C., IWA-CIO 57, no union 12.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports the following election victories: Page Dairy Co., Findlay, O., RWDSU-CIO Dairy Div. 18, against 8, with RWDSU State Dir. Gerald Hughes and Rep. Gene Inglis handling the situation; and Crawford Steel Co., Bucyrus, O., UAW-CIO 180, independent 55. UAW Staff Rep. Max Tomasi directed the latter campaign.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShelter reports three more victories for CIO-LIU 78: Valu PAC, Inc., Mendota, Calif., LIU 78 51, against 3; Lambert Marketing Co., Placerville, Calif., LIU 78 44, no union 18; Sacramento Valley Association, comprising Scott Valley Group, Dodd's Branch and Quercus Branch, Annette Packing Co., California Fruit Exchange, Kelseyville Packing Association, 404 for CIO and 221 for no union. The campaigns were handled by Local Organizers Boldt and McGraw and CIO Field Reps. Spangler and Gillie.

Intl. Rep. Barney Gatewood, TWUA-CIO, reports winning a representation election at the Bemis Bros. Bag Co., Los Angeles, Calif., by a vote of 27 to 23 for AFL.

★

REG. DIR. John Maurillo reports that in a representation election at the Bendix Corp. of America, Utica, N. Y., the workers favored the CIO Steelworkers by a vote of 272 to 265, defeating the MESA. The campaign was conducted by USA-CIO staff representatives.

The Canadian Dept. of Labour reports that the Labor Relations Board has certified local unions of the CIO Packinghouse Workers as bargaining agents of three units of employes of flour millers at Medicine Hat, Alberta. The companies are the Maple Leaf Milling Co., Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., and Lake of the Woods Milling Co. The decision followed representation elections among the employes.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that the CIO Steelworkers won a representation election at the Cabusco Steel Co., Colo., by a unanimous vote. The AFL, which had previously held the contract, got no votes. This campaign was carried on under the supervision of USA-CIO Sub-Dist. 38 Dir. Michael Soldren and Intl. Rep. Frank Richmond.

Reg. Dir. Ben Henry reports that the Packinghouse Workers won representation elections in the following plants, both in Des Moines, Ia.: Swift & Co. feed mill, UPWA-CIO 29, no union 0; Swift soy bean mill, UPWA 14, AFL Teamsters 6. UPWA Dir. Russell Bull and Rep. A. Giofreddi handled the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Joe Walsh reports a representation election victory for the CIO Auto Workers at a new plant, the W. L. Maxon Corp., Scranton, Pa., by a vote of 369 to 145. Intl. Rep. James Arena was in charge.

CWA Asks Big Pension Gains, $100 Monthly Bell Payments

SWEEPING improvements in the Bell System pension plan — with company-paid pensions of $100 monthly apart from social security benefits—are the next goal of the CIO Communications Workers.

CWA-CIO Pres. Joseph A. Beirne last week served notice on the huge American Telephone & Telegraph Co. that the union will seek substantial improvements in pensions in negotiations with the various AT&T operating subsidiaries covering 300,000 telephone workers.

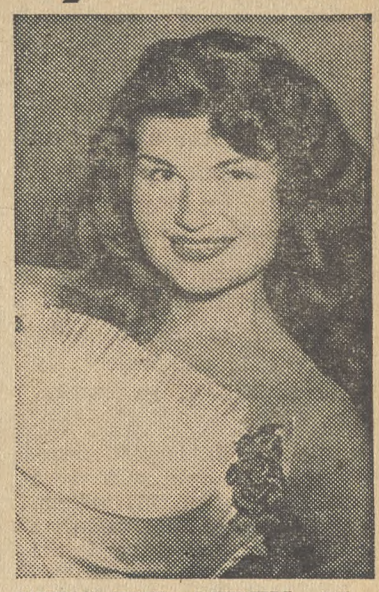
Beirne pointed out that the Bell pension fund now has a reserve of close to $1.5 billion "and yet not a single nickel has been paid from the principal of that fund for many years. Interest earned on the fund has been sufficient to meet every obligation occurring under the plan, and then some."

In a letter to AT&T Pres. Cleo Craig, the union president said that "CWA intends to make maximum use of the economic strength of this organization to see that the Bell System pensioner, wherever he might be, has his views and welfare treated with respect."

Beirne particularly struck at the Bell System practice of whittling down its own pension contributions every time Social Security benefits are increased. Because of this policy, Bell pensioners would net only about $3 of the $5-to-$8 a month increased Social Security benefits to be paid this month.

The Bell pension plan was established before Social Security was established. With its $1.5 billion reserve, Bierne said, it is "sufficiently sound" for Bell companies to pay $100-a-month pensions to retired telephone workers, apart from what they receive from Social Security.

Along with the straight $100 pension, CWA in negotiations also will seek incorporation of pension provisions into present contracts, establishment of a joint union-management committee to administer the pension plan, and liberalization of retirement provisions, including the present age requirement of 65 years.



SHE'S THE QUEEN—Miss CIO for the Labor Day parade in Detroit is Shirley Ann Bade. Twenty-one, she's a telephone billing clerk and member of CIO Communications Workers Local 4000.

UAW Strikes Borg-Warner

THE CIO Auto Workers last week struck seven Borg-Warner Corp. plants in the Midwest in a dispute over new contracts.

Strikes were in progress at the following plants: Mechanics Universal Joint Division at Rockford, Ill., and Memphis; Borg & Beck Division, Chicago; Ingersoll Steel Division, Newcastle, Ind.; Ingersoll Products Division, Kalamazoo, Mich.; Detroit Gear Division, and Presco Products Division, Cleveland.

UAW officials were considering an offer of a 24c an hour package offer made at the Long Manufacturing Division, Detroit. Negotiations are on a plant-by-plant basis. Generally, the UAW proposals call for 26c an hour general wage hike, improved vacation schedules, better insurance plan, higher night shift differentials and a piece work system revision.

'Manpower Waste' From Factory Accidents Decried

THE "EXTRAVAGANT waste of manpower" resulting from job accidents can be cut sharply by close cooperation of labor, management and government, the National Labor Management Manpower Policy Committee said last week.

The committee noted a sharp increase in occupational injuries in the last two years, with 1951 showing a 12% increase over 1949. Unless organized safety programs are stepped up, it said the 1952 manpower loss may be equivalent to 140,000 men working a full year.

CIO representatives on the committee are Stanley Ruttenberg, National CIO director of education and research, and Sec.-Treas. Jacob Clayman of the Ohio CIO Council. Mrs. Kitty Ellickson, National CIO associate research director, is an alternate.

Tighe Woods Put In Price Curb Hot Seat

TIGHE WOODS last week jumped from the rent control frying pan into the price control fire.

Economic Stabilizer Roger N. Putnam announced that Pres. Truman had appointed Woods price stabilizer. Woods has been rent control chief for the past five years.

He succeeds Ellis Arnall, who resigned recently. Putnam later named James McInness Henderson, general counsel of the Economic Stabilization Agency, to fill the rent job.

Truman said Arnall did "an exceptional job with the means at your disposal," but pointed out that the price control law approved by Congress had "weakened our ability" to combat rising prices.

The National Industrial Conference Board, a business organization, last week reported that the purchasing power of the dollar dropped to 55c in July and consumers' prices soared to an all-time high.

And the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported retail food prices hit an all-time on Aug. 15. This index was 235.6.

Pres. A. F. Hartung of the CIO Woodworkers last week urged Truman to recall Congress to write an effective price and rent control law.

450 Cities Save Rent Lids; CIO Protests Chicago Hike

SPARKED in many instances by CIO leadership, more than 450 communities throughout the nation have requested that Federal rent controls be continued beyond Sept. 30.

The Office of Rent Stabilization said, however, that more than half of the 20 million people living in rental units under federal control will lose this protection unless they get their city councils to request continuance before the Sept. 30 deadline.

The Chicago CIO Council protested to Economc Stabilizer Roger Putnam against the recommendations of the Chicago City Council for rent increases. Ellsworth M. Smith, Chicago ICU secretary, wired Putnam and ORS that "in light of the fact that other cities voting controls did not find such recommendations necessary, certainly no reasons exist for granting increases in this instance."

In Toledo, where the council voted to end controls over CIO protests, a strong move was under way to have the area declared a "critical housing area." Such action would extend controls despite the City Council's action.

Former Rep. Tom Burke (D.), who is running for re-election in Toledo, wired the critical areas housing committee requesting such a move. He said that it was "impossible to exaggerate the devasting effect in Toledo" of the Council's action.

The need for prompt action was pointed out to all CIO Electrical Workers locals in a letter by Gardner Jackson, IUE legislative representative.

A similar communication was sent to all Wayne County (Mich.) CIO local unions by the Detroit and Wayne County IUC. Detroit is one of the large cities where no decisive action extending rent controls has yet been taken.

Oil Cartel's Power Told In Long-Secret U. S. Report

By MILTON PLUMB

THE government moved last week on several fronts to break up what it described as an international cartel through which seven firms control most of the world's petroleum industry.

Highlights of developments, which officials said were "only the beginning" of government action, were:

1. Four of the largest American oil companies were sued for more than $67 million, which the Justice Dept. said they had illegally overcharged the government—and American taxpayers—for oil purchased between May 1949 and June 1952 as Marshall Plan aid.

2. Five American and two British oil producers were charged in a staff report of the Federal Trade Commission with conspiring to control world petroleum production, divide up world markets, fix prices, and freeze out competitors.

3. A federal grand jury in Washington investigating the world-wide oil monopoly subpoenaed all the U. S. companies named as members of the cartel, plus 14 others, six individuals and the National Petroleum Council to appear before it Sept. 3.

The story of how the seven companies allegedly control the production and distribution of most of the world's oil outside of the iron curtain countries is told in a voluminous report released last week by Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.), chairman of the Senate Small Business Committee. It had been prepared by the FTC more than two years ago but kept "secret" because of sections affecting national security.

Sen. Hennings (D. Mo.) took the lead in demanding that the report be made public. The Senate Small Business Committee, after obtaining confidential copies, obtained Pres. Truman's approval for its release with some material deleted.

In releasing the report, Sparkman declared that "it is the basic philosophy of the United States to oppose vast monopolistic concentrations of economic power. Whether privately or publicly owned, such organizations carry with them the inherent possibility that their overwhelming power may be abused to the detriment of the people."

The Federal Trade Commission report charges that the seven companies "control directly or indirectly most of the world's petroleum business." This control, it asserts, extends from ownership of 65% of the world's crude oil reserves, through dominance over all of the other phases of the industry, including production, transportation, refining and marketing.

The seven companies were said to hold about 82% of all foreign reserves and about 34% of all reserves within the United States.

"Control of reserves means, in effect, control over future oil supplies," the commission pointed out.

In 1949, the seven international companies produced more than one-half the world's crude oil production, including about 99% of Middle Eastern output, over 96% of production in the Eastern Hemisphere and almost 45% of that in the Western Hemisphere.

Their control over world refining facilities is even greater, the FTC said. They also own not only half of the world's tanker fleet but "all of the important pipelines outside the United States."

Describing the companies as "dominant forces in nearly all foreign markets," the report concludes that "perhaps in no other raw material industry is the control over marketing so highly concentrated as in petroleum."

Through a series of charts tracing how the companies "operate through layers of jointly owned subsidiaries and affiliated companies," the report shows how "control of the oil from the well to ultimate consumer is retained in one corporate family or group of families."

All of the U. S. companies named in the report have denied the cartel charges. The two British firms refused comment.

Hennings, who first disclosed the existence of the report, is continuing to press for further action by Congress. He wants a full scale congressional investigation of the cartel.

"The American taxpayer is the victim of this giant conspiracy," Hennings said. He pointed out that the report had made clear that "the oil cartel is powerful enough" to dictate terms "admittedly discriminatory and onerous in their effect on the American taxpayer."

Big Firms Named In Cartel Report

Here are the seven firms charged by the Federal Trade Commission with having conspired to control world petroleum production, fix prices and restrict competition:

AMERICAN

Standard Oil of New Jersey.
Standard Oil of California.
Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., Inc.
The Texas Co.
Gulf Oil Corp.

BRITISH

Anglo-Iranian Oil Co., Ltd.
Royal Dutch Shell.

Rankin Defeated By Dixiecrat Of Same Stripe

JOHN RANKIN, after 32 years in Congress, won't be spewing forth hatred of Jews, Negroes, religious groups and organized labor when Congress meets next year.

The Mississippi Dixiecrat was defeated by a 6000 vote margin last week in a primary in the state's new 1st District by Rep. Abernethy.

Abernethy's campaign publication hit a reactionary, anti-union line. In the 82nd Congress, according to the latest CIO News Voting Record, he had 10 "wrong" votes and six absences.

Plenty Of Volts In Power Lobby Spending

The electric power, doctors and railroad lobbies led all other groups in expenditures reported under the Lobbying Act during the first half of 1952, a survey by Congressional Quarterly News Features reveals.

Twenty-six organizations reported spending more than $25,000 each during the period, but some groups indicated that they were listing expenditures for all purposes and not lobbying expenditures alone. The big spenders were:

Natl. Association of Electric Cos.	$ 232,877.04
American Medical Association *	134,560.92
Association of American Railroads	129,843.76
Natl. Milk Producers Federation	86,018.96

'Depressed Wages' Cracked By UAW Strike Settlement

"DEPRESSED wage levels" in Terre Haute, Ind., were cracked by the CIO Auto Workers in the agreement reached with the Allis-Chalmers Co. to end a 15-week strike at its jet engine plant.

Refusal of company officials to make any wage offer forced the strike, which began May 7. Allis-Chalmers turned a deaf ear on Gov. Shricker's appeal to arbitrate the dispute, and Chamber of Commerce front groups tried to stampede the workers into a quick, poor settlement.

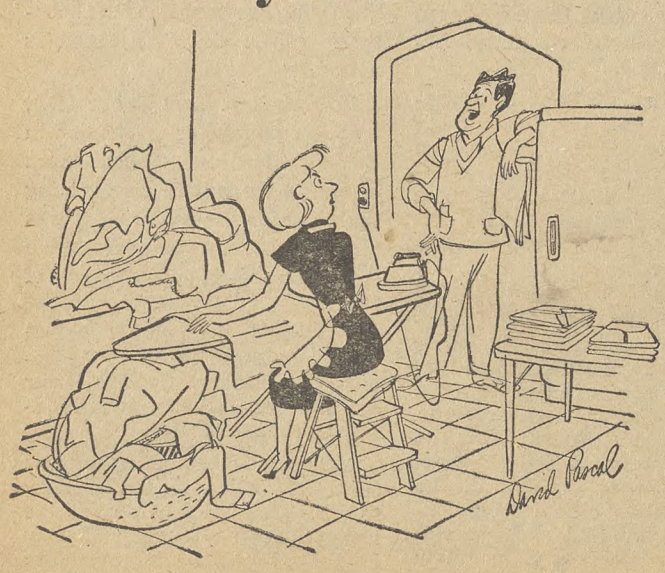
State Sen. Leonard Conrad, a CIO Brewery Workers' business agent, walked the UAW picketline and made the wage proposal that ended the strike.

"This city used to be known as the home of Eugene V. Debs, but now it seems to be known for its low wages," Conrad said.

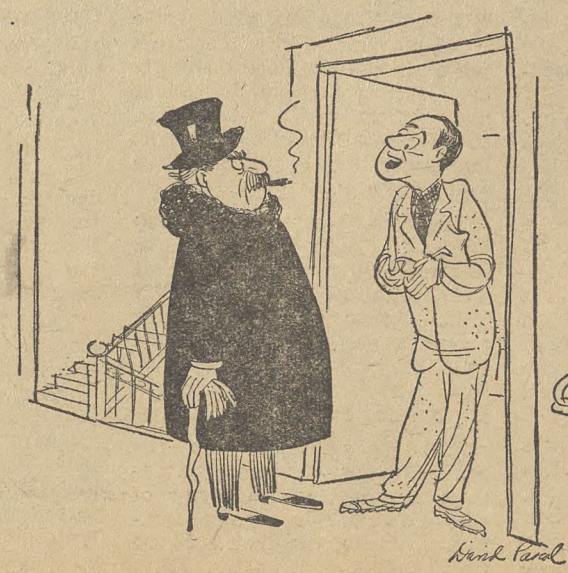
The AFL Operating Engineers tried to muscle in by bringing in a mob of 500 in a vain effort to break the UAW's 75-man picket line.

The new agreement brings the starting rate for the lowest labor classification up to $1.38 an hour and the top rate in the highest classification to $2.33. The contract also provides cost of living adjustments and 4c an hour annual improvement increases for the next two years of the three-year agreement, equal pay for equal work, plant-wide seniority and bargaining rights for the new plant, when completed, a modified union shop, and 10c an hour night shift premium.

Labor Day . . . . . By Pascal



"I feel like celebrating Labor Day. What will we do this evening?"



"Frankly, I just don't feel right paying you a rent increase on Labor Day."

"I'm sorry, Senator. You'll have to take it up with Congress. I happen to like Labor Day."

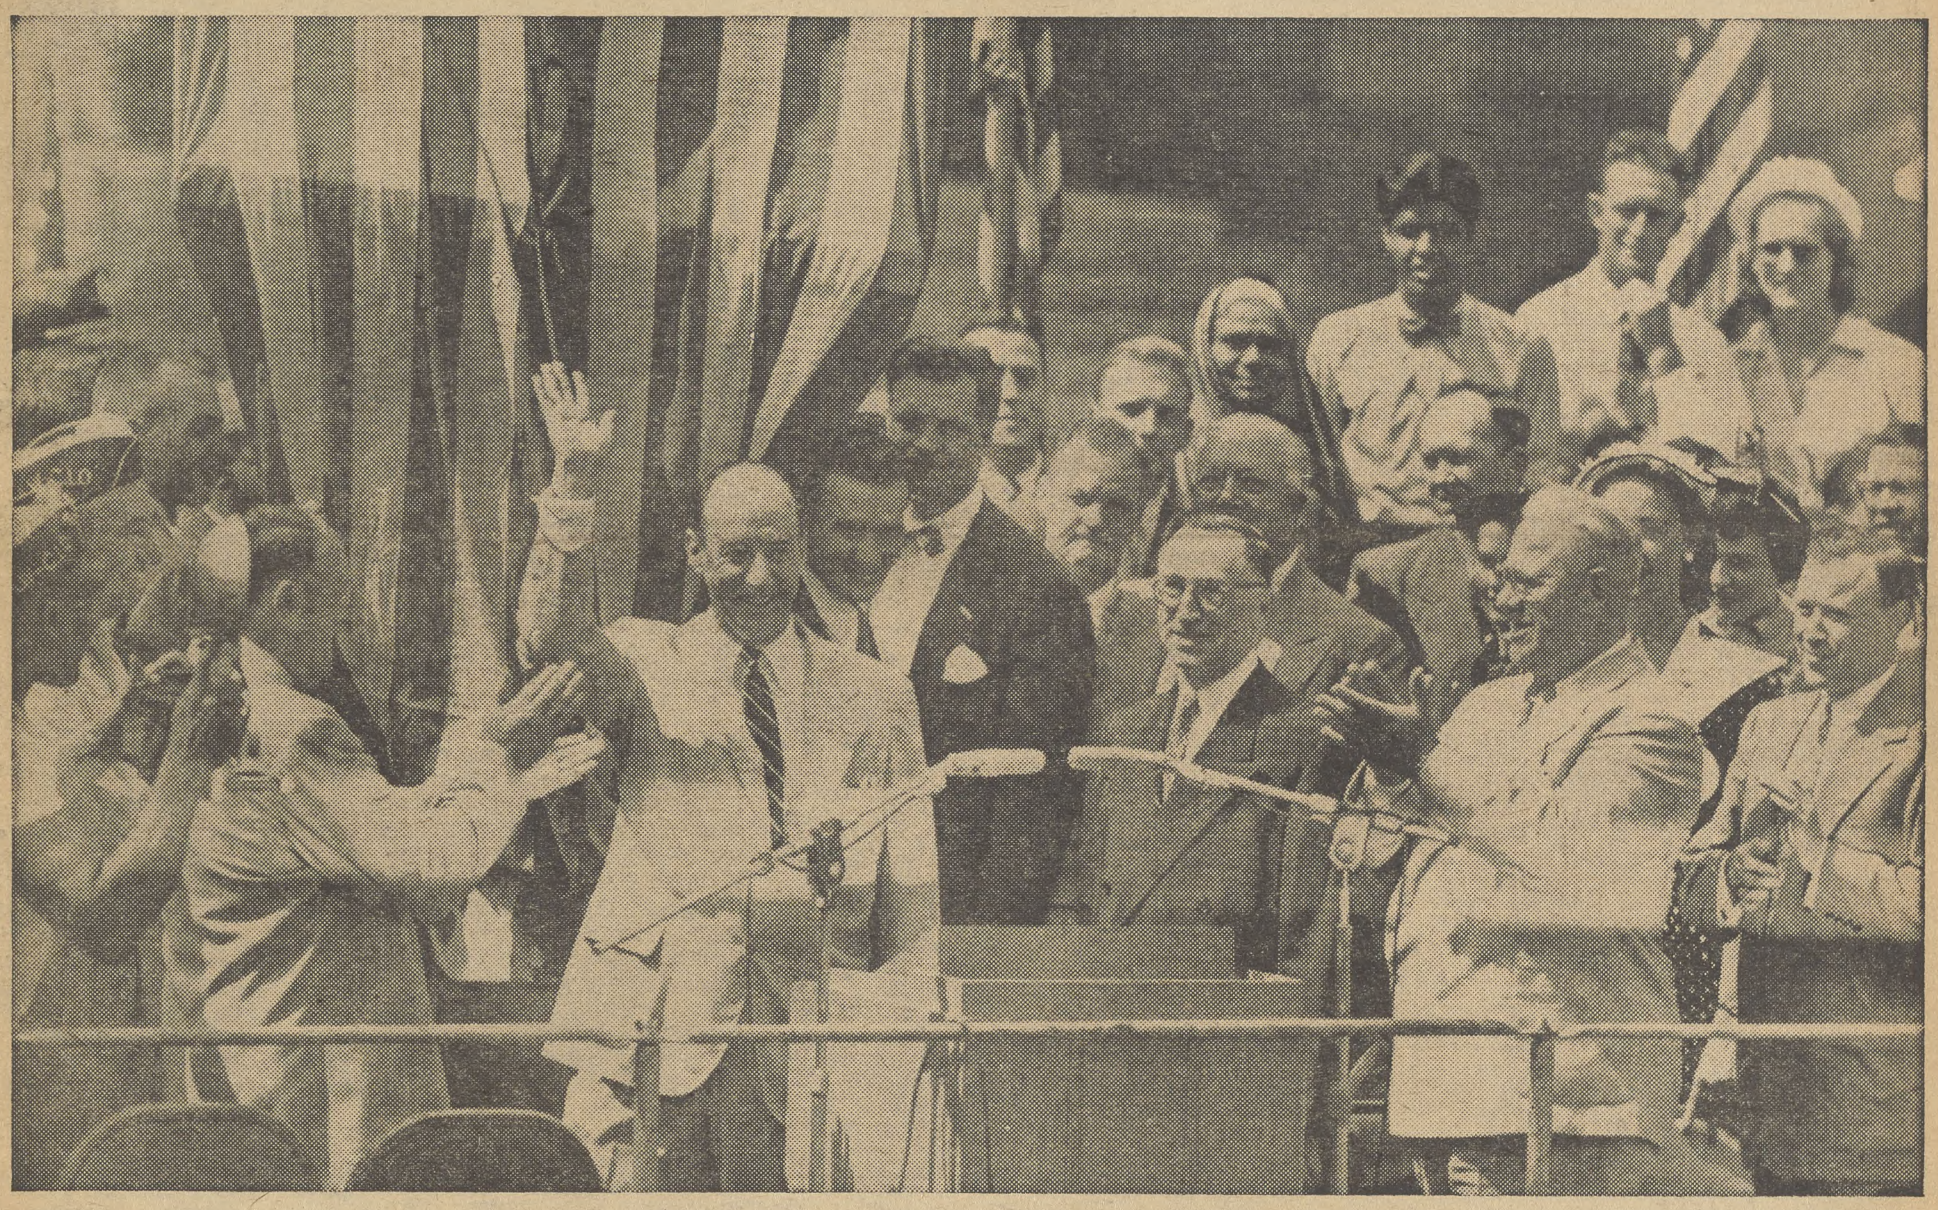
Stevenson, Sparkman Vow T-H Repeal As Fair Deal Drive Rolls

—STORIES AND PICTURES, PAGES 3, 6, 7.



"WHAT WE NEED is a completely new law" on labor-management relations, after repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act which is "filled with ugly sneers at labor unions and built around the discredited labor injunction." That's what Gov. Adlai Stevenson said in his Detroit Labor Day address formally opening his campaign for President. Among group welcoming the Democratic nominee at joint CIO-AFL rally were (to Stevenson's right) Sen. Moody (D. Mich.), Gov. Williams, Mayor Cobo, Frank X. Martel, Detroit AFL Council president, and Walter P. Reuther, CIO Auto Workers president and a CIO vice president. Note the UAW-CIO cameramen on left. Independent Phone Unions Join CWA In Pension Drive

UNIONS representing 450,000 telephone workers have asked the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. to negotiate proposed changes in its pension plan with a joint committee.

The invitation was extended by representatives of seven unions—the CIO Communications Workers and six independents—who at a meeting in New York developed a seven-point pension program. They characterized a Bell System suggestion for changes in its systemwide pension plan as "inadequate."

The program, which all the unions will use in bargaining, proposes:

1. Incorporation of the Bell pension plan into union contracts.
2. A minimum $100 pension, paid by management, and discontinuance of all deductions from computed pensions.
3. Union-management representation on pension benefit committees.
4. Establishment of broader retirement rights, with voluntary retirement permitted at a lower age than at present upon completion of minimum periods of employment.
5. Elimination of compulsory retirement at age 65 in cases where the worker is willing and able to do his work satisfactorily.
6. Use of the five highest-paid consecutive years as the base for computing pension payments.
7. Computation of payments at the rate of 1.5% of the average annual wage instead of the present 1%.

The conference was presided over by Vice Pres. A. T. Jones, of the CWA-CIO.

The meeting pointed out that the Bell offer meant the pension plan would still be tied in with social security payments as at present, and that future increases in social security payments would result in lower payments from the Bell fund.

The Bell proposal was done up in an attractive package, but actually would increase pension payments by as little as $3 a month. The firm's pension fund has assets of $1.5 billion.

Represented at the meeting, in addition to the CWA-CIO, were the Alliance of Independent Telephone Unions, composed of unions with 125,000 members; Empire State Telephone Union, 5,000; Telephone Employes Organization, Accounting, 4500; Union of Telephone Workers, 4500; Commercial Telephone Workers Union of Chicago, 2000, and Council of Western Electric Technical Employes, 4000.

IWA Drives To Boost Low Southern Wages

A DRIVE to wipe out the Southern wage differential in the woodworking industry was pledged at a three-state conference of nearly 1000 CIO Woodworkers in Washington, D. C., on Labor Day.

The campaign was predicted by IWA-CIO Pres. A. F. Hartung, who said "the day is not far distant when wages paid in the South will equal the scale now prevalent in the Pacific Northwest."

With increased organizing in the Southern lumber industry, Hartung said, "a $2 an hour wage will be as common in the Carolinas and Virginia as 40 and 50c was before the union came."

CIO has made more organizing progress in the South in the past 12 months than in any previous year, Franz E. Daniel, North Carolina CIO director, told the wood union conference.

In 225 NLRB elections held in the south during the past year, he said, "close to 200,000 workers voted for the CIO."

"We see many signs of increased interest in union organization among industrial workers," Daniel reported. "Circumstances and propaganda that a few years ago made workers fearful of unionism do not have effect today."

Delegates from IWA-CIO locals in Virginia and the two Carolinas approved a political action program for registering local union members and getting out a full vote on Nov. 4.

They also praised North Carolina officials for the recent conviction of several Ku Klux Klan members. And the state's five-year-old "right to work" law was condemned as "more vicious than even the Taft-Hartley Act." The law outlaws all forms of union security.

Forest conservation, industrial safety and workmen's compensation problems affecting IWA-CIO members also were discussed.

Robert Lamb, Former USA Aide, Dies

DR. ROBERT K. LAMB, a former legislative representative of the CIO Steelworkers, died in Boston Aug. 28 after a long illness. He was 47.

Lamb resigned from the USA-CIO post in 1947 to resume his teaching career. Since 1949 he had been lecturing in the Dept. of History and English at Mass. Institute of Technology.

A one-time instructor of economics at Williams College, Lamb served for several years on the LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee of the U. S. Senate, and later on the staffs of the Senate Labor and Small Business Committees.

He joined the steel union staff during the war.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Helen Lamb, and by three sons.

Top Officers Shifted By Lithographers

A SHIFT in several top offices in the CIO Lithographers was announced last week by Pres. John Blackburn.

Martin Grayson has resigned as ALA-CIO secretary-treasurer and has been named temporarily as vice president of the Mountain Region. He succeeds Robert Cottrell of Kansas City, who resigned.

Rudolph Harper, ALA international representative from Atlanta, was named temporary secretary-treasurer by Blackburn.

In the case of both offices, nominations for regular terms now are under way in ALA locals, with election to follow shortly.

In New York, Edward Stone was elected to the new post of Atlantic Region vice president.

Grayson had served as ALA secretary since 1948.

UWUA Gains 11c Pay Hike In Akron

CIO UTILITY Workers last week were reported to have reached a contract settlement in Akron covering 2100 employes of the Ohio Edison Co.

The two-year agreement, retroactive to July 1, provides a general wage increase of 11.5c hourly and a modified union shop. Other provisions include increased shift differential, expanded sick-leave terms, and improved hospitalization and surgical insurance.

The contract covers 10 Ohio Edison generating plants and maintenance and other personnel in Akron and Youngstown.

In Detroit — after a 24-hour shutdown — a fact-finding commission was named by Gov. G. Mennen Williams to investigate the UWUA's contract deadlock with the Detroit Edison Co.

The union has asked a 15c hourly increase, a union shop and other contract benefits for 4000 members. The company had offered 4c. Recommendations of the fact-finding body will not be binding on either party.

Wood Union Wins 45-Day Walkout

The CIO Woodworkers has reported successful settlement of a 45-day strike by more than 30,000 IWA members in British Columbia.

A 5½c hourly wage increase plus three paid holidays were granted by Gordon Sloan, provincial chief justice, who headed mediation proceedings. A cost of living wage clause was continued. Employers had forced the strike by demands for wage cuts up to 29c hourly.

IUE Meets Over GE Contract Deadlock

THE GENERAL Electric Conference Board of the CIO Electrical Workers was meeting in New York late last week to determine the course the union will follow when the current contract expires Sept. 15.

Negotiations were continuing in the wake of the IUE's denunciation of the company's bargaining as a "sham," and of its previous offer as "an obvious trap."

GE had made an offer of 3.25% for the cost of living and 2.5% for increased productivity, retroactive to Aug. 15 provided it was accepted by Aug. 31. The company maintained it represented wage increases of 7.5c to 13c an hour.

The union rejected the offer, holding out for pay boosts of at least 10c an hour. IUE Pres. James B. Carey, who also is secretary-treasurer of the CIO, accused the company of "trying to chisel" on pensions and holidays.

On pensions, said Carey, GE wanted to take away from its retired employes the increases of $5 to $8 a month in social security benefits which became effective Sept. 1.

It also sought, he said, to take Memorial Day and July 4, 1952, from the list of seven paid holidays on the ground that they fell on Saturdays and hence were not working days. The contract has provided for seven paid holidays for the last three years.

The union originally made seven demands, topped by the 10c an hour wage increase. It proposed a two-year contract for everything but pensions, with a wage reopening at the end of the first year; the modified union shop; absorption by the company of the 2% of earnings the workers now pay for pensions; application of the workers' payments to health insurance, and the seven paid holidays.

THE IUE-CIO also asked a joint study to determine the possibility of reviving the profit-sharing system, and provisions to make the incentive plan work.

Meantime, the United Electrical Workers, expelled from the CIO as Communist-dominated, lost out in an effort to replace the IUE-CIO as bargaining agent for the main GE plant at Pittsfield, Mass.

The National Labor Relations Board dismissed the UE petition on the ground that the request was "inappropriate" because it did not include the neighboring GE naval ordnance plant in Pittsfield.

HST Urges 'Real Crusade' To Help Handicapped

PRES. TRUMAN last week called for a "real crusade" to help handicapped persons "help themselves to win a real opportunity for good, productive, decent lives."

He made the statement in a speech before the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped, formed five years ago to help restore disabled persons to useful lives.

The President noted "solid gains" had been chalked up during the past five years but added, "our work for non-veterans is not nearly far enough advanced."

He pointed out that 250,000 civilians became disabled last year, but "our best efforts brought rehabilitation to fewer than 70,000."

"We must broaden out our programs — our rehabilitation programs and our job placement work as well—until they are big enough to give the proper help to everyone who needs it," the President said.

Demos Back Repeal Of Biased T-H

THE TOP LEADERS of the Democratic party chose Labor Day, 1952, to make that party's position on Taft-Hartley crystal clear.

Taft-Hartley must be repealed.

That was the Labor Day message of Presidential Nominee Adlai Stevenson; his running mate, John Sparkman, and the retiring President, Harry S. Truman.

Stevenson, in a series of Michigan speeches, called Taft-Hartley "biased and politically inspired." It "has not improved labor relations in a single plant," he went on, calling for a new law "after the political symbolism of the Taft-Hartley Act is behind us."

Sparkman, speaking in California, charged the Taft-Hartley Act was "a subtle attempt to sabotage union organization."

Truman, who has often and vigorously called for repeal of Taft-Hartley, told a Wisconsin crowd:

"It was the Republicans who fought the Wagner Act in 1935 . . . It was the Republicans who dreamed up and put across the Taft-Hartley Act in 1947. You would think they might have learned something in 1948. But they didn't. Look at the record of the last four years. In 1949, almost every single Republican voted against repeal of the Taft-Hartley law."

Truman charged the Republican party "would get a big kick out of doing a little union busting. They would be glad to go right back to the days of the 'yellow dog' contract and labor spies."

Gov. Stevenson kicked off his major speech in Detroit's crowd-packed Cadillac square by bluntly telling his labor audience:

"You are not my captive, and I am not yours."

Using the same straight-forward approach which had marked his first speech to the American Legion, the Democratic nominee urged enactment of a new labor-management relations law which would:

- Accept labor unions, like employer corporations as the responsible representatives of their members' interest.
- Insist labor unions conform to standards of fair conduct and equal protection in the exercise of their stewardships.
- Outlaw unfair bargaining practices by both companies and unions.
- Abandon the injunction.
- Include new methods for settling national emergency disputes.

Truman charged GOP "masterminds" would risk war with Russia to elect Eisenhower by hints of "liberating" Soviet satellite states. Without naming names, he referred to John Foster Dulles, GOP foreign policy expert.

"Liberation" talk, Truman reminded America, was war talk today. He charged those Republicans responsible with playing "cruel gutter politics" with lives of persons behind the Iron Curtain in order to get votes of Americans who have ties of family or origin with eastern European lands.

Stevenson's Text: 'We Need A Completely New Labor Law'

Here are major portions of the text of Gov. Stevenson's Labor Day address in Detroit, in which he called for full repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and drafting of a fair labor-management relations law:

I STAND before you today as a fugitive from a sweat shop down in Springfield, Ill. Down there the speed-up is in full force, but we aren't complaining a bit. In fact, we like it because we believe in our job and we are going to win in November.

Contrary to the impressions fostered by some of the press, you are not my captives, and I am not your captive.

On the contrary, I might as well make it clear right now that I intend to do exactly what I think right and best for all, for all of us—business, labor, agriculture—alike.

I see three sets of common interest in the labor field. These are positive interests, constructive interests.

There is our first common interest in securing to all who work the minimums of human decency. This means, among other things, that the men and women in our working force, some 62 million of us, shall receive a decent living wage, insurance against the risks of disability and unemployment, and the assurance of solid, not token, security when life's work is done.

IT MEANS that we must struggle tirelessly to add to these assurances, equality of work opportunity for every one of us—regardless of race, of color or of creed. Human decency is the theme of our history and the spirit of our religion. We must never cease trying to write its guarantees not just into our laws, but into the hearts and the minds of men.

A second key to our common interest is that the men and women in our working force are consumers as well as producers.

Our welfare is not measured by what we get from the payroll clerk, but by what we get at the store and the school and the hospital, and by what we have left to put in the bank. Meeting such problems as inflation, as housing and the high cost of living, is not part of a labor policy, it's part of a national policy. It's not just part of a labor program because it's part of a national problem.

Our third common interest is in the process of collective bargaining—the keystone of industrial democracy, of free enterprise.

The only legitimate purpose of a Federal labor relations law is to make private bargaining work better. And that purpose has not, in my judgment, been served by the Taft-Hartley Act.

I don't say that everything in the Taft-Hartley Act is wrong, it isn't. And moreover, I'll say frankly that I don't think it's a slave labor law, either. But I do say that it was biased and politically inspired and has not improved labor relations in a single plant.

We must have a new law and my conclusion is that we can best remedy the defects in the old law by scrapping it and starting over again.

Now, if I may, I—and I hope I don't impose upon you—I should like to suggest five general principles as the basis for a new labor relations law.

Point number one is that the law must accept labor unions, like employer corporations, as the responsible representatives of their members' interests.

The Taft-Hartley Act assumed that the unions could not be trusted to determine whether their members wanted a union shop. After the expenditure of millions of dollars to hold thousands of Government-conducted elections, in 95% of which the employes voted for the union shop, the Congress last year finally repealed this gratuitous insult to the labor unions.

But the act still prohibits other forms of union security arrangements developed over many years by labor and management together in such cases as the maritime industry, the building trades and the printing trades.

Point number two is the other side of point number one. If labor unions are to be accepted as the full representatives and guardians of employe interests in the collective bargaining process, then labor unions must conform to standards of fair conduct and equal protection in the exercise of their stewardship.

A few unions, my friends, made by law the exclusive representatives of certain groups of employes, abuse that trust by excluding from membership some who want to work, denying them a vote, denying their seniority rights because of the color of their skin or because of restrictive notions about employment security. That's not right.

AND, my friends, that's not democracy. Unions which are given powers by Government, should be open to all on equal terms.

Now number three of my suggestions is that a new Federal labor law must outlaw unfair bargaining practices by companies or unions.

The Taft-Hartley Act, like the Wagner Act, prohibits certain types of unfair labor practices by employers, such as discriminating against union members or forming company unions. The Taft-Hartley Act added a list of union unfair practices. The unions have protested vigorously against this addition.

Yet I think it is only common sense to acknowledge that we must forbid such practices as jurisdictional strikes, and strikes or boycotts attempting to force an employer to deal with one union when another has been certified as the representative of his employes.

It is equally clear, however, that the prohibitions in the Taft-Hartley Act are so broad and so jumbled as to outlaw proper, along with improper conduct—even, on occasion, to require union members to act as strike-breakers.

These provisions must be completely rewritten, with the intention, not of stripping unions of as much bargaining power as possible, but only to prohibit resort to those extremes which fair-minded judgment identified as unreasonable.

Point number four is rejection of the labor injunction. We agreed to this once. In 1932, Congress overwhelmingly passed the Norris-La Guardia Act to prohibit the labor injunction.

Then, fifteen years later, in the Taft-Hartley Act, the labor injunction—the process of haphazard prejudgment — was disembalmed. No showing of need was made for, and that tyrannical power to have men and women ordered back to work in smothered silence has no place in today's labor law.

My fifth, and the last point that I presume to make to you, is that new methods must be found for settling national emergency disputes.

We are willing, as a nation, to put up with serious inconveniences when bargaining stalemates result in shutting down production.

WE cannot, however, tolerate shutdowns which threaten our national safety, even that of the whole free world. The right to bargain collectively, does not include a right to stop the national economy.

The Taft-Hartley answer for this problem was the injunction. All that law boils down to is that in national emergency disputes employes shall be ordered to work for another eighty days on the employers' terms.

I have no miracle-drug solution for this problem. I am clear, though, that where the Government must intervene in these private disputes, its purpose must be not just to stop the strike, but to see that the dispute gets settled.

What we need is a completely new law—one that will provide for investigation and reporting to the public on the issues involved, one that will provide for more effective mediation between the parties. Its purpose should be to keep these cases out of the White House, not to put them in.

But the Congress should give the President a choice of procedures, not present him with no alternative when voluntary agreement proves impossible; seizure provisions geared to the circumstances; or arbitration; or a detailed hearing and recommendation or settlement terms; or a return to the dispute to the parties.

Such a law would leave the obligation to settle these disputes where it belongs — and that's with the parties. But it would not straight-jacket this settlement process.

It would express the firm voice of a nation which demands a fair and a quick settlement, and offers constructive help toward a solution.

Stevenson's Stand Hailed

JAMES B. CAREY, president of the CIO Electrical Workers and CIO secretary-treasurer, last week praised Gov. Stevenson's call for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and writing "a completely new Federal labor law."

Carey said Stevenson's Labor Day address demonstrates that "he and all democratic labor share a basic ideal—the continued extension of both political and economic democracy."

"We feel sure," the IUE president said, "that Stevenson's understanding of democratic trade unionism as a foundation stone in any free society and as a potent instrument in the world-wide fight against totalitarianism would deter him from any act which would weaken the world's largest free labor movement."

MEETS WITH CIO—Gov. Adlai Stevenson, Democratic presidential nominee, smiles broadly as he receives "official" notice of his endorsement by CIO from CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll. Left to right, in Stevenson's New York headquarters, are Joseph Curran, NMU president; James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer; Jacob Potofsky, ACWA president; Stevenson; David J. McDonald, USA secretary-treasurer; C. W. Werkau, CWA secretary-treasurer; Kroll; L. S. Buckmaster, Rubber Workers president; O. A. Knight, Oil Workers president; Henry C. Fleisher, CIO publicity director; Frank Rosenblum, ACWA secretary-treasurer and Emil Rieve, TWUA president.

A Good Place To Start

Gen. Eisenhower has come out against sin.

Now that the Republican presidential candidate proposes to use "the scoop shovel" in Washington, we suggest a few places he might dig:

• The case of Richard Nixon, Senator from California and Eisenhower's running mate. In the 1950 campaign in which Nixon slandered Helen Gahagan Douglas out of Congress, lameduck Sen. Brewster (R. Maine) used Henry (The Dutchman) Grunewald—perhaps Washington's most notorious "fixer"—to deliver $5000 to Nixon's primary campaign in violation of GOP rules.

• The case of Theodore McKeldin, GOP governor of Maryland who apes McCarthy on occasion, and who nominated Eisenhower at Chicago. Recently and mysteriously McKeldin received $7000—the equivalent of two mink coats—from "old friends." There were so many protests he had to give it back.

• And the well-known case of Joe McCarthy himself and the $10,000 he got from Lustron housing outfit for a booklet while the Senator was investigating housing.

On one point we'll agree with Ike; the GOP is qualified on corruption. It knows all about it—all the way from the Credit Mobilier railroad scandals after the Civil War to Teapot Dome and Andy Mellon's tax refund deals.

Where It Begins

All of the evidence to date indicates that corruption in government, where it exists, reflects corruption in U. S. society, that graft results from the impact of "fast buck" business practices upon a weak official. For every bribe-taker, don't forget, there is a bribe-giver.

The latest demonstration of business corruption upon government is detailed in the report last week of the House Teague Committee on veterans' housing.

Bribery, fraud, artificial price hikes, jerry-building, conscious inflation of home prices for both veterans and other buyers—such are the practices in a score of cities as detailed by the House report.

Time and again, Congress has killed or whittled down to almost nothing Fair Deal programs for low-rent, decent public housing.

"We can do it better," the lobbyists said, denouncing public housing as "socialistic."

Now look at the mess they made.

Trouble For McCarran

To the election defeats of Sen. Brewster and Rep. Rankin must be added the troubles Pat McCarran has in Nevada.

Last week McCarran's hand-picked candidate for the Senate, Alan Bible, a well-known former state official, was defeated by Thomas Mechling, a young newspaperman. It was, according to a report from Reno, a "political earthquake" that hit McCarran's well-oiled machine and the big mining, cattle and gambling interests behind him.

McCarran can still lord it over a large part of Washington, with his power of the pursestring—but not over the people of Nevada.

More Pressure On Prices

"There's a lot more inflation potential that maybe you don't see," said Ellis Arnall on retiring as head of the Office of Price Stabilization. Here are excerpts from his national radio broadcast:

By ELLIS ARNALL

I AM AFRAID there are many Americans who just don't know the dangers of inflation. These are the people who realize that the cost of living is inching up month by month, but who aren't particularly disturbed.

They don't see any sudden spurts or skyrocketing effects. The cost of living creeps slowly higher, but only six tenths of 1%, which doesn't seem much. Not much. No great, dramatic, convulsive burst. A little inflation may not be such a bad thing, they say.

But what if prices go higher, and then higher, and the mad rush accelerates? What if our dollars continue to depreciate in value? I am not trying to be an alarmist. Just happen to have been sitting at the desk to which all requests for ceiling price increases eventually come. In June and July alone OPS received 3000 applications for price increases.

If some of the inflation around you looks good and sounds good, because there are a few more quarters and half-dollars to jingle—don't be fooled! Don't be lulled by some of the talk you hear. There's a lot more inflation potential that maybe you don't see, because it's still under the lids permitted by even the inadequate OPS controls.

My parting word as OPS director is still what I've said all along. What this country needs and needs desperately during this period of national emergency is stronger and better lids, stronger and better controls.

The basic cause of today's inflationary situation is an unprecedented peacetime increase in government expenditures. Behind that greater-than-ever flow into the economy of dollars you can read, as other causes, the threat of Communist aggression, Korea, and this country's determination to build a national and international defensive machine. Military appropriations since Korea have totaled $155 billions. In one year, the Defense Dept. obligated $62 billions.

In the eight months after Korea, in that immense speculative boom that was largely psychological since few real shortages existed, cost of living prices walked right up the side of the blackboard on the price chart. Eight per cent in eight months. For a family that was spending $3600 for living expenses then, the increase was $300.

OPS froze prices in January of 1951. The record since then is one that plainly makes out the case for effectiveness of direct price controls, even controls that are something less than perfect. Since the price freeze your cost of living has advanced at the rate of only two-tenths of 1% a month, in spite of the fact that only 47% of consumers' goods measured by the Bureau of Labor Statistics Price Index are under full price control.

The price provisions of the act passed in June by the Congress have put new severe limitations on the authority of OPS to do much about your cost of living. Fruits and vegetables, both fresh and processed, were taken right out of the possibility of any price control. Appropriations were reduced 50%. Our personnel has been cut from 12,000 to approximately 5000.

WHAT'S THE ANSWER? Well, pretty largely that's up to you and Congress. OPS food price controls are pretty much a tissue of inadequate controls. Nevertheless, we're doing what we can under the law. Beginning Oct. 1, more than half the nation's 500,000 grocers will begin posting ceiling prices on selected groups of staple grocery prices. You'll be able to see what the ceiling prices are. But even these partially controlled items and their prices are going to look awfully high.

We must continue to use the force of public opinion as the strongest weapon against inflation. You, the American people, have the power to be the real price stabilizers—through your good sense and restraint in buying, your resistance to prices you feel are out of line, and your interest in protecting the soundness of our dollar.

Kroll To Quit Ohio Post

JACK KROLL, National CIO-PAC director, has announced he will not be a candidate for re-election as president of the Ohio CIO Council.

Kroll, council president since 1939, said the pressure of other duties was responsible for his decision. He is also manager of the Cincinnati Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and an ACWA vice-president.

In announcing his decision, Kroll noted the advances of the 16-year-old Ohio CIO Council from a "handful of members to over 500,000."

A Teen-Ager Says—

'Labor Helps America By Putting People First'

"How Unions Help Our Nation" is told in this digest of an essay by Wilma Louise Reno, senior at Lincoln High School, Elwood City, Pa. She won the $500 grand prize in the essay contest conducted by the CIO Glass Workers for high school students whose parents are members of the union. Miss Reno's mother is a member of Local 135 of the Glass Workers.

By WILMA LOUISE RENO

LABOR UNIONS are a natural organization of the people to better themselves. Every man desires to better himself but most men need guidance to attain their goals. The labor unions extend to their members the means of bettering themselves.

By raising the working and the living standards of the masses of the working people, the labor unions are raising the working and the living standards of the whole nation.

The labor unions are interested in the social problems of the people. They are interested in the hours, wages and working conditions, and even the housing conditions of their members. They show respect for the individual and his opinions. They teach the value of the individual and his life. They teach man to respect his fellow man and deal fairly with him.

Where there is mutual respect and fair dealing, there will be advantages for everyone. The unions make a person realize his importance in the nation and the affairs of the nation. They show the working man that he is indispensable to his nation.

The working man is able to see his position in the nation and better able to evaluate the things that he has and the things he wants. He will not likely be swayed by propaganda about another form of government said to be superior to his own. He will understand that what they are offering him does not compare to what he has.

We want democracy to show to the world that it is a workable government of the people. To achieve this our government needs to utilize every possible means. The union is a valuable tool in this endeavor.

The unions help our nation because they work with it. In a spirit of cooperation they try to comply with the demands of government. The government and the unions do not work at cross purposes. The main goal of the government and the labor unions is to help the people.

The unions educate their members to vote intelligently at the polls and achieve better government through better leaders. These leaders are an asset to the nation as a whole. The labor unions encourage their members to take part in their government. Citizens interested in their government will attain a better organized nation.

The labor unions give all their members an equal chance and protection of their rights. These principles have taken the laborer out of the position of servant and into the position of employe. He is a man with rights and privileges. A man who works to earn what he has knows he has a right to be proud of his labor. Such a man is a good citizen. He is a man who will serve his nation well.

The labor unions help our nation by raising the working and living standards, by educating the people to understand the laws and vote intelligently, by working with the government, by organizing the people and helping them to better themselves. The labor unions help this nation by considering the people first.

Inquiry Demanded—

Jim Crow Herds Scabs In Coast URW Strike

CALIFORNIA last week was asked to investigate "race-baiting" scab-herding aimed at breaking a strike of the CIO Rubber Workers in the Los Angeles area.

The demand was served on Atty. Gen. Edmund G. Brown by Sec.-Treas. Albert T. Lunceford of the Greater L. A. CIO Council.

He particularly asked investigation of reports that the self-styled Wage Earners Committee—the latest open-shop hate group to operate in Southern California — was "masterminding" the strike-breaking operation.

Involved is URW-CIO Local 141, which has been out for a month at plants of the Pacific Hard Rubber Co. and Western Molded Products, Inc. Major issues are a 10c an hour wage increase and improved working conditions. More than half of the striking workers are Negroes.

Lunceford reported the two rubber firms—they are both subsidiaries of Stauffer Chemical Co.—recently got strike-breakers through the Los Angeles Mutual Employers Association.

"We have reports," Lunceford said, "that this so-called employment agency is recruiting new employes for the companies without telling them the plants are on strike.

"Furthermore, they are using the immoral pretext that there is an 'understanding' between the company and the union 'to get rid of' all Negro employes and replace them with white personnel."

Lunceford called this a "vicious race-baiting tactic intended to slander the union and pit one group of workers against another."

One of the founders of the Wage Earners Committee, Atty. Cecil Collins, is representing management of the struck companies.

CIO Backs Valley Agencies At Conservation Conference

THE COMPLEX and closely interrelated problems of watershed protection and development were discussed last week by Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation, at a meeting in Caracas, Venezuela.

The session was the third general assembly of the Intl. Union for the Protection of Nature. Smith attended as an observer for the CIO and as a delegate from the National Parks Association, of which he is an executive committee member.

"It would be a pleasant thing to suppose," he said, "they (the problems) could be solved in little pieces by watershed management associations working within limited areas.

"But it is obviously quite out of the question to solve the conflicts . . . except through an agency having jurisdiction over the entire river basin. Many people are frightened by that idea, which is essentially the TVA approach; but they have not offered any satisfactory alternative.

"A comprehensive plan is essential; it must comprise the entire river basin; it must be pointed toward a rounded solution of all resource problems.

"As a safeguard against abuses, the law must contain very specific directives on policies and priorities; it should put watershed management first, for example: power development should come second.

"It is quite possible to draft laws along these lines, and even to provide for judicial relief where administrative agencies neglect or violate their duties."

Carey, Haywood Broadcast—

Russ Unions Called 'False Fronts' To Protect State From Workers

UNIONS in Communist nations are "nothing but shells of real unions," "nothing more than branches of the Soviet government."

Those are the opinions of Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, and James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer.

They spoke on a special Labor Day broadcast over the ABC network, contrasting the free trade unions of the United States and slave labor behind the Iron Curtain.

Carey charged Russian unions "won't act to protect the worker. They act to protect the state and the government from the worker. The trade union leaders are buck sergeants in a Communist apparatus," he said, "and the rank and file members are the yardbirds of the Communist system."

Agreeing that Russian unions are "false-front trade unions," Haywood recalled he had seen these "puppet unions" in action while in West Berlin two months ago to attend a meeting of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

"There is no collective bargaining in any Communist nation," Haywood said. "There couldn't be, for collective bargaining is a discussion among equal parties. I would expect to hear Charlie McCarthy arguing with Edgar Bergen before I would expect to hear a Communist trade union arguing with the Communist government."

Outlining the way Communist trade unions are run by the government, Carey noted that recently, the Czechoslovakian Prime Minister violently attacked the trade union leaders of that country and "then announced a complete reorganization of the trade union structure from top to bottom."

"That couldn't happen here," Carey continued, "because American trade unions are free of outside control. In Russia and Czechoslovakia, that's not the case. The government runs the show in those countries and the Communist Party and the secret police enforce the government's power over workers."

Reporting on conferences he had with leaders of democratic unions in West Berlin, Haywood said their reports of life in the Eastern Zone "add up to a story of human degradation and slave labor."

Informers Told To Get Busy By Chinese Commie Regime

IT ALL depends, in the Communist Party, on where you happen to be sitting.

In the United States, when William Cummings testified in the trial of 15 New York Communists on charges of violating the Smith Act that he was an FBI informer, the CP Daily Worker denounced his statement as "sordid."

"Cummings' replies (to questions)," said the Daily Worker account, "developed into a running story of the terrible depth of deceit and degradation to which a political police spy must sink . . ."

It's different in China, according to a Reuters dispatch recently printed in the Christian Science Monitor. There the Communist governing body, the State Administrative Council, has ordered every government office in the nation to open up a "denunciation reception room" where people can go to denounce friends, relatives and others for opposing the regime.

"Informers were told by the council," said the dispatch, "to get out among the people, observing everything and listening to accusations against the Communists . . . the Ministry of Public Security announced plans to set up a spy committee in virtually every school, factory, office, government organization and neighborhood. . . .

"The Communist Party and the state will replace the family system, and filial devotion, more powerful in China than in most countries, will be denounced as 'reactionary'."

SCRAP TAFT-HARTLEY—Stevenson tells crowd packing Detroit's Cadillac Square that Taft-Hartley must go.

Detroit Labor By The Thousands Marched And Cheered Stevenson

By TED OGAR
Special Correspondent

MORE THAN 200,000 Detroiters turned out for a Labor Day parade which possibly was the biggest in the motor city's history.

Approximately 60,000 CIO and AFL members marched down heat-softened Woodward Ave. in near 90 degree weather while an estimated crowd of 150,000 lined both sides of the parade route.

This was the fifth year that Detroit labor held a joint parade. The first one was in 1948 when Pres. Truman chose the auto capital to launch his successful campaign.

Gov. Stevenson's speech attracted a crowd of 50,000 which was jammed tightly in Cadillac Square in front of the city hall. So great was the crush—several men and women fainted—that only the most adroit found it possible to applaud.

CIO and AFL leaders were prominent on the platform from which Stevenson spoke in Detroit as they were in Grand Rapids, Hamtramck, Pontiac and Flint.

UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who accompanied the Democratic candidate on the five-city tour, told the Detroit audience that "this is a great day for organized labor."

He said "in 1952 there are two crusades going on in America. The first is to win economic and social justice. The second crusade is led by the generals: General Eisenhower, General Motors, General MacArthur and General Electric.

"The Republican party is wedded to the interests of Wall Street. The issue in this campaign is whether we move ahead or go back to the days of Herbert Hoover and the depression. We're going to keep our capitol in Washington, D. C., where it belongs."

Frank X. Martel, 29-term president of the Greater Detroit and Wayne County Federation of Labor, called the parade the "biggest in Detroit history. Organized labor is a part of the fabric of this great community. It is here to stay."

Colorful floats, dozens of brightly uniformed bands, scores of drum majorettes and thousands of banners and placards provided a field day for still camera and sound movie photographers — and sharp demonstration of organized labor's goals.

The placards hailed past gains and urged greater political action for the future. The emphasis was on political action. In addition to a "register and vote theme", they plugged voting a straight Fair Deal ballot in November.

Some of the most popular signs carried slogans such as "The Big Corporation Wheels Are in the Corruption Steals" and "To Protect Your Pay on Payday, Vote on Election Day".

A heavy downpour almost broke up Pontiac's Labor Day picnic but 2000 celebrators braved the pelting rain to greet the Democratic presidential candidate.

The heavy rains which swept Michigan in the afternoon had let up but little when Stevenson arrived in Flint. There he was greeted by a crowd of almost 5000 who joined him in singing "Solidarity Forever."

Adlai Proves He's No Baby Kisser

Baby kissing is one campaign task Adlai Stevenson doesn't seem to relish.

In Flint, Mich., he commented that no one had asked him to kiss a baby during the trip.

Promptly, a CIO Auto Worker Don Begley, boosted his three-year-old daughter, Valerie, into Stevenson's arms.

The governor held Valerie gingerly and expertly, but didn't kiss her.

So The CIOers Asked Ike About T-H... Here's What They Heard

"GEN. EISENHOWER displayed a tremendous lack of knowledge of the important legislative issues which have a direct impact upon the pay envelope of American workers."

That was the report of three New Jersey CIO leaders who visited the general in his New York headquarters.

They were: Joel R. Jacobson, CIO-PAC director for the Essex-West Hudson CIO Council; Hugh Caldwell, Council president, and Fred Ascough of the CIO Auto Workers.

They asked Eisenhower whether he felt the open shop, union shop or closed shop was more conducive to harmonious labor relations.

He confessed he didn't know the difference between the three terms.

They asked the general about union security.

He replied, "That is the first time I have ever heard that phrase used."

He listened to a description of a Jersey strike, where the strikers were denied an opportunity to vote in an NLRB election after 16 months on the picket line. The denial resulted from a Taft-Hartley provision which allows only strikebreakers to vote.

"Something sounds wrong there," said the general.

Asked about various Taft-Hartley provisions and other questions on housing and rent control, Eisenhower said he couldn't answer such technical questions, but would rely upon experts in their respective fields.

Said the CIO visitors:

"It is difficult to understand how any worker could support Eisenhower when he knows very little of our problems, or their solutions."

GOP Runs Out On Debate Offer

MICHIGAN Republican politicians, who had been issuing press statements saying they wanted to talk to labor groups, got cold feet when the opportunity was presented them last week.

CIO Auto Workers had arranged for a three-day open Town Hall meeting in Grand Rapids' Civic Auditorium, complete with two half-hour television shows.

Gov. G. Mennen Williams and Sen. Moody, both Democrats, accepted without reservations. Republican Gubernatorial Candidate Fred Alger, Jr., and Rep. Potter, running for the Senate, declined.

A GOP spokesman said they didn't want to appear before a "hand-picked audience."

Said the UAW, "by what magic can you secure a hand-picked TV audience?"

Kefauver Urges Backing For Adlai

SEN. KEFAUVER last week urged his pre-convention supporters to turn out a "tremendous vote" for the man who won the Democratic nomination.

Kefauver, in a letter to 3000 of his followers, said Gov. Stevenson will "fight to rout out corruption" and "continue the good fight for the democratic ideal."

The Tennessee senator, who campaigned vigorously for the nomination Stevenson won, said the Democratic nominee "will give the American people forward-looking, courageous leadership in finding new solutions to old problems rather than yielding to those who would return to yesterday."

'Survival of Free At Stake On No

LABOR has one of the hardest fights in its history ahead of it even if labor-endorsed candidates are victorious in the November elections, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey said on Labor Day.

"The stakes that we are fighting for may be the very survival of the democratic free trade union movement," he warned a rally sponsored by the United Labor Day Committee at Sandusky, O.

Carey said that even before the last Congress adjourned, "reactionary Republican leaders" were talking about enacting still more stringent restrictions upon labor than those of the Taft-Hartley Act. The GOP platform, he added, contains "pledges to bring an end to many of the most forward-looking measures of the New Deal and the Fair Deal."

"All evidence before us makes clear that a Republican victory this fall would be a major triumph for McCarthyized tyranny, Capehartized inflation and Jennerized social retreats," he said.

"The real victor in the reactionary GOP crusade would not be General Eisenhower but the forces of another General Depression."

IT WAS truly labor's day in Milwaukee last Monday when Pres. Truman came to address a capacity crowd of 11,500 at the down-town Arena.

Guest of the joint CIO, AFL and independent union Labor Political League, Truman was met at the railroad station by a picked committee of CIO and AFL leaders.

At a reception before his speech, President Truman made a brief informal address to a group of Milwaukee labor leaders—local union presidents, chief stewards, committeemen—and their wives.

Again, when the President made his entry into the packed Arena, he was

Sparkman Got A Big Hand Rapping T-H, Blasting GOP On High Prices

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN
Special Correspondent

SEN. SPARKMAN, Democratic nominee for vice-president, lashed out at the Taft-Hartley Act and indicated agreement with Gov. Stevenson on civil rights before a record-breaking throng at a CIO Labor Day Picnic in Los Angeles.

Upwards of 25,000 people crowded Stream-Land Park to hear addresses by Sparkman and Allan S. Haywood, CIO Executive Vice-President at the outing sponsored by the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council.

Sparkman told the enthusiastic crowd "I am proud of my stand against this (T-H) Act, and proud of my party's stand against it."

His remark on civil rights came in lauding Stevenson for bringing "new vision and new genius" to bear on problems facing the nation.

"On civil rights, for example," Sparkman said, "he has expressed beliefs, principles and programs with which all good Democrats can find some measure of agreement. We can heartily echo him when he says that 'the time has come to talk sensibly about how we can make more rapid progress in this field rather than how we can make more votes'."

Sparkman made his sharpest attacks on the Taft-Hartley Act, which he branded as a "sin of the Republican Party against Labor." He got the loudest burst of applause when he departed from his prepared text to say, "the Republican platform clearly says it believes in keeping the Taft-Hartley Act. The Democratic Party clearly says it believes in repealing the Taft-Hartley Act."

"I voted to sustain Pres. Truman's veto of Taft-Hartley," he recalled. "I was convinced by his analysis that it was not a fair and workable law. I am proud of my stand against this Act, and proud of my Party's stand against it."

Sparkman charged that the Republican's anti-labor stand "cannot be separated from their stand against the best interests of the farmer and the small businessman."

"Except for what Gov. Stevenson called the 'Republican Liberal Hour' which occurs just before every national election but never when Congress is in session, you cannot count on the Republican Party to be any different in the future from what it has been in the past—the party against the common man," Sparkman said.

Speaking just before Sparkman, Haywood declared the issue for labor in 1952 is "whether you're going to hold the gains you've won, or go backward."

In a stirring talk that brought frequent outbreaks of applause, Haywood recalled the days of the depression and several epic labor battles.

"Then," Haywood said, "the Democratic Party nominated a man who put human rights over property rights—Franklin D. Roosevelt, the great humanitarian." Haywood also praised Pres. Truman "as one of America's greatest common men."

He sharply rapped Gen. Eisenhower, Republican candidate for President, for remarking that security could be found "in prison."

Turning to the record of Sen. Nixon, Republican candidate for vice-president, Haywood pointed out he had voted against labor 12 out of 15 times.

SEN. SPARKMAN with family waves a greeting at Los Angeles CIO Labor Day celebration.

"And the three times he voted with labor, it was on bi-partisan foreign policy issues," he said.

"I say to Sen. Sparkman and to Gov. Stevenson—Labor is behind you," Haywood concluded.

On inflation, Sparkman said "the Republicans have consistently voted against every attempt to keep inflation from undermining the fruits of your labor."

The Democratic Administration, Sparkman said, kept prices "almost level" from Pearl Harbor to the end of the war with Japan, "when the American economic system was under the greatest strain it has ever known . . ." Prices were also held down from 1943 to 1945, he said.

"Then for a time the Republicans got their hands on our inflation control machinery," he said. "Prices haven't been the same since."

Sparkman suggested the cost of "Republican disruption of price and rent control" be figured out, and then placed in the form of a bill "done up in one of those little open-window envelopes we get our bills in, and mailed to the Republican National Committee."

"It's true that even an organization as wealthy as the Republican Party won't be able to pay the cost of inflation it owes the American people," Sparkman said.

Textile Worker Challenges Dixiegop Joe Martin In Home Bailiwick

TEXTILE WORKERS in Massachusetts' 14th congressional district are digging in for an all-out fight against Joe Martin, long-time Republican boss of the House of Representatives.

Edward F. Doolan, Fall River TWUA official, is seeking the Democratic nomination in that state's September primary. With the nomination goes the man-sized job of unseating Martin, whose anti-labor record made him permanent chairman of the Republican national convention last July.

Massachusetts Textile Workers have good reasons for knowing Martin and better reasons for wanting to retire him to private life.

Back in 1934, Doolan recalled as he kicked off his campaign at a TWUA Labor day outing, he visited the GOP leader urging him to support a 40c an hour minimum wage. Martin promised support.

But when the bill came on the House floor, Martin voted against it.

His record since then is filled with such betrayals of the people's needs, TWUA members point out.

A crafty politician, who knows how to complete a political horse-trade, Martin is credited with organizing the Dixiegop coalition of reactionary Republicans and Southern Dixiecrats.

F. D. R. once charged his opposition was led by "Martin, Barton and Fish," a trio of anti-labor congressmen.

Barton and Fish have long since been swept out of Congress, Doolan said.

"Now is the time to get rid of Martin, too."

Classroom Catastrophe—

Johnny's Back In School, If He Can Get In

By MILTON PLUMB

THIS IS the month when something like a national catastrophe will catch up with one-fifth of our population. The immediate victims are the 34.7 million youngsters making up the biggest school enrollment in our history. Ultimately, the real victim may be the U. S. itself.

The tragedy, results from a failure to heed the warnings of educational authorities dating back several years. As a result, our school system suffers gravely from neglect.

Just how seriously we've failed can be clearly shown in a few figures. If you've a child in school this year, the chances are better than—

- Three to two that he will be in a classroom too crowded to give him the minimum standards of educational opportunity, as well as of health and safety.
- One to four that the school building you send him to does not meet minimum fire safety conditions, or even endangers his life.
- Two to three that lack of adequate school construction in your community has caused this condition to come about.

There are many other shortcomings in the educational system. One is a staggering shortage of teachers. We shall give our sons and daughters only two out of every three additional teachers needed to handle the jump of 1.7 million students entering school this year.

Yet for every 26 students, one other young American won't get an education. He will be one of the 1.4 million children of school age—chiefly the sons and daughters of migratory workers—who won't go to school at all.

The U. S. Office of Education and all responsible educational associations have been pointing out the approaching calamity for years. They warned us five years ago, on the basis of 1947 birth statistics, that we should need at least a quarter of a million more classrooms to take care of the increased school population.

Some communities tried to meet the need, but even in those comparatively few where adequate financing could be managed, the shortage of materials that resulted from the defense program prevented adequate construction. A recent survey by the National Education Association shows that about 47% of our school systems have building projects delayed by lack of funds or materials.

The result: 61% of our classrooms this year will be seriously overcrowded.

Nearly half a million students which could have been housed in these new projects now must be jammed into the already overcrowded buildings.

One out of five school buildings is between 50 and 80 years old, which accounts for the average of more than 2100 school fires per year over the last 15 years.

Dr. Earl J. McGrath, U. S. Commissioner of Education, warned last March that the school situation is "rapidly approaching a major national catastrophe."

He added it's going to get even worse unless far more drastic action than any now contemplated is taken. More and more pupils will be going to school over the next three years. In 1953 school enrollment will rise by another 1.4 million, in 1954 the jump will be 1.2 million, and in 1955 it will go up an additional 700,000.

There are now only about half the number of qualified teachers needed to provide proper instruction. Last year more than 75% of the states reported substantial teacher shortages in city elementary schools and 90% said they had acute shortages in rural areas.

Just to take care of the 1.6 million pupils entering elementary school this year, without trying to make up for the previously existing shortage, the Office of Education estimates that more than 158,000 teachers are needed. Only a little better than 100,000 new instructors will actually be supplied.

This means bigger classes and double shifts for the already underpaid and overworked teachers. Teacher turnover, which has already increased greatly, will probably rise still higher as a result.

And more and more, vacancies will have to be filled by teachers with "substandard" certificates. Despite the many new demands of modern living, our children will be getting a much poorer education than their parents got a quarter of a century earlier.

Educators warn that this undermining of our public schools imperils democracy itself.

"Free and universal education is a unique contribution of our American people to the progress of mankind," Willard E. Givens, NEA executive secretary points out. "The continuous existence of any society depends upon a powerful cohesive influence at the very heart of its structure, else its differences lead to disintegration. The public school is one agent of this unifying influence."

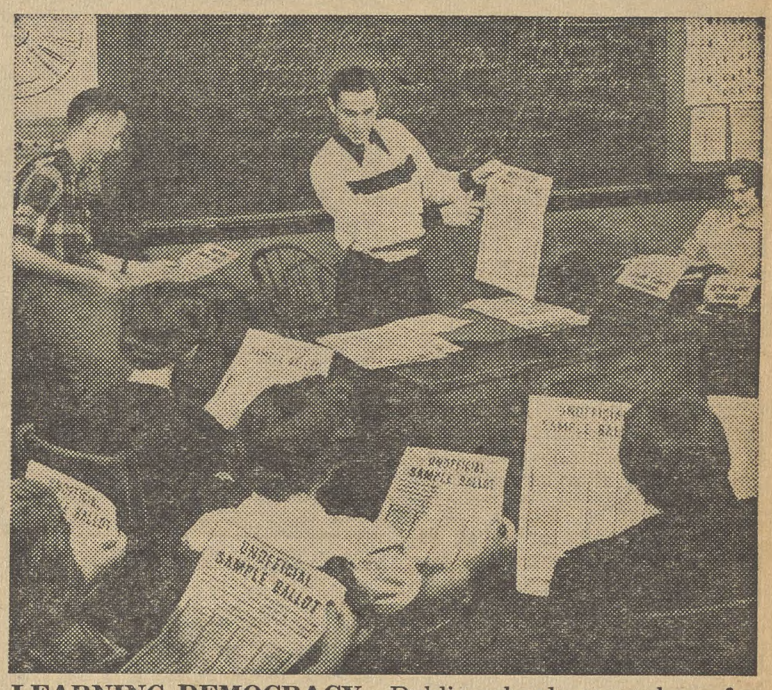
Commissioner McGrath holds a similar view, saying:

"Failure to maintain the education facilities, or to expand and develop these facilities, is to undermine our essential and military strength. The construction of a new schoolhouse is no less imperative as a defense measure than the construction of a new bombing plane."

To provide just a bare minimum of such defense in the educational area, the people of the United States will have to construct 600,000 new classrooms in the next five years. About 250,000 of these represent a backlog shortage that was built up between 1930 and 1950, when the depression and World War II seriously curtailed new school construction.

Whether or not those classrooms get built depends entirely upon what each of us does in our own community. For the public school can be no better or no worse than the people make it.

OFF THEY GO—Like these smiling kids, 1.7 million new students are beginning "school days" all over the U. S.



LEARNING DEMOCRACY—Public schools are a base for democracy. This student group studies sample ballots.

BUT OVERCROWDED classrooms, underpaid teachers and growing enrollments are building up crisis in education.

Migrant Kids Are Denied Schooling

THE BIG corporation farmers—whose low-wage exploitation of migrant farm hands has been called a national scandal — have also earned the distinction of being the nation's worst enemies of education.

This year 1.4 million young Americans will be denied an education chiefly because of the new feudal system in industrialized agriculture. They are the children of America's migrant workers.

Up until 1950, these youngsters were excluded entirely from the coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act. Amendments adopted then now make it illegal for children under 16 to work in the fields during school hours.

The corporation farmers, who had so long defied the U. S. government by hiring illegal "wetback" labor, simply ignored the new educational provisions.

"Agriculture is the number one stumbling block in the efforts to obtain compliance with the child-labor provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act," the Dept. of Labor reported this year.

"According to the Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Divisions, more children were found employed unlawfully in farming than in any other major segment of American industry."

Although, 16 is the minimum age for employment of minors on farms during school hours, 66% of the under-age children which government investigators found working in agriculture last year were not even 14. Children from 5 to 9 years old made up 15% of the total. And they work through a nine- or 10-hour day in many hazardous jobs.

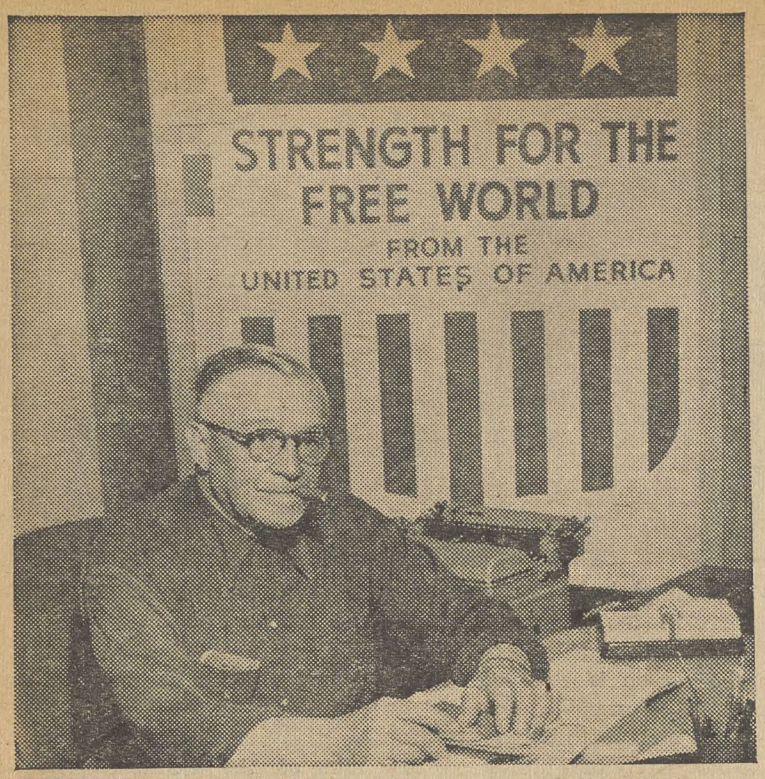
Because these children work instead of going to school, illiteracy is more than twice as great among rural as urban dwellers. Half of all rural dwellers complete only eight years of grade school.

"The results of child-labor investigations on farms during 1951 leads directly to one conclusion," says William R. McComb, administrator of the Labor Dept. program. "Greater efforts must be exerted to make sure that young people receive the protection that Congress intended them to have when enacting the amendments."

The CIO and other organizations working with the department seek to make communities realize their responsibilities toward the children of migrant workers. Through parent-teacher, welfare, church and civic groups, they are finding ways to bridge the differences of background and dress which tend to make migrant children reluctant to attend school.

To help educate migratory families about their children's rights under the new amendments, the CIO has joined 31 other national organizations in helping the Labor Dept. explain the program.

OUT OF LUCK—This youngster picking cotton is typical of migrant workers' children denied schooling.



"SHIRTSLEEVE DIPLOMAT"— Joseph C. Goyette, on leave from the CIO Shoeworkers Union and serving the Mutual Security Agency in Europe, has outlined a plan for French shoe factories which will materially improve the workers' standard of living.

Shoe Worker From Haverhill Aids Unionists In France

HERE IS THE story of how the European recovery program works—how American workers help other workers better their standard of living.

It is the story of Joseph C. Goyette. He is the 69-year-old, former manager of the CIO Shoe Workers Board in Haverhill, Mass., and a former board member of the Massachusetts State CIO Council.

Named as a productivity consultant on the Mutual Security Agency's European staff, Goyette surveyed four shoe factories in the Toulouse-Marseille region. He recommended they be used as pilot demonstration plants to show what could be accomplished in raising productivity in the French shoe industry.

All four plants were producing shoes by four different processes, rather than specializing in one particular line. As a result, part of the machinery was idle and production efficiency was reduced.

Following Goyette's suggestions, the plants reorganized. Working closely with the unions involved, management set out to improve the quality of their products, bring down sales prices and raise workers' wages.

Optimistic about the results, the four companies have now asked the MSA for a marketing and merchandising specialist to aid in setting up the new distribution and selling methods required under the new program.

And the French Shoe Workers Union has voted Goyette an honorary life membership as a result of his work during the past year.

21c Package Set At Borg-Warner

The CIO Auto Workers last week reported a contract settlement with Borg-Warner at one of the seven struck B-W plants in the Midwest.

A 21c package, including a cost-of-living wage increase, was negotiated at the company's Detroit plant, which employs 500 workers.

Minimum Wage Rule Set On MSA Ruhr Housing Project

SOMETHING NEW has been added to the construction industry in Germany—a requirement that employers pay the prevailing wage if they want to get in on the building of one of the country's largest postwar housing projects.

The German version of the Walsh-Healy Act was written into bids advertised for a 100 million deutschmarks home construction project sponsored by the Mine Workers Union, an affiliate of the German Federation of Labor; the German government, the local North Rhine Westphalia government and the Mutual Security Administration Special Mission.

The project calls for the construction of a large but undetermined number of single dwellings in developments of 500 to 800 units in eight coal mining centers in the Ruhr and neighboring areas. The MSA is financing the operation as a means of relieving Germany's deperate housing shortage and to provide shelter for the miners upon whose production the nation's industrial recovery depends.

The bids when advertised carried a proviso that in the construction contract, "the contractor obligates himself to see to it that between the elected bargaining partners or the organized workers a contract exists which contains as a minimum the usual standards for wages, working conditions and labor relations in the construction industry."

Victory In Saskatchewan—

PAC In Canada Builds Strength In Provinces

By HENRY WEISBACH
Executive Secretary, Political Action Committee Canadian Congress of Labor

THIS has been a year of provincial elections in Canada. Of the ten provinces, five held or are going to hold provincial elections this year.

Elections have been held in British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Quebec, and are pending in Alberta and New Brunswick.

The political action organization of the Canadian Congress of Labor had to be stepped up considerably in order to keep pace with the mounting demands of election organizations.

In most provinces, PAC has become more than a mere election organization. In many provinces, PACs have been permanently established and will be effective on a municipal, provincial and federal level all year round.

The biggest battles PACs engaged in were in British Columbia and Saskatchewan.

In Saskatchewan, a labor-farmer government has been in power since 1944. The Co-operative Commonwealth Federation (CCF), the political arm of organized labor in Canada, has led that government in Saskatchewan to good results.

LABOR legislation in Saskatchewan is the most advanced in Canada and it was not surprising that organized labor put on an all-out campaign to defeat the Liberal bid for power.

The PAC fight in Saskatchewan proved extremely successful. The CCF increased its majority from 31 to 42 seats out of a 53-seat Legislature. The Liberal opposition went down to a crushing defeat.

In British Columbia, a coalition government consisting of Liberals and Conservatives was in power for the last 11 years. This spring the coalition split up and the Liberals called an election. In its dying days, however, the coalition changed the Election act with the hope to keep the CCF from gaining office.

The new Election act is so involved as to make easy explanation impossible.

But almost two months after the election, the final outcome is still not certain since a number of recounts may yet change the picture. It seems certain, however, that a new party in the province, the Social Credit Party, which can be considered the right wing of the Conservative Party, will form the government.

Organized labor staged a strong campaign for the election of CCF candidates and a number of trade unionists were successful. The outstanding example is Rae Eddie of the CIO Woodworkers, who defeated Premier Johnson of British Columbia. It is almost certain that British Columbia will have a new election within a year.

In the French-speaking province of Quebec, labor for the first time took part in the political action program of the CCL. Labor unions in Quebec are getting a raw deal from a government which is decidedly anti-labor and which is trying to hamstring labor in every way possible.

Political Action Committees across the country are now getting ready for an all-out federal campaign next year. It is almost certain that a federal election will be held in the spring of 1953 and PAC organizations will be ready for it.

Political Action has been accepted by an ever increasing number of members and officers of the CCL, who are beginning to realize how provincial governments, by legislation, can undo some of the hard work put into union negotiations.

With increasing PAC support from Canadian trade unionists, PAC looks forward to bigger successes in the future.

British Unions Support Rearmament Program

THE BRITISH Trades Union Congress, representing eight million organized workers, gave an overwhelming endorsement last week to Great Britain's rearmament program.

The TUC, holding its annual congress at Margate, England, overrode its Communist element and the left wingers headed by Aneurin Bevan in endorsing the approval of the rearmament program given earlier by its General Council.

The final vote, urging as much rearmament as the nation can support, was 5,597,000 to 1,450,000. Delegates vote the strength of their unions.

Before it was taken, three anti-rearmament resolutions were defeated. One demanding a cut in the program went down by 5,801,000 to 1,272,000 votes. Another urging international agreements through the United Nations to cut armaments, prohibit atomic, germ and bacteriological warfare, and develop backward nations, was beaten by 6,075,000 to 1,801,000 votes.

The third contained all the main current Comintern propaganda gimmicks. It opposed "preparations for war" and the rearmament of Germany and Japan, and called for a five-power conference "with a view to the signing of a peace treaty." It lost by 6,041,000 to 1,887,000 votes.

The left wingers, defeated on the issue for the third straight year, regained some of the ground they lost when they put over a resolution demanding more rather than less nationalization of industry.

A vote of 4,542,000 to 3,210,000 directed the General Council to draw up plans to extend government ownership to additional industries and for democratizing industries already nationalized. The plan is to be submitted to next year's congress and included in the Labor Party's election program.

ACLU Snaps 'Preposterous' At Legion's Inquiry Demand

THE AMERICAN Civil Liberties Union last week had a one-word rebuttal to the American Legion's insinuation that it was "a Communist or Communist-front organization."

That word was: "Preposterous."

The Legion, without discussion or debate, in its recent convention, asked a government investigation of the ACLU's "questionable record of subversive activities."

In an official statement, the ACLU said: "The American Civil Liberties Union is completely open, as it always has been, to any governmental investigation."

Then it pointed out that even the Legion's greatest "hero", Gen. Douglas MacArthur, had come to the Civil Liberties Union for help in Japan.

No governmental listing of Red or Communist-front groups has ever included the ACLU, it pointed out, and ex-Rep. Dies, head of the first House un-American Activities Committee, had formally recognized the non-Communist character of the ACLU.

The ACLU pointed out that it "exists simply and solely to defend civil liberties," and it is thus "diametrically opposed to the political tyranny of Communism."

CIO Aides Form Credit Union

The staff of the National CIO has organized the CIO Employes Federal Credit Union as a means of encouraging savings and building up a fund which members can borrow at a low rate of interest. All employes of the National CIO, wherever stationed, are eligible for membership.

Headquarters is at the National CIO office, 718 Jackson pl. N. W., Washington 6, D. C. The officers are president, Thommas Moran, president of Local Industrial Union 1695; vice president, Gervase N. Love, a member of the executive board of the Washington Newspaper Guild; treasurer, Harold Jack; clerk, James C. Allen. They and Mary McGarrahan constitute the board of directors.

FOOD—

'We've Sleepless Nights Because So Many Have Eatless Days'

THREE out of every four people in the world are hungry most of the time. Half of the world's population consumes less than 30% of its food. Most of the well-fed people live in the United States.

"We have sleepless nights because so many people have eatless days," Ernest R. Chamberlain, secretary of the Meals for Millions Foundation, described the current international situation during a visit to Washington.

"A starving man is a desperate man," he added. "A hungry world is a dangerous world."

What Chamberlain meant is the great problem summed up in two words—worldwide hunger. Many authorities call it the big crisis of our times.

It is far deeper than the struggle between democracy and communism.

It is the elemental struggle for survival, on a planet which just isn't capable of producing enough food to adequately feed —by customary eating habits—its 2½ billion inhabitants.

The next time you read the figures on the number of people living in countries which have embraced communism, remember that a good part of that total represents so-called "belly-communism." That means they were driven to embrace it by hunger and communist promises.

Now, most wish they hadn't. People have found that they can't eat promises.

The record of the Communists in supplying the food they promise is one of failure. Starvation, bringing death throughout the Ukraine, accompanied the birth of the Soviet state. And when China turned to communism a reported 32 million people starved in four provinces in the winter of 1949.

But the Communists know the meaning of hunger and the political significance of promises of food. Their chief appeal to starving millions in Asia rests upon such promises.

The world's starving peoples will be won to democracy by food, not promises. This realization is a part of President Truman's great new American foreign policy.

Even in the few short years that have elapsed, history is already able to record that it was the food and other help provided through the Marshall Plan—and not the inadequate military defenses then existing—that "contained" communism in Europe during the crucial years immediately after the war.

The President's "Point Four" program of aid to backward areas, and his continued insistence upon economic as well as military help to our allies, gave the world more hope.

Yet, the basic challenge everywhere is hunger and starvation.

"If every Communist obligingly dropped dead tonight, the world would still be hungry tomorrow," Chamberlain said. "The basic problem would be the same. Once we solve the problem of food many seemingly insoluble problems will vanish."

The American people have tried to respond to the need of their fellow human beings throughout the world. Much of our surplus food has been shipped abroad by the government. The people themselves have also sent food directly, through non-governmental establishments like CARE.

The United Nations — with American help—set up agencies like the UNRRA to get food into famine-stricken areas.

But hunger is still on the horizon. For example, the English ration of meat was increased to the equivalent "luxury" of what 30c weekly in this country will buy per person. In some parts of China and Korea today, a single bowl of rice or less per day is all that sustains countless men and women.

DISCOVERER.—Prof. Henry Borsook of California Institute of Technology originated Multi-Purpose Food.

These conditions, particularly in Asia, existed before the war, and have only been aggravated — not created — by its aftermath.

The problem of enough food is not temporary. It won't expect to disappear once the world recovers from World War II.

Agronomists—they are the scientists who apply economic measurements to agriculture—say the reason is obvious: There just isn't enough soil on the surface of the globe to raise all the foodstuffs that are needed to adequately feed all the people presently on earth.

OR THIS?—With fingers or chopsticks, MPF tastes just as good to children at Nakamura, Japan, nursery. Total cost of MPF meal for all of them: 52c.

THIS?—Starvation is plain in the faces of these children at Valcheri, India. Luckily, they were in group later given Multi-Purpose Food.

Is starvation an inevitable prospect for the human race?

Until recently, the answer given by most scientists would have been yes. Recent advances in the fields of dietetics and biochemistry, however, have—perhaps for the first time in history—made it possible for technology to feed everyone in the world adequately and well with existing resources.

One scientist who contributed much to bringing this possibility about is Prof. Henry Borsook of the California Institute of Technology. He sums up the problem in these words:

"As long as we persist in thinking of food in terms of bushels of wheat, we'll never have enough to go around. As soon as we consider food as a conveyor of essential nutrients—and look for the cheapest and best way to get these nutrients—we'll find we have enough for all."

Hearing of his work and of the great advances in nutritional science, Clifford E. Clinton—then food consultant for the UNRRA, the Food Administration for War and the Army — in 1943, asked Borsook to develop a new food that would give essential nutrients at low cost. Borsook agreed to donate his services, provided the results of his research would be free to the world.

By the following year, Borsook delivered his formula for a new product known as Multi-Purpose Food (MPF). A powder substance looking like brown sugar, two ounces of MPF supplies the rough equivalent in nutritive value of

- ¼ lb. beef
- 1 glass of milk
- 1 potato
- 1 average serving of green peas.

The cost of this meal—which supplies practically all essential nutrients—is 3c. That means 33 meals for less than a dollar.

Having the formula, Clinton lived up to his pledge to make the product available to the world. In 1946 he founded in Los Angeles the Meals for Millions Foundation, a non-profit corporation. CIO Pres. Philip Murray was named a member of its advisory committee, on which he still serves.

Operating with limited capital, all obtained from public donations, the Foundation arranged for the production of MPF and launched a world-wide educational campaign.

In the last five years it has introduced 18½ million of these "3c meals" to people in 84 countries. MPF has been distributed by 126 relief, religious and governmental agencies to hungry people in refugee camps, hospitals, schools and missions throughout the world.

From Alaska to India—and even on Pitcairn Island—people have used and welcomed MPF. But the demand from starving people for additional shipments is many hundred times greater than can be met by the Foundation with present funds.

The aim of the Foundation is to stimulate interest in MPF among churches and relief agencies, who can purchase the product through the Foundation at the "3c per meal" rate.

The Foundation also provided facilities for individuals who wish to ship small packages to friends and relatives abroad. It has cooperated with other organizations in special campaigns to provide relief to victims of floods in this country, as well as to hunger-stricken American Indians and migrant farm workers.

Nearly a quarter of a million pounds have been shipped to India since last November, and several tons of MPF have been produced experimentally within that country. The Foundation encourages such domestic production. The major ingredient of MPF is soy grits, easily grown in most areas.

From Korea, where refugees were eating millet and rotten sweet potatoes, Father George Carroll wrote: "MPF is a godsend. Please send us more."

Civil defense officials have recommended storing a supply of it for use as a food extender in an emergency. It keeps indefinitely.

Housewives who have experimented with it for daily use report that they have found it an effective way of combatting inflation. While it can be eaten alone, MPF has the added quality of taking on the flavor of food with which it is mixed.

Better still, it is a fortified diet, and tests have shown that children fed MPF with other food grow more rapidly than those fed on the regular food alone.

Inventor Borsook warns, however, that, as far as taste is concerned, MPF is not intended to replace the normal diet "wherever people can afford it."

"All of us," he acknowledges, "would prefer a steak at any time."

BALANCED.—Plate of MPF held by Hughene Vaughn has food value equal to milk, beef, vegetables shown.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

ON LABOR DAY, the writer had the great pleasure to visit Los Angeles to make two talks in observance of our holiday. In the morning, I talked to the Catholic Labor Institute of Los Angeles which had invited me to address their annual Labor Day Breakfast. I told the gathering of our fight against the Communists, and how we routed them out of the CIO.

That afternoon, I had the honor to address a very splendid Labor Day picnic sponsored by the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council. More than 25,000 men, women and children attended that picnic, making it probably the biggest event of its kind in the nation.

Sen. Sparkman, Democratic candidate for vice-president, spoke to the crowd and took some hard cracks at the infamous Taft-Hartley Act. The Senator said he was in favor of its repeal, and called it the "sin of the Republican Party against Labor."

★

IN MY TALK to the CIO members and their families, I recalled how it was for working people during the depression, in the Hoover days, and even before then, under other Republican administrations. I could tell by the way the crowd acted that a lot of them, too, remembered, and didn't want to go back to those terrible days.

Then, I recalled how the Democratic Party nominated Franklin D. Roosevelt, the great humanitarian, and the people elected him. All of us know of the wonderful Roosevelt record, and what he did for all the people.

The issue for Labor in 1952 is whether we are going to continue to make the gains we started when FDR was President, or go backwards. Ours is a fighting movement, and we are going to continue to fight and make gains.

The picnic, which attracted so many CIO members and their families and friends, is a wonderful example of what CIO does by working together.

Albert T. (Blackie) Lunceford, secretary-treasurer of the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council, and all the CIO people who helped him deserve congratulations for the picnic's success.

Fraud, Bribery, Jerry Building On Vets' Homes Told In Report

WIDESPREAD bribery, fraud, improper construction and other irregularities have been turned up in dozens of cities across the country by the House Committee investigating the veterans' housing program.

In a stinging report which lashed out at builders, lenders and housing officials of the Veterans' Administration, the committee charged that practices followed by the industry with VA connivance had resulted in greatly inflating the cost of homes, produced substandard housing that soon will resemble slum areas, and made GIs pay millions of dollars in overcharges.

The worst violations were found in San Diego, Calif., with Washington, D. C., a close second. In the west coast city, the situation was described as a "general criminal conspiracy" between lenders, builders and VA housing officials.

A San Diego grand jury has already indicted 17 persons for bribery, making false statements and circumventing credit restrictions. These include the president and vice president of a large savings and loan association, the vice president of a mortgage loan association, the president and two vice presidents of a large construction company, and the manager, vice president and attorney of another. Six VA housing officials have also been cited.

The committee said that in the Washington area from 10% to 15% of current excessively high real estate costs, particularly in the low and middle-price fields, are the "direct result" of official dereliction in setting reasonable values for real estate purchased by veterans.

IT CHARGED VA officials "conceived the program to be a builders' program rather than a veterans' program, and operated on the assumption that the builder must be pacified at all costs."

It added that "a combination of inefficiency, deliberate favoritism and misconception of the basic function of the loan guaranty division has resulted in the loss of million of dollars by veteran purchasers in the Washington Metropolitan area."

The committee also criticized the activities of the real estate industry in other cities as follows:

In Miami, Fla., liquor and other gifts were showered on the head of the VA office, who also purchased a home for $15,000, a price "well below the market," from a friendly realtor.

In Providence, R. I., gifts were sent to VA employes, who frequently jumped prices without justification. A grand jury has indicted several real estate men there.

In Detroit and Lubbock, Tex., VA officials were found to be in the building business themselves, and the committee accused them of questionable practices, such as accepting gifts from firms doing business with them and even trying to get side payments from veterans on homes.

In Oklahoma City and Los Angeles, the committee also found that the VA frequently authorized price increases on homes without justification. In both cities, lavish gifts were showered on VA employes by realtors.

It said that committee investigators had failed to find even one case where the Washington office had refused a builder a price increase.

It added that an increase of $500 a house in a 300-home project represents a total of $150,000 in extra profits for the builder.

Not all builders got away with such hijacking, however. The Committee included in its reports statistics from the Housing Expediter which show that builders had to refund more than $2.5 million to home owners for overcharges and use of inferior materials in the five-year period 1946 to 1951.

West Virginia Council Picks New Officers

ALBERT D. VILLER of Clarksburg, a member of Glass Workers Local 6, has been elected president of the West Virginia CIO Council to fill out the unexpired term of John B. Easton, who resigned as president because of ill health.

Viller had served as secretary-treasurer of the State council and State Political Action Committee since 1945. An early CIO member, he went on the staff of the Glass Workers as a field representative in West Virginia and the South in 1940, serving until he took the State posts.

He was succeeded as secretary-treasurer by Freeman C. Pettus, of Huntington, president of Steelworkers Local 3739 and a vice president of the council.

Pettus, a veteran laborite who began his career as a member of the Mine Workers, joined the USA-CIO when he went to work in the Houdaille-Hershey Co. plant seven years ago. He is a member of the union's Intl. Wage Policy Committee and has been active in PAC work.

The two were elected by the State Council board at a meeting at which Easton's resignation was accepted. They will serve until the next biennial convention in September 1953.

Easton, originally a member of the AFL Flint Glass Workers Union, had been president of the AFL West Virginia Federation of Labor for 13 years when the CIO-AFL split came in 1937. He choose to go with the CIO, and was president of the State central body until his resignation. He also resigned as CIO regional director, a post he had held since 1940.

'Reign Of Terror' Charged By TWU In Subway Firing

LOCAL 100 of the CIO Transport Workers last week charged the firing of Michael Murphy, a subway motorman, by the New York City Board of Transportation "smacks of the old BMT-IRT reigns of terror."

The local announced that it would aid Murphy in his appeal to the Municipal Civil Service Commission. It assigned Charles Belous, the union's department trial counsel, to the case.

Murphy was dismissed — despite a perfect employment record of 23 years—because he was involved in an accident last July near the Nassau-Fulton Street Station.

Pres. Matthew Guinan of TWU Local 100 said, "the circumstances under which this accident occurred indicate quite clearly that old antiquated equipment was more to blame than man failure.

"Instead of admitting its share of responsibility, the Board of Transportation, sitting as prosecutor, judge and jury, put the entire blame on a faithful and loyal employe and terminated his career like a convicted thief or habitual drunkard.

"If this is the board's idea of promoting good employer-employe relations, they should talk to a few of the men of the road."

Urban League Gets Help Of Unionists

THE NATIONAL Urban League last week announced the formation of a New York City Trade Union Committee, designed to promote cooperation between labor and the league.

Three prominent CIO officials were named as officers of the Trade Union Committee. Serving as recording secretary is Morris Iushewitz, secretary of the New York City CIO Council. Vice-chairmen are Charles H. Kerrigan, CIO Auto Workers, regional director in New York City and Louis Simon, vice president of the CIO Clothing Workers.

Announcing formation of the new committee, the Urban League noted "encouraging progress has been made during the past 10 years in breaking down employment barriers based on discrimination."

The Trade Union Committee will report developments in this field, through a regular Newsletter.

Also serving on the Trade Union Committee's executive board are the following CIO representatives:

Alex Bail, Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers; George F. Cranmore, UAW; John J. Grogan, Marine & Shipbuilding Workers; Matthew Guinan, Transport Workers; Martin C. Kyne, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Workers; Patrick J. McGrath, Utility Workers; William H. Oliver, director, UAW Fair Practices Dept.; Joseph Overton, Retail Food Chain Store Employees and H. B. Warner, Maritime Union.

Ship Builders Sign At Todd

A SECOND major contract settlement was reached by the CIO Shipbuilding Workers with Todd Shipyards Corp.

Like the initial agreement with eight Bethlehem Steel Co. yards, the Todd contract provides a base pay increase of 20c-an-hour, raising first-class mechanics to a $2 rate. Additional job reclassifications, the union said, will bring increases of as much as 41c for some workers.

The Todd contract covers 7800 workers in Brooklyn and Hoboken, N. J. The increase are retroactive to Apr. 14. Other terms include six paid holidays and three-week vacations after 15 years employment.

Electrical Union Wins At Bendix

After a 13-day strike, CIO Electrical Workers have reached a wage agreement covering 900 employes of three Bendix Aviation Corp. plants at Red Bank, N. J. The settlement provides increases of from 4 to 17c hourly.

Oil Workers Plan Major Organizing Drive

By RAY DAVIDSON

ORGANIZATION!—That was the keynote, the password, the main subject of conversation last week as CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union held its 22d International convention in Philadelphia.

The Oil Workers are in the unique position of being a powerful and militant union—strong enough to set the pattern for wages and conditions in the oil industry — while having only about a third of the basic oil industry organized. And delegates to the convention knew that they could not feel secure in their bargaining strength until substantially all of the workers in the industry are organized.

In his keynote address, Pres. O. A. Knight challenged the Oil Workers to embark on a crusade of organizing.

"We are not interested simply in the wages we get in the next year nor in the security we obtain for ourselves," he said. "We are building an organization that will bring a better living and more security for our children and grandchildren and all the future generations."

He emphasized that beyond being instruments of collective bargaining, free and democratic labor unions are a bulwark against oppression and tryanny. "No dictatorship ever prevailed in a land with strong, free unions," said Knight.

The Oil Workers president told the delegates that local unions must assume a greater share of the work of negotiating contracts and handling grievances because it was his plan to divert as many as possible of the international staff members to the sole task of organizing.

Vice Pres. B. J. Schafer suggested that each local put as much effort into organizing as it does into other activities. "Every local has a workman's (grievance) committee," he pointed out, "but I'm afraid some locals do not have volunteer organizing committees."

The convention by unanimous vote adopted a resolution on organizing which set forth a specific plan for the application of maximum resources to orgganizing.

The report of Sec.-Treas. T. M. McCormick showed that progress is being made toward the union's goal of organizing the industry. Last year, he said, membership of the OWIU increased by 12% and reached an all-time high. But last year's organizing efforts were curtailed by the fact that the union spent much of its time and energy in an all-out wage fight which brought general increases of 15c an hour and improvements in shift differentials.

Clearing the decks for intensified organizing efforts in the coming year, the convention endorsed a collective bargaining program adopted by the Policy Committee.

This program calls for a long-range effort to secure (1) productivity increases in wages—increases above and beyond cost of living adjustments — on a gradual basis and (2) more union control over pensions and greater vesting of pension funds in the individual worker.

The policy statement candidly admitted that these goals could not be achieved in a single year, but should be approached on a gradual basis. It advised each local bargaining unit to start making such progress as it could toward the goals.

The Oil Workers are saddled with an out-dated and inefficient pattern of plant-by-plant bargaining, insisted upon by the vast, world-wide corporations which control the oil industry. For the time being, said the Oil Workers, we will bargain plant-by-plant and the industry is thereby handed a challenge to make plant-by-plant bargaining work.

However, the Oil Workers doubt if plant-by-plant bargaining will work, so they are preparing to broaden bargaining units where possible. A resolution adopted by the convention instructed the administrative officers to study the problem and prepare a plan for broadening bargaining units.

POLITICAL ACTION is "the prime job ahead," CIO Pres. Philip Murray told the Oil Workers convention. He is greeted by OWIU-CIO Pres. O. A. Knight. Herbert W. Kirk, president of host Local 398 in Philadelphia, joined in the three-way handshake.

LONG-TERM goals of labor, of strengthening democracy and bringing "a better living and more security for our children and grandchildren," were stressed along with immediate organizing and bargaining problems by OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight (left) in address.

'PAC Is Our Prime Job,' Murray Tells Oil Workers

CIO PRES. Philip Murray paid high tribute to the CIO Oil Workers in his Labor Day address to the convention at Philadelphia.

Recalling that OWIU was one of the original unions to help form the CIO, he said the union "has grown in stature" and today is "a source of strength and inspiration to the oil workers of the country."

He urged the union's members to gird for "the prime job which lies ahead—politics."

Declaring the CIO will promote the "progressive platform of the Democratic party and Gov. Stevenson", Murray called on the delegates to work and drive for full voter registration.

"It is your duty to register," he told them. "Get your friends and neighbors to register and the people in your community and union. The higher the registration the better your chances of success."

IUE Wins L.A. Plant After Long Fight

CIO ELECTRICAL Workers have won their first firm base in Southern California, defeating the Communist-led UE after a long uphill battle at a Los Angeles defense plant.

IUE won a clear-cut victory in the National Labor Relations Board representation election at the Standard Coil Products Co., which manufactures electrical equipment.

The vote in a runoff election was IUE-CIO 310 to 248 for UE. The high number of 377 ballots mostly of workers employed after the eligibility date, were challenged and it was anticipated they would not be tallied in by the board.

The IUE victory was reported to have stopped cold a UE effort to move into defense plants in the Los Angeles area.

Outcome of the vote also was a reversal from the first ballot, when UE led IUE by 100 votes with two other AFL unions lagging.

IUE organizers in charge of the campaign were Lee Lundgren and Tony Rios.

Coast Unions Grow

Union membership in California has increased by 7% in a year and totalled 1,443,000 in July, 1951, according to the latest annual handbook of the State Dept. of Industrial Relations.

The Day of Robot Factory Is Just Around Corner

MACHINES whirling with few workers, factories operated automatically—they're just around the corner.

Seven experts took a long look at the predicted next stage of U. S. industrialization in a special issue of Scientific American.

What they examined are "automatic control systems" in industry. That means substitution of instruments for manpower in controlling industrial processes.

The oil industry is the best example of "automatic operations," with nearly all major refinery processes controlled by instruments. And machine shops and metal-working industries may be next, Scientific American predicts.

"Widespread" economic and social consequences are predicted from extensive introduction of automatic controls. And the biggest would be technological unemployment and retraining and upgrading of workers.

"Even in the most robotized of the automatic factories," one of the articles says hopefully, "there will be many men, and they will have interesting and responsible jobs."

One result of use of automatic controls would be to strengthen labor's demand for a greater share of increased productivity. The extra costs of such controls, according to Scientific American, can be paid off within a year. And the effect of "automatization"—that's what they call it—is to reduce costs by limiting shutdown time and increasing production per dollar's worth of equipment.

"Gentlemen, We're Ruined. Our Laboratories Have Just Developed A Machine To Replace Management!"

If "automatization" comes, the big boys of industry probably will get bigger—for it will take money to make the changeover and, Scientific American says, "this may tend to further concentrate production."

When's it coming? The near future, one expert predicts, because "the developmental lag between pure science and engineering application has progressively shortened."

Registration? Here's How To Do It . . .

FREEDOM IS YOUR BUSINESS—This group of Cincinnati telephone workers, members of the CIO Communications Workers, took time off from lunch to go to the Board of Elections office, register to vote on Nov. 4. CWA in Cincinnati is 96% registered, and CIO membership in the city as a whole—thanks to a joint drive by Steel, Auto, Clothing, Electrical and other locals—is 73% qualified to vote on election day. All 66 locals in the Cincinnati CIO Council are joining in drive to put union registration over the top. (For a PAC picture story, see page 3.)

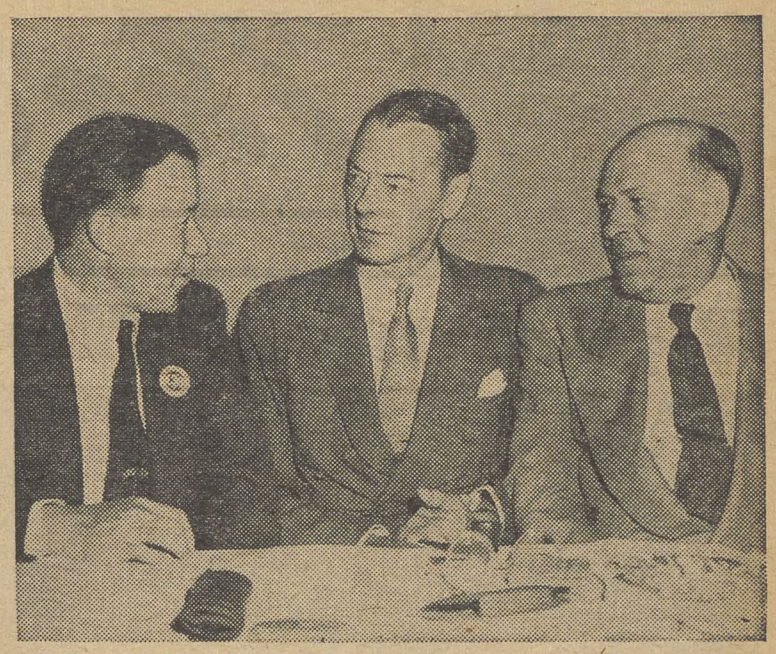
Jersey CIO Pushes Registration In Plants

"LET'S MAKE Adlai our next President, keep the General a Columbia resident," one banner proclaimed as some 800 Jersey CIOers met in Newark PAC conference.



IN HUDDLE at Newark parley were UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Archibald Alexander and Carl Holderman.

AFTER a 10-year battle, the New Jersey CIO Council last week reported partial achievement of a long-sought goal — registration of workers in the plants.

Carl Holderman, state CIO president, reported first such in-plant registration would take place immediately in three Middlesex county factories.

He made the announcement to the cheers of some 800 delegates to the Jersey CIO's biennial PAC conference, held in Newark.

The conference also:

- Planned a drive to register at least 50,000 more CIO members and their families.
- Kicked off a major registration campaign, designed to set new all-time records in New Jersey.
- Unanimously affirmed the CIO endorsement of Adlai Stevenson and John Sparkman, the Democratic candidates, and the Democratic platform.
- Unanimously endorsed Archibald E. Alexander, Democratic candidate for U. S. Senator.
- Endorsed six Democratic and two Republican congressional candidates.
- Stepped up the PAC voluntary dollar drive, and urged local unions to contribute to cost of the non-partisan registration drive.
- Planned to set up a network of election day blockworkers in areas of concentrated CIO membership to get out the vote on Nov. 4.

In a letter thanking the delegates for their endorsement, Stevenson took note of the CIO's registration campaign. "In congratulating your organization on these activities," Stevenson wrote, "I do so as one who believes in the principle of broad participation in civic affairs."

CIO endorsements went to: House Democratic incumbents Edward Hart, Charles Howell, Peter Rodino, Hugh Addonizio and Alfred Sieminski, and to candidate Martin Fox, as well as to Republican incumbents Clifford Case and Gordon Canfield.

Holderman pointed out that the PAC was backing "liberal candidates from both parties who have voted and pledged their support of the progressive foreign and domestic policies urged by the CIO."

Featured speakers at the meeting were Walter Reuther, CIO Auto Workers president; Walter White, NAACP president, and Oscar Ewing, Federal Security Administrator.

Responsibility for the "50c dollar" was pinned by Reuther on GOP Congressmen who sabotaged effective price control. He warned that if the GOP wins "you'll have a 25c dollar, because their platform commits the Republicans to abolish economic controls entirely."

So Goes Maine—And Ike Chases Taft Madly

By AL ZACK

VOTERS went to the polls in nine states last week for eight primaries and one general election. The results upset no political predictions.

Major interest centered on Wisconsin and Maine.

Maine, which holds its general election eight weeks before the rest of the nation, went Republican, as was expected.

Wisconsin, home state of Joe McCarthy, champion in the art of smear, lie and double-talk, renominated him.

For the ninth consecutive time, Republicans swept Maine, naming Gov. Frederick Payne to the Senate seat now held by Owen Brewster.

Biggest news was the small majority rolled up by Payne, who got only 59% of the votes. In Maine, this was close to defeat for the Republicans.

In 1948, the majority had been far greater. Sen. Margaret Chase Smith had rolled up a 71.4% record.

Sen. Nixon, GOP vice-presidential hopeful, had stumped Maine calling for an even larger plurality than Sen. Smith had recorded, to "encourage" Gen. Eisenhower. He didn't get it.

IN WISCONSIN, McCarthy rolled up a vote that surprised even him. Backed by a well-financed machine, McCarthy had five Republican opponents, who split the anti-McCarthy vote.

Even so, he easily outdistanced all his opponents. The Republican Old Guard, which had backed McCarthy, had the help of Gen. Eisenhower's hand-picked chairman of the Republican National Committee.

This action destroyed the carefully nortured fiction that Eisenhower represented "enlightened Republicanism."

McCarthy's principal opponent, Leonard Schmitt, called McCarthy's victory an "appalling thing," predicting "many people will recall their support of McCarthy with shame."

Democratic voters named Wisconsin Atty.-Gen. Thomas Fairchild as their senatorial candidate to oppose McCarthy.

None of the other primaries was of major national importance.

★

"McCarthyism" is the moral hole in Gen. Eisenhower's "so-called great crusade," Sen. Sparkman, Democratic vice-presidential candidate, told Missouri voters.

★

GEN. EISENHOWER again embraced all Republican candidates, including those who opposed the general's pet beliefs and who were guilty of the character assassination Eisenhower says he deplored.

Speaking in Indianapolis, the general figuratively threw his arms around Indiana Sen. Jenner, who had once called Eisenhower's best friend, Gen. George Marshall, a "front man for traitors" and "a living lie."

While Eisenhower didn't mention Jenner by name, he called for a top-to-bottom support of the GOP ticket in every state. He thus threw his support to McCarthy, who has been just as vicious in his attacks on Marshall.

★

The Washington Star, one of Eisenhower's most out-spoken admirers, last week called the general's Ohio trip, designed to bring the Ohio Taft Gang into the Eisenhower camp, "as close to a flop as anything the general has done so far."

★

EISENHOWER'S "I-love-you-truly" messages, frantically sent all last week to Sen. Taft, finally won the hand of the GOP Old Guard's leader.

Following a "honeymoon" breakfast with Taft in New York, the general abandoned his pose as a 'liberal Republican crusader" and made official his position as an Old Guard captive.

Before the love-feast Taft had told intimate friends his price for supporting the general was commitments, in writing, virtually giving him the veto power over the campaign and a loud voice in picking Ike's team, if he won.

After the meeting, Taft indicated he had his commitments, He said the general would support Taft-Hartley and other Taft positions and would stand on the GOP platform, written for Taft, which the general had tried to abandon in earlier speeches.

Eisenhower, in return, got Taft's services as a campaigner, plus what was politically more important: the tight-knit, hard-hitting, dough-heavy Taft machine.

★

There will be no Martin-Barton-and-Fish combine in the new Congress. That much was sure when New York's Ham Fish, who wanted to run for the Senate on Col. McCormick's new American Party ticket, admitted his try had been a flop. Fish had failed to get enough petition signatures to put himself into the race.

★

DEMOCRATIC Nominee Adlai Stevenson spent most of last week on the West Coast, busily chopping to pieces Republican arguments that "now was the time for a change."

Stevenson continued his blunt campaign of seeking out special interest groups to tell them he would be beholden to no group, but would put the nation's welfare first.

Calling for the expansion of the government's power and conservation policy, he told Far Westerners he opposed "the right of private monopoly to leave the region undeveloped."

But, he added, "we must be eagle-eyed and tight-fisted about these expenditures." Local desires were not enough to justify a public project, he said. "It must pass the harder test of comparison—would this money be better spent on rehabilitating eroded farmland in the South or exhausted rangeland in the West, rather than on reclaiming a desert."

In California, he spoke out boldly on a foreign policy for Asia, which he called both the key to world hopes for peace and the point of greatest danger from Communist aggression.

Stevenson used a hard-boiled, practical, non-political approach to taxes. Russia, he said, is the key to whether America can hope for any tax cuts.

★

COMMENDATION for the "clarity and courage" of Gov. Stevenson's civil rights stand came from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

At the same time, the organization called on Gen. Eisenhower to re-examine his position.

★

TEXAS DIXIECRATS, irate because Gov. Stevenson would not put the powerful oil company lobby ahead of the nation's interests, tossed their support to Eisenhower. The general had earlier placed himself on the side of the oil lobby.

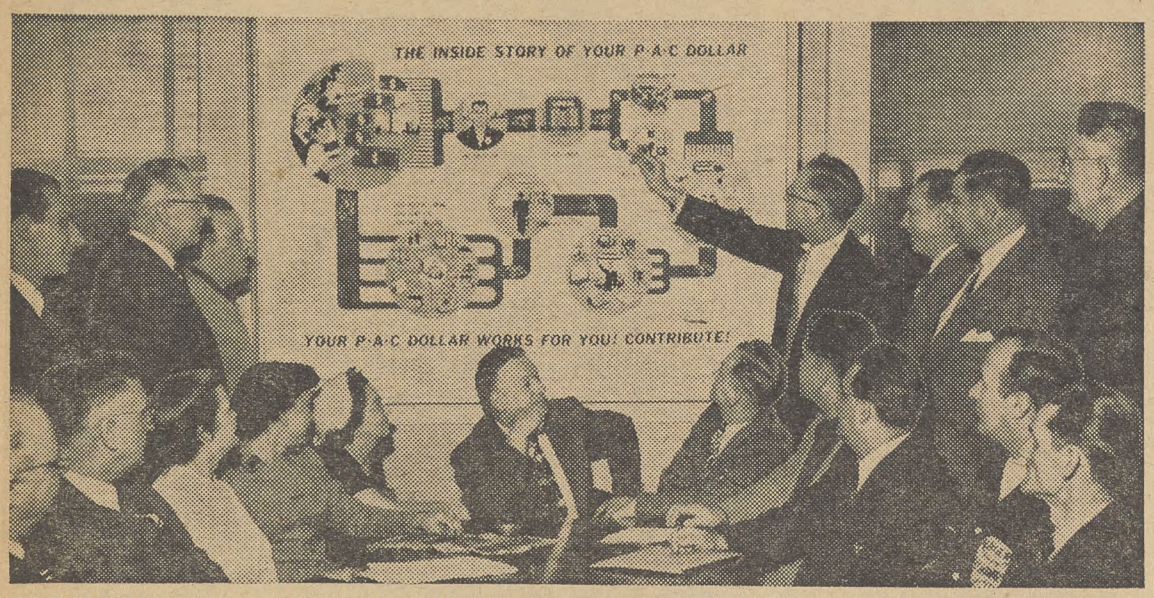
Meeting in Amarillo, the Texas Democratic convention for the record put Stevenson's name on the ballot, as they had pledged at the National convention in Chicago.

But they then asked Gov. Allan Shivers, acknowledged leader of the Southwest Dixiecrats, and all other state officials to wage an active campaign for Eisenhower.

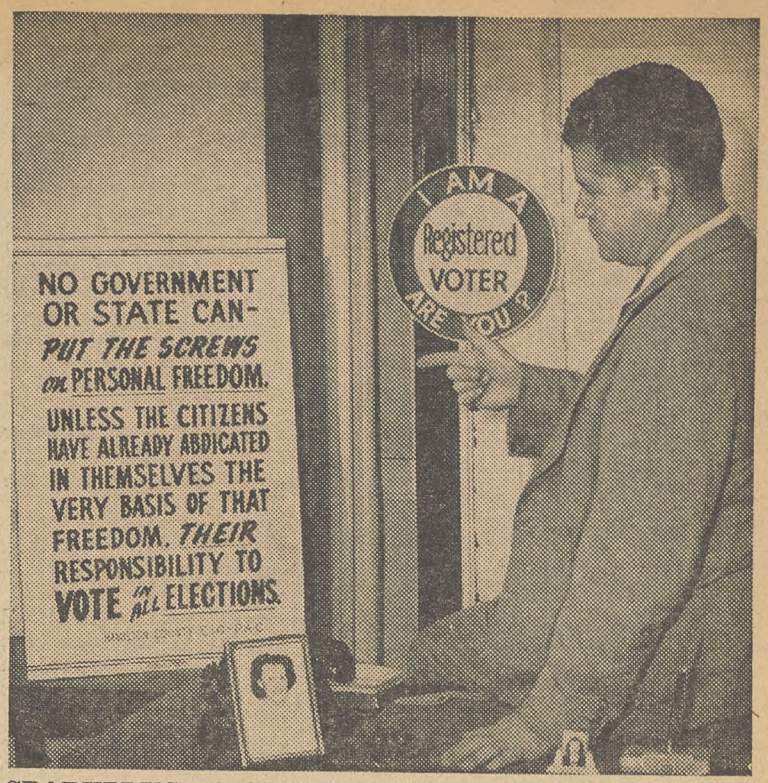
★

With the men who know Eisenhower best, it's Stevenson 4-to-1. A poll of the 37 political reporters travelling with Ike showed that 24 prefer Stevenson, six are undecided and only seven favor Ike.

All Together! Cincinnati CIO Signs Up Voters



PLANNING registration drive, Cincinnati CIO Council board members heard UAW Subregional Dir. Edward Hellkamp explain workings of the CIO-PAC.



SPARKPLUG of Cincinnati CIO's registration campaign was Steve Chevalier, Council executive secretary.

THERE'S ROOM for more, says Business Agent John Dehner, citing Brewery Workers Local 12's voter record.

THE WOMEN were on the job in the CIO Electrical Workers locals, with Sunny Crawford, IUE representative (second from left, front), leading campaign.

NEGRO UNIONISTS heard Paul Shearer, Ohio CIO-PAC representative, and are doing a big job in drive. CIO also worked with old age pensioners' group.

PAC MEANS action on high prices, so these Clothing Workers canvass membership rolls on eligible voters.

IT'S UP TO YOU IN '52—Steelworkers led by Staff Rep. Al Jordan (left) signed up in a big group. PAC is out for a 100% CIO registration.

The GOP's 25c Dollar

Now that the primary preliminaries are over—with the results about as expected—and the GOP's campaign of dodging the issues is in full swing, it's a good time for labor to consider what's really at stake on Nov. 4.

For American workers and their families, political action, this year more than ever before, is a bread and butter matter.

On the outcome of Election Day will depend whether this nation retains the great democratic progress of the last 20 years and goes forward toward a better and more secure world, free of fear and with a hope for peace. That's one alternative; the other would be a return to power of the arrogant men of little vision, filled with hatreds, and the wreckage they would perform.

Politics is a bread and butter matter.

"The GOP," as CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther said the other day, "is responsible for the 50c dollar. If the GOP wins, you'll have a 25c dollar, because their platform commits the Republicans to abolish economic controls entirely."

What They're Planning

The true voice of open shop Republican reaction is heard again in the land. And—if ruthless Richard Nixon were presiding in the Senate and Bob Taft again GOP floor leader—it would toss in the ashcan the vague niceties about "fair treatment" for workers which Gen. Eisenhower has voiced recently.

From the well-heeled Committee for Constitutional Government —one of the biggest-spending lobbies in the arsenal of big business reaction—has come the tipoff on what GOP reaction plans, it if could fool enough of the voters.

Here's what the CCG proposes in one of its booklets:

"What we should do is repeal all federal labor laws on wages, hours of labor, collective bargaining, minimum wages, etc., and abolish all boards, bureaus and commissions that result from these laws . . .

"Unemployment compensation laws should be repealed . . . Picket lines should be illegal . . . There should be no minimum wage laws . . .

"An employer who signs a collective bargaining agreement . . . should be considered equally guilty with the officers of the labor union who sign the agreement . . . for the offense is against society."

Enough to make your neck bristle?

Where You Come In

What are we going to do about it? That depends entirely on how well we're registered, how well we're informed of the facts on the real issues of 1952, how well we support our local union political action committees, and how well we turn out to vote on Nov. 4.

The key to success at the polls is to get out the vote. It's your vote that counts—but it won't count much unless you're registered.

Every union member in the country, and all the eligible members of their families, should be registered to vote.

We can't count on drives by "foundations," the biased big business press or anybody else.

We'll have to do the job ourselves, and do it fast, for the final deadlines for registration are approaching in all states.

Let's get out our vote this year; let's make it the greatest outpouring of democracy in action in our country's history.

Register now—and vote on Nov. 4!

'I Love You Truly—'

The Monopoly Of Opinion

Last week Editor & Publisher, house organ of big publishers, reported more daily papers are backing the Republicans than ever before. The magazine said 75.16% of all dailies, with 27 million circulation, are backing the GOP while 15%, with three million circulation, are supporting the Democrats.

This long-standing development of "a one-party press in a two-party country" was discussed by Gov. Stevenson, Democratic presidential nominee, in an address to editors in Portland, Ore., last week. He said in part:

By ADLAI STEVENSON

IT IS VERY pleasant to consider today that I have a group of editors and publishers temporarily at my mercy. I know it won't last long. But, since the press—some of it—keeps describing me as a captive candidate, I particularly enjoy the opportunity of speaking to a captive audience.

In my new role in life, I can't help noticing from time to time—I want to put it as delicately as I can—that the overwhelming majority of the newspapers of the country are supporting the opposition candidate. This is something, I find, that even my best friends will tell me! And I certainly don't take it personally.

In fact, I would have been somewhat startled and unhappy if I received much press support after the reception given my Democratic predecessors, Mr. Truman and Mr. Roosevelt. Some people might even have considered such support an ill omen.

It would seem that the overwhelming majority of the press is just against Democrats. And it is against Democrats, so far as I can see, not after a sober and considered review of the alternatives, but automatically, as dogs are against cats. As soon as a newspaper—I speak of the great majority, not of the enlightened 10%!—sees a Democratic candidate it is filled with an unconquerable yen to chase him up an alley.

I still haven't got over the way some of our Nation's great papers rushed to commit themselves to a candidate last spring, long before they knew what that candidate stood for, or what his party platform would be, or who his opponent was, or what would be the issues of the campaign.

I know where a young publisher's fancy turns in that season of the year, and I don't blame them for a moment. But I feel that some of them may yet regret the impetuosity of their wooing now that autumn is here.

I am touched when I read in these papers' solicitous editorials about the survival of the two-party system. Now I really can't bring myself to believe that the Republican Party is about to fade away, even if it loses in 1952. If so, it is staging one of the longest and loudest deathbed scenes in history!

How can the Republican Party disappear when about 90% of the press for 10 to 15 years has been telling the American people day in and day out that the Republican Party alone can save the republic? Surely Republican publishers and editors don't honestly believe that they have so little influence!

I am in favor of a two-party system in politics. And I think we have a pretty healthy two-party system at this moment. But I am in favor of a two-party system in our press, too. And I am, frankly, considerably concerned when I see the extent to which we are developing a one-party press in a two-party country.

I EARNESTLY wish that newspapers so highly agitated over the two-party system in politics would contemplate the very real dangers of the one-party system in the press. I don't say this because of any concern over the coming election. My party has done all right in recent elections in spite of the country's editorial pages, and I have a hunch we will do all right this year, too.

But, as an ex-newspaperman and as a citizen, I am gravely concerned about the implications of this one-party system for our American press and our free society.

A free society means a society based on free competition and there is no more important competition than competition in ideas, competition in opinion. This form of competition is essential to the preservation of a free press. Indeed, I think the press should set an example to the Nation in increasing opposition to uniformity.

I think you will agree that we cannot risk complacency. We need to be rededicated every day to the unfinished task of keeping our free press truly free. We need to work harder for the time when all editors will honor their profession, when all publishers will have a sense of responsibility equal to their power and thus regain their power, if I may put it that way.

Stetson Kennedy Says—

Klan Thugs Are Riding High Just Like The '20s

THE KU KLUX KLAN, helped by Dixiecrat politicians, is behind the current wave of murders and terrorism directed against Negroes and organized labor in the South, Stetson Kennedy charges.

He claims he's got abundant evidence to prove it.

Kennedy is the undercover agent called "The Nation's No. 1 Klan-Buster" by KKK Imperial Wizard Samuel Green.

Although the Klan wants him dead or alive, Kennedy is still actively fighting it—from within. Under his flowing white robe and hood, he's going right on attending KKK meetings.

Kennedy's article in Stag magazine charged:

1. The KKK constitutes an unparalleled menace, not only to racial and other minorities, but to the entire country.

2. There has been a recent resurgence of Klan activity in the South and in the North and West. Kennedy says he can document activity in 28 states.

3. "Literally hundreds of bombings, kidnapings, floggings and shootings" have been perpetrated within the last few years by KKK strong-arm squads. Kennedy lists the Christmas death-bombing of Mr. and Mrs. Harry T. Moore, Florida Negro leaders, and floggings of union officials.

4. Gov. Fuller Warren named Jefferson Elliot to investigate the Florida wave of terror which has caused more than a quarter million dollars in damage and took several lives the last year. Kennedy says he can prove Elliott is a member of the East Point Atlanta klavern of the KKK.

5. Even when anti-Klan officials have absolute proof of Klan guilt, they usually cannot take action because only county officials can bring a case before a grand jury. Klan klaverns exist in all of Georgia's 169 counties, and are strong enough to block prosecution in all but a handful, Kennedy contends.

Southern officials, from governor down to police officers, belong to the Klan and use their official positions to protect it, he charges.

Kennedy has a background of seven years' "membership" in the Invisible Empire belonging to the inner circle at the Atlanta "Imperial Palace."

He attended top secret meetings, bedecked in green satin robes, indicating he had reached the rank of Kleagle (state organizer). He also became a member of the Klan's Klavalier Klub, the gang's strong-arm terrorist squad so secret its members are unknown even to other Kluxers.

He rode with the thugs on raiding parties. Torture and murder were committed before his eyes.

But he was in close touch with law enforcement officers. When Ellis Arnall was governor of Georgia, Kennedy was an agent for the Georgia Bureau of Investigation and dug up the documentary evidence Arnall needed to revoke the Klan's charter.

Kennedy says typical Klansmen come from the lower rungs of the economic ladder. "The Klan hierarchy is quite another matter," he points out. "Most of the officers are business or professional men, with a generous sprinkling of politicians."

Kennedy charges that "every member of the (Atlanta) city council had a Kard in No. 1 and so did many municipal, county and state judges." He also names three state cabinet officers as brother Klansmen, including Georgia's Labor Commissioner Ben Huiett.

Kennedy warns that, with the help of Dixiecrat politicians, the Klan is now trying to "ride forth as never before in history," using methods "more modern than Hitler."

"In various parts of the nation, Klansmen use airplanes to shower hate literature from the skies," Kennedy writes. "In many places nocturnal prowl cars and sound trucks carry the threatening voice of the Klan through Negro neighborhoods. In some locales, Klansmen, in various guises, use the radio to spew forth their message of hate.

"In place of the robed horsemen of old with flaming torches, Klux cars, sporting red neon crosses, spread terror over many a peaceful countryside."

Most of the Klan growth came after 1949, when Georgia's present Gov. Herman Talmadge, in one of his first official acts, gave the Klan a new charter to replace the one Arnall revoked. Kennedy warns that—unless prompt action is taken—the Klan may gain even greater power than in the 1920's.

Then, it numbered 8.9 million members, elected Klan governors in six states, and put many Klansmen in both houses of Congress.

'First Class Job'—

Ruskin College Chief Hails Exchange Of Students

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

"A FIRST class job for British-American relations" is being done by the trade unionists from the U. S. and England who have had the opportunity to visit and study in each other's countries, H. D. Hughes—head of Ruskin College, labor school in Britain—said last week in Washington.

Hughes, who came to this country last summer on a U. S. government travel and study fellowship, is returning home later this month to be on hand when Ruskin opens in October.

Among the 100 or more students enrolled at Ruskin for the term extending from October 1952 to June 1953 are three American unionists, two of them CIO members. They were awarded labor scholarships financed in part by the British Trades Union Congress.

A lively young man with dark intelligent eyes, typical ruddy English complexion and an easy, friendly manner, Hughes told a group of CIO'ers that one of the outstanding things he had learned during his two months' visit in the U. S. is how little American and British workers really know about each other.

"The value of having U. S. students come to England is enormous," Hughes said. British students at Ruskin have discovered from the American trade unionists how many weird ideas they have about the United States, and vice versa.

"Many opportunities are offered for really getting to know each other when students live and study together, as they do at Ruskin," he said.

WHILE in the U. S., Hughes visited four of the National CIO's regional summer schools held for union members in Colorado, California, Maryland-Virginia and Pennsylvania. He also is planning to spend four days at the seminar on world affairs being sponsored jointly by the CIO and the American Labor Education Service, at the Univ. of Connecticut.

Hughes said that Ruskin College, which was founded about 50 years ago, has the main objectives of providing opportunities for higher education for British workers and giving good all-round leadership training of workers active in the labor movement.

The labor college is controlled by a committee of the British Trades Union Congress, on which some 25 to 30 representatives of labor serve.

A number of students from other parts of the world have attended Ruskin in recent years, Hughes said, but only a few of them came from the U. S. Two CIO members awarded scholarships to Ruskin for the 1952-53 term are Jasper Clemente, Brewery Workers, Akron, Ohio; and Russell Harris from the National PAC in Washington.

Philadelphia CIO Plans Purchase Of Resort On Shore

PHILADELPHIA CIO members are purchasing a 100-room resort hotel in Cape May, N. J., on the Atlantic. The hotel will be for the use of union members and their families and is being purchased through the Philadelphia CIO Council.

Preliminary negotiations resulted in reduced rates to unionists during the summer, and now the vacationists are enthusiastic over the idea of a union owned and managed hotel.

Year-around use of the hotel is planned as a center for educational conferences, conventions and other union activities. (LPA)

CIO Outlook Says—

'States' Rights' War Whoops Are Cover Up For Special Interests

WHAT'S the shouting about "States' Rights" all about?

It's "more than a mere political slogan" and it has "countless dangerous implications."

Those leading the cheers for States' Rights, the CIO Economic Outlook says in its current issue, "are the champions of special privilege, who have bitterly opposed the achievements of the Roosevelt-Truman years and want no New or Fair Deals in the future."

Opposing them, it lists "those social-minded liberals who sincerely believe that all Americans have a right to look to their national government to 'promote the general welfare and secure the blessings of liberty'" which the Constitution proclaims "is the paramount purpose of our Federal Government."

The Outlook, monthly publication of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, charges the States' Righters attempt to capitalize "on the hate they know all freedom-loving Americans share toward communism and Fascism."

Thus, it continues, they charge the national administration with being "totalitarian." But, says the Outlook, the States' Righters "are neither honestly concerned with reform nor motivated by love of freedom."

Rather, the Outlook charges, "concealed under the self-righteous cloak of States' Rights oratory is the selfish anger of men who have seen their own special power challenged by Washington during the last 20 years, while an increasing measure of consideration is given to the needs of all of the people."

In our modern and complex society, says the CIO publication, many problems cannot be solved by individual action or by state and local governments alone.

"Widespread unemployment, waves of foreclosures, distressing poverty, and oppressive monopolies have no respect for state borders," it continues. "Like the ravages of nature — droughts, floods, and disease—these problems have become national in scope."

"Poor educational opportunities, inferior health standards, substandard wages and working conditions, and denial of constitutional rights, in any state," the Outlook observes, "ultimately undermine welfare."

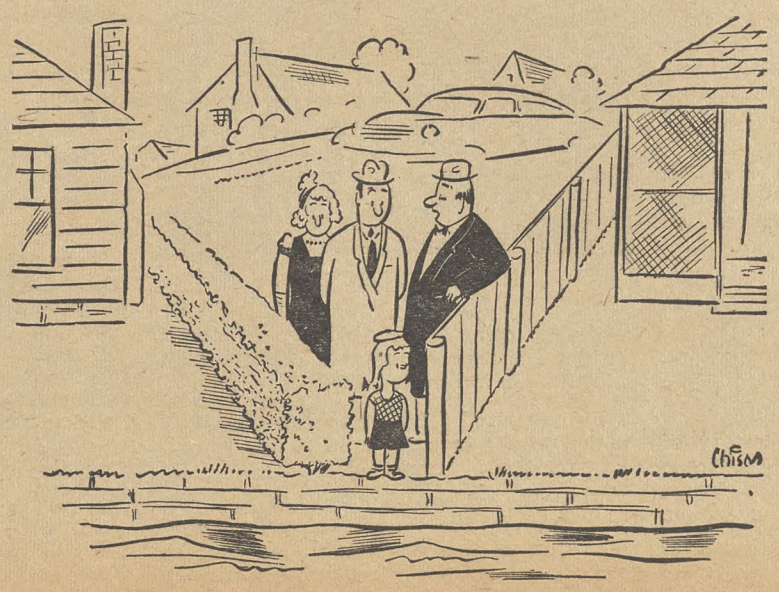
"DURING the last 20 years, the Federal Government has been far more responsive to human needs than the governments of the states."

Detailing the achievements of the New Deal and Fair Deal, the Outlook continued:

"The New and Fair Deals have not destroyed the liberties and prosperity of the American people; they have vastly extended them. So many things have been done to increase the well-being of the entire nation that even the States' Righters grudgingly admit that some of the programs of the last 20 years will stand."

The "real reason," it says, for the opposition of the most vocal States' Righters is that the Roosevelt-Truman administrations have deprived them of special privilege. It characterizes these States' Righters as those "who seek personal wealth at the expense of public welfare."

"Callousness to human welfare is no longer the 'right' of any state when all Americans are so intimately affected by it," the Outlook says.



"Now Here's a Beautiful Lot With a Water Frontage."

What About Corruption? Take A Loo

Boodle Rings Prospered When Republicans Last In Power

NO POLITICAL party has a monopoly on virtue—or corruption.

This historic fact seemed to have escaped the attention of Gen. Eisenhower during his current campaigning.

The general repeatedly placed himself on record as opposed to "corruption, graft, waste and crazy spending." In the words of Calvin Coolidge, he was against sin.

The general, in his free-swinging attack on "sin," charged the Democratic party and the present administration "from top to bottom" with every sin in the catalogue.

This unmerited insult of thousands of honest, hard-working, under-paid government employes was considered so unworthy of the general that his lieutenants later advised him to alter it.

But the theme of the general's campaign was not changed. He, the general said, was against sin. His opponents were sinners.

By thus keying his campaign to what the newspapers called "the corruption issue," Gen. Eisenhower focused public attention on the record of his own party, which most Republican bosses preferred to keep in the dark.

The people know the record of the Republican party on this score is dismal and dirty.

During all the years when the general was wearing an army uniform, obeying orders and paying no attention to civilian government, the Republican party had run up a record of corruption unequaled in American history.

Thus, what the general didn't say in his discussion of "sin" became just as important as what he did say.

The general did NOT speak out against any of the following "sins":

1. Republican corruption from the Teapot Dome scandals through the maladministration of Andrew Mellon as Secretary of the Treasury. Political and business cronies of Mellon and the rest of that gang are now political supporters of Eisenhower.

2. Criminal actions by the nation's biggest corporations, whose officers are now supporters of Eisenhower and hefty contributors to the Republican campaign fund. During the past 10 years, the 70 largest companies in America committed 340 law violations for which they were caught.

3. Republican congressmen like Walter E. Brehm of Ohio and J. Parnell Thomas of New Jersey, convicted of receiving illegal kickbacks.

4. Members of the Senate, many of whom were members of his party, charged with market speculation, taking improper fees for services, providing favors to airlines, and even tax evasion. In fact, the general has said he will support Republican Joe McCarthy, who has been involved in tax evasion deals.

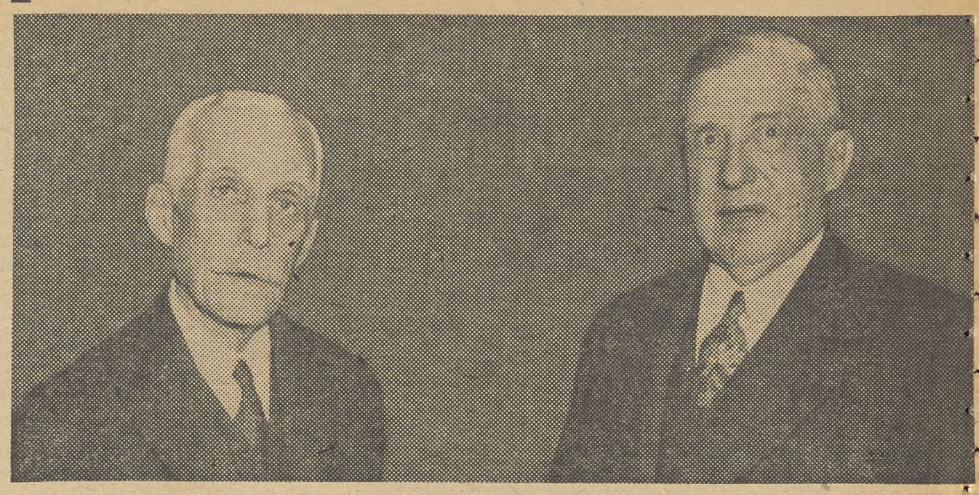
5. Those members of his own party who voted against three Truman proposals to remove a number of federal jobs from the ranks of patronage, thus making officeholders less susceptible to political pressure. Two of the plans were defeated.

6. Big businessmen guilty of trying to bribe government workers. Even Fortune magazine admits there are far more bribe-givers than bribe-takers. The bribe-givers go unpunished and Eisenhower didn't mention them in his catalogue of sinners.

7. Those lobbyists, with unlimited expense accounts, working on Congressmen to pass special interest legislation. Included in this group are the lobbyists seeking to rob the American people of the tremendously rich off-shore oil interests which the Supreme Court has ruled belong to the people, not to a few states. Eisenhower has said he supports the position of these lobbyists.

The general himself obviously believes a public office is a public trust.

But he failed to prove that the public should put its trust in the Republican party, with its long record of betrayal of that trust.



TAX DEALS—Andrew Mellon (left) operated the U. S. Treasury Dept. to aid his big business friends, resigning under threat of impeachment. Charles Schwab, steel magnate, was on hand to help Mellon when the government finally delved into his doings.

Big Operators Tapped U.S. Till In Andy Mellon's Palmy Days

AMERICA had one fairly recent experience with a big businessman running its Treasury Dept. He was Andrew Mellon, third richest man in the United States, and Secretary of the Treasury from 1921 to 1932 during the Harding, Coolidge and Hoover administrations.

Mellon and his family controlled the Aluminum Co. of America, the Gulf Oil Co., coal companies, banks and a host of other concerns. His Pittsburgh bank underwrote $1.5 million of the $1.6 million Harding campaign deficit.

Shortly thereafter, Mellon was named Secretary of the Treasury, a post he held until an effort was made to impeach him in the House of Representatives.

When he took office, Mellon made the grand gesture of resigning all his directorships. He turned them over to his brother.

However, he kept his chief financial interests, despite a criminal statute passed by the first Congress in 1789 which forbids the Secretary of the Treasury from being interested in a business, directly or indirectly.

Here are two items in the Mellon record:

1. Between his nomination and accession to the Treasury, Gulf Oil applied for a $3.7 million tax refund. Nine days later the claim was approved and the ruling made irrevocable. although similar cases generally take a year or more to process.

2. Gulf Oil in 1926 bought a three-quarters interest in a Colombian oil concession that the government of that country was preparing to cancel. When the cancellation occurred, the State Dept. rushed to Gulf's defense. This did not move the Colombians. Whereupon the Commerce Dept. warned American bankers that further investment in Colombian bonds would probably not be safe.

Then a more conciliatory president was elected by Colombia, and he sought loans in Wall Street. He was rebuffed until at a dinner in his honor in Washington, Mellon slipped in a word. If the Colombian president would only settle up the petroleum problem, Colombia would find its credit situation much improved. Thereafter Colombia got a $20 million loan from the National City Bank and Gulf got a new and favorable oil concession.

Under Mellon's direction, the Treasury Dept. made refunds of hundreds of millions of dollars to taxpayers in accordance with principles which were not made clear even to the employes of the bureau, and certainly not to the public.

Taxpayers were unable to request refunds, because there were no published rules to guide them. The favored few with backdoor access to the Treasury Dept. got the refunds at the expense of the less fortunate.

This system, a Senate investigating committee reported, created a special class of taxpayers, who employed "tax experts" whose sole stock in trade was a knowledge of the secret methods and practices of Mellon's department.

The Lid Popped Off Back In Harding's Era

THE WORST thing that could happen to the American people would be an administration under which power could again be seized by businessmen.

The last time America had such a government, it had corruption on a massive scale.

It was the administration of Warren Harding and the Teapot Dome scandal.

When the lid eventually popped off, Harding's Secretary of the Interior went to prison. His Secretary of the Navy was forced to resign. His Attorney General was indicted. His administrators of alien property and the Veterans Bureau went to prison.

In the middle of the mess sat Sec. of Commerce Herbert Hoover, who now pretends to be an elder statesman and an authority on decency in government.

Hoover has never said a word in public criticism of the crooks with whom he was associated in Harding's cabinet.

Few people today remember all the details of that unsavory mess of 30 years ago. Here are the facts:

Albert B. Fall, Harding's Secretary of the Interior, took a $304,000 bribe to lease the navy's oil reserves in Teapot Dome, Wyo., to Harry Sinclair, a big oil tycoon.

Fall persuaded Navy Secy. Denby to let Fall's department manage the navy's oil reserves, then gave Sinclair a secret lease, without competitive bidding. Sinclair bragged he expected a profit of more than $100 million from this bribe.

HARRY F. SINCLAIR

Fall received $233,000 in Liberty bonds and $71,0000 in cash, paid to his son-in-law, for this big steal.

Fall also took another $100,000 in bribes to give away the Navy's Elk Hills, Calif., oil reserves to Edward L. Doheney. This bribe came only eight months after the Harding administration took office.

After the expose, the two leases were canceled and the navy's oil reserves were saved from the thieves. Fall was fined $100,000 and sent to jail.

But the bribe-givers did not suffer as much as the crooked official. Sinclair went to jail only for contempt of the Senate and for jury-tampering. Doheney was acquitted after indictment.

And Hoover wrote to Fall telling him the Dept. of the Interior "has never had so constructive a headship as you gave it."

There's a postscript to the Sinclair story. Not only did this oil baron cheat the government. He cheated his stockholders as well.

Along with other big-wigs in the oil industry, Sinclair set up a dummy corporation to sell crude oil to their own companies.

They pocketed the profits themselves—totaling $3 million—and failed to declare the profits on their income tax returns.

The Republican party shared in this crookedness.

Sinclair gave the GOP $160,000 in bonds. Harding's Postmaster General, Will Hays, who then was the Republican National Committee chairman, swore he received no such gift from Sinclair.

But this was a lie. Hays tried to conceal the $160,000 by turning over batches of bonds to other "contributors" in return for their personal checks.

dlai Hits Graft s 'Treason'

OV. STEVENSON, Democratic presidential candidate, made his nd on corruption in government ar when he spoke in Denver.

"Corruption in public affairs is ason, and it is treason to Democrats as ll as Republicans. Any crooks I ever in the government will be exposed l punished as quickly as I can catch m," he pledged.

evenson made a telling point in his hange with Gen. Eisenhower, who had sed this issue, when he pointed to his n record on this score and the general's nplete lack of a record in public office.

"I think I know more about catching m (crooks in public office) than my ponent because I followed eight years magnificent Republican rascality in Illis," he said.

"What's more, I've learned by actual exience how to use an ax for misconduct, I've used it on my own party men hout fear, favor or hesitation."

Stevenson swung back with a punch at nhower's insinuations against him as individual.

"Frankly," he said, "I resent the charges t imply that either my honesty or my elity to the public trust would be dimined by election to an office I revere."

"I had not expected this from the gen-l," he observed tartly, and continued, will not repay him in kind."

To the roars of the crowd, Stevenson k a sharp look at the record of the Reblican party and commented:

"You'll forgive me if I gag a little when publican politicians don the ill-fitting ntle of self-righteousness and deliver ier-than-thou sermons on morality.

"I've read enough of our history to rember the shameful periods after previ- wars, the Civil War and the first orld War. In those periods the Republan party was in power. That fact does condone the revelations of recent cases faithlessness. And I don't condone them d never will, either in public life or prite."

Ridiculing the Eisenhower battle-cry at it was "time for a change," Stevenn asked bluntly, "A change to what"? had read the GOP platform, he said, d it was a pretty good "whodunit" but did not tell what kind of domestic or reign policy the Republicans proposed.

"You'll forgive me," he added, "if I am little cynical when I hear shouting the idest for a change the politicians who ve consistently opposed vital changes at ery turn as far back as most of us can member."

Any War On Graft Must Start With Bribe-Giver

THE VAST majority of government officials are honest and faithful. They are careful with the public's money.

Their record merits no such insult as that hurled at them by Gen. Eisenhower when he began his attack on what he calls "Washington corruption."

Later his politically-wise lieutenants advised the general to soft-pedal his "top-to-bottom" accusation of corruption and the general finally did so.

Honest government employes, like all honest Americans, believe any official who isn't honest should be thrown out of his job. If he has taken bribes, he should be punished as the law provides.

A tax official who "fixes assessments for a crooked corporation while ordinary citizens sweat to pay their fair taxes, is unfaithful to his trust. If he does his "fixing" for fees, he should go to jail.

So should the officers of the crooked corporation who pay him fees and the bribes.

The general made no mention of the fact that there can never be a bribe-taker without a bribe-giver. And the bribe-giver is as guilty as the bribe-taker.

Fortune Magazine, which certainly cannot be labeled an organ of the Democratic party, put the corruption issue squarely.

"There is excellent evidence," said the magazine, "that the demand for venality exceeds the supply. Shocking numbers of American businessmen are quite prepared to bribe their way through Washington.

"The proportion of public officials who are open to bribes and to improper influence short of bribery is far lower than these businessmen tend to believe."

Gen. Eisenhower said nothing about these bribe-offering businessmen, many of whom are contributing large sums of his campaign treasury.

The general obviously overlooked this important fact: Any campaign against corruption must start with a campaign against corrupters.

One Mink Coat Vs. Wage Cheaters

How do these items stack up against one mink coat?

In the first three years of the federal wage-hour law, the government forced business firms to pay more than $16 million to 525,000 workers cheated out of the money due them.

One study in 1946 revealed that half the 40,000 firms inspected had violated the wage and hour law—that is, cheated their employes.

GOP Red-Faced In Maine Ruckus

Republican-dominated Maine, scene of GOP Vice-Presidential Candidate Nixon's major campaign efforts to date, was last week the scene of one of the worst political scandals of the decade.

A grand jury returned secret indictments charging graft in the Republican-controlled Liquor Commission and two of the top Republicans in the state, closely tied to Gov. Payne, the GOP's senatorial candidate, were arrested.

One of the by-products of the investigation was the sudden resignation of the Portland Press-Herald's chief editorial writer, also closely tied to the GOP top brass in Maine.

Gen. Eisenhower had no immediate comment on graft and corruption in Maine.

Bribe-Givers Rapped By CIO

CIO LEFT no doubts in the minds of the public as to where it stands on the matter of honesty and ethics.

At its 1951 Convention in New York, the CIO unanimously adopted a resolution, which reads, in part:

"We in the CIO, representing a cross-section of American workers, recognize that honesty is both a personal and a public matter. No organization, no statute can keep any single individual from an act of dishonesty; the decision must be the organization's own.

"We recognize, however, that for every bribe-taker, there is a bribe-giver; for every tax-fixer, there is a tax-evader; for every 'five percenter' in the nation's capital, there is a special interest seeking special favors; for every racketeer and gangster, there is an individual or corporation willing to use his service for their own ignoble ends or to knuckle under without moral stamina to illicit propositions.

"The CIO deplores corruption whether it be in government, in industry or in the labor movement itself.

"We in the CIO are determined that our organization will remain clean, decent and honest.

"We call upon other elements in our American society to move with equal vigor against the racketeering or dishonest elements in American life, who seek to corrupt our population and to weaken our established position throughout the free world."

New York CIO Backs Cashmore For Senator

By MILTON PLUMB

THE BIGGEST convention in the history of the New York State CIO Council, held Sept. 4-6 in Buffalo, proved conclusively that New Yorkers take their politics seriously.

With the eyes of the state focused on their deliberations, 1000 delegates weighed the issues with full realization that their actions would speak for more than a million members of CIO unions in New York.

Despite unprecedented pressures from practically every political faction, the delegates refused to be stampeded and wound up the convention with virtual unanimity.

There were lively—and sometimes heated—floor battles throughout the gathering, which isn't surprising in view of the fact that the chief consideration was political action.

BUT every delegate who wanted the floor got a chance to say his piece in the best democratic tradition. After disputing groups had said what they wanted, it was found that the disagreements weren't fundamental and that timing and procedural considerations rather than basic issues were the only points in dispute.

That discovery—along with the conciliatory and peace-making efforts of Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, who was asked by the rival groups to intervene—brought quick agreement. And the so-called "split" in the convention, which some newspapers prematurely reported, wasn't even a pipe-dream.

The attention which debate on the two political action resolutions got in the press obscured the fact that actually the convention was turning out a record amount of work. Some 36 other resolutions were adopted, and four others were referred to the Executive Board for further consideration.

There was discussion on nearly all of them, despite the number considered. And added to this was a large amount of time-consuming convention business, including the election of new officers and a new executive board, plus the taking up of PAC collections averaging $5 from every delegate.

Finally, the delegates had two lengthy reports, one from the executive board and the other from Pres. Louis Hollander, to consider and act upon. Interlarded between the heavy three-day "business" program were major addresses by a dozen notables.

Although there was heated—but numerically insignificant—opposition to both political action resolutions, as far as practically all of the delegates were concerned only one issue was ever in meaningful dispute. That was the question of whether or not there should be a convention endorsement of a candidate for U. S. Senator from New York.

The other political action resolution—adopted with but one dissenting vote and one delegate recorded as not voting—gave the convention's approximately 998 other votes by acclamation to an endorsement pledging "wholehearted" support to Adlai E. Stevenson and John Sparkman for President and Vice President.

New York State political considerations gave the senatorial endorsement resolution its controversial nature. Actually, the question in dispute was never one as to whether John Cashmore, Brooklyn Borough president and nominee of the Democratic party, deserved endorsement on his Fair Deal program.

The issue was rather one of procedure and timing. Many delegates, while favoring Cashmore over all other nominees, felt that it would be better to refer the matter to the Executive Board in order to give it a chance to confer with the heads of CIO international unions and Cashmore before an endorsement was made.

Other supporters of Cashmore were calling for an immediate convention endorsement.

PRES. Michael J. Quill of the Transport Workers, head of the New York City CIO Council, led the latter group. He contended that a failure to endorse at the convention might give "aid and comfort" to the Republicans.

While press accounts tried to work this simple disagreement over strategy into the appearance of a "split" in the state CIO, Hollander and Quill and other leaders of the disagreeing factions were busy working out a "unity" resolution. The latter carried with but 18 dissenting votes.

"The endorsements of candidates for public office by the New York State CIO are not paper endorsements; they are firm resolves which are translated into vigorous and effective action by the members and affiliates of the CIO in New York State," the resolution declared. It instructed the executive board to meet "together with presidents and directors of CIO international unions and regional CIO directors and make a decision."

"The decision of this convention thus to postpone the matter of endorsement is not to be considered a reflection on the qualifications of any candidate," the convention added. "It is in keeping with our consistent practice of acting only after thorough consideration in matters of vital concern to the people of our state."

With that all significant opposition from those wanting an immediate endorsement disappeared. The 18 votes against the resolution were made up largely of non-Cashmore supporters,

ONLY the entire delegation from Local 140 of the CIO Furniture Workers abstained from voting.

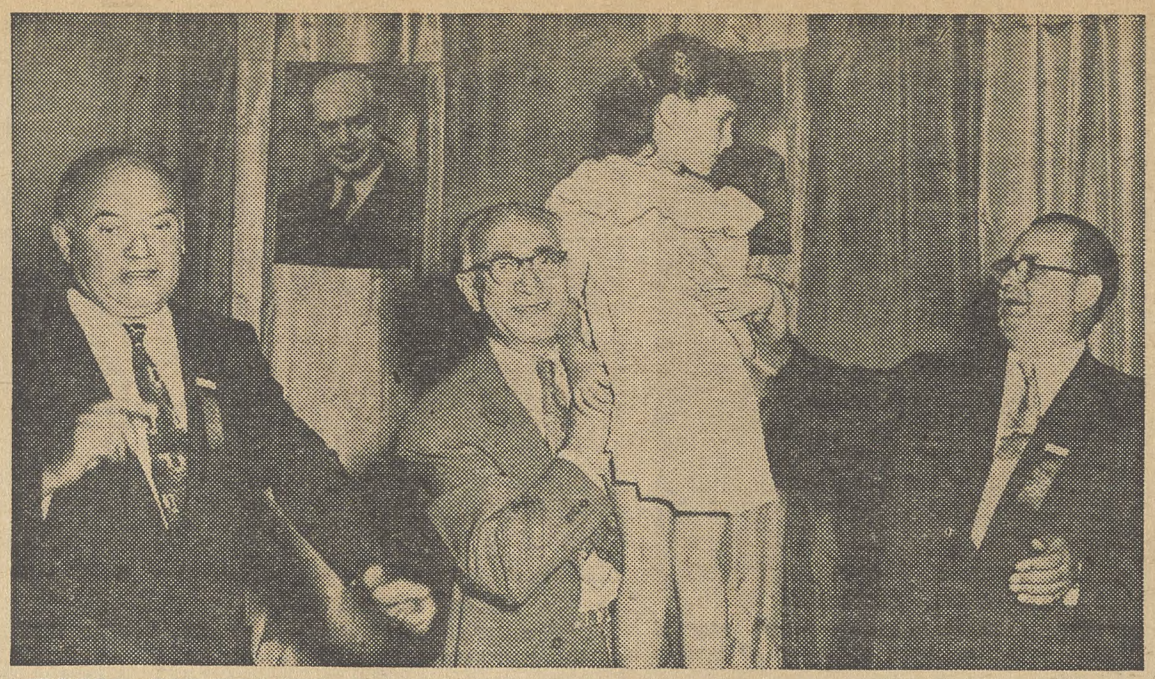
Hollander, whom the press had represented as being opposed to Cashmore's endorsement, then took the floor on a matter of personal privilege.

"I have known John Cashmore intimately for more than 20 years," he said. "His labor record is as good as we can expect from any public servant in this country. I hope—and I prophesy—that he will be endorsed by the CIO."

He added: "The question was not whether he had a good labor record but rather one of giving our members outside of New York City more time to get information about his record. Our convention has wisely done that."

Hollander's prediction came true last Tuesday. Acting in accordance with convention instructions the executive board met and gave the unqualified endorsement of the New York State CIO to Cashmore.

Only two international unions voted against the endorsement. They are the Utility Workers, who later endorsed Sen. Ives, GOP candidate for reelection, and the Rubber Workers. The Newspaper Guild abstained from voting.



"JUNIOR DELEGATE" Nancine Rubenstein's 25c led off donations to PAC averaging $5 from each New York CIO convention delegate. She's being introduced by Pres. Hollander, Delegate William Rabinowitz and Sec.-Treas. Garno.

Hollander, Garno Got A Big Hand

Louis Hollander and Harold J. Garno were named to their tenth straight one-year terms as president and secretary-treasurer of the New York State CIO Council at its 13th annual convention in Buffalo. Each was elected by a unanimous vote, followed by five-minute ovations.

The strong backing given to the council's administration was also reflected in the fact that 30 of the 33-man Executive Board were re-elected for another term. New members are John Hunt, National Maritime Union; Joseph McCarthy, Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Workers, and Harold Staples, Auto Workers.

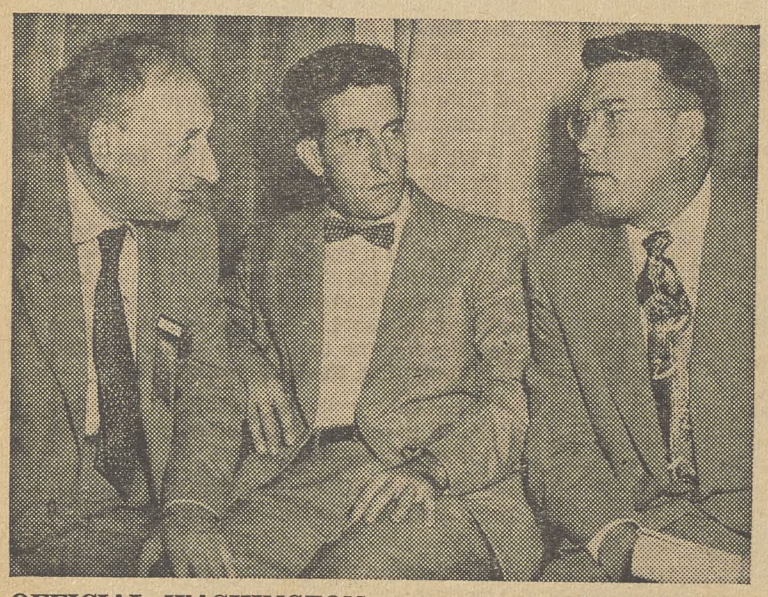
Haywood Warns Gains Of New Deal Can Be Lost

THE NEW Deal and the Fair Deal have brought the American people many benefits, such as social security, pensions and better wages, but "all of those things can be taken from you," CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood warned in a major address to the New York State CIO convention.

His call to "devote all of our time to political action" during the next two months was repeated for emphasis in addresses by Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers, Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers, and Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Political Action Committee.

Michael Mann, CIO regional director in New York City, who formerly worked closely with Gov. Stevenson in Illinois during the Cicero race riots, praised his civil rights record.

"Within 24 hours after the CIO asked the Governor to call out the militia, soldiers were marching in the streets of Cicero to protect human rights," Mann declared. "No one is ever going to criticize Adlai Stevenson's civil rights record in my presence and get away unanswered."



OFFICIAL WASHINGTON was represented at the convention by Assistant Sec. of Labor Robert T. Creasey (right), here conferring with Sec.-Treas. Abe Miller of CIO Clothing Workers N. Y. Joint Board and John H. Lotz, president of Local 150, CIO Communications Workers.

Truman Names Board For Study Of Immigration Laws

PRES. TRUMAN has re-emphasized his dissatisfaction with the McCarran-Walter immigration law by setting up a seven-man commission to review the nation's immigration and naturalization laws.

The present law, which retains discriminatory immigration quotas and which CIO vigorously condemned, was passed over the President's veto.

He assigned the new committee the chore of considering "the effect of our immigration laws and their administration, including the national origin quota system, on the conduct of the foreign policies of the United States."

The committee will report next Jan. 1, with proposals for legislation or administrative action.

His action was hailed as "a constructive step toward the liberalization and improvement" of the present law by two leaders in the fight against the McCarran Act, Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) and Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.).

They charged the present quota system for admitting immigrants contains "inequities which . . . prevent a balanced and fruitful flow of new immigrants to our country."

In his statement announcing formation of the commission, Truman referred to the plight of disabled persons, refugees from behind the Iron Curtain and victims of overpopulation in a plea for United States relief action which would be in keeping with humanitarianism, national interest and tradition.

He named Philip B. Perlman, who recently retired as U.S. Solicitor General, to head the commission.

Public Housing Occupants Get Break In Co-op

WOULD YOU like a one bedroom home for $2352 or a three bedroom home for $3920, with monthly payments amounting to between $30 and $38?

That's just what 1000 new homeowners in the Pennypack Woods Home Ownership Association obtained in Philadelphia last month, thanks to CIO proposals that the government be permitted to sell mutual war housing projects to tenants at cost.

The section authorizing such sale was written into the Housing Act of 1950 by Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.). Everybody gains by the transaction, since the government recovers its investment and is relieved of the continuing costs of administering the war housing.

The real estate lobby, however, has bitterly fought such sales, preferring to have the war housing units torn down instead. This is the first time that a development in any major city has been taken over. Taxpayers will get back $3.2 million invested in the development.

Fowler Gets Defense Post

PRESIDENT TRUMAN last week appointed Henry H. Fowler to be defense mobilizer.

Fowler has previously been chief of the Defense Production Administration and the National Production Authority. He succeeds John R. Steelman, presidential assistant, who temporarily served as defense mobilizer following the resignation of Charles E. Wilson last spring.

Fowler, a Washington attorney with a long record of government "trouble-shooting," was sworn in immediately.

In announcing his appointment, the President said that in the period ahead "there must be no let down" in the national effort to achieve defense production goals.

Defense Program Backed—

'Yellow Dog' Contracts Target Of British Unions

By BETTY HUMPHREYS
Special Correspondent

MARGATE, England—The Trades Union Congress, British counterpart of CIO, has just wound up its 84th annual conference. For a week, more than 900 delegates shaped policy to guide 183 unions and their eight million members for the coming year.

The TUC is a body of tremendous power in British economic and political life. Backbone of the Labor Party, its agenda, proceedings and decisions reflect the responsibility of its member unions.

Major decisions of the congress were:

- Support of Britain's rearmament program by approximately a 5-to-1 vote.
- Adoption of a wage policy—recognizing the nation's long economic difficulties — of restraint in future wage negotiations, yet opposition to any attempts to "restrict justifiable wage increases" in certain low-paid industries.
- Adoption of a strong program to defeat "yellow dog" contracts —legal in Britain—and barring employment of union members.
- Defeat of a series of Communist-line resolutions on international affairs and of all Communists and fellow travelers running for the TUC's 36-member General Council.
- Adoption of a program for further nationalization of British industry—which would depend upon a return of the Labor Party to office—and of opposition to denationalization programs begun by Winston Churchill's Conservative government.
- Approval of a program for increasing British trade with Russia and Soviet satellites.

Despite approval of this motion, the small Communist section was consistently and overwhelmingly voted down in their attempts to push through other propaganda motions containing all the current party-line gimmicks which are well known to American unionists. These proposals were defeated by margins of 5-to-1 to 6-to-1, while the principal Communist candidate for the TUC General Council, Arthur Horner, Mine Workers secretary, lost by more than four million votes.

Supporters of the wage policy adopted by the TUC argued that it would protect the interest of union members and, at the same time, help level-off climbing costs and prices.

Pres. Arthur Deakin emphasized that the only answer to how to get higher wages without a change in prices is to increase the productivity of British industry.

A particularly hot issue at the TUC this year was the problem of the yellow dog contract. Unlike the U. S., there is no law in Britain outlawing this form of employer obstruction.

Although there are not many cases of workers forced to sign non-union pledges, a strike recently broke out in Scotland when a publisher fired a worker who was secretly a union member.

The TUC is determined to clear up the whole issue. Delegates voted to send representatives to confer with Prime Minister Churchill and the Minister of Labor.

Deakin, who is also General Secretary of the 1.3 million member Transport & General Workers Union, attacked this anti-union attitude and supported the principle of the closed shop.

"We challenge the suggestion that workers should be free to join a union or stay outside," he said, "and shall continue to assert with the utmost vigor the right of trade unionists to say whether or not they will work alongside non-unionists."

The TUC also condemned attempts to set up company unions for the purpose of weakening legitimate trade unions and wrecking established bargaining machinery.

Almost a whole day was spent on problems of social insurance and industrial welfare. A series of motions was carried which called for improved safety measures for workers, an industrial health service and increased pensions.

Strong support was also expressed for free trade unions in other countries.

The TUC General Council was mandated to protest to Prime Minister Malan of South Africa on arrests of trade unionists. And financial support was approved for French and Italian trade unionists in their fight against Communist domination.

A lengthy debate on the government policy of rearmament resulted in an overwhelming vote of approval. Majority speakers called rearmament essential to the security of the country and the preservation of the freedoms the trade union movement has fought for and won.

Although more money on arms means a lower standard of living for the worker in Britain, the TUC statement says that the choice is not between rearmament and living standards, but between rearmament and the constant fear of aggression.

TUC Sees Winnie On Scab Shop

LONDON—Top leaders of the Trades Union Congress visited Prime Minister Churchill last week to enlist his aid in their fight against a printing plant in Dundee, Scotland, which refuses to hire union members.

Churchill told the TUC delegation that the company had written to him agreeing to stop requiring workers to sign "yellow dog" contracts—agreements not to join a union. However, the letter has said "this does not imply recognition of the unions."

Churchill told the TUC delegation that Britain is a signatory to an agreement of the Intl. Labor Organization, which guarantees the right of workers to organize and bargain collectively.

'Hear, Hear' TUC Meeting Was Relatively Sedate

"HEAR, HEAR"—that's about as enthusiastic as delegates get at conferences of the British Trade Union Congress.

There are no demonstrations, only occasional applause and the most violent reactions are saved for speakers who run over their five or seven-minute time limit.

Even Vincent Tewson, TUC general secretary, was shouted down for running one minute overtime.

But the general tone of a TUC meeting is one of hearing all sides. And there were rarely more than a few seats empty through the whole week of sessions.

Particularly impressive is the high standard of speeches and debate. Great emphasis is laid on the ability to speak clearly, to the point and dramatically.

The agenda centers around the annual report which is taken paragraph by paragraph throughout the five-day period. Resolutions are inserted as the appropriate section comes up for approval.

Although hundreds of resolutions are sent in by affiliated unions, a staff compositing procedure narrows the field down to about 70.

TUC even has difficulty getting through this number inside a week. All issues left over at the end of a day are dropped and are considered only if there is time left at the end of the convention week.

Bridges Loses On Appeal

THE 1950 perjury-conspiracy conviction of Harry Bridges was upheld last week by a federal appeals court in San Francisco.

Bridges was convicted of falsely swearing he was not a member of the Communist party when he obtained his U. S. citizenship papers in 1945.

A three-judge panel also unanimously upheld the five-year sentence imposed on the president of the Intl. Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union. The union was expelled from CIO because of Communist domination.

Bridges, who is free on $25,000 bail, announced he would appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court. Two of his aides, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, were also convicted of helping Bridges become naturalized through fraud. Their convictions were likewise upheld.

Fulbright Gimmicks—

Textile Operators Stall Wage Case

SOUTHERN textile manufacturers last week trotted out their legal experts with orders to stall and delay a minimum wage increase in plants having government contracts.

As hearings opened in Washington on CIO Textile Workers' proposals to increase minimum wage levels from the current 87c to $1.135 an hour, the industry's legal battery began tossing technical questions at a rapid clip.

They were aided in their delaying tactics by gimmicks written into the Walsh-Healey public contracts act by the 82d Congress. The new devices were inserted into the act through the Fulbright amendments to the Defense Production Act.

THE real purpose of the amendments was being demonstrated for the first time. They require that all determinations by the Secretary of Labor, who sets minimum wages in plants holding government contracts, be subject to the Administrative Procedures Act. The purpose of this is to make it much easier for employers to contest a minimum rate in the courts.

The current hearings result from a petition filed last January by the TWUA-CIO. The petition requested the establishment of a minimum wage of $1.135 for the general textile industry and the incorporation of a 1c cost-of-living escalator clause in such contracts.

Testifying in favor of the increase, Solmon Barkin, TWUA research director, pointed out that its contracts have "formed the prevailing pattern of wage adjustments in the textile industry for the past several years."

"It is in the public interest," he said, "as well as in the interest of the large majority of workers and employers in the industry that the union's wage scale shall continue to serve as the basis for the determination of the minimum wage under the Public Contracts law."

"Any other course," Barkin added, "would be contrary to the purpose of the act, which is to prevent government orders from going to those employers who fail to live up to the established wage standards in their industry."

The union presented documented evidence to prove the present 87c minimum is obsolete and not high enough to protect workers against "wage-chiselers." It was set in July 1948 when 87c was the prevailing minimum rate in the South. But, the union pointed out, there have been three general wage increases in the South and a fourth is now under way.

Noting that the cost-of-living escalator formula is now in effect in a majority of the organized mills in the industry, the TWUA added:

"Inasmuch as any minimum wage determination would shortly be made obsolete because of the operation of the escalator clause in the union's agreement, it is appropriate to make provision for automatic revision of the prevailing minimum wage."

TWUA Names AFL Foe In Libel Case

TOP NATIONAL officers of the CIO Textile Workers have filed a $200,000 libel suit against officers and staff members of the AFL dual union, the United Textile Workers.

The action grows out of the bitter fight between the two organizations which was touched off last May, when George Baldanzi, then executive vice president of the TWUA, made an unsuccessful bid for the presidency. After his defeat he bolted to the AFL group, was named organization director, and attempted to spearhead a secession movement from the TWUA.

The suit was filed in Bristol County Superior Court, New Bedford, Mass. It is based on a pamphlet distributed by UTW representatives at TWUA plants in New Bedford, and widely circulated in other textile mills throughout the country.

In it, Pres. Emil Rieve of the TWUA is charged with misusing $25,000 in union funds. He and other TWUA officials are also charged with additional dishonesty.

The suit was filed on behalf of Rieve, Executive Vice Pres. Mariano S. Bishop and Sec.-Treas. William Pollock.

Defendants, in addition to Baldanzi, are Pres. Anthony Valente and Sec.-Treas. Lloyd Kleinert of the UTW, and seven UTW staff members who distributed the pamphlet in New Bedford.

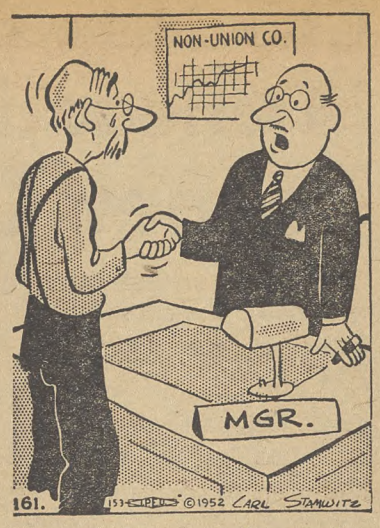
CIO Was Neutral In Gas, Coke Election Contest

A plea for united efforts by members and officers of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers in building their union was voiced by Allan S. Haywood at the recent Gas, Coke convention.

Incorrectly, The CIO News of Sept. 1 reported that Haywood, in an address before balloting on officers at the Chicago convention, had voiced support for former Pres. Martin Wagner and Vice Pres. Joseph R. Joy. The CIO remained neutral in the election.

Elwood Swisher was elected Gas, Coke president, defeating Wagner in a close vote, while Joy and Sec.-Treas. Cecil Martin were re-elected.

Haywood's pre-balloting address to the convention was in praise of organizing and collective bargaining gains won by the GC&CW, while after the election of officers both Wagner and Haywood urged closing the ranks and building the union.



"Sorry to let you go after twenty years, Binks. Maybe you can find a union labor job with retirement benefits."

IUE Deadlocked As GE Pact Runs Out

By RAY HANSEN

THE GENERAL Electric Conference Board of the CIO Electrical Workers last week recommended that its contract with GE be terminated when the contract expires on Sept. 15.

Action was taken Sept. 5, after union negotiators had held their tenth fruitless negotiating session with the company. Management's economic proposals were termed "inadequate," and its proposed contract revisions "unacceptable."

The resolution recommending termination stated: "If a satisfactory agreement is not reached on or before Sept. 15, the Board recommends that the contract be terminated."

At the same time, another Conference Board meeting was set for Sept. 16 to decide "what ever action may be required." In the meantime the GE locals were urged to hold plant-gate and general membership meetings on the negotiations.

Negotiating sessions were continued last week, and federal mediation officials attended the meetings at the request of IUE Pres. James B. Carey.

The IUE-GE Board unanimously affirmed its support of their negotiators' seven-point program of demands. The seven-point program was formulated after GE made its first and only offer of a 5.76% wage increase.

However, if IUE had accepted that offer, Carey pointed out, it would have had to surrender its right to win for retired GE employes the $5 monthly increase in Social Security benefits recently voted by Congress.

In addition, GE employes would only get five paid holidays next year, instead of seven, because two holidays—Fourth of July and Memorial Day—fall on Saturday.

The seven-point IUE program is as follows:

- A two-year contract. Continuation of the cost-of-living and productivity increase principles, with a guarantee of a minimum raise of 10c to all workers each year.
- A yearly wage reopener "to assess and take account of special conditions."
- Guarantee of seven paid holidays.
- A modified union shop.
- GE should assume payment of the 2% contribution GE workers presently make into their pension plan. Workers would continue to contribute 2%, but it would be used to improve other phases of their health and welfare program.
- Improvement of the incentive system to assure increased take-home pay for increased production.
- A joint company-union study on possible reinstitution of the profit-sharing plan which GE employes had up to 1948. The study should yield a report with recommendations for 1954 negotiations.

The Conference Board also unanimously adopted a "program of action" statement which directed all local officers to make sure that every GE worker understands the issues and the importance of the negotiations. It stated:

"We face the obstinate position of GE—that what it first offers is not only final, but it is the last word in wisdom and justice. Securing a change of attitude on the part of GE and insisting that collective bargaining means give-and-take until a contract is signed, is just as important for our future as the specific issues we deal with."

Urban League Meets—

McDonald Tells How USA Curbed Job Bias

TWO EXAMPLES of how the CIO Steelworkers is enforcing nondiscriminatory policies on the job in the steel mills were reported by David J. McDonald, USA-CIO secretary-treasurer, to the National Urban League's recent conference in Cleveland.

At one Ohio mill, when a group of white workers walked out when Negroes were hired, the steel union left them to "sweat it out." Five days later they returned and have been working with Negroes ever since, McDonald said.

In another mill — under the USA's constitutional nondiscrimination clause—the national union thwarted an effort to deprive Negroes of job classifications and wage rates which they deserved.

McDonald also reported this example of improved race relations in the Southern steel industry. A meeting of USA Texas locals—at which 90% of the delegates were white workers—elected James Ross, a Negro Steelworker, to the union's Intl. Wage Policy Committee.

The conference of the Urban League—a Negro, labor, employer-supported group which seeks to widen job opportunities for workers in minority groups—also got a report on the high economic cost of job discrimination.

Because of poor wages paid generally to unorganized Negro workers, the U. S. is denied 10% of its production potential and $9 to $12 billion annually in consumer purchases. The estimate came from Elmer L. Lindseth, president of a Cleveland utility.

"We cannot now afford—and never could afford—the price we pay for race prejudice," Lindseth said, according to a Labor Press Associated report.

The effectiveness of fair employment practices legislation as a "very useful tool" in reducing job bias was cited by Winthrop Rockefeller at the Urban League meeting.

Rockefeller also charged that the Navy — despite Pres. Truman's nonsegregation order to the military services—is permitting Jim Crow hiring bias against Negro civilian workers on some Navy jobs. He also charged the Veterans Administration and other federal agencies with continuing discriminatory hiring practices in some cities in the South.

Stone Workers Strike 12 Plants

About 1700 members of the CIO Stone and Allied Products Workers went on strike last week in 12 plants of the Harbison-Walker Refractories Co. when the firm refused to put into effect a wage increase approved by the Wage Stabilization Board.

The company makes refractory brick for lining the furnaces in which steel is made, and is trying to get a price boost to offset a package pay increase of about 23c an hour. Plants affected are at Pittsburgh, Clearfield, Wallaceton, Barrett and Retort, Pa.; Portsmouth, O., Cape May, N. J., and Oxford, Ala.

Give A Buck To PAC

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

FROM LOS ANGELES last week I proceeded to Buffalo, N. Y., where I addressed the 13th annual convention of our fine New York State CIO Council. In my remarks I emphasized the necessity for united political action at this time in pursuit of CIO's legislative goals.

The convention had its division as to the timing of an endorsement of a senatorial candidate. This led the press, which frequently misinterprets such differences, to indulge in a great deal of speculation as to what was going to happen.

A conference with Mike Quill, president of the Transport Workers and of the New York City CIO Council; Louis Hollander, president of the New York State CIO Council, and myself was followed by a healthy understanding reached by convention delegates. Maintaining CIO unity, the convention endorsed Gov. Adlai Stevenson for president and Sen. John Sparkman for vice-president.

As a practical demonstration of CIO determination to win this important national election, every delegate voluntarily contributed $5 to PAC.

★

THE FOLLOWING Tuesday, Sept. 9, a conference of international representatives of affiliated unions, officers and executive board members of the New York State Council was held in New York City. I attended at the request of the presidents of the New York City and New York State CIO Councils.

Spirited and healthy discussion took place at this meeting, ending in a substantial majority vote in support of the candidacy of John Cashmore, Democratic candidate for the U. S. Senate.

The actions of the convention and of this special conference demonstrate once again that our CIO unions can differ on details and yet resolve their differences and emerge united, because they are basically united. Our conference adjourned on a high plane.

As the political campaign is getting under way, it is more important than ever for our people to lend their full support in the highly important tasks of securing a full registration and, later, a heavy vote. It is absolutely essential that we contribute to PAC in order to defend the gains made in recent years and go on to even greater advances.

The forces of reaction are exerting every effort to thwart the legitimate, progressive hopes of the American people. Seventy-five per cent of the American press is supporting the Republican candidates for the two highest national political offices.

★

FOR US in the labor movement there can be no let-up. We have learned to fight for what we need and want. Ours has been a long, hard struggle. We can not afford now to become complacent; we must not delude ourselves into believing that the difficult days are all behind us.

We believe in the common man; we believe that all men, women and children have an inherent right to peace, security and happiness. Believing this, our cause is right and our fight just.

The hate-mongers and the scare-mongers are on the march in this campaign. As I said in Los Angeles, "Where was Nixon when we in the labor movement were taking on the Commies?" His record on labor and human rights is 100% against us.

It is interesting to observe the Republican presidential candidate embracing, at least verbally, those things we know to be New Deal and Fair Deal accomplishments. Let us not forget that those gains were not attained by any middle of the road program. They were won, in the only way they can be won, through a program of progress and determination. Let's keep going, united, in the fight for human progress.

CIO Hits Chicago Rent Hike, Minneapolis Saves Controls

A RENT BOOST of 10% faces tenants in the Chicago area under a recommendation made last week by the Chicago Rent Advisory Board, but a long fight dating back to 1949 for fair rent controls in Milwaukee seems to be approaching victory.

The fight against the powerful landlord lobby in these two cities highlights reports on the last-minute battle to save rent controls in many major cities throughout the country as the Sept. 30th deadline neared.

By last weekend, over 625 communities with a population of more than 20 million had acted to extend controls.

Minneapolis and Arlington County, Va., are among the most recent additions.

CHICAGO'S action, which still must be approved by the Rent Stabilizer, was taken in the absence of Robert Levin, CIO representative on the board. It was bitterly protested by Ellsworth Smith, secretary of the Chicago CIO Council, who wired ORS urging rejection. He pointed out no other city voting to extend rent controls had found such an increase justified.

Meanwhile, W. B. Taylor, CIO regional director in Kentucky, took the lead in urging the Louisville board of aldermen to extend rent controls in that rapidly expanding industrial city. He pointed out that the rental housing vacancy ratio there is already less than 1% and that a new plant of the General Electric Co. alone has announced its intention of hiring some 16,000 additional workers.

The 871,000 people of Milwaukee have had rent woes since 1949 when the Republican Legislature voted a state law allowing boosts up to 30% as a substitute for the Federal rent control law. The Wisconsin CIO Council challenged this law in the courts, and backed Mayor Zeidler's plea to former Gov. Rennebohm for relief.

AFTER the Republican governor rejected this appeal, rents in the city went through the roof. They are now the second highest in the U. S. on the Bureau of Labor Statistics rent index.

Chairman Walter P. Reuther of the CIO National Housing Committee tried to remedy this situation by asking the Critical Areas Committee to designate Milwaukee as a critical defense area, subject to federal rent control. Such action has just been taken.

Public hearings on the designation, which are required under the cumbersome rent control law, are scheduled for Oct. 10. They are all that now stand between the Rent Stabilizer and his authority to impose rent controls.

Fred Erchul, secretary of the Milwaukee County CIO Council, hailed the designation. "There is a definite need for controlled rents here," he declared.

The Democratic National Committee has called upon the Democratic Party's local organizations to "lead the way" in getting city governments to vote an extension. It declared that "Republican leadership and special interest groups have been working for years—over Democratic opposition—to kill rent controls."

Alcoa Plant Signs

An across-the-board wage increase of 10% and other contract benefits were won by 400 members of CIO Auto Workers Local 312 in a new contract at the Garwood, N. J., plant of Aluminum Co. of America.

Top Officers Of Oil Union Unopposed

By RAY DAVIDSON

THE THREE top officers of CIO Oil Workers were renominated without opposition at the conclusion of the union's 22d annual convention in Philadelphia.

This was the first time in recent history that the OWIU convention adjourned leaving all three officers unopposed. Their names, along with names of candidates for executive council positions, will be submitted to the entire membership for election by referendum. Write-ins are permitted in this referendum.

Renominated without opposition were Pres. O. A. Knight, Vice Pres. B. J. Schafer and Sec.-Treas. T. M. McCormick.

THE convention unanimously adopted a resolution endorsing Adlai Stevenson for President and John Sparkman for Vice-President.

This was an unusual action for the Oil Workers, for only once before in history has the convention endorsed a presidential candidate, that during one of the races by Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The Oil Workers are always enthusiastic supporters of PAC and follow PAC endorsements, the convention said, but this year they felt an endorsement of the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket would give added emphasis to the previous CIO endorsement.

The resolution said Stevenson would "fulfill his duties in such a way as to serve best the interests of the people and without attempting to do favors for any one particular group."

SPARKMAN has voted as a liberal "contrary to the general tide of change in Congress" and by his service on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee has contributed much to world peace, the resolution added.

Jack Kroll, director of the CIO Political Action Committee, said the Republicans are offering the "same old cake" but with "different frosting" decorated by five stars—those of Eisenhower.

But, "if they succeed," he added, "we'll still have the same moldy cake."

The convention voted to increase per capita tax to the International from $1.40 to $1.45 monthly, effective Jan. 1.

Dues are set by the local unions, with a minimum of $2.50 and a maximum of $5 provided by the International constitution. This is unchanged from previous years.

Don't Shoot Your Wife!

Big Shots Told How To Cut Taxes In 10 Easy Lessons

IS YOUR WIFE spending too much of your hard-earned money? Don't shoot her. Just make her a creditor and save $10,000 on income taxes.

Have you tried incorporating yourself? Don't wait another day. You, too, can save thousands in taxes.

And don't work too hard during the day, because if you bring some of your work home nights or weekends, you can get another special tax deduction.

This is no gag. It is a serious report being distributed by Prentice-Hall, a big-wig in the financial publications world.

Prentice-Hall has just uncovered another six ways that big shots can trim down their income taxes, at the expense of the little folks.

In what it calls a "special alert," Prentice-Hall advises businessmen it can save them lots of tax money. It's not talking about "just the ordinary run-of-the-mill deductions which you've been taking all along," this outfit says.

It means "the EXTRA deductions that have been specially worked out to help both the individuals and companies."

Here are some of the gimmicks Prentice-Hall

brags about in its alert to big taxpayers:

- "On your coming tax return for 1952 you can get a substantial deduction for sums spent promoting business for 1953." No worker need apply for this deduction.
- "If you get dividends, don't make the costly error on your coming tax return of counting ALL of them as 'Taxable Income'." Breaks our heart to think some of the big boys may have been paying taxes on dividends when they could have ducked the tax collector.
- "One company head made his wife an $8500 creditor—protected her by a 25% share in his profits—and so far has apportioned to her $6900 one year, $7700 the next and $10,300 the next, all of which he has legitimately tax-deducted." See, the little woman is really worth something after all.
- "Are you incorporated? Then there's still time for you to obtain a larger tax-exemption for 1952 than the usual $25,000." Most of us would settle for a $25,000 exemption, thank you.
- "You may have overlooked the tax deduction you can get for dues . . . and expenses for Business Associations and luncheons." We always knew they must pay those guys to sit through NAM luncheon speeches.
- "Another one is this—and it's not widely known: if you find it difficult to finish up all your work at your place of business and bring work home to do evenings and week-ends, that can be set up so as to give you a new tax-deduction on your coming tax return." Also gives you an excuse not to mow the lawn.

Of course, workers' taxes come right out of their pay envelopes. They can't play little games with the tax collectors, but Prentice-Hall's customers do and make a good thing out of it.

Incidentally, professionally this isn't known as "tax evasion," which is illegal. It's called "tax avoidance." The lawyers say it's legal, too.

UAW Gains Double Victory In Aircraft Wage Case

9-15

MORE THAN 28,000 UAW-CIO members last week won a double-barreled victory over the North American Aviation Corp.

The Wage Stabilization Board okehed a 10c an hour general wage increase recommended by a presidential arbitration panel, which also strengthened the union's case for wage parity between aircraft and auto plants.

Involved in the lengthy dispute are UAW Locals 887 and 1151 in Southern California and 927 in Columbus, Ohio.

The three-man panel, named by Pres. Truman, supported the union's contention on wage parity. It pointed out in detail that the differential in the wages of aircraft and auto workers has been continually increasing for some years, to the disfavor of the aircraft worker.

THE PANEL agreed the work was comparable and required similar skills.

For some time, the UAW has argued that the "gold-plated panhandlers" who run the aircraft plants on fat government contracts should not be allowed to hide their wage levels behind the wartime emergencies which cause that industry to boom.

Trying to justify their position, the companies argued all they should be expected to do was to meet wage patterns in the airframe industry, not in other comparable industries.

Following four days of testimony from union and company spokesmen, lengthy briefs were submitted. On the basis of the arguments and the briefs, the panel ruled the differential was inequitable. It recommended a wage increase of 10c an hour, providing a partial "down payment" on the differential.

The increase is retroactive to Apr. 28, 1952 and covers the members of Local 1151 in the Fresno plant, recently organized by the UAW.

Truman named the panel when a strike deadline of last June drew near. Both parties agreed to accept the panel's decision on wages, following the company's assurance all other details at issue would be settled favorably.

UAW Vice-Pres. John Livingston, director of the union's national aircraft department, headed the union team presenting the wage case to the panel in California.

Commenting on the award, Livingston said while the wage increase does not "measure up to what is needed to eliminate the differential between aircraft and auto, it is certainly a step in the right direction."

"Of great importance," he added, "is the fact that the airframe company's usual resistance to a comparison with the auto plants did not impress the panel. The panel's report will help us clear the way to bring the high levels that the UAW-CIO has developed in the auto plants to the workers in aircraft plants."

Union Aide Kidnapped In Textile Walkout

A CIO TEXTILE Workers organizer was kidnapped last week in Middleburg, Pa., and police refused to arrest the kidnappers.

William Zweiffle was locked overnight in an idle textile mill, after threats of a beating and other violence, but was later released unharmed.

Local police refused to arrest his attackers, declaring themselves "neutrals." The sheriff and state police claimed they had no authority to deal with kidnapping.

The violence resulted from a strike of 500 Plaza Co. rayon weavers at Beavertown and Selinsgrove, Pa. The Middleburg mill is idle, because of the strike of workers who recently voted for the TWUA-CIO.

Zweiffle was called to Middleburg by a pro-company committee which demanded the union "cease interfering with their right to work." In a carefully staged demonstration, reminiscent of the beating and kidnapping of other CIO organizers in past years, the group threatened Zweiffle.

Later they locked him in the idle Plaza mill in the hope he would call off the strike and leave the county. When he was released, Zweiffle immediately sought police action, in vain.

Sol Stetin, TWUA State director, and Harry Boyer, Pennsylvania State CIO president, have taken the matter up with Gov. Fine and the State Attorney General but are still awaiting action.

TWUA OFFICIALS said the strike occurred when the company stalled on contract negotiations. Substandard wages and working conditions in the Plaza chain brought about organization of the mills. The workers are still out, determined to obtain treatment and pay scales matching those in nearby organized mills.

After the kidnapping, Stetin called a public mass meeting in Middleburg to discuss the strike issues. In attendance were the sheriff, state and local police and town officials.

Stetin reported considerable booing from a small group of Plaza employes when the meeting started, but when 300 townspeople arrived a little later, the meeting quieted down.

Stetin and his staff explained the policies of the TWUA and the CIO and the strike issues. He riddled the Plaza company's printed propaganda, designed to convey the impression that both CIO and TWUA were Communist-dominated, and won a careful hearing from the audience.

Both the TWUA and the State CIO are pledged to press charges against Zweiffle's attackers. Several Middleburg lawyers, consulted by the union, have so far refused to represent the union.

CIO Teachers Get Backing

THE NEW York City Teachers Organizing Committee last week received a man's-sized pat on the back from the New York State CIO.

That organization, at its Buffalo convention, adopted a resolution welcoming "the establishment of an idealistic, anti-fascist, anti-Communist union of teachers."

Recognizing the No. 1 problem of teachers — low wages — the State CIO called for "a single salary schedule for New York City teachers of $4000 to $8000 in 10 annual steps."

The co-chairmen of the Teachers Organizing Committee, part of the CIO Government and Civic Employees, hailed adoption of the resolution.

Albert Sayer and Daniel Gunsher said, "passage of this resolution by the CIO's State body means that one million organized CIO workers are behind our salary campaign."

Speedup Brings Strike By UAW

A speedup at the Metuchen, N. J., plant of Lincoln-Mercury last week resulted in the first authorized strike at that plant, which went into operation in 1948.

Some 1800 CIO Auto Workers walked out after a five-hour conference failed to settle the speedup dispute.

FTC Whacks Fluffium As Big Ad Drive Goes Pfft

THE ONLY Fluffium in Fluffium was in its ads, said the Federal Trade Commission last week as it branded Fluffium ads "grossly exaggerated, false and misleading."

According to the FTC, Henry A. Dreer, Inc., of Philadelphia, which makes the liquid soil conditioner, made these false claims:

Fluffium will condition 1500 feet of soil to a depth of three to five inches by sprinkling or spraying thereon one gallon diluted with water.

It will condition as much soil as peat moss at one-eighth the cost.

It is not necessary to work Fluffium into the soil to be effective.

It keeps soil conditioned indefinitely and provides more coverage for less money than all other soil conditioners.

All the claims are false, said the FTC, and anyway, it added, other soil conditioners will provide as much or more coverage for the same or less money.

Senate Meat-Ax Class Faces Voters' Verdict

WHAT KIND of a Senate will take over next year?

Will it be controlled by Republicans or Democrats?

Will the meat-ax "Class of 1946" continue in power or be replaced?

These are vital questions which the voters in 33 states will decide on Nov. 4. Overshadowed by the publicity of the presidential campaign, these senatorial races are nonetheless of extreme importance.

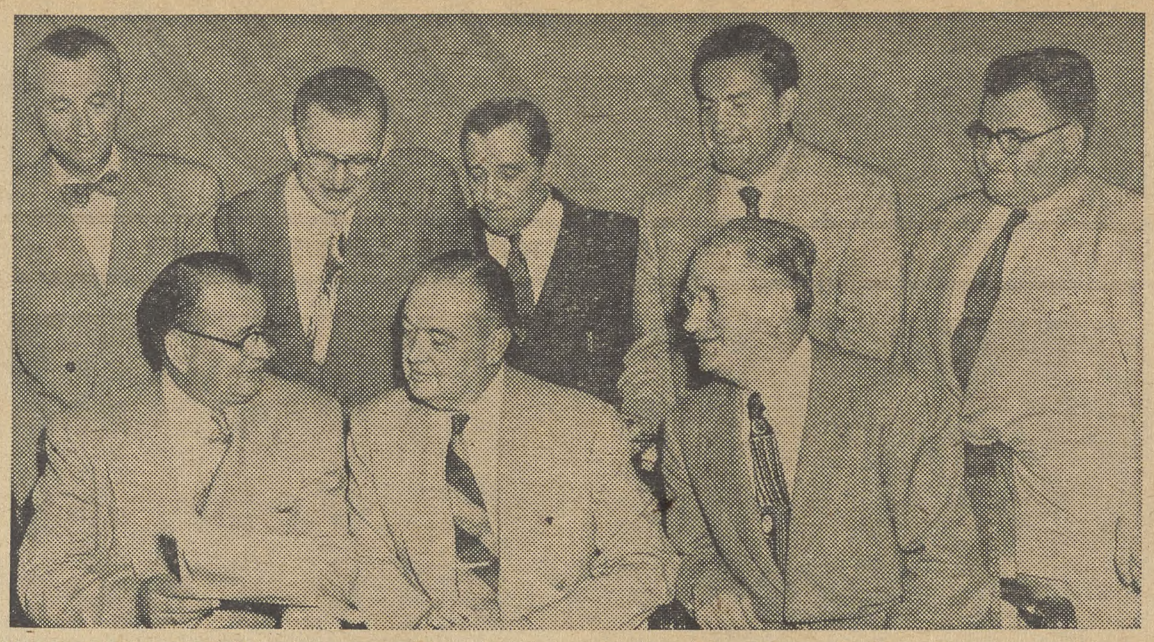
On their outcome depends the future of liberal legislation.

As the November election draws near, three hard political facts bear repeating:

- No matter who the next President is, he can't pass a single law.
- Just a few more dependable liberal votes in the 81st Congress would have meant passage of the Fair Deal program the voters demanded in 1948 when they elected Harry Truman.
- A small vote means the election of reactionaries and doom to liberal proposals.

The first two points need no argument. Obviously a President can suggest, inspire and work for certain legislation, but in the final analysis he is dependent upon the complexion of the Congress.

With a friendly Congress, a President can translate campaign pledges into law. An unfriendly Congress can lick all his proposals.



NEW YORK CIO Council reported endorsement of John Cashmore, Democratic candidate for U. S. Senator (seated, center). In group (seated) are State CIO Sec.-Treas. Harold J. Garno and Vincent La Capria, Clothing Workers, and (standing, from left) Fileno DeNovellis, Shoe Workers; Samuel Lowenthal, Retail-Wholesale; John A. White, Auto Workers; Edward P. Swayduck, Lithographers; and John J. Maurillo, CIO regional director for central New York State.

The second point is easily proven by checking the record of the 81st and 82nd Congresses. Liberal measures failed by slim margins and reactionary measures were adopted, in many cases by tiny majorities. It was an ideal setup for the Republican-Dixiecrat coalition.

The 1946 elections, which saw 13 reactionary Republicans winning Senate seats, proved workers suffer indefinitely when they fail to go to the polls in a single election.

In 1946, the key issue was the deliberately-inspired meat shortage. War-weary voters by the thousands stayed home. The "Class of 1946" was the result.

This year, these senators are facing the voters for the first time since their election. If the Republicans are to control the Senate again, the GOP must reelect them.

It is this fact, apologists for Gen. Eisenhower say, which caused him to abandon what he said were his principles and openly embrace candidates like Jenner of Indiana and McCarthy of Wisconsin, who represent all the general has said he abhorred.

They had led the unprincipled attack on Gen. George C. Marshall, the man Eisenhower reportedly reveres like a "second father." Jenner had called Marshall "a front man for traitors." McCarthy's slanderous lies had brought a new word into the language—"McCarthyism."

But Eisenhower wanted a GOP Congress so he backed these two as well as Cain of Washington, Malone of Nevada, Ecton of Montana, Watkins of Utah, Kem of Missouri, Bricker of Ohio and Martin of Pennsylvania.

All had voting records which would give the general the cold chills if he had a more detailed knowledge of civilian government. All had fought measures, both foreign and domestic, which Eisenhower was now proclaiming as Republican-party gospel.

For any presidential candidate, who campaigned to the tune that "it was time for a change," to expect support for a change from these senators was laughable. Their voting record (for details see The CIO News Voting Record) proved they were unalterably opposed to any change, unless it meant marching backward to the days of McKinley.

Not one of the nine had contributed a thing except opposition and scandal-mongering to the pressing issues of the day.

State By State, Here's Digest Of Important Senate Races

A KNIFE-EDGE margin of just one man is all that gives Democrats their present majority in the Senate.

The lineup now is 49 Democrats (many of them Dixiecrats) to 47 Republicans.

Thirty-five of the Senate seats are at stake in the 1952 elections. Of these, 14 now are Democratic and 21 are Republican.

Many of the key Senate races are in the big states, with some deciding popular and electoral votes. Here is a digest of some of the important Senate contests:

CONNECTICUT—Both Senators are running for reelection this year. Sen. Benton, a liberal Democrat and a fighting enemy of McCarthyism, is facing the other Connecticut Senator, just appointed by the state's Republican governor. Benton's opponent is William Purtell, with no legislative record, named in early September to fill the vacancy left by the death of Brian McMahon. The other race finds Prescott Bush, a Republican, pitted against Rep. Ribicoff, one of the strongest liberals in the House.

OHIO—Sen. Bricker, even more reactionary than Ohio's Sen. Taft, faces a tough opponent in Mike DiSalle, former price administrator. DiSalle, a former mayor of Toledo, is an all-out Fair Dealer, who is blasting away at Bricker's record of opposition to every piece of liberal legislation.

PENNSYLVANIA—Ed Martin, a political messenger boy for the old Pew machine, has a complete "wrong" record in the CIO News Voting Record for the 82d Congress. The Democratic nominee is Federal Judge Bard.

INDIANA—William Jenner, one of the GOP's most accomplished mud-slingers and least accomplished legislators, is seeking reelection with the blessing of Gen. Eisenhower. Indiana's Gov. Schricker, an early Stevenson supporter, is running against Jenner.

MICHIGAN—Popular, young Sen. Moody, ex-newspaperman named to succeed the late Sen. Vandenberg, is facing his first political test. His GOP opponent is Rep. Potter, who has a long record of support for reactionary legislation.

MASSACHUSETTS—The Bay State's senatorial race is between two youthful legislators, both with large followings. The incumbent, Sen. Lodge, is facing his toughest race with 35-year-old Rep. Kennedy, liberal son of the former ambassador to Great Britain.

NEW JERSEY—Archibald Alexander, running on an all-out liberal platform, is seeking to unseat Republican Sen. Smith. While Smith's record is not as black as some of his colleagues, New Jersey liberals call him wishy-washy, pointing out he talks a better line than he votes.

MISSOURI—Stuart Symington, one of the New Deal's most accomplished trouble-shooters and one of Washington's most able administrators, is waging a tough fight to unseat Republican Sen. Kem, one of the "Class of 1946."

NEW YORK—Sen. Irving Ives, whom Republicans love to call a "liberal," is facing Brooklyn Democrat John Cashmore, who has a 100% pro-labor voting record as Borough president. Ives is a past master of the art of voting the big-business line in committee, while posing as a "liberal" on the Senate floor.

WEST VIRGINIA—Chapman Revercomb, one of the GOP's most extreme reactionaries, is seeking to unseat Democratic Sen. Kilgore. Revercomb's record was so bad, even Gov. Dewey refused to campaign in West Virginia with him in 1948. However, Eisenhower has given Revercomb, along with Jenner and McCarthy, his blessing.

WISCONSIN—Sen. McCarthy will face Democrat Atty.-Gen. Thomas Fairchild, in a campaign sure to be marked by traditional McCarthy mud slinging.

'People's Political Poll' Now On TV

TELEVISION viewers in nearly 40 cities this week will begin watching as Mr. and Mrs. American Voter express their candid opinions of the two presidential candidates.

For the first time in TV history, viewers will watch a visual political poll, provided by the CIO Political Action Committee.

It is the CIO-PAC's latest television venture, "Peoples' Political Poll," a 15-minute broadcast which will be seen for the six weeks between now and Election Day.

"This is not a statistical poll," Jack Kroll, PAC director, noted. "We are not competing with Mr. Gallup.

"Instead, this is a pictorial report of what the people have on their minds, what they are thinking as the campaign progresses.

"The CIO-PAC is interested in what people are thinking. It believes in people."

"People's Political Poll" will appear on the following stations, PAC said, urging listeners to check their hometown papers for broadcast time:

Atlanta WSB-TV, Baltimore WAAM-TV, Birmingham WAFM-TV, Bloomington, Ind., WTTV, Boston WNAC-TV, Chicago WENR-TV, Cincinnati WCPO-TV, Cleveland WXEL-TV, Columbus WTVN-TV, Dallas WFAA, Davenport, Ia., WOC-TV, Dayton WHIO-TV, Denver KFEL-TV.

Campaign Roundup—

Ike Bows To Taft And Begs McCarthy's Aid

UNCONDITIONAL surrender is something Gen. Eisenhower knows a lot about. As Allied World War II commander in Western Europe, he helped force it on to Hitler's Germany and Mussolini's Italy.

Last week the General was engaged in political unconditional surrender.

He capitulated to Sen. Taft—the defeated rival at Chicago—and recognized Old Guard control of the GOP and any Eisenhower Administration, in return for a promise that Taft and his stalwarts would stop sitting on their hands in the election campaign.

Few days after the surrender on New York's Morningside Heights, at Ike's home as Columbia Univ. president-on-leave, the Eisenhower command sent out a call for help—to Wisconsin's Joe McCarthy, asked him to stump the nation for the General.

As Gov. Stevenson, Democratic candidate commented, "the elephant put its two heads together for a peace conference and they must have eaten crow. . . . It looks as if Taft lost the nomination and won the nominee."

—Fitzpatrick in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch

"Chins Up Now, and Carry On"

Stevenson's well-aimed barbs are getting under the elephant's hide, as demonstrated by the loud protests of Ike, Sen. Nixon and others last week. A Democratic campaigner, Sen. Monroney, shot back the GOP is "telling America to wipe that smile off its face."

"TURN THE RASCALS IN"—Gen. Eisenhower (right) can swallow anything, including this enthusiasm for Sen. Jenner (R., Ind.), who out-McCarthys McCarthy.

"THE GREAT SURRENDER"—That's how Gov. Stevenson described Ike's deal with Sen. Taft. The Ohioan looks happy, but you can't say that for the general.

THE ROAD to the Taft-Ike deal began months ago, when the General went home to Abilene, Kans., voluntarily adopted the tattered 1950 GOP slogan of "liberty vs. socialism."

In the hue and cry over "stolen votes" at the GOP Chicago convention, the platform adopted pretty well followed the Taft line from A to Z, including full support of Taft-Hartley.

"Liberty against creeping socialism" was spread on thick in the seven-page statement which Taft drafted in Cincinnati before he went to New York, and was okehed by Ike with apparently little consideration.

One veteran Ike backer, Columnist Walter Lippmann, said "the control of the party and of the administration if the Republicans are elected" was at stake. Taft was carefully prepared, said Lippmann, yet Ike was "the novice and the amateur who acted off the cuff. If this is the way that Gen. Eisenhower is going to toss off decisions in civil life, then his supporters have a lot to worry about."

Then Lippmann said of the Ike "crusade:" "What conviction the movement is now based upon is not, it seems to me, so clear as it ought to be." (Sen. Morse, Oregon's GOP insurgent, apparently felt the same way; he dropped out of the Ike campaign.)

On Eisenhower's campaign train was New York Post Reporter Murray Kempton, who wrote: "There was a man, a long time ago, who wouldn't run for President unless he was drafted. His intention was to unite the country and lift up its head and give it hope and confidence. Gen. Eisenhower, say hello to the candidate and weep for him."

LABOR'S STAKE in the election is its very survival, Pres. Truman said last week, and Ike indirectly confirmed him.

The GOP platform backs Taft-Hartley, and Taft's statement on the deal said "Gen. Eisenhower has also told me that he believes in the basic principles of T-H."

So when Ike went before the AFL national convention in New York last week, he followed that line: opposed T-H repeal, spoke vaguely in favor of amendments which he did not specify. But he agreed—as labor has said all along—that T-H "might be used to break unions."

Truman spelled it out in his message to the AFL:

"Special interests are already grinding their axes for a fresh attack on labor in the event of a Republican victory. . . . Plans are afoot in Wall Street to make the T-H Law even more oppressive and unfair than it is at present.

"A definite plot was hatched at the close of the war to smash, or at least to cripple, our trade union movement in the period of postwar reaction. That conspiracy was developed by a little group of politicians working with the agents of our most reactionary employers. The first step in that conspiracy was the T-H Act.

"I regard the coming election as crucial, not only to the future of organized labor and the prosperity of the average man in the country, but also for our chances of world peace and the continuance of our world leadership. That is why I am going to go around the country campaigning for the election of Gov. Stevenson and Sen. Sparkman and a real Democratic Congress."

Memo to editors of The Wall Street Journal: You protest there's nothing in your files about a Wall Street-GOP plan for a super T-H Act. Suggest you check your paper of May 26, which quotes Sen. Taft extensively on just such plans.

WHILE Sen. Carlson, high in Eisenhower's command, begged Joe McCarthy's campaign aid, both Gov. Stevenson and Pres. Truman directly and vigorously again condemned McCarthyism.

Stevenson—back in Springfield after a West Coast tour and before heading East—warned anti-Communist "irresponsibles" endanger constitutional liberties. "Does anyone," he asked, "have true freedom of speech when not only his views but his very character and reputation are subjected to irresponsible, distorted attack by others? Is anyone truly guaranteed the right to a fair trial when society hears only the attack, and judges him guilty until he proves himself innocent?"

Truman charged such Republicans as McCarthy and Jenner with using the "immoral and subversive weapon of the big lie," adding: "A man who uses the weapon of the big lie is not a good man. He should be rejected by all good citizens, regardless of party."
